I started reading the Ante-Nicene Fathers some time after purchasing the set of ten books on April 7, 2010. I started with the third book containing Terullian's writing and I found myself taking notes on the white pages in the back of the book. I was going to the Walnut Valley Vineyard Church where Mark Maki was the pastor. His wife Julianne assisted him. Mark has been a mentor to me from the time we first met in college at UCLA. I was going to Julianne's Bible study at that time, where Mark and Julianne eventually met. I still had much to work on, but when Mark came, he went right to the head of the class. Mark was on fire for God then. He still is.

I did not start out to write a book. I just found myself taking copious notes. Mark did not encourage or discourage me. I found myself reading and taking notes with every free moment I had. I took notes at lunchtime at work. I spent an hour or two when I got home doing the same. On work trips, on weekends, on vacations, on holidays, I was always writing something. On top of this, I got married in May of 2010. Mark and Julianne facilitated our getting together, and my wife, Kathie, and I have a strong marriage because of them. I must also give credit to my wife who never complained over the four years it took to write this book. She gave me time after work and in between times. She facilitated my writing, making it possible for me to have a peace and space to process my thoughts and feelings. I am so thankful.

As time went on, and I progressed to the final draft, I found myself hearing a voice as it were asking me questions such as, "What about this?", or "That doesn't sound right!", or "Hmmm, are you sure you are done with that?" Mark used to say I knew his sermons better than he did since I did the tape ministry. Yes we did cassette tapes when we started the Walnut Valley Vineyard back in 2000. We progressed to CDs, and then to downloads from the internet. I credit Mark and Julianne with that voice behind me saying, "This is the way."

I must also give credit to Rod Walti, my coworker at Smart and Final, and friend and brother in the Lord. Rod and I do Bible study every day at lunch with as many people as we can get to come. Our friend and coworker, and brother in the Lord, Kevin Kelford, has also been coming regularly, and has stirred and inspired us with his questions. This has been a time for me to process my thoughts about Irenaeus' writing in a real life setting. The feedback I received from these times was invaluable to me.

I must also give credit to Dr. Albert Grimes. Julianne and Mark taught his books when we were at UCLA at our Bible study. His simple but in depth presentations of Biblical doctrine made it possible for me to discern truth from error in a very practical way. Without this foundation, this book could never have been written.

Also to Dr. Bill Gerlach, M.D., who taught me New Testament Greek. And to anyone I may have missed, but also most of all to our Lord Jesus Christ, I say thankyou.

Introduction

Have you ever wondered why the early church took the path that it did? History tells us many things about the early church but it does not tell us why these things happened. My own history is difficult enough to unpack. I was raised in the Roman Catholic Church and was in Catholic School for the most part from kindergarten through the eighth grade. When I was in the eighth grade, I received the sacrament of Confirmation as well. I believed in God. But when I became an adult and was in college, the truth really became important to me. I had to know things for myself, and not just because my mother or father said so. God felt distant to me. I could not just pretend to have faith any more. That is, I could not just believe because the Church said so. Whether God was real or not, I had to know for myself. I had to hear from Him myself. My prayer was, "God, if you are there, I need to hear from you!"

I began my quest for truth in college while still attending Mass every Sunday. I did not want to pretend I believed something I did not. It wasn't that I didn't believe. I just didn't know what to believe. I began to ask questions. I wanted to know what others really believed. Were they just pretending or was God real to them? There was a "Jesus Freak" at the Lucky Market where I worked, first as a box boy and then as a checker. Gary was very friendly in the checkout line, even shaking hands with customers as he met them while ringing up their groceries. He always had a big smile on his face as shoppers came through his line. He was married and had a child and was built like a Mac truck. He actually was a weight lifter. I wanted to cross him off my list of potential truth tellers right away, so I asked him to go get coffee after work one day. He was more than willing since he did that regularly with people at work, or those he met in the checkout line, "telling them about Jesus." "Have you met Mr. Jesus?" he asked me, more than once. In the milkbox when we stocked milk, on the floor when we stocked shelves, or in the break room, Gary would always want to talk about Jesus.

As we sat in the coffee shop sipping our coffee, I waited for his spiel. But he just sat there looking at me. After about a half an hour, I tried to prod him. "Aren't you going to give me your spiel?" I asked him. "I don't have a spiel," he said to me. "You talk!" Well, that was not what I expected. I didn't know what to say. But I decided I would not waste the moment so I started to talk, which I really wasn't sure I could do. As I talked, he just listened. No, he genuinely listened. I could tell. I came from an alcoholic family, and I knew what insanity was. This was something I had never encountered before. His genuineness really struck me.

He invited me to his church that Sunday, and I decided to go, just to check it out. I could still go to Mass later. So I went. It was rather informal, and in a recreation center, not a real church. Chairs were placed around in concentric circles, and people would just stand up and talk about their week, and what Jesus had done for them. There was a prayer at the end, after what I thought was the main speaker. Afterwards, when we met at his house, he had a present for me. He gave me a parallel New Testament with four different translations in it. He told me to read it.

I remember in Catholic School we had a book entitled, "The Bible." We would cover it every year, as we did all our books, with grocery bag book covers. We never opened this book however. Finally one year one of the students asked the teacher why we had to cover it since we never read it. We just kept it in our desk every year. So the next day the teacher said to get the book out, and we would start reading it. We got through the book of Exodus, reading a little each day and talking about it. Finally we were told to stop reading it, apparently because we might misinterpret it. That was in the third or fourth grade. We never opened the Bible again until the eighth grade. Then we were given a Catholic version of the New Testament, and read only the passages that were the basis of the seven sacraments. And of course, we studied our Catechisms to prepare for Confirmation.

As I think about reading the Bible in the third grade, I distinctly remember, after putting the book away in my desk, I felt something that I didn't feel when I put my math book away. I will never forget that feeling of freedom I felt inside after reading it.

So as I started to read the parallel New Testament that my friend at work, Gary, gave me after church, I remembered that same feeling. Sure enough it happened again. "What was with that book?" I thought to myself. Every time I finished reading it for the day, I felt a joy I could not explain.

I only understood snippets of what I was reading. As I read through the Gospels, I decided Jesus was a very good man. It would be great if it were true. But how could I be sure? As I started to read the epistle to the Romans, I drew a blank. Nothing he said made sense. I could not understand even a single word. But the feeling was still there. I tried to locate where the feeling was coming from, but I could not tell. As I started to read Romans again for the third or fourth time, I decided to just read it and not try to understand it. As I read it, the feeling grew stronger. I kept reading and realized that the feeling was coming from what I was reading, yet it was outside of me. My prayer had been answered. God was speaking to me through His word. I began to understand a little of what He was saying. I stopped at Romans 10:8-10, which says Romans 10 (NASB):8 But what does it say? "THE WORD IS NEAR YOU, IN YOUR MOUTH AND IN YOUR HEART"—that is, the word of faith which we are preaching, 9 that if you confess with your mouth Jesus as Lord, and believe in your heart that God raised Him from the dead, you will be saved; 10 for with the heart a person believes, resulting in righteousness, and with the mouth he confesses, resulting in salvation.

It couldn't be that easy, I thought. But it was, and is.

I began a quest for truth from that moment until now. Although I only understood a little of what He was saying to me then through His word, I realized that God was real, and that I would understand a lot more if I continued in His word, and not only heard what He was saying, but did what He was teaching me.

As I look back on my quest for truth of over thirty-eight years, I realize I strove to find His pathway and stay in it. I have found much truth in Him, and yet I know there is always more. We never arrive until we see Jesus, and we are like Him. Then we will know as we are known.

Could it be that the early Church was on such a quest, and was trying to stay on the pathway that was shown them by the apostles, and at the same time recover what they had lost by the apostles' absence? The early church had the precepts of what came to be known as the Apostle's Creed, but seemed to be trying to rediscover a scriptural foundation for the many traditions that had cropped up in the apostles' absence. Why else would Irenaeus write such a large volume explaining what he perceived to be the truth the Church held. As we study Irenaeus' writings, we will try to identify the truth that the Church of his time held, and also separate what were merely the traditions which the Church held as well. I define traditions as anything that cannot be supported by the 66 books of the Bible, excluding the Apocrypha. We will go on a quest for truth. Hopefully we will find the truth that Irenaeus so earnestly sought himself. Will you go on this quest with me?

Irenaeus lived between 120 and 202 A.D. He was bishop of Lyons which is located in present day France. He wrote a five book series entitled "Against Heresies." Some fifty-five fragments exist of his writing. Irenaeus quotes the Scriptures more than 1200 times, and many of his quotes are quite lengthy. He quotes 28 of the 49 books in the Old Testament, and 25 of the 27 books in the New Testament. He was a very strong Christian, I feel. He was passionate in his writing, and a genuine seeker of truth, and defender of the faith. He loved truth, as we will see in his writings. Locked in a deadly battle of truth and error with the Gnostics, he was fighting for the survival of the church. In as much as he spoke the truth, he was God's instrument in this regard. Though I do not agree with everything he said, I believe he was a very powerful and effective witness for the truth in his time.

In reading Irenaeus, we see that he never loses sight of his goal, that is, to refute Gnosticism. Therefore, if you are unfamiliar with Gnostic beliefs, as I was when I first read Irenaeus, you will learn a little in each segment here of his writings. The Gnostic beliefs are not one homogeneous whole, but vary from author to author so that they are difficult to understand as one complete doctrinal system. I have included a section on Gnostic beliefs at the end of this volume for further reference so that the reader can get more understanding as needed.

Now when we read Irenaeus, we must be careful not to read our own tradition back into his writings. In other words, we must not see more or less than he actually wrote. My method has been to give an extended passage of Irenaeus' writing, sometimes a whole chapter, so that the reader can get a feel for the context. When I quote him, I try to be fair and give as much of the quote as possible so that the reader can get the sense of his writing without having to do too much extra research. His first two books are very polemical and we must be patient when reading him. The good part is coming. I have here in this volume included whatever struck me as important in his writings. At the beginning of a chapter I give an extended quote from Against Heresies. I use a different font so that the reader may know when the quote begins and when it ends. After each quote, I write a Summary portion, and restate what I hear Irenaeus saying in the passage. I then offer my own opinions as well under the Commentary portion.

Philip Schaff comments on Irenaeus in the following excerpt from his book series, History of the Christian Church. He says, “Irenaeus, who sprang from the Eastern church, and used the Greek language, but labored in the West, holds a kind of mediating position between the two branches of the church, and may be taken as, on the whole, the most moderate and sound representative of ecclesiastical orthodoxy in the ante-Nicene period. He is as decided against Gnosticism as Tertullian, without overlooking the speculative want betrayed in that system. His refutation of the Gnosis, written between 177 and 192, is the leading polemic work of the second century. In the first book of this work Irenaeus gives a full account of the Valentinian system of Gnosis; in the second book he begins his refutation in philosophical and logical style; in the third, he brings against the system the catholic tradition and the holy, scriptures, and vindicates the orthodox doctrine of the unity of God, the creation of the world, the incarnation of the Logos, against the docetic denial of the true humanity of Christ and the Ebionitic denial of his true divinity; in the fourth book he further fortifies the same doctrines, and, against the antinomianism of the school of Marcion, demonstrates the unity of the Old and New Testaments; in the fifth and last book he presents his views on eschatology, particularly on the resurrection of the body—so offensive to the Gnostic spiritualism—and at the close treats of Antichrist, the end of the world, the intermediate state, and the millennium.” History of the Christian Church, Philip P. Schaff, Volume 2, Chapter XII, page 511-512.

Something to consider...

When churches were planted by the apostles, their converts relied on the presence of the apostle, and the teaching they received from him orally. They may or may not have had a copy of the Old Testament. The apostle could not stay in the same place for very long. As the apostles then moved from place to place, they would receive reports from the various churches that they had planted. As the need arose, and as the Lord led them, the apostle Paul for example would write to the church he had planted and give them further instruction, encouragement, and correction. The church then had more light in which to walk. Since the New Testament was not completed yet, they did not have as much light as they would have when the New Testament was finally finished. Gradually, the writings of Paul, Peter, John, James, Matthew, Mark and Luke were gathered by the various churches and the New Testament began to emerge. When we consider the fact that the Revelation of John was not given until 95 A.D. or so, we can more readily understand that the early churches were in a period of growth, and that their doctrinal knowledge was not complete. Each church began with the oral teaching of the apostle who planted them, and then some time later either received an epistle directed to them or one of the other churches that the apostles wrote to. They would have looked on these epistles as an increase of their knowledge, but not a replacement of the oral teaching that they had already received and come to rely on. It was by this process that the early churches valued their oral traditions as much as the written word. We can see this in Irenaeus' writing. It was only after all of the New Testament had been gathered that the churches realized their true value. By this time, there were many other writings by worthy men, but men who did not have the eyewitness authority that the first apostles had. It took time for the churches to sort out these writings from the apostolic writings. It is now recognized that the Easter letter of Athanasius in 367 A.D., which lists all of the books in the canon of the Old and New Testament, was the time that the churches finally acknowledged that the canon was closed. With this understanding, we can more readily see why the early church developed many traditions that were based on a perception of what was taught rather than what was actually taught by the first apostles. What these traditions were, but more importantly, what the truth of the matter is according to Scripture is the focus of this study.

Chapter 1: His Purpose in Writing

In his introduction to Book 5, Irenaeus tells us the purpose of his writings.

Book 5: Preface.

In the four preceding books, my very dear friend, which I put forth to thee, all the heretics have been exposed, and their doctrines brought to light, and these men refuted who have devised irreligious opinions. [I have accomplished this by adducing] something from the doctrine peculiar to each of these men, which they have left in their writings, as well as by using arguments of a more general nature, and applicable to them all. 4449 Ex ratione universis ostensionibus procedente. The words are very obscure. Then I have pointed out the truth, and shown the preaching of the Church, which the prophets proclaimed (as I have already demonstrated), but which Christ brought to perfection, and the apostles have handed down, from whom the Church, receiving [these truths], and throughout all the world alone preserving them in their integrity (bene), has transmitted them to her sons. Then also—having disposed of all questions which the heretics propose to us, and having explained the doctrine of the apostles, and clearly set forth many of those things which were said and done by the Lord in parables—I shall endeavour, in this the fifth book of the entire work which treats of the exposure and refutation of knowledge falsely so called, to exhibit proofs from the rest of the Lord’s doctrine and the apostolical epistles: [thus] complying with thy demand, as thou didst request of me (since indeed I have been assigned a place in the ministry of the word); and, labouring by every means in my power to furnish thee with large assistance against the contradictions of the heretics, as also to reclaim the wanderers and convert them to the Church of God, to confirm at the same time the minds of the neophytes, that they may preserve steadfast the faith which they have received, guarded by the Church in its integrity, in order that they be in no way perverted by those who endeavour to teach them false doctrines, and lead them away from the truth. It will be incumbent upon thee, however, and all who may happen to read this writing, to peruse with great attention what I have already said, that thou mayest obtain a knowledge of the subjects against which I am contending. For it is thus that thou wilt both controvert them in a legitimate manner, and wilt be prepared to receive the proofs brought forward against them, casting away their doctrines as filth by means of the celestial faith; but following the only true and steadfast Teacher, the Word of God, our Lord Jesus Christ, who did, through His transcendent love, become what we are, that He might bring us to be even what He is Himself.

Summary: Irenaeus’ purpose includes at least these five points:

- Expose the heretics and their doctrines
- Show the preaching of the Church
- Reclaim the wanderers and convert them to the Church of God
- Confirm the minds of the neophytes and guard them from false doctrine
- Help his readers to become followers of the only true and steadfast Teacher, the Word of God, our Lord Jesus Christ

Commentary: Without doubt, Irenaeus wants to show the error of the Gnostic teachings and refute them. And he lays down the rule that would describe his method throughout his writing when he says that he first states, “something from the doctrine peculiar to each of these men, which they have left in their writings, as well as by using arguments of a more general nature, and applicable to them all.” And, “Then I have pointed out the truth, and shown the preaching of the Church, which the prophets proclaimed (as I have already demonstrated), but which Christ brought to perfection, and the apostles have handed down, from whom the Church, receiving [these truths], and throughout all the world alone preserving them in their integrity (bene), has transmitted them to her sons.” If we remember this statement as we read Irenaeus, it will greatly help us to understand his thinking. It is these statements which express his passion more than anything else.

Chapter 2: His Life and Character

Philip P. Schaff wrote this about Irenaeus.

“Little is known of Irenaeus except what we may infer from his writings. He sprang from Asia Minor, probably from Smyrna, where he spent his youth. He was born between A.D. 115 and 125. He enjoyed the instruction of the venerable Polycarp of Smyrna, the pupil of John, and of other "Elders," who were mediate or immediate disciples of the apostles. The spirit of his preceptor passed over to him. "What I heard from him" says he, "that wrote I not on paper, but in my heart, and by the grace of God I constantly bring it afresh to mind." Perhaps he also accompanied Polycarp on his journey to Rome in connexion with the Easter controversy (154). He went as a missionary to Southern Gaul which seems to have derived her Christianity from Asia Minor. During the persecution in Lugdunum and Vienne under Marcus Aurelius (177), he was a presbyter there and witnessed the horrible cruelties which the infuriated heathen populace practiced upon his brethren. The aged and venerable bishop, Pothinus, fell a victim, and the presbyter took the post of danger, but was spared for important work.

He was sent by the Gallican confessors to the Roman bishop Eleutherus (who ruled A.D. 177–190), as a mediator in the Montanistic disputes.

After the martyrdom of Pothinus he was elected bishop of Lyons (178), and labored there with zeal and success, by tongue and pen, for the restoration of the heavily visited church, for the spread of Christianity in Gaul, and for the defence and development of its doctrines. He thus combined a vast missionary and literary activity. If we are to trust the account of Gregory of Tours, he converted almost the whole population of Lyons and sent notable missionaries to other parts of pagan France.

After the year 190 we lose sight of Irenaeus. Jerome speaks of him as having flourished in the reign of Commodus, i.e., between 180 and 192. He is reported by later tradition (since the fourth or fifth century) to have died a martyr in the persecution under Septimus Severus, A.D. 202, but the silence of Tertullian, Hippolytus, Eusebius, and Epiphanius makes this point extremely doubtful. He was buried under the altar of the church of St. John in Lyons. This city became again famous in church history in the twelfth century as the birthplace of the Waldensian martyr church, the Pauperes de Lugduno.”

Chapter 3: The Gospel According to Irenaeus

Book 3: Chapter IX.—One and the same God, the Creator of heaven and earth, is He whom the prophets foretold, and who was declared by the Gospel. Proof of this, at the outset, from St. Matthew's Gospel.

1. This, therefore, having been clearly demonstrated here (and it shall yet be so still more clearly), that neither the prophets, nor the apostles, nor the Lord Christ in His own person, did acknowledge any other Lord or God, but the God and Lord supreme: the prophets and the apostles confessing the Father and the Son; but naming no other as God, and confessing no other as Lord: and the Lord Himself handing down to His disciples, that He, the Father, is the only God and Lord, who alone is God and ruler of all; —it is incumbent on us to follow, if we are their disciples indeed, their testimonies to this effect. For Matthew the apostle— knowing, as one and the same God, Him who had given promise to Abraham, that He would make his seed as the stars of heaven, 3373 Gen. xv. 5. and Him who, by His Son Christ Jesus, has called us to the knowledge of Himself, from the worship of stones, so that those who were not a people were made a people, and she beloved who was not beloved 3374 Rom. ix. 25. —declares that John, when preparing the way for Christ, said to those who were boasting of their relationship [to Abraham] according to the flesh, but who had their mind tinged and stuffed with all manner of evil, preaching that repentance which should call them back from their evil doings, said, “O generation of vipers, who hath shown you to flee from the wrath to come? Bring forth therefore fruit meet for repentance. And think not to say within yourselves, We have Abraham [to our] father: for I say unto you, that God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham.” 3375 Matt. iii. 7. He preached to them, therefore, the repentance from wickedness, but he did not declare to them another God, besides Him who made the promise to Abraham; he, the forerunner of Christ, of whom Matthew again says, and Luke likewise, “For this is he that was spoken of from the Lord by the prophet, The voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make straight the paths of our God. Every valley shall be filled, and every mountain and hill brought low; and the crooked shall be made straight, and the rough into smooth ways; and all flesh shall see the salvation of God.” 3376 Matt. iii. 3. There is therefore one and the same God, the Father of our Lord, who also promised, through the prophets, that He would send His forerunner; and His salvation—that is, His Word —He caused to be made visible to all flesh, [the Word] Himself being made incarnate, that in all things their King might become manifest. For it is necessary that those [beings] which are judged do see the judge, and know Him from whom they receive judgment; and it is also proper, that those which follow on to glory should know Him who bestows upon them the gift of glory.

2. Then again Matthew, when speaking of the angel, says, “The angel of the Lord appeared to Joseph in sleep.” 3377 Matt. i. 20. Of what Lord he does himself interpret: “That it may be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord by the prophet, Out of Egypt have I called my son.” 3378 Matt. ii. 15. “Behold, a virgin shall conceive, and shall bring forth a son, and they shall call his name Emmanuel; which is, being interpreted, God with us.” 3379 Matt. i. 23. David likewise speaks of Him who, from the virgin, is Emmanuel: “Turn not away the face of Thine anointed. The Lord hath sworn a truth to David, and will not turn from him. Of the fruit of thy body will I set upon thy seat.” 3380 Ps. cxxxii. 11. And again: “In Judea is God known; His place has been made in peace, and His dwelling in Zion.” 3381 Ps. lxxvi. 1. Therefore there is one and the same God, who was proclaimed by the prophets and announced by the Gospel; and His Son, who was of the fruit of David's body, that is, of the virgin of [the house of] David, and Emmanuel; whose star also Balaam thus prophesied: “There shall come a star out of Jacob, and a leader shall rise in Israel.” 3382 Num. xxiv. 17. But Matthew says that the Magi, coming from the east, exclaimed “For we have seen His star in the east, and are come to worship Him;” 3383 Matt. ii. 2. and that, having been led by the star into the house of Jacob to

Emmanuel, they showed, by these gifts which they offered, who it was that was worshipped; myrrh, because it was He who should die and be buried for the mortal human race; gold, because He was a King, “of whose kingdom is no end;” 3384 Luke i. 33. and frankincense, because He was God, who also “was made known in Judea,” 3385 Ps. lxxvi. 1. and was “declared to those who sought Him not.” 3386 Isa. lxxv. 1. [A beautiful idea for poets and orators, but not to be pressed dogmatically.]

3. And then, [speaking of His] baptism, Matthew says, “The heavens were opened, and He saw the Spirit of God, as a dove, coming upon Him: and lo a voice from heaven, saying, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased.” 3387 Matt. iii. 16. For Christ did not at that time descend upon Jesus, neither was Christ one and Jesus another: but the Word of God—who is the Saviour of all, and the ruler of heaven and earth, who is Jesus, as I have already pointed out, who did also take upon Him flesh, and was anointed by the Spirit from the Father—was made Jesus Christ, as Esaias also says, “There shall come forth a rod from the root of Jesse, and a flower shall rise from his root; and the Spirit of God shall rest upon Him: the spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and might, the spirit of knowledge and piety, and the spirit of the fear of God, shall fill Him. He shall not judge according to glory, 3388 This is after the version of the Septuagint, οὐ κατὰ τὴν δόξαν: but the word δόξα may have the meaning opinio as well as gloria. If this be admitted here, the passage would bear much the same sense as it does in the authorized version, “He shall not judge after the sight of His eyes.” nor reprove after the manner of speech; but He shall dispense judgment to the humble man, and reprove the haughty ones of the earth.” 3389 Isa. xi. 1, etc. And again Esaias, pointing out beforehand His unction, and the reason why he was anointed, does himself say, “The Spirit of God is upon Me, because He hath anointed Me: He hath sent Me to preach the Gospel to the lowly, to heal the broken up in heart, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and sight to the blind; to announce the acceptable year of the Lord, and the day of vengeance; to comfort all that mourn.” 3390 Isa. lxi. 1. For inasmuch as the Word of God was man from the root of Jesse, and son of Abraham, in this respect did the Spirit of God rest upon Him, and anoint Him to preach the Gospel to the lowly. But inasmuch as He was God, He did not judge according to glory, nor reprove after the manner of speech. For “He needed not that any should testify to Him of man, 3391 This is according to the Syriac Peschito version. for He Himself knew what was in man.” 3392 John ii. 25. For He called all men that mourn; and granting forgiveness to those who had been led into captivity by their sins, He loosed them from their chains, of whom Solomon says, “Every one shall be holden with the cords of his own sins.” 3393 Prov. v. 22. Therefore did the Spirit of God descend upon Him, [the Spirit] of Him who had promised by the prophets that He would anoint Him, so that we, receiving from the abundance of His unction, might be saved. Such, then, [is the witness] of Matthew.

Summary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus affirms “This, therefore, having been clearly demonstrated here (and it shall yet be so still more clearly), that neither prophets, nor the apostles, nor the Lord Christ in His own person, did acknowledge any other Lord or God, but the God and Lord supreme: the prophets and the apostles confessing the Father and the Son; but naming no other as God, and confessing no other as Lord:” Irenaeus continues as he adds, “and the Lord Himself handing down to His disciples, that He, the Father, is the only God and Lord, who alone is God and ruler of all;” Irenaeus then concludes, that “it is incumbent on us to follow, if we are their disciples indeed, their testimonies to this effect.” Irenaeus then argues, “For Matthew the apostle—knowing, as one and the same God, Him who had given promise to Abraham, that He would make his seed as the stars of heaven,” referring to Genesis 15:5, “and Him who, by His Son Christ Jesus, has called us to the knowledge of Himself, from the worship of stones, so that those who were not a people were made a people, and she beloved who was not beloved, referring to Romans 9:25, “—declares that John, when preparing the way for Christ, said to those who were boasting of their relationship [to Abraham] according to the flesh, but who had their mind tinged and stuffed with all manner of evil, preaching that repentance which should call them back from their evil doings, said, “O generation of vipers, who hath shown you to flee from the wrath to come? Bring forth therefore fruit meet for repentance. And think not to say within yourselves, We have Abraham [to our] father: for I say unto you, that God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham,” referring to Matthew 3:7. Irenaeus continues as he then argues, “He preached to them, therefore, the repentance from wickedness, but he did not declare to them another God, besides Him who made the promise to Abraham; he, the forerunner of Christ, of whom Matthew again says, and Luke likewise, “For this is he that was spoken of from the Lord by the prophet, The voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make straight the paths of our God. Every valley shall be filled, and every mountain and hill brought low; and the crooked shall be made straight, and the rough into smooth ways; and all flesh shall see the salvation of God,” referring to Matthew 3:3. And Irenaeus thus affirms, “There is therefore one and the same God, the Father of our Lord, who also promised, through the prophets, that He would send His forerunner;” Irenaeus continues as he again affirms, “and His salvation—that is, His Word —He caused to be made visible to all flesh, [the Word] Himself being made incarnate, that in all things their King might become manifest.” Irenaeus then concludes, “For it is necessary that those [beings] which are judged do see the judge, and know Him from whom they receive judgment; and it is also proper, that those which follow on to glory should know Him who bestows upon them the gift of glory.”

In paragraph two, Irenaeus points out, Then again Matthew, when speaking of the angel, says, “The angel of the Lord appeared to Joseph in sleep,” referring to Matthew 1:20. Irenaeus then affirms, “Of what Lord he does himself interpret: “That it may be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord by the prophet, Out of Egypt have I called my son,” referring to Matthew 2:15. Irenaeus then adds, “Behold, a virgin shall conceive, and shall bring forth a son, and they shall call his name Emmanuel; which is, being interpreted, God with us,” referring to Matthew 1:23. Irenaeus then affirms, “David likewise speaks of Him who, from the virgin, is Emmanuel: “Turn not away the face of Thine anointed. The Lord hath sworn a truth to David, and will not turn from him. Of the fruit of thy body will I set upon thy seat,” referring to Psalm 132:11. And Irenaeus then adds, “And again: “In Judea is God known; His place has been made in peace, and His dwelling in Zion,”” referring to Psalm 76:1 in the Septuagint. Irenaeus then concludes, “Therefore there is one and the same God, who was proclaimed by the prophets and announced by the Gospel; and His Son, who was of the fruit of David’s body, that is, of the virgin of [the house of] David, and Emmanuel; whose star also Balaam thus prophesied: “There shall come a star out of Jacob, and a leader shall rise in Israel,” referring to Numbers 24:17. Irenaeus then adds, “But Matthew says that the Magi, coming from the east, exclaimed “For we have seen His star in the east, and are come to worship Him,” referring to Matthew 2:2, “and that, having been led by the star into the house of Jacob to Emmanuel, they showed, by these gifts which they offered, who it was that was worshipped; myrrh, because it was He who should die and be buried for the mortal human race; gold, because He was a King, “of whose kingdom is no end,” referring to Luke 1:33, “and frankincense, because He was God, who also “was made known in Judea,” referring to Psalm 126:1, “and was “declared to those who sought Him not,” referring to Isaiah 65:1.

In paragraph three, Irenaeus continues as he adds, “And then, [speaking of His] baptism, Matthew says, “The heavens were opened, and He saw the Spirit of God, as a dove, coming upon Him: and lo a voice from heaven, saying, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased,” referring to Matthew 3:16,17. Irenaeus continues as he points out, “For Christ did not at that time descend upon Jesus, neither was Christ one and Jesus another: but the Word of God—who is the Saviour of all, and the ruler of heaven and earth, who is Jesus, as I have already pointed out, who did also take upon Him flesh, and was anointed by the Spirit from the Father—was made Jesus Christ, as Esaias also says, “There shall come forth a rod from the root of Jesse, and a flower shall rise from his root; and the Spirit of God shall rest upon Him: the spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and might, the spirit of knowledge and piety, and the spirit of the fear of God, shall fill Him. He shall not judge according to glory, nor reprove after the manner of speech; but He shall dispense judgment to the humble man, and reprove the haughty ones of the earth,” referring in context to Isaiah 11:1-4. Irenaeus then adds, “And again Esaias, pointing out beforehand His unction, and the reason why he was anointed, does himself say, “The Spirit of God is upon Me, because He hath anointed Me: He hath sent Me to preach the Gospel to the lowly, to heal the broken up in heart, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and sight to the blind; to announce the acceptable year of the Lord, and the day of vengeance; to comfort all that mourn,” referring to Isaiah 61:1. Irenaeus then explains, “For inasmuch as the Word of God was man from the root of Jesse, and son of Abraham, in this respect did the Spirit of God rest upon Him, and anoint Him to preach the Gospel to the lowly. But inasmuch as He was God, He did not judge according to glory, nor reprove after the manner of speech. For “He needed not that any should testify to Him of man, for He Himself knew what was in man,” referring to John 2:25. Irenaeus thus concludes, “For He called all men that mourn; and granting forgiveness to those who had been led into captivity by their sins, He loosed them from their chains, of whom Solomon says, “Every one shall be holden with the cords of his own sins,” referring to Proverbs 5:22. Irenaeus then affirms, “Therefore did the Spirit of God descend upon Him, [the Spirit] of Him who had promised by the prophets that He would anoint Him, so that we, receiving from the abundance of His unction, might be saved. Such, then, [is the witness] of Matthew.”

Commentary: In these paragraphs, Irenaeus is refuting the Gnostic notion that the God of the Old Testament was an angry god, and not the Creator of all things, but only the creator of this world. The Gnostics believed Him to be the Demiurge, and that there was another unknown god who created all things. Irenaeus is stating in paragraph one that this is not the case. Irenaeus thus affirms “This, therefore, having been clearly demonstrated here (and it shall yet be so still more clearly), that neither the prophets, nor the apostles, nor the Lord Christ in His own person, did acknowledge any other Lord or God, but the God and Lord supreme: the prophets and the apostles confessing the Father and the Son; but naming no other as God, and confessing no other as Lord: and the Lord Himself handing down to His disciples, that He, the Father, is the only God and Lord, who alone is God and ruler of all.” It is in his refuting the Gnostics that we see and hear, in Irenaeus’ statements, the Gospel message.

Irenaeus then argues, “For Matthew the apostle— knowing, as one and the same God, Him who had given promise to Abraham, that He would make his seed as the stars of heaven,” referring to Genesis 15 (NASB):5 And He took him outside and said, "Now look toward the heavens, and count the stars, if you are able to count them." And He said to him, "So shall your descendants be."

Irenaeus continues his argument adding, “and Him who, by His Son Christ Jesus, has called us to the knowledge of Himself, from the worship of stones, so that those who were not a people were made a people”, referring in context to 1 Peter 2 (KJV):9 But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should shew forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvellous light; 10 Which in time past were not a people, but are now the people of God: which had not obtained mercy, but now have obtained mercy.

Irenaeus continues as he adds, “and she beloved who was not beloved”, referring to Romans 9 (KJV):25 As he saith also in Osee, I will call them my people, which were not my people; and her beloved, which was not beloved.

Irenaeus then concludes by adding, “—declares that John, when preparing the way for Christ, said to those who were boasting of their relationship [to Abraham] according to the flesh, but who had their mind tinged and stuffed with all manner of evil, preaching that repentance which should call them back from their evil doings, said, “O generation of vipers, who hath shown you to flee from the wrath to come? Bring forth therefore fruit meet for repentance. And think not to say within yourselves, We have Abraham [to our] father: for I say unto you, that God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham,” referring to Matthew 3 (NKJV):7 But when he saw many of the Pharisees and Sadducees coming to his baptism, he said to them, “Brood of vipers! Who warned you to flee from the wrath to come? 8 Therefore bear fruits worthy of repentance, 9 and do not think to say to yourselves, ‘We have Abraham as our father.’ For I say to you that God is able to raise up children to Abraham from these stones. 10 And even now the ax is laid to the root of the trees. Therefore every tree which does not bear good fruit is cut down and thrown into the fire.

Irenaeus continues as he then argues, “He preached to them, therefore, the repentance from wickedness, but he did not declare to them another God, besides Him who made the promise to Abraham; he, the forerunner of Christ, of whom Matthew again says, and Luke likewise, “For this is he that was spoken of from the Lord by the prophet, The voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make straight the paths of our God. Every valley shall be filled, and every mountain and hill brought low; and the crooked shall be made straight, and the rough into smooth ways; and all flesh shall see the salvation of God,” referring to Matthew 3 (HCSB):3 For he is the one spoken of through the prophet Isaiah, who said: A voice of one crying out in the wilderness: Prepare the way for the Lord; make His paths straight!

And to Luke 3 (NKJV):3 And he went into all the region around the Jordan, preaching a baptism of repentance for the remission of sins, 4 as it is written in the book of the words of Isaiah the prophet, saying:

“The voice of one crying in the wilderness: ‘Prepare the way of the LORD; Make His paths straight. 5 Every valley shall be filled And every mountain and hill brought low; The crooked places shall be made straight And the rough ways smooth; 6 And all flesh shall see the salvation of God.’”

And Irenaeus thus affirms, “There is therefore one and the same God, the Father of our Lord, who also promised, through the prophets, that He would send His forerunner;” Irenaeus continues as he again affirms, “and His salvation—that is, His Word —He caused to be made visible to all flesh, [the Word] Himself being made incarnate, that in all things their King might become manifest.” Irenaeus then concludes, “For it is necessary that those [beings] which are judged do see the judge, and know Him from whom they receive judgment; and it is also proper, that those which follow on to glory should know Him who bestows upon them the gift of glory.”

When Irenaeus rightly points out to us that “there is therefore one and the same God, the Father of our Lord, who also promised, through the prophets, that He would send His forerunner,” he is showing us the consistency of the Gospel message. This is what the Gospels do. The Gospels show us that it was the one true God who spoke long ago through the prophets that there would be a redeemer, and they then show the fulfillment of their prophecies. The fulfillment of prophecies which were hundreds, even thousands of years before they came to pass, gives us strong confidence in the Gospel message. And there was not just one prophecy but many. Irenaeus is pointing out to us that the Gospels corroborate with the prophecies of old, and prove that the Gospel message is the true one. Not only so, but when Irenaeus states that “His salvation—that is, His Word —He caused to be made visible to all flesh, [the Word] Himself being made incarnate, that in all things their King might become manifest,” he is giving us a most certain affirmation of the deity of Christ. And again, Irenaeus shows the reasonableness of God who allows those He judges to see their judge and to “know Him from whom they receive judgment.” Irenaeus argues well that, “it is also proper, that those which follow on to glory should know Him who bestows upon them the gift of glory.”

In paragraph two, Irenaeus continues to build his case against the Gnostics by proving from the Scripture that the God who spoke by the prophets of things to come has signed His name as Jesus Christ by fulfilling those things that He has foretold. Irenaeus quotes Matthew again and shows by the many prophecies that Matthew records, and their fulfillment, that this Jesus is the promised redeemer of the human race.

In paragraph two, Irenaeus thus points out, “Then again Matthew, when speaking of the angel, says, “The angel of the Lord appeared to Joseph in sleep,” referring to Matthew 1 (HCSB):20 But after he had considered these things, an angel of the Lord suddenly appeared to him in a dream, saying, “Joseph, son of David, don’t be afraid to take Mary as your wife, because what has been conceived in her is by the Holy Spirit.

Irenaeus then affirms, “Of what Lord he does himself interpret: “That it may be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord by the prophet, Out of Egypt have I called my son,” referring to Matthew 2 (HCSB):15 He stayed there until Herod’s death, so that what was spoken by the Lord through the prophet might be fulfilled: Out of Egypt I called My Son.

Irenaeus then adds, “Behold, a virgin shall conceive, and shall bring forth a son, and they shall call his name Emmanuel; which is, being interpreted, God with us,” referring in context to Matthew 1 (NKJV):22 So all this was done that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the Lord through the prophet, saying: 23 “Behold, the virgin shall be with child, and bear a Son, and they shall call His name Immanuel,” which is translated, “God with us.”

Irenaeus then affirms, “David likewise speaks of Him who, from the virgin, is Emmanuel: “Turn not away the face of Thine anointed. The Lord hath sworn a truth to David, and will not turn from him. Of the fruit of thy body will I set upon thy seat,” referring to Psalms 132 (NASB):11 The LORD has sworn to David A truth from which He will not turn back: "Of the fruit of your body I will set upon your throne.

And Irenaeus then adds, “And again: “In Judea is God known; His place has been made in peace, and His dwelling in Zion,”” referring to Psalms 76 (Septuagint):1 God is known in Judea: his name is great in Israel. 2 And his place has been in peace, and his dwelling-place in Sion.

Irenaeus then concludes, “Therefore there is one and the same God, who was proclaimed by the prophets and announced by the Gospel; and His Son, who was of the fruit of David’s body, that is, of the virgin of [the house of] David, and Emmanuel; whose star also Balaam thus prophesied: “There shall come a star out of Jacob, and a leader shall rise in Israel,” referring to Numbers 24 (NASB):17 "I see him, but not now; I behold him, but not near; A star shall come forth from Jacob, A scepter shall rise from Israel, And shall crush through the forehead of Moab, And tear down all the sons of Sheth.

Irenaeus then adds, "But Matthew says that the Magi, coming from the east, exclaimed "For we have seen His star in the east, and are come to worship Him," referring in context to Matthew 2 (NASB):1 After Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judea in the days of King Herod, wise men from the east arrived unexpectedly in Jerusalem, 2 "Where is He who has been born King of the Jews? For we saw His star in the east and have come to worship Him."

Irenaeus continues as he adds, "and that, having been led by the star into the house of Jacob to Emmanuel, they showed, by these gifts which they offered, who it was that was worshipped; myrrh, because it was He who should die and be buried for the mortal human race; gold, because He was a King," referring in context to Matthew 2 (NKJV):9 When they heard the king, they departed; and behold, the star which they had seen in the East went before them, till it came and stood over where the young Child was. 10 When they saw the star, they rejoiced with exceedingly great joy. 11 And when they had come into the house, they saw the young Child with Mary His mother, and fell down and worshiped Him. And when they had opened their treasures, they presented gifts to Him: gold, frankincense, and myrrh.

Irenaeus continues and adds, "of whose kingdom is no end," referring in context to Luke 1 (NKJV):30 Then the angel said to her, "Do not be afraid, Mary, for you have found favor with God. 31 And behold, you will conceive in your womb and bring forth a Son, and shall call His name JESUS. 32 He will be great, and will be called the Son of the Highest; and the Lord God will give Him the throne of His father David. 33 And He will reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of His kingdom there will be no end."

Irenaeus continues as he adds, "and frankincense, because He was God, who also "was made known in Judea," again referring to Psalms 76 (Septuagint):1 God is known in Judea: his name is great in Israel. 2 And his place has been in peace, and his dwelling-place in Sion.

Irenaeus continues as he adds, "and was "declared to those who sought Him not," referring to Isaiah 65 (HCSB):1 "I was sought by those who did not ask; I was found by those who did not seek Me. I said: Here I am, here I am, to a nation that was not called by My name.

Irenaeus points out that the Lord appeared to Israel, a nation which did not call on His name. Irenaeus here affirms the heart of the Gospel message. That is, God foretold the birth of His Son, who came to die for "the mortal human race." And God foretold that this Son of God would be the King whose kingdom would have no end. And God foretold that it was He Himself who would be revealed in the flesh and come to those who did not ask for Him, or seek Him, or call on His name.

In paragraph three, Irenaeus continues as he adds, "And then, [speaking of His] baptism, Matthew says, "The heavens were opened, and He saw the Spirit of God, as a dove, coming upon Him: and lo a voice from heaven, saying, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased," referring to Matthew 3 (NKJV):16 When He had been baptized, Jesus came up immediately from the water; and behold, the heavens were opened to Him, and He saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove and alighting upon Him. 17 And suddenly a voice came from heaven, saying, "This is My beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased."

Irenaeus continues as he points out, "For Christ did not at that time descend upon Jesus, neither was Christ one and Jesus another: but the Word of God—who is the Saviour of all, and the ruler of heaven and earth, who is Jesus, as I have already pointed out, who did also take upon Him flesh, and was anointed by the Spirit from the Father—was made Jesus Christ, as Esaias also says, "There shall come forth a rod from the root of Jesse, and a flower shall rise from his root; and the Spirit of God shall rest upon Him: the spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and might, the spirit of knowledge and piety, and the spirit of the fear of God, shall fill Him. He shall not judge according to glory, nor reprove after the manner of speech; but He shall dispense judgment to the humble man, and reprove the haughty ones of the earth," referring in context to Isaiah 11 (NKJV):1 There shall come forth a Rod from the stem of Jesse, And a Branch shall grow out of his roots. 2 The Spirit of the LORD shall rest upon Him, The Spirit of wisdom and understanding, The Spirit of counsel and might, The Spirit of knowledge and of the fear of the LORD. 3 His delight is in the fear of the LORD, And He shall not judge by the sight of His eyes, Nor decide by the hearing of His ears; 4 But with righteousness He shall judge the poor, And decide with equity for the meek of the earth; He shall strike the earth with the rod of His mouth, And with the breath of His lips He shall slay the wicked.

Irenaeus then adds, “And again Esaias, pointing out beforehand His unction, and the reason why he was anointed, does himself say, “The Spirit of God is upon Me, because He hath anointed Me: He hath sent Me to preach the Gospel to the lowly, to heal the broken up in heart, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and sight to the blind; to announce the acceptable year of the Lord, and the day of vengeance; to comfort all that mourn,” referring to Isaiah 61 (NKJV):1 “The Spirit of the Lord GOD is upon Me, Because the LORD has anointed Me To preach good tidings to the poor; He has sent Me to heal the brokenhearted, To proclaim liberty to the captives, And the opening of the prison to those who are bound; 2 To proclaim the acceptable year of the LORD, And the day of vengeance of our God; To comfort all who mourn.

Irenaeus then explains, “For inasmuch as the Word of God was man from the root of Jesse, and son of Abraham, in this respect did the Spirit of God rest upon Him, and anoint Him to preach the Gospel to the lowly. But inasmuch as He was God, He did not judge according to glory, nor reprove after the manner of speech. For “He needed not that any should testify to Him of man, for He Himself knew what was in man,” referring in context to John 2 (HCSB):24 Jesus, however, would not entrust Himself to them, since He knew them all 25 and because He did not need anyone to testify about man; for He Himself knew what was in man.

Irenaeus thus concludes, “For He called all men that mourn; and granting forgiveness to those who had been led into captivity by their sins, He loosed them from their chains, of whom Solomon says, “Every one shall be holden with the cords of his own sins,” referring to Proverbs 5 (NASB):22 His own iniquities will capture the wicked, And he will be held with the cords of his sin.

Irenaeus then affirms, “Therefore did the Spirit of God descend upon Him, [the Spirit] of Him who had promised by the prophets that He would anoint Him, so that we, receiving from the abundance of His unction, might be saved. Such, then, [is the witness] of Matthew.”

To summarize, Irenaeus explains that Jesus was both man and God. To repeat, Irenaeus states, “For inasmuch as the Word of God was man from the root of Jesse, and son of Abraham, in this respect did the Spirit of God rest upon Him, and anoint Him to preach the Gospel to the lowly. But inasmuch as He was God, He did not judge according to glory, nor reprove after the manner of speech. For “He needed not that any should testify to Him of man for He Himself knew what was in man.” This is a clear affirmation by Irenaeus of the true identity of the Son of God who was both God and man as the Scriptures testify.

Irenaeus rightly explains that this anointed one came to free those “let into captivity by their sins” as Isaiah had prophesied. And truly just as Solomon said, we are all held captive by our own sins.

Irenaeus concludes mightily, “Therefore did the Spirit of God descend upon Him, [the Spirit] of Him who had promised by the prophets that He would anoint Him, so that we, receiving from the abundance of His unction, might be saved.” Such, then, [is the witness] of Matthew.”

Irenaeus testifies to the Gospel message of Matthew. This is the Gospel according to Irenaeus. And I think it is in accordance with the Spirit of God, and the word of God.

Chapter 4: Irenaeus' Statement of Faith

Book 1: Chapter X.—Unity of the faith of the Church throughout the whole world.

1. The Church, though dispersed throughout the whole world, even to the ends of the earth, has received from the apostles and their disciples this faith: [She believes] in one God, the Father Almighty, Maker of heaven, and earth, and the sea, and all things that are in them; and in one Christ Jesus, the Son of God, who became incarnate for our salvation; and in the Holy Spirit, who proclaimed through the prophets the dispensations 2786 “Of God” is added from the old Latin of God, and the advents, and the birth from a virgin, and the passion, and the resurrection from the dead, and the ascension into heaven in the flesh of the beloved Christ Jesus, our Lord, and His [future] manifestation from heaven in the glory of the Father “to gather all things in one,” 2787 Eph. i. 10, and to raise up anew all flesh of the whole human race, in order that to Christ Jesus, our Lord, and God, and Saviour, and King, according to the will of the invisible Father, “every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth, and that every tongue should confess” 2788 Phil. ii. 10, 11, to Him, and that He should execute just judgment towards all; that He may send “spiritual wickednesses,” 2789 Eph. vi. 12, and the angels who transgressed and became apostates, together with the ungodly, and unrighteous, and wicked, and profane among men, into everlasting fire; but may, in the exercise of His grace, confer immortality on the righteous, and holy, and those who have kept His commandments, and have persevered in His love, some from the beginning [of their Christian course], and others from [the date of] their repentance, and may surround them with everlasting glory.

2. As I have already observed, the Church, having received this preaching and this faith, although scattered throughout the whole world, yet, as if occupying but one house, carefully preserves it. She also believes these points [of doctrine] just as if she had but one soul, and one and the same heart, and she proclaims them, and teaches them, and hands them down, with perfect harmony, as if she possessed only one mouth. For, although the languages of the world are dissimilar, yet the import of the tradition is one and the same. For the Churches which have been planted in Germany do not believe or hand down anything different, nor do those in Spain, nor those in Gaul, nor those in the East, nor those in Egypt, nor those in Libya, nor those which have been established in the central regions 2790 Probably referring to the Churches in Palestine. of the world. But as the sun, that creature of God, is one and the same throughout the whole world, so also the preaching of the truth shineth everywhere, and enlightens all men that are willing to come to a knowledge of the truth. Nor will any one of the rulers in the Churches, however highly gifted he may be in point of eloquence, teach doctrines different from these (for no one is greater than the Master); nor, on the other hand, will he who is deficient in power of expression inflict injury on the tradition. For the faith being ever one and the same, neither does one who is able at great length to discourse regarding it, make any addition to it, nor does one, who can say but little diminish it.

Summary: In paragraph one, begins by affirming that, “The Church, though dispersed throughout the whole world, even to the ends of the earth, has received from the apostles and their disciples this faith: [She believes] in”:

- 1.) “one God, the Father Almighty, Maker of heaven, and earth, and the sea, and all things that are in them;”
- 2.) “and in one Christ Jesus, the Son of God, who became incarnate for our salvation;”
- 3.) “and in the Holy Spirit, who proclaimed through the prophets” the following:
 - “the dispensations of God,”
 - “and the advents,”

- “and the birth from a virgin,”
 - “and the passion,”
 - “and the resurrection from the dead,”
 - “and the ascension into heaven in the flesh of the beloved Christ Jesus, our Lord,”
 - “and His [future] manifestation from heaven in the glory of the Father”
- 4.) This was done in order “to gather all things in one,” referring to Ephesians 1:10, “and to raise up anew all flesh of the whole human race, in order that to Christ Jesus, our Lord, and God, and Saviour, and King, according to the will of the invisible Father, “every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth, and that every tongue should confess,” to Him,” referring to Philippians 2:10,11.
 - 5.) “and that He should execute just judgment towards all;”
 - 6.) In order “that He may send “spiritual wickednesses,” referring to Ephesians 6:12, “and the angels who transgressed and became apostates, together with the ungodly, and unrighteous, and wicked, and profane among men, into everlasting fire;”
 - 7.) “but may, in the exercise of His grace, confer immortality on the righteous, and holy, and those who have kept His commandments, and have persevered in His love, some from the beginning [of their Christian course], and others from [the date of] their repentance, and may surround them with everlasting glory.”

In paragraph two, Irenaeus asserts, “As I have already observed, the Church, having received this preaching and this faith, although scattered throughout the whole world, yet, as if occupying but one house, carefully preserves it.” Irenaeus continues as he further asserts, “She also believes these points [of doctrine] just as if she had but one soul, and one and the same heart, and she proclaims them, and teaches them, and hands them down, with perfect harmony, as if she possessed only one mouth.” Not only so, but Irenaeus continues as he asserts further, “For, although the languages of the world are dissimilar, yet the import of the tradition is one and the same. For the Churches which have been planted in Germany do not believe or hand down anything different, nor do those in Spain, nor those in Gaul, nor those in the East, nor those in Egypt, nor those in Libya, nor those which have been established in the central regions of the world.”

Irenaeus then testifies, “But as the sun, that creature of God, is one and the same throughout the whole world, so also the preaching of the truth shineth everywhere, and enlightens all men that are willing to come to a knowledge of the truth.” Irenaeus then affirms, “Nor will any one of the rulers in the Churches, however highly gifted he may be in point of eloquence, teach doctrines different from these (for no one is greater than the Master);” But he then asserts, “nor, on the other hand, will he who is deficient in power of expression inflict injury on the tradition.”

Irenaeus then concludes, “For the faith being ever one and the same, neither does one who is able at great length to discourse regarding it, make any addition to it, nor does one, who can say but little diminish it.”

Commentary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus writes that the Church throughout the whole world “has received from the apostles and their disciples this faith.” He then goes on to enumerate the beliefs of the Church. This writing of Irenaeus has been referred to as his Rule of Faith. Actually, it is an early version of the Apostle’s Creed according to Philip Schaff. Here is a quote from Schaff, as background.

“There was at first no prescribed formula of faith binding upon all believers. Each of the leading churches framed its creed (in a sort of independent congregational way), according to its wants, though on the same basis of the baptismal formula, and possibly after the model of a brief archetype which may have come down from apostolic days. Hence we have a variety of such rules of faith, or rather fragmentary accounts of them, longer or shorter, declarative or interrogative, in the ante-Nicene writers, as Irenaeus of Lyons (180), Tertullian of Carthage (200), Cyprian of Carthage (250), Novatian of Rome (250), Origen of Alexandria (250), Gregory Thaumaturgus (270), Lucian of Antioch (300), Eusebius of Caesarea (325), Marcellus of Ancyra (340), Cyril of Jerusalem (350), Epiphanius of Cyprus (374), Rufinus of Aquileja (390), and in the Apostolic Constitutions). Yet with all the differences in form and extent there is a substantial agreement, so that Tertullian could say that the regula fidei was "una omnino, sola immobilis et irreformabilis." They are variations of the same theme. We may refer for illustration of the variety and unity to the numerous orthodox and congregational creeds of the Puritan churches in New England, which are based upon the Westminster standards." History of the Christian Church, Philip Schaff, Volume 2, chapter XII, section 140.

There are several Scriptures which support Irenaeus' statements in paragraph one, and they leave us in no doubt that Irenaeus believed in the divinity of Jesus Christ, and that He is Lord and Christ, Savior and King. This chapter of his writing is a very strong statement of his faith. Apparently, Irenaeus believed these truths to be universally acknowledged in the Church in his time, and he did not feel it was necessary to provide Scriptural support for them. However, it is important to know the Biblical truths on which these statements are based.

For point number one, in the Summary above, that there is "One God, the Father Almighty, Maker of heaven, and earth, and the sea, and all things that are in them," we could list the following:

- That God is creator is the testimony in the first verse of the book of Genesis as we read in Genesis 1 (NASB):1 In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth.
- It was Moses who received the ten commandments. Topping the list of commandments was the command to worship God alone as in Exodus 20 (NKJV):1 And God spoke all these words, saying: 2 "I am the LORD your God, who brought you out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage. 3 "You shall have no other gods before Me. 4 "You shall not make for yourself a carved image—any likeness of anything that is in heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the water under the earth; 5 you shall not bow down to them nor serve them. For I, the LORD your God, am a jealous God, visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children to the third and fourth generations of those who hate Me, 6 but showing mercy to thousands, to those who love Me and keep My commandments.
- That He alone is God was the belief of King Hezekiah as in 2 Kings 19 (NASB):15 Hezekiah prayed before the LORD and said, "O LORD, the God of Israel, who are enthroned above the cherubim, You are the God, You alone, of all the kingdoms of the earth. You have made heaven and earth.
- And in 2 Kings 19 (NASB):19 "Now, O LORD our God, I pray, deliver us from his hand that all the kingdoms of the earth may know that You alone, O LORD, are God."
- It was the belief of King David as in Psalms 86 (NASB):10 For You are great and do wondrous deeds; You alone are God.
- It was also the belief of the prophet Isaiah as we read in Isaiah 37 (NASB):16 "O LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, who is enthroned above the cherubim, You are the God, You alone, of all the kingdoms of the earth. You have made heaven and earth.
- And in Isaiah 37 (NASB):20 "Now, O LORD our God, deliver us from his hand that all the kingdoms of the earth may know that You alone, LORD, are God."
- And again in Isaiah 44 (NASB):8 'Do not tremble and do not be afraid; Have I not long since announced it to you and declared it? And you are My witnesses. Is there any God besides Me, Or is there any other Rock? I know of none.'
- And again in Isaiah 45 (NASB):14 Thus says the LORD, "The products of Egypt and the merchandise of Cush And the Sabeans, men of stature, Will come over to you and will be yours; They will walk behind you, they will come over in chains And will bow down to you; They will make supplication to you: ' Surely, God is with you, and there is none else, No other God.'"
- And again in Isaiah 45 (NASB):21 "Declare and set forth your case; Indeed, let them consult together. Who has announced this from of old? Who has long since declared it? Is it not I, the LORD? And there is no other God besides Me, A righteous God and a Savior; There is none except Me.

- As to the fact that God is almighty, this was revealed to Abraham in Genesis 17 (NASB):1 Now when Abram was ninety-nine years old, the LORD appeared to Abram and said to him, "I am God Almighty; Walk before Me, and be blameless.
- Again in Genesis 18 (NASB):14 "Is anything too difficult for the LORD? At the appointed time I will return to you, at this time next year, and Sarah will have a son."
- And the prophet Jeremiah also testifies as in Jeremiah 32 (NASB):17 'Ah Lord GOD! Behold, You have made the heavens and the earth by Your great power and by Your outstretched arm! Nothing is too difficult for You, 18 who shows lovingkindness to thousands, but repays the iniquity of fathers into the bosom of their children after them, O great and mighty God. The LORD of hosts is His name;
- And again in Jeremiah 32 (NASB):27 "Behold, I am the LORD, the God of all flesh; is anything too difficult for Me?"
- And this was the testimony of Jesus as Matthew records in Matthew 19 (NASB):26 And looking at them Jesus said to them, "With people this is impossible, but with God all things are possible."
- That God is our Father is the testimony of David in 1 Chronicles 29 (NASB):10 So David blessed the LORD in the sight of all the assembly; and David said, "Blessed are You, O LORD God of Israel our father, forever and ever.
- This also was the testimony of Isaiah the prophet as in Isaiah 63 (HCSB):16 Yet You are our Father, even though Abraham does not know us and Israel doesn't recognize us. You, Yahweh, are our Father; from ancient times, Your name is our Redeemer.
- He is our potter as in Isaiah 64 (HCSB):8 Yet LORD, You are our Father; we are the clay, and You are our potter; we all are the work of Your hands.
- And Jesus taught us to pray to God, our Father, as in Matthew 6 (NKJV):7 And when you pray, do not use vain repetitions as the heathen do. For they think that they will be heard for their many words. 8 "Therefore do not be like them. For your Father knows the things you have need of before you ask Him. 9 In this manner, therefore, pray: Our Father in heaven, Hallowed be Your name. 10 Your kingdom come. Your will be done On earth as it is in heaven. 11 Give us this day our daily bread. 12 And forgive us our debts, As we forgive our debtors. 13 And do not lead us into temptation, But deliver us from the evil one. For Yours is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen.

For point number two, in the Summary above, that there is "One Christ Jesus, the Son of God, who became incarnate for our salvation," we could list the following:

- This is testified in the Gospel of Luke as we read in Luke 1 (NKJV):30 Then the angel said to her, "Do not be afraid, Mary, for you have found favor with God. 31 And behold, you will conceive in your womb and bring forth a Son, and shall call His name JESUS. 32 He will be great, and will be called the Son of the Highest; and the Lord God will give Him the throne of His father David. 33 And He will reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of His kingdom there will be no end." 34 Then Mary said to the angel, "How can this be, since I do not know a man?" 35 And the angel answered and said to her, "The Holy Spirit will come upon you, and the power of the Highest will overshadow you; therefore, also, that Holy One who is to be born will be called the Son of God.
- Again this is testified to in the Gospel of Matthew as in Matthew 1 (NKJV):18 Now the birth of Jesus Christ was as follows: After His mother Mary was betrothed to Joseph, before they came together, she was found with child of the Holy Spirit. 19 Then Joseph her husband, being a just man, and not wanting to make her a public example, was minded to put her away secretly. 20 But while he thought about these things, behold, an angel of the Lord appeared to him in a dream, saying, "Joseph, son of David, do not be afraid to take to you Mary your wife, for that which is conceived in her is of the Holy Spirit. 21 And she will bring forth a Son, and you shall call His name JESUS, for He will save His people from their sins.” 22 So all this was done that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the Lord through the prophet, saying: 23 “Behold, the virgin shall be with child, and bear a Son, and they shall call His name Immanuel,” which is translated, “God with us.” 24 Then Joseph, being aroused from sleep, did as the angel of the Lord commanded him and took to him his wife, 25 and did not know her till she had brought forth her firstborn Son. And he called His name JESUS.

- And in John 1 (NASB):1 In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God.
- And in John 1 (NASB):14 And the Word became flesh, and dwelt among us, and we saw His glory, glory as of the only begotten from the Father, full of grace and truth.
- And in 1 Timothy 1 (NASB):15 It is a trustworthy statement, deserving full acceptance, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners, among whom I am foremost of all.
- And in Romans 9 (NASB):5 whose are the fathers, and from whom is the Christ according to the flesh, who is over all, God blessed forever. Amen.

For point number three, that “The Holy Spirit, who proclaimed through the prophets” the following:

- “the dispensations of God,”
- “and the advents,”
- “and the birth from a virgin,”
- “and the passion,”
- “and the resurrection from the dead,”
- “and the ascension into heaven in the flesh of the beloved Christ Jesus, our Lord,”
- “and His [future] manifestation from heaven in the glory of the Father”

we could list the following:

- ❖ Regarding the dispensations of God, or the times that God has appointed beforehand...
 - Job’s testimony was that God’s purpose will prevail as in Job 42 (NASB):2 "I know that You can do all things, And that no purpose of Yours can be thwarted.
 - Isaiah speaks as in Isaiah 42 (NKJV):8 I am the LORD: that is my name: and my glory will I not give to another, neither my praise to graven images. 9 Behold, the former things are come to pass, and new things do I declare: before they spring forth I tell you of them.
 - And Isaiah says as in Isaiah 44 (NKJV):26 Who confirms the word of His servant, And performs the counsel of His messengers; Who says to Jerusalem, ‘You shall be inhabited,’ To the cities of Judah, ‘You shall be built,’ And I will raise up her waste places; 27 Who says to the deep, ‘Be dry! And I will dry up your rivers’; 28 Who says of Cyrus, ‘He is My shepherd, And he shall perform all My pleasure, Saying to Jerusalem, “You shall be built,” And to the temple, “Your foundation shall be laid.”’
 - Luke records Paul’s address on Mars hill in Athens in Acts 17 (NKJV):24 “God, who made the world and everything in it, since He is Lord of heaven and earth, does not dwell in temples made with hands. 25 Nor is He worshiped with men’s hands, as though He needed anything, since He gives to all life, breath, and all things. 26 And He has made from one blood every nation of men to dwell on all the face of the earth, and has determined their preappointed times and the boundaries of their dwellings, 27 so that they should seek the Lord, in the hope that they might grope for Him and find Him, though He is not far from each one of us; 28 for in Him we live and move and have our being, as also some of your own poets have said, ‘For we are also His offspring.’ 29 Therefore, since we are the offspring of God, we ought not to think that the Divine Nature is like gold or silver or stone, something shaped by art and man’s devising. 30 Truly, these times of ignorance God overlooked, but now commands all men everywhere to repent,

- 31 because He has appointed a day on which He will judge the world in righteousness by the Man whom He has ordained. He has given assurance of this to all by raising Him from the dead.”
- ❖ Regarding “the advents, the birth from a virgin, and the passion,” there are a long continuing line of prophecies.
 - We start with the prediction that He would be the seed of the woman in Genesis 3 (NASB):15 And I will put enmity between you and the woman, And between your seed and her seed; He shall bruise you on the head, And you shall bruise him on the heel.”
 - He was to be the promised offspring of Abraham as in Genesis 12 (NKJV):1 Now the LORD had said to Abram: “Get out of your country, From your family And from your father’s house, To a land that I will show you. 2 I will make you a great nation; I will bless you And make your name great; And you shall be a blessing. 3 I will bless those who bless you, And I will curse him who curses you; And in you all the families of the earth shall be blessed.”
 - He was to be the promised seed of Isaac as in Genesis 17 (HCSB):19 But God said, “No. Your wife Sarah will bear you a son, and you will name him Isaac. I will confirm My covenant with him as an everlasting covenant for his future offspring.
 - He was to be the promised seed of Jacob as in Numbers 24 (NKJV):17 “I see Him, but not now; I behold Him, but not near; A Star shall come out of Jacob; A Scepter shall rise out of Israel, And batter the brow of Moab, And destroy all the sons of tumult. 18 “And Edom shall be a possession; Seir also, his enemies, shall be a possession, While Israel does valiantly. 19 Out of Jacob One shall have dominion, And destroy the remains of the city.”
 - He was to come from the tribe of Judah as in Genesis 49 (NASB):10 "The scepter shall not depart from Judah, Nor the ruler's staff from between his feet, Until Shiloh comes, And to him shall be the obedience of the peoples.
 - He was to be heir of the throne of David as in Isaiah 9 (NASB):6 For a child will be born to us, a son will be given to us; And the government will rest on His shoulders; And His name will be called Wonderful Counselor, Mighty God, Eternal Father, Prince of Peace. 7 There will be no end to the increase of His government or of peace, On the throne of David and over his kingdom, To establish it and to uphold it with justice and righteousness From then on and forevermore. The zeal of the LORD of hosts will accomplish this.
 - He was to be born in Bethlehem, as in Micah 5 (NASB):2 "But as for you, Bethlehem Ephrathah, Too little to be among the clans of Judah, From you One will go forth for Me to be ruler in Israel. His goings forth are from long ago, From the days of eternity."
 - He was to be born of a virgin as in Isaiah 7 (HCSB):14 Therefore, the Lord Himself will give you a sign: The virgin will conceive, have a son, and name him Immanuel.
 - There was to be a massacre of children after his birth, as in Jeremiah 31 (NASB):15 Thus says the LORD, "A voice is heard in Ramah, Lamentation and bitter weeping. Rachel is weeping for her children; She refuses to be comforted for her children, Because they are no more."
 - There would be a flight of Jesus’ parents into Egypt as in Hosea 11 (NASB):1 When Israel was a youth I loved him, And out of Egypt I called My son.
 - He was to be the savior of the world as in Isaiah 45 (NASB):21 "Declare and set forth your case; Indeed, let them consult together. Who has announced this from of old? Who has long since declared it? Is it not I, the LORD? And there is no other God besides Me, A righteous God and a Savior; There is none except Me.
 - And in Isaiah 49 (NASB):26 "I will feed your oppressors with their own flesh, And they will become drunk with their own blood as with sweet wine; And all flesh will know that I, the LORD, am your Savior And your Redeemer, the Mighty One of Jacob."
 - He would bring light to those in darkness as in Isaiah 9 (NASB):1 But there will be no more gloom for her who was in anguish; in earlier times He treated the land of Zebulun and the land of Naphtali with contempt, but later on He shall make it glorious, by the way of the sea, on the other side of Jordan, Galilee of the Gentiles. 2 The people who walk in darkness will see a great light; Those who live in a dark land, The light will shine on them.

- He would heal the sick as in Isaiah 53 (NASB):4 Surely our griefs He Himself bore, And our sorrows He carried; Yet we ourselves esteemed Him stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted. 5 But He was pierced through for our transgressions, He was crushed for our iniquities; The chastening for our well-being fell upon Him, And by His scourging we are healed.
- He would be a prophet like Moses as in Deuteronomy 18 (NASB):15 "The LORD your God will raise up for you a prophet like me from among you, from your countrymen, you shall listen to him.
- He will bring justice to the nations as in Isaiah 42 (NKJV):1 "Behold! My Servant whom I uphold, My Elect One in whom My soul delights! I have put My Spirit upon Him; He will bring forth justice to the Gentiles. 2 He will not cry out, nor raise His voice, Nor cause His voice to be heard in the street. 3 A bruised reed He will not break, And smoking flax He will not quench; He will bring forth justice for truth.
- He would speak in parables as in Psalms 78 (NASB):2 I will open my mouth in a parable; I will utter dark sayings of old, 3 Which we have heard and known, And our fathers have told us.
- And we read why He spoke to them in parables in Isaiah 6 (NASB):9 He said, "Go, and tell this people: 'Keep on listening, but do not perceive; Keep on looking, but do not understand.' 10 "Render the hearts of this people insensitive, Their ears dull, And their eyes dim, Otherwise they might see with their eyes, Hear with their ears, Understand with their hearts, And return and be healed."
- Jesus explained this in Matthew 13 (NASB):13 Therefore I speak to them in parables; because while seeing they do not see, and while hearing they do not hear, nor do they understand. 14 In their case the prophecy of Isaiah is being fulfilled, which says, ' YOU WILL KEEP ON HEARING, BUT WILL NOT UNDERSTAND; YOU WILL KEEP ON SEEING, BUT WILL NOT PERCEIVE; 15 FOR THE HEART OF THIS PEOPLE HAS BECOME DULL, WITH THEIR EARS THEY SCARCELY HEAR, AND THEY HAVE CLOSED THEIR EYES, OTHERWISE THEY WOULD SEE WITH THEIR EYES, HEAR WITH THEIR EARS, AND UNDERSTAND WITH THEIR HEART AND RETURN, AND I WOULD HEAL THEM.'
- He was to be rejected by men and his own people as in Isaiah 53 (NASB):3 He was despised and forsaken of men, A man of sorrows and acquainted with grief; And like one from whom men hide their face He was despised, and we did not esteem Him.
- He, as Israel's King, would come to them on a donkey as in Zechariah 9 (NASB):9 Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion! Shout in triumph, O daughter of Jerusalem! Behold, your king is coming to you; He is just and endowed with salvation, Humble, and mounted on a donkey, Even on a colt, the foal of a donkey.
- He would offer himself as their king and be rejected as in Isaiah 53 (NKJV):7 He was oppressed and He was afflicted, Yet He opened not His mouth; He was led as a lamb to the slaughter, And as a sheep before its shearers is silent, So He opened not His mouth. 8 He was taken from prison and from judgment, And who will declare His generation? For He was cut off from the land of the living; For the transgressions of My people He was stricken. 9 And they made His grave with the wicked—But with the rich at His death, Because He had done no violence, Nor was any deceit in His mouth.
- All would forsake Him at His death as in Zechariah 13 (NASB):7 "Awake, O sword, against My Shepherd, And against the man, My Associate," Declares the LORD of hosts. "Strike the Shepherd that the sheep may be scattered; And I will turn My hand against the little ones.
- He would be sold for thirty pieces of silver as in Zechariah 11 (NASB):12 I said to them, "If it is good in your sight, give me my wages; but if not, never mind!" So they weighed out thirty shekels of silver as my wages. 13 Then the LORD said to me, "Throw it to the potter, that magnificent price at which I was valued by them." So I took the thirty shekels of silver and threw them to the potter in the house of the LORD.

- He was to be betrayed by a friend as in Psalm 41 (NASB):9 Even my close friend in whom I trusted, Who ate my bread, Has lifted up his heel against me.
- His bones were not to be broken and his garments would be divided and lots cast for his clothing and his hands and feet would be pierced as in Psalm 22 (NKJV):14 I am poured out like water, And all My bones are out of joint; My heart is like wax; It has melted within Me. 15 My strength is dried up like a potsherd, And My tongue clings to My jaws; You have brought Me to the dust of death. 16 For dogs have surrounded Me; The congregation of the wicked has enclosed Me. They pierced My hands and My feet; 17 I can count all My bones. They look and stare at Me. 18 They divide My garments among them, And for My clothing they cast lots.
- He would be beaten and mocked as in Isaiah 50 (NASB):6 I offered my back to those who beat me, my cheeks to those who pulled out my beard; I did not hide my face from mocking and spitting.
- And in Psalm 22 (NASB):6 But I am a worm and not a man, scorned by men and despised by the people. 7 All who see me mock me; they hurl insults, shaking their heads: 8 “He trusts in the LORD; let the LORD rescue him. Let him deliver him, since he delights in him.”
- ❖ Regarding His second advent, we could list the following:
 - Isaiah 11 (NASB):10 Then in that day The nations will resort to the root of Jesse, Who will stand as a signal for the peoples; And His resting place will be glorious. 11 Then it will happen on that day that the Lord Will again recover the second time with His hand The remnant of His people, who will remain, From Assyria, Egypt, Pathros, Cush, Elam, Shinar, Hamath, And from the islands of the sea. 12 And He will lift up a standard for the nations And assemble the banished ones of Israel, And will gather the dispersed of Judah From the four corners of the earth.
 - Daniel 7 (NASB):13 "I kept looking in the night visions, And behold, with the clouds of heaven One like a Son of Man was coming, And He came up to the Ancient of Days And was presented before Him. 14 "And to Him was given dominion, Glory and a kingdom, That all the peoples, nations and men of every language Might serve Him. His dominion is an everlasting dominion Which will not pass away; And His kingdom is one Which will not be destroyed.
 - Zechariah 12 (NASB):9 And in that day I will set about to destroy all the nations that come against Jerusalem. 10 "I will pour out on the house of David and on the inhabitants of Jerusalem, the Spirit of grace and of supplication, so that they will look on Me whom they have pierced; and they will mourn for Him, as one mourns for an only son, and they will weep bitterly over Him like the bitter weeping over a firstborn.
 - And Jesus Himself spoke of His second coming as in Matthew 24 (NASB):30 And then the sign of the Son of Man will appear in the sky, and then all the tribes of the earth will mourn, and they will see the SON OF MAN COMING ON THE CLOUDS OF THE SKY with power and great glory. 31 And He will send forth His angels with A GREAT TRUMPET and THEY WILL GATHER TOGETHER His elect from the four winds, from one end of the sky to the other.
- ❖ Regarding “the resurrection from the dead,” we could list the following:
 - Isaiah prophesied as in Isaiah 53 (NKJV):10 Yet it pleased the LORD to bruise Him; He has put Him to grief. When You make His soul an offering for sin, He shall see His seed, He shall prolong His days, And the pleasure of the LORD shall prosper in His hand. 11 He shall see the labor of His soul, and be satisfied. By His knowledge My righteous Servant shall justify many, For He shall bear their iniquities. 12 Therefore I will divide Him a portion with the great, And He shall divide the spoil with the strong, Because He poured out His soul unto death, And He was numbered with the transgressors, And He bore the sin of many, And made intercession for the transgressors.
 - And David prophesied as in Psalm 110 (NASB):8 I have set the LORD continually before me; Because He is at my right hand, I will not be shaken. 9 Therefore my heart is glad and my glory rejoices; My flesh also will dwell securely. 10 For You will not abandon my soul to Sheol; Nor will You allow Your Holy One to undergo decay. 11 You will make known to me the path of life; In Your presence is fullness of joy; In Your right hand there are pleasures forever.

- And David prophesied as in Psalms 110 (NASB):1 Of David. A psalm. The LORD says to my Lord: "Sit at my right hand until I make your enemies a footstool for your feet."
 - And Job prophesied as in Job 19 (NASB):25 I know that my Redeemer lives, and that in the end he will stand upon the earth. 26 And after my skin has been destroyed, yet in my flesh I will see God; 27 I myself will see him with my own eyes—I, and not another. How my heart yearns within me!
 - And in the Psalms the sons of Korah wrote as in Psalms 49 (NASB):14 As sheep they are appointed for Sheol; Death shall be their shepherd; And the upright shall rule over them in the morning, And their form shall be for Sheol to consume So that they have no habitation. 15 But God will redeem my soul from the power of Sheol, For He will receive me. Selah.
 - And Asaph prophesied as in Psalms 73 (NASB):23 Nevertheless I am continually with You; You have taken hold of my right hand. 24 With Your counsel You will guide me, And afterward receive me to glory. 25 Whom have I in heaven but You? And besides You, I desire nothing on earth. 26 My flesh and my heart may fail, But God is the strength of my heart and my portion forever.
- ❖ Regarding “the ascension into heaven in the flesh of the beloved Christ Jesus, our Lord,” we could list the following:
- In Luke’s Gospel, he records the words of Jesus Himself that He was resurrected in His flesh as in Luke 24 (NKJV):36 Now as they said these things, Jesus Himself stood in the midst of them, and said to them, “Peace to you.” 37 But they were terrified and frightened, and supposed they had seen a spirit. 38 And He said to them, “Why are you troubled? And why do doubts arise in your hearts? 39 Behold My hands and My feet, that it is I Myself. Handle Me and see, for a spirit does not have flesh and bones as you see I have.” 40 When He had said this, He showed them His hands and His feet. 41 But while they still did not believe for joy, and marveled, He said to them, “Have you any food here?” 42 So they gave Him a piece of a broiled fish and some honeycomb. 43 And He took it and ate in their presence.
 - Jesus continues in Luke’s Gospel and explains that He had to suffer Luke 24 (NKJV):44 Then He said to them, “These are the words which I spoke to you while I was still with you, that all things must be fulfilled which were written in the Law of Moses and the Prophets and the Psalms concerning Me.” 45 And He opened their understanding, that they might comprehend the Scriptures. 46 Then He said to them, “Thus it is written, and thus it was necessary for the Christ to suffer and to rise from the dead the third day, 47 and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in His name to all nations, beginning at Jerusalem. 48 And you are witnesses of these things. 49 Behold, I send the Promise of My Father upon you; but tarry in the city of Jerusalem until you are endued with power from on high.”
 - Luke records His bodily ascension into heaven in the flesh as in Luke 24 (NKJV):50 And He led them out as far as Bethany, and He lifted up His hands and blessed them. 51 Now it came to pass, while He blessed them, that He was parted from them and carried up into heaven. 52 And they worshiped Him, and returned to Jerusalem with great joy, 53 and were continually in the temple praising and blessing God. Amen.
 - Then in the Psalms it is stated as in Psalms 68 (NASB):18 You have ascended on high, You have led captive Your captives; You have received gifts among men, Even among the rebellious also, that the LORD God may dwell there.
 - And Paul interprets this for us in Ephesians 4 (NASB):7 But to each one of us grace was given according to the measure of Christ’s gift. 8 Therefore it says, “WHEN HE ASCENDED ON HIGH, HE LED CAPTIVE A HOST OF CAPTIVES, AND HE GAVE GIFTS TO MEN.” 9 (Now this expression, “He ascended,” what does it mean except that He also had descended into the lower parts of the earth? 10 He who descended is Himself also He who ascended far above all the heavens, so that He might fill all things.)

- And Hebrews 9 (NASB):24 For Christ did not enter a holy place made with hands, a mere copy of the true one, but into heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us;
- ❖ Regarding “His [future] manifestation from heaven in the glory of the Father,” we could list the following:
 - Daniel 7 (NASB):13 "I kept looking in the night visions, And behold, with the clouds of heaven One like a Son of Man was coming, And He came up to the Ancient of Days And was presented before Him. 14 "And to Him was given dominion, Glory and a kingdom, That all the peoples, nations and men of every language Might serve Him. His dominion is an everlasting dominion Which will not pass away; And His kingdom is one Which will not be destroyed.
 - Luke tells us in the book of Acts that He will come just as He left as in Acts 1 (NASB):9 And after He had said these things, He was lifted up while they were looking on, and a cloud received Him out of their sight. 10 And as they were gazing intently into the sky while He was going, behold, two men in white clothing stood beside them. 11 They also said, "Men of Galilee, why do you stand looking into the sky? This Jesus, who has been taken up from you into heaven, will come in just the same way as you have watched Him go into heaven."
 - And Matthew records His glorious return in the words of Jesus Himself as in Matthew 24 (NKJV):25 See, I have told you beforehand. 26 “Therefore if they say to you, ‘Look, He is in the desert!’ do not go out; or ‘Look, He is in the inner rooms!’ do not believe it. 27 For as the lightning comes from the east and flashes to the west, so also will the coming of the Son of Man be. 28 For wherever the carcass is, there the eagles will be gathered together. 29 “Immediately after the tribulation of those days the sun will be darkened, and the moon will not give its light; the stars will fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens will be shaken. 30 Then the sign of the Son of Man will appear in heaven, and then all the tribes of the earth will mourn, and they will see the Son of Man coming on the clouds of heaven with power and great glory. 31 And He will send His angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they will gather together His elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other.

For point number four, that these things were done in order “to gather all things in one,” referring in context to Ephesians 1:10, “and to raise up anew all flesh of the whole human race,” in order that to Christ Jesus, our Lord, and God, and Saviour, and King, according to the will of the invisible Father, “every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth, and that every tongue should confess,” to Him,” referring in context to Philippians 2:9-11, we could list the following:

- Ephesians 1 (NASB):10 with a view to an administration suitable to the fullness of the times, that is, the summing up of all things in Christ, things in the heavens and things on the earth. In Him 11 also we have obtained an inheritance, having been predestined according to His purpose who works all things after the counsel of His will,
- Philippians 2 (NASB):9 For this reason also, God highly exalted Him, and bestowed on Him the name which is above every name, 10 so that at the name of Jesus EVERY KNEE WILL BOW, of those who are in heaven and on earth and under the earth, 11 and that every tongue will confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father.
- The resurrection of the dead is prophesied by Daniel as in Daniel 12 (NASB):2 "Many of those who sleep in the dust of the ground will awake, these to everlasting life, but the others to disgrace and everlasting contempt.
- And Isaiah prophesied as in Isaiah 45 (NASB):22 "Turn to Me and be saved, all the ends of the earth; For I am God, and there is no other. 23 "I have sworn by Myself, The word has gone forth from My mouth in righteousness And will not turn back, That to Me every knee will bow, every tongue will swear allegiance.

- And the apostle Paul writes as in Romans 14 (NASB):10 But you, why do you judge your brother? Or you again, why do you regard your brother with contempt? For we will all stand before the judgment seat of God. 11 For it is written, "AS I LIVE, SAYS THE LORD, EVERY KNEE SHALL BOW TO ME, AND EVERY TONGUE SHALL GIVE PRAISE TO GOD." 12 So then each one of us will give an account of himself to God.
- And again Paul tells us by the word of the Lord in Philippians 2 (NKJV):5 Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus, 6 who, being in the form of God, did not consider it robbery to be equal with God, 7 but made Himself of no reputation, taking the form of a bondservant, and coming in the likeness of men. 8 And being found in appearance as a man, He humbled Himself and became obedient to the point of death, even the death of the cross. 9 Therefore God also has highly exalted Him and given Him the name which is above every name, 10 that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of those in heaven, and of those on earth, and of those under the earth, 11 and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father.

For point number five, that the Church believes that “He will execute just judgment towards all,” we could list the following Scriptures:

- Genesis 18 (NASB):25 "Far be it from You to do such a thing, to slay the righteous with the wicked, so that the righteous and the wicked are treated alike. Far be it from You! Shall not the Judge of all the earth deal justly?"
- Moses proclaims as in Deuteronomy 32 (NASB):3 "For I proclaim the name of the LORD; Ascribe greatness to our God! 4 "The Rock! His work is perfect, For all His ways are just; A God of faithfulness and without injustice, Righteous and upright is He.
- This is the testimony of the Psalms as in Psalms 98 (NASB):8 Let the rivers clap their hands, Let the mountains sing together for joy 9 Before the LORD, for He is coming to judge the earth; He will judge the world with righteousness And the peoples with equity.
- This is also the testimony of Isaiah in Isaiah 11 (NASB):4 But with righteousness He will judge the poor, And decide with fairness for the afflicted of the earth; And He will strike the earth with the rod of His mouth, And with the breath of His lips He will slay the wicked.
- 2 Corinthians 5 (NASB):10 For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ, so that each one may be recompensed for his deeds in the body, according to what he has done, whether good or bad.
- 2 Timothy 4 (NASB):1 solemnly charge you in the presence of God and of Christ Jesus, who is to judge the living and the dead, and by His appearing and His kingdom:

For point number six, that the Church believes that “He will send “spiritual wickednesses,” referring to Ephesians 6:12, “and the angels who transgressed and became apostates, together with the ungodly, and unrighteous, and wicked, and profane among men, into everlasting fire,” we could list the following:

- Matthew 25 (NASB):41 "Then He will also say to those on His left, 'Depart from Me, accursed ones, into the eternal fire which has been prepared for the devil and his angels;
- Matthew 25 (NASB):46 "These will go away into eternal punishment, but the righteous into eternal life."
- The apostle John also prophesied as in Revelation 20 (NKJV):10 The devil, who deceived them, was cast into the lake of fire and brimstone where the beast and the false prophet are. And they will be tormented day and night forever and ever. 11 Then I saw a great white throne and Him who sat on it, from whose face the earth and the heaven fled away. And there was found no place for them. 12 And I saw the dead, small and great, standing before God, and books were opened. And another book was opened, which is the Book of Life. And the dead were judged according to their works, by the things which were written in the books. 13 The sea gave up the dead who were in it, and Death and Hades delivered up the dead who were in them. And they were judged, each one according to his works. 14 Then Death and Hades were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death. 15 And anyone not found written in the Book of Life was cast into the lake of fire.

For point number seven, that the Church believes that “He will, “in the exercise of His grace, confer immortality on the righteous, and holy, and those who have kept His commandments, and have persevered in His love, some from the beginning [of their Christian course], and others from [the date of] their repentance, and may surround them with everlasting glory,” we could list the following:

- Matthew 25 (NASB):46 "These will go away into eternal punishment, but the righteous into eternal life."
- John 3 (NASB):36 "He who believes in the Son has eternal life; but he who does not obey the Son will not see life, but the wrath of God abides on him."
- Romans 8 (NASB):28 And we know that God causes all things to work together for good to those who love God, to those who are called according to His purpose. 29 For those whom He foreknew, He also predestined to become conformed to the image of His Son, so that He would be the firstborn among many brethren; 30 and these whom He predestined, He also called; and these whom He called, He also justified; and these whom He justified, He also glorified.
- Philippians 3 (NASB):20 For our citizenship is in heaven, from which also we eagerly wait for a Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ; 21 who will transform the body of our humble state into conformity with the body of His glory, by the exertion of the power that He has even to subject all things to Himself.

In paragraph two, Irenaeus asserts, “As I have already observed, the Church, having received this preaching and this faith, although scattered throughout the whole world, yet, as if occupying but one house, carefully preserves it.” Irenaeus continues as he further asserts, “She also believes these points [of doctrine] just as if she had but one soul, and one and the same heart, and she proclaims them, and teaches them, and hands them down, with perfect harmony, as if she possessed only one mouth.” Not only so, but Irenaeus continues as he asserts further, “For, although the languages of the world are dissimilar, yet the import of the tradition is one and the same. For the Churches which have been planted in Germany do not believe or hand down anything different, nor do those in Spain, nor those in Gaul, nor those in the East, nor those in Egypt, nor those in Libya, nor those which have been established in the central regions of the world.”

Irenaeus then testifies, “But as the sun, that creature of God, is one and the same throughout the whole world, so also the preaching of the truth shineth everywhere, and enlightens all men that are willing to come to a knowledge of the truth.” Irenaeus then affirms, “Nor will any one of the rulers in the Churches, however highly gifted he may be in point of eloquence, teach doctrines different from these (for no one is greater than the Master);” But he then asserts, “nor, on the other hand, will he who is deficient in power of expression inflict injury on the tradition.”

Irenaeus then concludes, “For the faith being ever one and the same, neither does one who is able at great length to discourse regarding it, make any addition to it, nor does one, who can say but little diminish it.”

We must understand that Irenaeus is fighting heresy here. His point is that it is the belief in “this faith,” which is “ever one and the same,” that is unique, and the distinctive of the Church in his time. Irenaeus is highlighting the similarities of the churches rather than the dissimilarities. Certainly there were slight differences between the church of Rome and the churches in Asia for example. In about 196 A.D., Victor, Bishop of Rome, attempted to excommunicate the churches of Asia because they did not celebrate Easter on the 15th of the month of Nissan (Hebrew for April), but on the 14th of the month of Nissan. Irenaeus was actually instrumental in resolving this controversy. Eusebius of Caesarea (Church History, V, xxiv) notes:

"But this did not please all the bishops. And they besought him to consider the things of peace, and of neighborly unity and love. Words of theirs are extant, sharply rebuking Victor. Among them was Irenæus, who, sending letters in the name of the brethren in Gaul over whom he presided, maintained that the mystery of the resurrection of the Lord should be observed only on the Lord's day. He fittingly admonishes Victor that he should not cut off whole churches of God which observed the tradition of an ancient custom." (source: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Easter_controversy)

This controversy was ongoing in the church very early on. Yet, Irenaeus is correct as he states, "the import of the tradition is one and the same."

That being said, even so, we must admit that Irenaeus is exaggerating the extent of the unity of the Church in his time. He is doing so for the purpose of earnestly defending the faith, and is merely stating that all who are of the faith, that is, who are true believers, teach the truths he mentions in paragraph 1. However, in doing so, his statements seem to encourage an unrealistic vision of the church which goes far beyond what was actually taking place in the churches of his time. We have only to look ahead in history to the Council of Nicea to see that such unity as he describes here had not yet been reached. What his exaggeration does is to secularize the Church. That is, we see that the Church, rather than being a spiritual body that is becoming more and more like its head, is becoming an institution that is trying to look good on the outside with a profession of unity that it does not yet have on the inside. Irenaeus is trying to hold the Church together with a lie.

When we have faith in Jesus Christ we are baptized into His body and become members of His Church which is His body. But we do not become perfect overnight. As members of the body of Christ, we start out as carnal, that is, as babes in Christ, and progress to maturity as we grow up into Him in all things. We must drink the milk first, and then the solid food as Paul taught the Corinthians in 1 Corinthians 3 (NASB):1 And I, brethren, could not speak to you as to spiritual men, but as to men of flesh, as to infants in Christ. 2 I gave you milk to drink, not solid food; for you were not yet able to receive it. Indeed, even now you are not yet able, 3 for you are still fleshly. For since there is jealousy and strife among you, are you not fleshly, and are you not walking like mere men? 4 For when one says, "I am of Paul," and another, "I am of Apollos," are you not mere men?

The problem in Corinth was their flesh. They needed to discipline their flesh, and put off the jealousy and the strife and all the other things relating to their fleshly nature in order to become spiritual, and to be led by the Spirit. And this was no less a problem in the early Church as it is in our day. We also must discipline our flesh if we ever hope to have the unity Paul speaks of in Ephesians 4 (NASB):1 Therefore I, the prisoner of the Lord, implore you to walk in a manner worthy of the calling with which you have been called, 2 with all humility and gentleness, with patience, showing tolerance for one another in love, 3 being diligent to preserve the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. 4 There is one body and one Spirit, just as also you were called in one hope of your calling; 5 one Lord, one faith, one baptism, 6 one God and Father of all who is over all and through all and in all.

This process of discipline will go on until we all reach complete unity, ready for Christ's coming as in Ephesians 4 (NASB):7 But to each one of us grace was given according to the measure of Christ's gift. 8 Therefore it says, "WHEN HE ASCENDED ON HIGH, HE LED CAPTIVE A HOST OF CAPTIVES, AND HE GAVE GIFTS TO MEN." 9 (Now this expression, "He ascended," what does it mean except that He also had descended into the lower parts of the earth? 10 He who descended is Himself also He who ascended far above all the heavens, so that He might fill all things.) 11 And He gave some as apostles, and some as prophets, and some as evangelists, and some as pastors and teachers, 12 for the equipping of the saints for the work of service, to the building up of the body of Christ; 13 until we all attain to the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, to a mature man, to the measure of the stature which belongs to the fullness of Christ.

It is Jesus who is building His church as in Matthew 16 (NASB):18 "I also say to you that you are Peter, and upon this rock I will build My church; and the gates of Hades will not overpower it.

We must not substitute our own goals for His goal. His goal is complete unity in the Spirit, and the Lord has given gifts to His Church so that this unity will one day take place. It is the Lord Jesus Christ who has given members to the body of Christ to perform different functions so that the members of the body will build up the body and cause growth in the body as we read in Ephesians 4 (NASB):14 As a result, we are no longer to be children, tossed here and there by waves and carried about by every wind of doctrine, by the trickery of men, by craftiness in deceitful scheming; 15 but speaking the truth in love, we are to grow up in all aspects into Him who is the head, even Christ, 16 from whom the whole body, being fitted and held together by what every joint supplies, according to the proper working of each individual part, causes the growth of the body for the building up of itself in love.

Paul's goal was to present the Church to Christ as a pure virgin as in 2 Corinthians 11 (NASB):1 I wish that you would bear with me in a little foolishness; but indeed you are bearing with me. 2 For I am jealous for you with a godly jealousy; for I betrothed you to one husband, so that to Christ I might present you as a pure virgin.

This should be our goal as well. Let us discipline our flesh and become spiritual men and women of God. Let us also not walk in blind obedience and service to the traditions of our forefathers. Rather, let us seek to clarify what our forefathers said, and give ourselves the right to become healthier than they were. In this way we will be continually seeking the truth and not just maintaining the status quo. For the truth is very much better than fantasy. And our God is a God of truth who seeks worshippers to worship Him in Spirit and in truth as Jesus said in John 4 (NIV):23 Yet a time is coming and has now come when the true worshipers will worship the Father in the Spirit and in truth, for they are the kind of worshipers the Father seeks. 24 God is spirit, and his worshippers must worship in the Spirit and in truth.”

Just for clarification, I am not talking about a new perspective here, but a right perspective that is in conformity with the Scriptures from first to last. We will look at more of Irenaeus' writing to form a true perspective of his statement of faith.

Book 2: Chapter XXX.—Absurdity of their styling themselves spiritual, while the Demiurge is declared to be animal.

9. Justly, therefore, do we convict them of having departed far and wide from the truth. For if the Saviour formed the things which have been made, by means of him (the Demiurge), he is proved in that case not to be inferior but superior to them, since he is found to have been the former even of themselves; for they, too, have a place among created things. How, then, can it be argued that these men indeed are spiritual, but that he by whom they were created is of an animal nature? Or, again, if (which is indeed the only true supposition, as I have shown by numerous arguments of the very clearest nature) He (the Creator) made all things freely, and by His own power, and arranged and finished them, and His will is the substance 3257 That is, as Massuet notes, all things derive not only their existence, but their qualities, from His will. Harvey proposes to read causa instead of substantia, but the change seems needless. of all things, then He is discovered to be the one only God who created all things, who alone is Omnipotent, and who is the only Father rounding and forming all things, visible and invisible, such as may be perceived by our senses and such as cannot, heavenly and earthly, “by the word of His power;” 3258 Heb. i. 3. and He has fitted and arranged all things by His wisdom, while He contains all things, but He Himself can be contained by no one: He is the Former, He the Builder, He the Discoverer, He the Creator, He the Lord of all; and there is no one besides Him, or above Him, neither has He any mother, as they falsely ascribe to Him; nor is there a second God, as Marcion has imagined; nor is there a Pleroma of thirty Æons, which has been shown a vain supposition; nor is there any such being as Bythus or Proarche; nor are there a series of heavens; nor is there a virginal light 3259 That is, Barbelos: comp. i. 29, 1. nor an unnameable Æon, nor, in fact, any one of those things which are madly dreamt of by these, and by all the heretics. But there is one only God, the Creator—He who is above every Principality, and Power, and Dominion, and Virtue: He is Father, He is God, He the Founder, He the Maker, He the Creator, who made those things by Himself, that is, through His Word and His Wisdom— heaven and earth, and the seas, and all things that are in them: He is just; He is good; He it is who formed man, who planted paradise, who made the world, who gave rise to the flood, who saved Noah; He is the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob, the God of the living: He it is whom the law proclaims, whom the prophets preach, whom Christ reveals, whom the apostles make known 3260 “Tradunt;” literally, hand down. to us, and in whom the Church believes. He is the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ: through His Word, who is His Son, through Him He is revealed and manifested to all to whom He is revealed; for those [only] know Him to whom the Son has revealed Him. But the Son, eternally co-existing with the Father, from of old, yea, from the beginning, always reveals the Father to Angels, Archangels, Powers, Virtues, and all to whom He wills that God should be revealed.

Summary: In paragraph nine, Irenaeus is speaking of the Gnostics as he begins, “Justly, therefore, do we convict them of having departed far and wide from the truth.” Irenaeus argues against the Gnostics as he says, “For if the Saviour formed the things which have been made, by means of him (the Demiurge), he is proved in that case not to be inferior but superior to them, since he is found to have been the former even of themselves; for they, too, have a place among created things.” Irenaeus asks, “How, then, can it be argued that these men indeed are spiritual, but that he by whom they were created is of an animal nature?” Irenaeus then affirms, “Or, again, if (which is indeed the only true supposition, as I have shown by numerous arguments of the very clearest nature) He (the Creator) made all things freely, and by His own power, and arranged and finished them, and His will is the substance of all things, then He is discovered to be the one only God who created all things, who alone is Omnipotent, and who is the only Father rounding and forming all things, visible and invisible, such as may be perceived by our senses and such as cannot, heavenly and earthly, “by the word of His power,” referring in part to Hebrews 1:3, “and He has fitted and arranged all things by His wisdom, while He contains all things, but He Himself can be contained by no one:” Irenaeus clearly affirms that, “He is the Former, He the Builder, He the Discoverer, He the Creator, He the Lord of all; and there is no one besides Him, or above Him, neither has He any mother, as they falsely ascribe to Him; nor is there a second God, as Marcion has imagined; nor is there a Pleroma of thirty Æons, which has been shown a vain supposition; nor is there any such being as Bythus or Proarche; nor are there a series of heavens; nor is there a virginal light nor an unnameable Æon, nor, in fact, any one of those things which are madly dreamt of by these, and by all the heretics. But there is one only God, the Creator—He who is above every Principality, and Power, and Dominion, and Virtue: He is Father, He is God, He the Founder, He the Maker, He the Creator, who made those things by Himself, that is, through His Word and His Wisdom— heaven and earth, and the seas, and all things that are in them: He is just; He is good; He it is who formed man, who planted paradise, who made the world, who gave rise to the flood, who saved Noah; He is the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob, the God of the living: He it is whom the law proclaims, whom the prophets preach, whom Christ reveals, whom the apostles make known to us, and in whom the Church believes.” Irenaeus concludes as he testifies, “He is the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ: through His Word, who is His Son, through Him He is revealed and manifested to all to whom He is revealed; for those [only] know Him to whom the Son has revealed Him. But the Son, eternally co-existing with the Father, from of old, yea, from the beginning, always reveals the Father to Angels, Archangels, Powers, Virtues, and all to whom He wills that God should be revealed.”

Commentary: In paragraph nine, it is evident that Irenaeus is speaking to the Gnostics since he identifies them as “having departed far and wide from the truth,” who say that “the Saviour formed the things which have been made, by means of him (the Demiurge).” Irenaeus argues effectively that, “he,” the Savior, “is proved in that case not to be inferior but superior to them, since he is found to have been the former even of themselves; for they, too, have a place among created things.” Again, Irenaeus identifies them as Gnostics as he asks, “How, then, can it be argued that these men indeed are spiritual, but that he by whom they were created is of an animal nature?” Irenaeus then affirms that the “only true supposition,” which he has “shown by numerous arguments of the very clearest nature,” is that “He (the Creator) made all things freely, and by His own power, and arranged and finished them, and His will is the substance of all things.” He is therefore, Irenaeus testifies, “discovered to be the one only God who created all things, who alone is Omnipotent, and who is the only Father rounding and forming all things, visible and invisible, such as may be perceived by our senses and such as cannot, heavenly and earthly, “by the word of His power,” referring in part to Hebrews 1 (NASB):3 Who being the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person, and upholding all things by the word of his power, when he had by himself purged our sins, sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high;

Irenaeus continues as he affirms, “and He has fitted and arranged all things by His wisdom, while He contains all things, but He Himself can be contained by no one:” Irenaeus states clearly and without ambiguity that, “He is the Former, He the Builder, He the Discoverer, He the Creator, He the Lord of all; and there is no one besides Him, or above Him, neither has He any mother, as they falsely ascribe to Him; nor is there a second God, as Marcion has imagined; nor is there a Pleroma of thirty Æons, which has been shown a vain supposition; nor is there any such being as Bythus or Proarche; nor are there a series of heavens; nor is there a virginal light nor an unnameable Æon, nor, in fact, any one of those things which are madly dreamt of by these, and by all the heretics.”

Irenaeus is absolutely clear in who He believes in as he testifies, “But there is one only God, the Creator—He who is above every Principality, and Power, and Dominion, and Virtue: He is Father, He is God, He the Founder, He the Maker, He the Creator, who made those things by Himself, that is, through His Word and His Wisdom— heaven and earth, and the seas, and all things that are in them.” That is, Irenaeus encourages us to make no mistake about this, that “He is just; He is good; He it is who formed man, who planted paradise, who made the world, who gave rise to the flood, who saved Noah; He is the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob, the God of the living: He it is whom the law proclaims, whom the prophets preach, whom Christ reveals, whom the apostles make known to us, and in whom the Church believes.”

Again, Irenaeus is emphatic, declaring, “He is the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ: through His Word, who is His Son, through Him He is revealed and manifested to all to whom He is revealed.” When he says “for those [only] know Him to whom the Son has revealed Him,” he is referring to Matthew 11 (NASB):27 “All things have been handed over to Me by My Father; and no one knows the Son except the Father; nor does anyone know the Father except the Son, and anyone to whom the Son wills to reveal Him.

Irenaeus again leaves no doubt who he believes the Son is when he testifies, “But the Son, eternally co-existing with the Father, from of old, yea, from the beginning, always reveals the Father to Angels, Archangels, Powers, Virtues, and all to whom He wills that God should be revealed.” Irenaeus is fighting the heresy of Gnosticism, and he argues against it potently. He very plainly believes that God is one and the same as the supreme God spoken of in the Old Testament, and that He is the same one Jesus testifies to in the New Testament, which fact the Gnostics deny saying that there is another god behind God as it were.

4. Now, that the preaching of the apostles, the authoritative teaching of the Lord, the announcements of the prophets, the dictated utterances of the apostles, 3306 The words are “apostolorum dictatio,” probably referring to the letters of the apostles, as distinguished from their preaching already mentioned. and the ministration of the law—all of which praise one and the same Being, the God and Father of all, and not many diverse beings, nor one deriving his substance from different gods or powers, but [declare] that all things [were formed] by one and the same Father (who nevertheless adapts [His works] to the natures and tendencies of the materials dealt with), things visible and invisible, and, in short, all things that have been made [were created] neither by angels, nor by any other power, but by God alone, the Father—are all in harmony with our statements, has, I think, been sufficiently proved, while by these weighty arguments it has been shown that there is but one God, the Maker of all things. But that I may not be thought to avoid that series of proofs which may be derived from the Scriptures of the Lord (since, indeed, these Scriptures do much more evidently and clearly proclaim this very point), I shall, for the benefit of those at least who do not bring a depraved mind to bear upon them, devote a special book to the Scriptures referred to, which shall fairly follow them out [and explain them], and I shall plainly set forth from these divine Scriptures proofs to [satisfy] all the lovers of truth. 3307 This last sentence is very confused and ambiguous, and the editors throw but little light upon it. We have endeavoured to translate it according to the ordinary text and punctuation, but strongly suspect interpolation and corruption. If we might venture to strike out “has Scripturas,” and connect “his tamen” with “prædicantibus,” a better sense would be yielded, as follows: “But that I may not be thought to avoid that series of proofs which may be derived from the Scriptures of the Lord (since, indeed, these Scriptures do much more evidently and clearly set forth this very point, to those at least who do not bring a depraved mind to their consideration), I shall devote the particular book which follows to them, and shall,” etc.

Summary: In paragraph four, Irenaeus affirms, “Now, that the the preaching of the apostles, the authoritative teaching of the Lord, the announcements of the prophets, the dictated utterances of the apostles, and the ministration of the law,” all “praise one and the same Being, the God and Father of all, and not many diverse beings, nor one deriving his substance from different gods or powers, but [declare] that all things [were formed] by one and the same Father (who nevertheless adapts [His works] to the natures and tendencies of the materials dealt with), things visible and invisible, and, in short, all things that have been made [were created] neither by angels, nor by any other power, but by God alone, the Father—are all in harmony with our statements, has, I think, been sufficiently proved, while by these weighty arguments it has been shown that there is but one God, the Maker of all things.” Irenaeus then explains his purpose as he states, “But that I may not be thought to avoid that series of proofs which may be derived from the Scriptures of the Lord (since, indeed, these Scriptures do much more evidently and clearly proclaim this very point), I shall, for the benefit of those at least who do not bring a depraved mind to bear upon them, devote a special book to the Scriptures referred to, which shall fairly follow them out [and explain them], and I shall plainly set forth from these divine Scriptures proofs to [satisfy] all the lovers of truth.”

Commentary: In paragraph four, we have a very strong statement of the faith of Irenaeus as he clearly affirms that “the preaching of the apostles, the authoritative teaching of the Lord, the announcements of the prophets, the dictated utterances of the apostles, and the ministration of the law,” all “praise one and the same Being, the God and Father of all, and not many diverse beings, nor one deriving his substance from different gods or powers, but [declare] that all things [were formed] by one and the same Father (who nevertheless adapts [His works] to the natures and tendencies of the materials dealt with), things visible and invisible.” Taken in summary, “all things that have been made [were created] neither by angels, nor by any other power, but by God alone, the Father,” Irenaeus affirms.

And, Irenaeus believes that all of these things are in harmony with his arguments. He believes that his arguments for one God and Father of all, who created all things, are “weighty.” And in addition, Irenaeus believed that the “Scriptures do much more evidently and clearly proclaim this very point.” Irenaeus thus clearly points to the Scriptures as the source of his strongest arguments against Gnostic beliefs.

In the first two books of Against Heresies, Irenaeus offers many reasonable arguments that refute Gnostic beliefs. Now, Irenaeus states that he will provide a Scriptural defense of his statements. It is the Scriptures, he affirms, which “do much more evidently and clearly proclaim” that “all things that have been made [were created] neither by angels, nor by any other power, but by God alone, the Father.”

Book 3: Chapter XIX.—Jesus Christ was not a mere man, begotten from Joseph in the ordinary course of nature, but was very God, begotten of the Father most high, and very man, born of the Virgin.

1. But again, those who assert that He was simply a mere man, begotten by Joseph, remaining in the bondage of the old disobedience, are in a state of death having been not as yet joined to the Word of God the Father, nor receiving liberty through the Son, as He does Himself declare: “If the Son shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed.” 3665 John viii. 36. But, being ignorant of Him who from the Virgin is Emmanuel, they are deprived of His gift, which is eternal life; 3666 Rom. vi. 23. and not receiving the incorruptible Word, they remain in mortal flesh, and are debtors to death, not obtaining the antidote of life. To whom the Word says, mentioning His own gift of grace: “I said, Ye are all the sons of the Highest, and gods; but ye shall die like men.” 3667 Ps. lxxxii. 6, 7. He speaks undoubtedly these words to those who have not received the gift of adoption, but who despise the incarnation of the pure generation of the Word of God, 3668 The original Greek is preserved here by Theodoret, differing in some respects from the old Latin version: καὶ ἀποστεροῦντας τὸν ἄνθρωπον τῆς εἰς Θεὸν ἀνόδου καὶ ἀχαριστοῦντας τῷ ὑπὲρ αὐτῶν σαρκωθέντι λόγῳ τοῦ Θεοῦ. Εἰς τοῦτο γὰρ ὁ λόγος ἄνθρωπος ... ἵνα ὁ ἄνθρωπος τὸν λόγον χωρήσας, καὶ τὴν υἰοθεσίαν λαβὼν, υἱὸς γένηται Θεοῦ. The old Latin runs thus: “fraudentes hominem ab ea ascensione quæ est ad Dominum, et ingratis existentibus Verbo Dei, qui incarnatus est propter ipsos. Propter hoc enim Verbum Dei homo, et qui Filius Dei est, Filius Hominis factus est ... commixtus Verbo Dei, et adoptionem percipiens fiat filius Dei.” [A specimen of the liberties taken by the Latin translators with the original of Irenæus. Others are much less innocent.] defraud human nature of promotion into God, and prove themselves ungrateful to the Word of God, who became flesh for them. For it was for this end that the Word of God was made man, and He who was the Son of God became the Son of man, that man, having been taken into the Word, and receiving the adoption, might become the son of God. For by no other means could we have attained to incorruptibility and immortality, unless we had been united to incorruptibility and immortality. But how could we be joined to incorruptibility and immortality, unless, first, incorruptibility and immortality had become that which we also are, so that the corruptible might be swallowed up by incorruptibility, and the mortal by immortality, that we might receive the adoption of sons?

2. For this reason [it is, said], “Who shall declare His generation?” 3669 Isa. liii. 8. since “He is a man, and who shall recognise Him?” 3670 Jer. xvii. 9. But he to whom the Father which is in heaven has revealed Him, 3671 Matt. xvi. 16. knows Him, so that he understands that He who “was not born either by the will of the flesh, or by the will of man,” 3672 John i. 13. is the Son of man, this is Christ, the Son of the living God. For I have shown from the Scriptures, 3673 See above, iii. 6. that no one of the sons of Adam is as to everything, and absolutely, called God, or named Lord. But that He is Himself in His own right, beyond all men who ever lived, God, and Lord, and King Eternal, and the Incarnate Word, proclaimed by all the prophets, the apostles, and by the Spirit Himself, may be seen by all who have attained to even a small portion of the truth. Now, the Scriptures would not have testified these things of Him, if, like others, He had been a mere man. But that He had, beyond all others, in Himself that preeminent birth which is from the Most High Father, and also experienced that preeminent generation which is from the Virgin, 3674 Isa. vii. 14. the divine Scriptures do in both respects testify of Him: also, that He was a man without comeliness, and liable to suffering; 3675 Isa. liii. 2 that He sat upon the foal of an ass; 3676 Zech. ix. 9 that He received for drink, vinegar and gall; 3677 Ps. lxxix. 21. that He was despised among the people, and humbled Himself even to death and that He is the holy Lord, the Wonderful, the Counsellor, the Beautiful in appearance, and the Mighty God, 3678 Isa. ix. 6. coming on the clouds as the Judge of all men; 3679 Dan. vii. 13.—all these things did the Scriptures prophesy of Him.

Summary: In paragraph one, Irenæus argues, “But again, those who assert that He was simply a mere man, begotten by Joseph, remaining in the bondage of the old disobedience, are in a state of death having been not as yet joined to the Word of God the Father, nor receiving liberty through the Son, as He does Himself declare: “If the Son shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed,” referring to John 8:36. Irenæus continues his argument as he says, “But, being ignorant of Him who from the Virgin is Emmanuel, they are deprived of His gift, which is eternal life,” referring to Romans 6:23, “and not receiving the incorruptible Word, they remain in mortal flesh, and are debtors to death, not obtaining the antidote of life.” Irenæus testifies, “To whom the Word says, mentioning His own gift of grace: “I said, Ye are all the sons of the Highest, and gods; but ye shall die like men,” referring to Psalm 82:6-7. Irenæus interprets this verse as he says, “He speaks undoubtedly these words to those who have not received the gift of adoption, but who despise the incarnation of the pure generation of the Word of God, defraud human nature of promotion into God, and prove themselves ungrateful to the Word of God, who became flesh for them.” Irenaeus explains, “For it was for this end that the Word of God was made man, and He who was the Son of God became the Son of man, that man, having been taken into the Word, and receiving the adoption, might become the son of God.” Irenaeus then adds, “For by no other means could we have attained to incorruptibility and immortality, unless we had been united to incorruptibility and immortality.” Irenaeus concludes as he asks, “But how could we be joined to incorruptibility and immortality, unless, first, incorruptibility and immortality had become that which we also are, so that the corruptible might be swallowed up by incorruptibility, and the mortal by immortality, that we might receive the adoption of sons?”

Irenaeus continues his argument in paragraph 2 as he says, “For this reason [it is, said], “Who shall declare His generation?” referring to Isaiah 53:8, “since “He is a man, and who shall recognize Him?” referring to Jeremiah 17:9. Irenaeus explains, “But he to whom the Father which is in heaven has revealed Him,” referring in context to Matthew 16:16-17, “knows Him, so that he understands that He who “was not born either by the will of the flesh, or by the will of man,” referring in context to John 1:12-13, “is the Son of man, this is Christ, the Son of the living God.” Irenaeus then testifies, “For I have shown from the Scriptures, that no one of the sons of Adam is as to everything, and absolutely, called God, or named Lord. But that He is Himself in His own right, beyond all men who ever lived, God, and Lord, and King Eternal, and the Incarnate Word, proclaimed by all the prophets, the apostles, and by the Spirit Himself, may be seen by all who have attained to even a small portion of the truth,” referring in part to 1 Timothy 1:17 and Romans 9:5 and John 1:14. Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “Now, the Scriptures would not have testified these things of Him, if, like others, He had been a mere man. But that He had, beyond all others, in Himself that preeminent birth which is from the Most High Father, and also experienced that preeminent generation which is from the Virgin,” referring to Isaiah 7:14, “the divine Scriptures do in both respects testify of Him:” Irenaeus then adds, “also, that He was a man without comeliness, and liable to suffering,” referring in context to Isaiah 53:1-4, “that He sat upon the foal of an ass,” referring to Zechariah 9:9, “that He received for drink, vinegar and gall,” referring to Psalm 69:21, “that He was despised among the people, and humbled Himself even to death,” referring to Isaiah 53:3 and Philippians 2:8, “and that He is the holy Lord, the Wonderful, the Counsellor, the Beautiful in appearance, and the Mighty God,” referring to Isaiah 9:6, “coming on the clouds as the Judge of all men,” referring to Daniel 7:13, Matthew 26:64, Psalm 96:12-13 “—all these things did the Scriptures prophesy of Him.”

Commentary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus argues, “But again, those who assert that He was simply a mere man, begotten by Joseph, remaining in the bondage of the old disobedience, are in a state of death having been not as yet joined to the Word of God the Father, nor receiving liberty through the Son, as He does Himself declare: “If the Son shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed,” referring to John 8 (NASB):36 “So if the Son makes you free, you will be free indeed.

Yes, man is in “the bondage of the old disobedience,” and in a state of spiritual death before he has faith in Christ as we read in Ephesians 2 (NASB):1 And you were dead in your trespasses and sins. 2 in which you formerly walked according to the course of this world, according to the prince of the power of the air, of the spirit that is now working in the sons of disobedience. 3 Among them we too all formerly lived in the lusts of our flesh, indulging the desires of the flesh and of the mind, and were by nature children of wrath, even as the rest.

Irenaeus continues his argument as he says, “But, being ignorant of Him who from the Virgin is Emmanuel, they are deprived of His gift, which is eternal life,” referring to Romans 6 (NASB):23 For the wages of sin is death, but the free gift of God is eternal life in Christ Jesus our Lord.

Irenaeus continues as he says, “and not receiving the incorruptible Word, they remain in mortal flesh, and are debtors to death, not obtaining the antidote of life.” This is supported by the Scriptures. Paul addresses the Ephesians as saints in Ephesians 1 (NASB):1 Paul, an apostle of Christ Jesus by the will of God, To the saints who are at Ephesus and who are faithful in Christ Jesus: 2 Grace to you and peace from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ.

Paul tells us that the Ephesians were dead in sin but raised to life in Christ Jesus as in Ephesians 2 (NASB):4 But God, being rich in mercy, because of His great love with which He loved us, 5 even when we were dead in our transgressions, made us alive together with Christ (by grace you have been saved), 6 and raised us up with Him, and seated us with Him in the heavenly places in Christ Jesus, 7 so that in the ages to come He might show the surpassing riches of His grace in kindness toward us in Christ Jesus.

Irenaeus then testifies, “To whom the Word says, mentioning His own gift of grace: “I said, Ye are all the sons of the Highest, and gods; but ye shall die like men,” referring to Psalm 82 (NASB):6 I said, “You are gods, And all of you are sons of the Most High. 7 “Nevertheless you will die like men And fall like any one of the princes.”

Irenaeus interprets this verse as he then says, “He speaks undoubtedly these words to those who have not received the gift of adoption, but who despise the incarnation of the pure generation of the Word of God, defraud human nature of promotion into God, and prove themselves ungrateful to the Word of God, who became flesh for them.” Verse 5 in Psalm 82 seems to support Irenaeus’ interpretation as in Psalm 82 (NASB):5 They do not know nor do they understand; They walk about in darkness; All the foundations of the earth are shaken.

Jesus Himself refers to this verse in John 10 (HCSB):31 Again the Jews picked up rocks to stone Him. 32 Jesus replied, “I have shown you many good works from the Father. Which of these works are you stoning Me for?” 33 “We aren’t stoning You for a good work,” the Jews answered, “but for blasphemy, because You—being a man—make Yourself God.” 34 Jesus answered them, “Isn’t it written in your scripture, I said, you are gods? 35 If He called those whom the word of God came to ‘gods’—and the Scripture cannot be broken— 36 do you say, ‘You are blaspheming’ to the One the Father set apart and sent into the world, because I said: I am the Son of God? 37 If I am not doing My Father’s works, don’t believe Me. 38 But if I am doing them and you don’t believe Me, believe the works. This way you will know and understand that the Father is in Me and I in the Father.” 39 Then they were trying again to seize Him, yet He eluded their grasp.

Irenaeus continues as he explains, “For it was for this end that the Word of God was made man, and He who was the Son of God became the Son of man, that man, having been taken into the Word, and receiving the adoption, might become the son of God.” Irenaeus may here be drawing from Galatians 4 (NASB):4 But when the fullness of the time came, God sent forth His Son, born of a woman, born under the Law, 5 so that He might redeem those who were under the Law, that we might receive the adoption as sons.

Irenaeus then adds, “For by no other means could we have attained to incorruptibility and immortality, unless we had been united to incorruptibility and immortality.” Irenaeus concludes as he asks, “But how could we be joined to incorruptibility and immortality, unless, first, incorruptibility and immortality had become that which we also are, so that the corruptible might be swallowed up by incorruptibility, and the mortal by immortality, that we might receive the adoption of sons?” Irenaeus and Scripture agree here. He evidently is also drawing from Paul’s writing to the Corinthians as we read in 1 Corinthians 15 (NASB):51 Behold, I tell you a mystery; we will not all sleep, but we will all be changed, 52 in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trumpet; for the trumpet will sound, and the dead will be raised imperishable, and we will be changed. 53 For this perishable must put on the imperishable, and this mortal must put on immortality. 54 But when this perishable will have put on the imperishable, and this mortal will have put on immortality, then will come about the saying that is written, “DEATH IS SWALLOWED UP in victory. 55 O DEATH, WHERE IS YOUR VICTORY? O DEATH, WHERE IS YOUR STING?” 56 The sting of death is sin, and the power of sin is the law; 57 but thanks be to God, who gives us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ.

And from Romans 8 (NASB):23 And not only this, but also we ourselves, having the first fruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting eagerly for our adoption as sons, the redemption of our body.

And also from 2 Corinthians 5 (NASB):4 For indeed while we are in this tent, we groan, being burdened, because we do not want to be unclothed but to be clothed, so that what is mortal will be swallowed up by life.

Irenaeus is also drawing from the epistles of James and Peter as in James 1 (NASB):18 In the exercise of His will He brought us forth by the word of truth, so that we would be a kind of first fruits among His creatures.

Then Peter speaks of the imperishable, or incorruptible, the living and enduring word of God, as the seed by which we are born again as in 1 Peter 1 (NASB):23 for you have been born again not of seed which is perishable but imperishable, that is, through the living and enduring word of God.

Irenaeus continues his argument in paragraph 2 as he says, “For this reason [it is, said], “Who shall declare His generation?” referring to Isaiah 53 (Septuagint):8 In his humiliation his judgment was taken away: who shall declare his generation? for his life is taken away from the earth: because of the iniquities of my people he was led to death.

Also as in Isaiah 53 (NASB):8 By oppression and judgment He was taken away; And as for His generation, who considered That He was cut off out of the land of the living For the transgression of my people, to whom the stroke was due?

Irenaeus continues his thought as he says, “since “He is a man, and who shall recognize Him?” referring to Jeremiah 17 (NASB):9 "The heart is more deceitful than all else And is desperately sick; Who can understand it?

Irenaeus explains, “But he to whom the Father which is in heaven has revealed Him,” referring in context to Matthews 16 (NASB):16 Simon Peter answered, "You are the Christ, the Son of the living God." 17 And Jesus said to him, "Blessed are you, Simon Barjona, because flesh and blood did not reveal this to you, but My Father who is in heaven.

Irenaeus continues as he says, “knows Him, so that he understands that He who “was not born either by the will of the flesh, or by the will of man,” referring in context to John 1 (NASB):12 But as many as received Him, to them He gave the right to become children of God, even to those who believe in His name, 13 who were born, not of blood nor of the will of the flesh nor of the will of man, but of God.

And Irenaeus concludes, “is the Son of man, this is Christ, the Son of the living God.” Irenaeus then testifies, “For I have shown from the Scriptures, that no one of the sons of Adam is as to everything, and absolutely, called God, or named Lord. But that He is Himself in His own right, beyond all men who ever lived, God, and Lord, and King Eternal, and the Incarnate Word, proclaimed by all the prophets, the apostles, and by the Spirit Himself, may be seen by all who have attained to even a small portion of the truth,” possibly referring in part to 1 Timothy 1 (NASB):17 Now to the King eternal, immortal, invisible, the only God, be honor and glory forever and ever. Amen.

And to Romans 9 (NASB):5 whose are the fathers, and from whom is the Christ according to the flesh, who is over all, God blessed forever. Amen.

And to John 1 (NASB):14 And the Word became flesh, and dwelt among us, and we saw His glory, glory as of the only begotten from the Father, full of grace and truth.

Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “Now, the Scriptures would not have testified these things of Him, if, like others, He had been a mere man. But that He had, beyond all others, in Himself that preeminent birth which is from the Most High Father, and also experienced that preeminent generation which is from the Virgin,” referring Isaiah 7 (NASB):14 "Therefore the Lord Himself will give you a sign: Behold, a virgin will be with child and bear a son, and she will call His name Immanuel.

And Irenaeus continues as he says, “the divine Scriptures do in both respects testify of Him.” Irenaeus then adds, “also, that He was a man without comeliness, and liable to suffering,” referring in context to Isaiah 53 (NASB):1 Who has believed our message? And to whom has the arm of the LORD been revealed? 2 For He grew up before Him like a tender shoot, And like a root out of parched ground; He has no stately form or majesty That we should look upon Him, Nor appearance that we should be attracted to Him. 3 He was despised and forsaken of men, A man of sorrows and acquainted with grief; And like one from whom men hide their face He was despised, and we did not esteem Him. 4 Surely our griefs He Himself bore, And our sorrows He carried; Yet we ourselves esteemed Him stricken, Smitten of God, and afflicted. 5 But He was pierced through for our transgressions, He was crushed for our iniquities; The chastening for our well-being fell upon Him, And by His scourging we are healed.

Again, Irenaeus adds, “that He sat upon the foal of an ass,” referring to Zechariah 9 (NASB):9 Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion! Shout in triumph, O daughter of Jerusalem! Behold, your king is coming to you; He is just and endowed with salvation, Humble, and mounted on a donkey, Even on a colt, the foal of a donkey.

And again, Irenaeus adds, “that He received for drink, vinegar and gall,” referring to Psalms 69 (NASB):21 They also gave me gall for my food And for my thirst they gave me vinegar to drink.

This was fulfilled in Matthew 27 (NASB):34 they gave Him wine to drink mixed with gall; and after tasting it, He was unwilling to drink.

And Irenaeus testifies, “that He was despised among the people, and humbled Himself even to death,” referring to Isaiah 53 (NASB):3 He was despised and forsaken of men, A man of sorrows and acquainted with grief; And like one from whom men hide their face He was despised, and we did not esteem Him.

And to Philippians 2 (NASB):8 Being found in appearance as a man, He humbled Himself by becoming obedient to the point of death, even death on a cross.

And again Irenaeus testifies, “and that He is the holy Lord, the Wonderful, the Counsellor, the Beautiful in appearance, and the Mighty God,” referring to Isaiah 9 (NASB):6 For a child will be born to us, a son will be given to us; And the government will rest on His shoulders; And His name will be called Wonderful Counselor, Mighty God, Eternal Father, Prince of Peace.

And Irenaeus adds, “coming on the clouds as the Judge of all men,” referring to Daniel 7 (NASB):13 “I kept looking in the night visions, And behold, with the clouds of heaven One like a Son of Man was coming, And He came up to the Ancient of Days And was presented before Him.

And to Matthew 26 (NASB):64 Jesus said to him, “You have said it yourself; nevertheless I tell you, hereafter you will see THE SON OF MAN SITTING AT THE RIGHT HAND OF POWER, and COMING ON THE CLOUDS OF HEAVEN.”

And to Psalms 96 (NASB):12 Let the field exult, and all that is in it. Then all the trees of the forest will sing for joy 13 Before the LORD, for He is coming, For He is coming to judge the earth. He will judge the world in righteousness And the peoples in His faithfulness.

Irenaeus concludes as he testifies, “—all these things did the Scriptures prophesy of Him.” Such is the testimony of Irenaeus.

Book 4: Chapter VI.—Explanation of the words of Christ, “No man knoweth the Father, but the Son,” etc.; which words the heretics misinterpret. Proof that, by the Father revealing the Son, and by the Son being revealed, the Father was never unknown.

1. For the Lord, revealing Himself to His disciples, that He Himself is the Word, who imparts knowledge of the Father, and reproving the Jews, who imagined that they, had [the knowledge of] God, while they nevertheless rejected His Word, through whom God is made known, declared, “No man knoweth the Son, but the Father; neither knoweth any man the Father, save the Son, and he to whom the Son has willed to reveal [Him].” 3857 Matt. xi. 27; Luke x. 22. Thus hath Matthew set it down, and Luke in like manner, and Mark 3858 Not now to be found in Mark’s Gospel. the very same; for John omits this passage. They, however, who would be wiser than the apostles, write [the verse] in the following manner: “No man knew the Father, but the Son; nor the Son, but the Father, and he to whom the Son has willed to reveal [Him];” and they explain it as if the true God were known to none prior to our Lord’s advent; and that God who was announced by the prophets, they allege not to be the Father of Christ.

2. But if Christ did then [only] begin to have existence when He came [into the world] as man, and [if] the Father did remember [only] in the times of Tiberius Cæsar to provide for [the wants of] men, and His Word was shown to have not always coexisted with His creatures; [it may be remarked that] neither then was it necessary that another God should be proclaimed, but [rather] that the reasons for so great carelessness and neglect on His part should be made the subject of investigation. For it is fitting that no such question should arise, and gather such strength, that it would indeed both change God, and destroy our faith in that Creator who supports us by means of His creation. For as we do direct our faith towards the Son, so also should we possess a firm and immovable love towards the Father. In his book against Marcion, Justin 3859 Photius, 125, makes mention of Justin Martyr’s work, λόγοι κατὰ Μαρκίωνος. See also Eusebius’s Ecclesiastical History, book iv. c. 18, where this passage of Irenæus is quoted. [The vast importance of Justin’s startling remark is that it hinges on the words of Christ Himself, concerning His antecedents and notes as set forth in the Scriptures, St. John v. 30–39.] does well say: “I would not have believed the Lord Himself, if He had announced any other than He who is our framer, maker, and nourisher. But because the only-begotten Son came to us from the one God, who both made this world and formed us, and contains and administers all things, summing up His own handiwork in Himself, my faith towards Him is steadfast, and my love to the Father immovable, God bestowing both upon us.”

3. For no one can know the Father, unless through the Word of God, that is, unless by the Son revealing [Him]; neither can he have knowledge of the Son, unless through the good pleasure of the Father. But the Son performs the good pleasure of the Father; for the Father sends, and the Son is sent, and comes. And His Word knows that His Father is, as far as regards us, invisible and infinite; and since He cannot be declared [by any one else], He does Himself declare Him to us; and, on the other hand, it is the Father alone who knows His own Word. And both these truths has our Lord declared. Wherefore the Son reveals the knowledge of the Father through His own manifestation. For the manifestation of the Son is the knowledge of the Father; for all things are manifested through the Word. In order, therefore, that we might know that the Son who came is He who imparts to those believing on Him a knowledge of the Father, He said to His disciples: 3860 [A most emphatic and pregnant text which Irenæus here expounds with great beauty. The reference (St. Matt. xi. 27) seems to have been inadvertently omitted in this place where the repetition is desirable.] “No man knoweth the Son but the Father, nor the Father but the Son, and those to whomsoever the Son shall reveal Him;” thus setting Himself forth and the Father as He [really] is, that we may not receive any other Father, except Him who is revealed by the Son.

4. But this [Father] is the Maker of heaven and earth, as is shown from His words; and not he, the false father, who has been invented by Marcion, or by Valentinus, or by Basilides, or by Carpocrates, or by Simon, or by the rest of the “Gnostics,” falsely so called. For none of these was the Son of God; but Christ Jesus our Lord [was], against whom they set their teaching in opposition, and have the daring to preach an unknown God. But they ought to hear [this] against themselves: How is it that He is unknown, who is known by them? for, whatever is known even by a few, is not unknown. But the Lord did not say that both the Father and the Son could not be known at all (in totum), for in that case His advent would have been superfluous. For why did He come hither? Was it that He should say to us, “Never mind seeking after God; for He is unknown, and ye shall not find Him;” as also the disciples of Valentinus falsely declare that Christ said to their Æons? But this is indeed vain. For the Lord taught us that no man is capable of knowing God, unless he be taught of God; that is, that God cannot be known without God: but that this is the express will of the Father, that God should be known. For they shall know 3861 The ordinary text reads cognoscunt, i.e., do know; but Harvey thinks it should be the future—cognoscent. Him to whomsoever the Son has revealed Him.

5. And for this purpose did the Father reveal the Son, that through His instrumentality He might be manifested to all, and might receive those righteous ones who believe in Him into incorruption and everlasting enjoyment (now, to believe in Him is to do His will); but He shall righteously shut out into the darkness which they have chosen for themselves, those who do not believe, and who do consequently avoid His light. The Father therefore has revealed Himself to all, by making His Word visible to all; and, conversely, the Word has declared to all the Father and the Son, since He has become visible to all. And therefore the righteous judgment of God [shall fall] upon all who, like others, have seen, but have not, like others, believed.

6. For by means of the creation itself, the Word reveals God the Creator; and by means of the world [does He declare] the Lord the Maker of the world; and by means of the formation [of man] the Artificer who formed him; and by the Son that Father who begat the Son: and these things do indeed address all men in the same manner, but all do not in the same way believe them. But by the law and the prophets did the Word preach both Himself and the Father alike [to all]; and all the people heard Him alike, but all did not alike believe. And through the Word Himself who had been made visible and palpable, was the Father shown forth, although all did not equally believe in Him; but all saw the Father in the Son: for the Father is the invisible of the Son, but the Son the visible of the Father. And for this reason all spake with Christ when He was present [upon earth], and they named Him God.

Yea, even the demons exclaimed, on beholding the Son: “We know Thee who Thou art, the Holy One of God.” 3862 Mark i. 24. And the devil looking at Him, and tempting Him, said: “If Thou art the Son of God;” 3863 Matt. iv. 3; Luke iv. 3. —all thus indeed seeing and speaking of the Son and the Father, but all not believing [in them].

7. For it was fitting that the truth should receive testimony from all, and should become [a means of] judgment for the salvation indeed of those who believe, but for the condemnation of those who believe not; that all should be fairly judged, and that the faith in the Father and Son should be approved by all, that is, that it should be established by all [as the one means of salvation], receiving testimony from all, both from those belonging to it, since they are its friends, and by those having no connection with it, though they are its enemies. For that evidence is true, and cannot be gainsaid, which elicits even from its adversaries striking 3864 Singula, which with Massuet we here understand in the sense of singularia, testimonies in its behalf; they being convinced with respect to the matter in hand by their own plain contemplation of it, and bearing testimony to it, as well as declaring it. 3865 Some, instead of significantibus, read signantibus, “stamping it as true.” But after a while they break forth into enmity, and become accusers [of what they had approved], and are desirous that their own testimony should not be [regarded as] true. He, therefore, who was known, was not a different being from Him who declared “No man knoweth the Father,” but one and the same, the Father making all things subject to Him; while He received testimony from all that He was very man, and that He was very God, from the Father, from the Spirit, from angels, from the creation itself, from men, from apostate spirits and demons, from the enemy, and last of all, from death itself. But the Son, administering all things for the Father, works from the beginning even to the end, and without Him no man can attain the knowledge of God. For the Son is the knowledge of the Father; but the knowledge of the Son is in the Father, and has been revealed through the Son; and this was the reason why the Lord declared: “No man knoweth the Son, but the Father; nor the Father, save the Son, and those to whomsoever the Son shall reveal [Him].” 3866 *Matt. xi. 27; Luke x. 22. Harvey observes here, that “it is remarkable that this text, having been correctly quoted a short time previously in accordance with the received Greek text, ὃ ἐὰν βούληται ὁ υἱὸς ἀποκαλύψαι, the translator now not only uses the single verb revelaverit, but says pointedly that it was so written by the venerable author.”* It is probable, therefore, that the previous passage has been made to harmonize with the received text by a later hand; with which, however, the Syriac form agrees. For “shall reveal” was said not with reference to the future alone, as if then [only] the Word had begun to manifest the Father when He was born of Mary, but it applies indifferently throughout all time. For the Son, being present with His own handiwork from the beginning, reveals the Father to all; to whom He wills, and when He wills, and as the Father wills. Wherefore, then, in all things, and through all things, there is one God, the Father, and one Word, and one Son, and one Spirit, and one salvation to all who believe in Him.

Summary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus testifies, “For the Lord, revealing Himself to His disciples, that He Himself is the Word, who imparts knowledge of the Father, and reproving the Jews, who imagined that they, had [the knowledge of] God, while they nevertheless rejected His Word, through whom God is made known, declared, “No man knoweth the Son, but the Father; neither knoweth any man the Father, save the Son, and he to whom the Son has willed to reveal [Him],” referring to Matthew 11:27 and Luke 10:22. Irenaeus then affirms, “Thus hath Matthew set it down, and Luke in like manner, and Mark the very same; for John omits this passage.” Irenaeus then testifies, “They, however, who would be wiser than the apostles, write [the verse] in the following manner: “No man knew the Father, but the Son; nor the Son, but the Father, and he to whom the Son has willed to reveal [Him];” and they explain it as if the true God were known to none prior to our Lord’s advent; and that God who was announced by the prophets, they allege not to be the Father of Christ.”

In paragraph two, Irenaeus argues, “But if Christ did then [only] begin to have existence when He came [into the world] as man, and [if] the Father did remember [only] in the times of Tiberius Cæsar to provide for [the wants of] men, and His Word was shown to have not always coexisted with His creatures; [it may be remarked that] neither then was it necessary that another God should be proclaimed, but [rather] that the reasons for so great carelessness and neglect on His part should be made the subject of investigation.” Irenaeus then continues his argument as he adds, “For it is fitting that no such question should arise, and gather such strength, that it would indeed both change God, and destroy our faith in that Creator who supports us by means of His creation. For as we do direct our faith towards the Son, so also should we possess a firm and immoveable love towards the Father.” Irenaeus continues as he notes, “In his book against Marcion, Justin does well say: “I would not have believed the Lord Himself, if He had announced any other than He who is our framer, maker, and nourisher. But because the only-begotten Son came to us from the one God, who both made this world and formed us, and contains and administers all things, summing up His own handiwork in Himself, my faith towards Him is stedfast, and my love to the Father immoveable, God bestowing both upon us.””

In paragraph three, Irenaeus continues his argument as he reasons, “For no one can know the Father, unless through the Word of God, that is, unless by the Son revealing [Him]; neither can he have knowledge of the Son, unless through the good pleasure of the Father.” Irenaeus then affirms, “But the Son performs the good pleasure of the Father; for the Father sends, and the Son is sent, and comes,” referring to Matthew 10:40, Matthew 15:24, Luke 4:43, and John 5:22,36. Irenaeus then explains, “And His Word knows that His Father is, as far as regards us, invisible and infinite; and since He cannot be declared [by any one else], He does Himself declare Him to us; and, on the other hand, it is the Father alone who knows His own Word. And both these truths has our Lord declared. Wherefore the Son reveals the knowledge of the Father through His own manifestation. For the manifestation of the Son is the knowledge of the Father; for all things are manifested through the Word. In order, therefore, that we might know that the Son who came is He who imparts to those believing on Him a knowledge of the Father, He said to His disciples: “No man knoweth the Son but the Father, nor the Father but the Son, and those to whomsoever the Son shall reveal Him,” again referring to Matthew 11:27. Irenaeus concludes, “thus setting Himself forth and the Father as He [really] is, that we may not receive any other Father, except Him who is revealed by the Son.”

In paragraph four, Irenaeus testifies against the Gnostices as he says, “But this [Father] is the Maker of heaven and earth, as is shown from His words; and not he, the false father, who has been invented by Marcion, or by Valentinus, or by Basilides, or by Carpocrates, or by Simon, or by the rest of the “Gnostics,” falsely so called. For none of these was the Son of God; but Christ Jesus our Lord [was], against whom they set their teaching in opposition, and have the daring to preach an unknown God.” Irenaeus then argues against the Gnostics as he reasons, “But they ought to hear [this] against themselves: How is it that He is unknown, who is known by them? for, whatever is known even by a few, is not unknown.” Irenaeus concludes against the Gnostices, “But the Lord did not say that both the Father and the Son could not be known at all (in totum), for in that case His advent would have been superfluous. For why did He come hither? Was it that He should say to us, “Never mind seeking after God; for He is unknown, and ye shall not find Him;” as also the disciples of Valentinus falsely declare that Christ said to their Æons?” Irenaeus then judges, “But this is indeed vain. For the Lord taught us that no man is capable of knowing God, unless he be taught of God; that is, that God cannot be known without God: but that this is the express will of the Father, that God should be known. For they shall know Him to whomsoever the Son has revealed Him.”

In paragraph five, Irenaeus testifies, “And for this purpose did the Father reveal the Son, that through His instrumentality He might be manifested to all, and might receive those righteous ones who believe in Him into incorruption and everlasting enjoyment (now, to believe in Him is to do His will); but He shall righteously shut out into the darkness which they have chosen for themselves, those who do not believe, and who do consequently avoid His light.” Irenaeus again testifies, “The Father therefore has revealed Himself to all, by making His Word visible to all; and, conversely, the Word has declared to all the Father and the Son, since He has become visible to all. And therefore the righteous judgment of God [shall fall] upon all who, like others, have seen, but have not, like others, believed.”

In paragraph six, Irenaeus continues, “For by means of the creation itself, the Word reveals God the Creator; and by means of the world [does He declare] the Lord the Maker of the world; and by means of the formation [of man] the Artificer who formed him; and by the Son that Father who begat the Son: and these things do indeed address all men in the same manner, but all do not in the same way believe them,” referring in part to Romans 1:18-20. Irenaeus affirms, “But by the law and the prophets did the Word preach both Himself and the Father alike [to all]; and all the people heard Him alike, but all did not alike believe,” echoing Jesus’ words in John 5:37-40. Irenaeus then adds, “And through the Word Himself who had been made visible and palpable, was the Father shown forth, although all did not equally believe in Him; but all saw the Father in the Son: for the Father is the invisible of the Son, but the Son the visible of the Father,” referring to John 14:9. Irenaeus then affirms, “And for this reason all spake with Christ when He was present [upon earth], and they named Him God. Yea, even the demons exclaimed, on beholding the Son: “We know Thee who Thou art, the Holy One of God,” referring to Mark 1:23-24. Irenaeus then affirms, “And the devil looking at Him, and tempting Him, said: “If Thou art the Son of God,” referring to Matthew 4:3 and Luke 4:3. And Irenaeus concludes, “—all thus indeed seeing and speaking of the Son and the Father, but all not believing [in them].”

In paragraph seven, Irenaeus affirms, “For it was fitting that the truth should receive testimony from all, and should become [a means of] judgment for the salvation indeed of those who believe, but for the condemnation of those who believe not; that all should be fairly judged, and that the faith in the Father and Son should be approved by all, that is, that it should be established by all [as the one means of salvation], receiving testimony from all, both from those belonging to it, since they are its friends, and by those having no connection with it, though they are its enemies.” Irenaeus continues as he concludes, “For that evidence is true, and cannot be gainsaid, which elicits even from its adversaries striking testimonies in its behalf; they being convinced with respect to the matter in hand by their own plain contemplation of it, and bearing testimony to it, as well as declaring it. But after a while they break forth into enmity, and become accusers [of what they had approved], and are desirous that their own testimony should not be [regarded as] true.” Irenaeus then boldly testifies, “He, therefore, who was known, was not a different being from Him who declared “No man knoweth the Father,” but one and the same, the Father making all things subject to Him; while He received testimony from all that He was very man, and that He was very God, from the Father, from the Spirit, from angels, from the creation itself, from men, from apostate spirits and demons, from the enemy, and last of all, from death itself.” Irenaeus then affirms, “But the Son, administering all things for the Father, works from the beginning even to the end, and without Him no man can attain the knowledge of God,” referring to John 14:6 and Acts 4:12. Irenaeus continues as he reasons, “For the Son is the knowledge of the Father; but the knowledge of the Son is in the Father, and has been revealed through the Son; and this was the reason why the Lord declared: “No man knoweth the Son, but the Father; nor the Father, save the Son, and those to whomsoever the Son shall reveal [Him],” referring again to Matthew 11:27 and Luke 10:22. Irenaeus then testifies, “For “shall reveal” was said not with reference to the future alone, as if then [only] the Word had begun to manifest the Father when He was born of Mary, but it applies indifferently throughout all time. For the Son, being present with His own handiwork from the beginning, reveals the Father to all; to whom He wills, and when He wills, and as the Father wills.” And Irenaeus thus concludes, “Wherefore, then, in all things, and through all things, there is one God, the Father, and one Word, and one Son, and one Spirit, and one salvation to all who believe in Him.”

Commentary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus testifies, “For the Lord, revealing Himself to His disciples, that He Himself is the Word, who imparts knowledge of the Father, and reproving the Jews, who imagined that they, had [the knowledge of] God, while they nevertheless rejected His Word, through whom God is made known, declared, “No man knoweth the Son, but the Father; neither knoweth any man the Father, save the Son, and he to whom the Son has willed to reveal [Him],” referring to Matthew 11 (NASB):27 All things have been handed over to Me by My Father; and no one knows the Son except the Father; nor does anyone know the Father except the Son, and anyone to whom the Son wills to reveal Him.

And Luke reads as in Luke 10 (NASB):22 All things have been handed over to Me by My Father, and no one knows who the Son is except the Father, and who the Father is except the Son, and anyone to whom the Son wills to reveal Him.”

Irenaeus then affirms, “Thus hath Matthew set it down, and Luke in like manner, and Mark the very same; for John omits this passage.” We note here that this passage is not found in Mark as Irenaeus asserts.

Irenaeus then states, “They, however, who would be wiser than the apostles, write [the verse] in the following manner: “No man knew the Father, but the Son; nor the Son, but the Father, and he to whom the Son has willed to reveal [Him];” and they explain it as if the true God were known to none prior to our Lord’s advent; and that God who was announced by the prophets, they allege not to be the Father of Christ.”

What Irenaeus intimates here in paragraph one is that Jesus Christ is the living expression of God's word. Everything He did in life and death was according to and in fulfillment of the Word of God. That is why Irenaeus tells us that the Lord revealed Himself to His disciples that "He Himself is the Word," and Irenaeus speaks of Him by that name, "the Word." Being "the Word," Jesus is able to impart knowledge of the Father. Irenaeus is correct in his judgment of the Jews, who did not have a personal relationship, that is a relationship of the heart, with the Lord. Their ignorance was so great that they rejected the very Word of God who came to show them and connect them with the Father who is the one and only God. Irenaeus is also correct in his summary dismissal of the Gnostic beliefs that the true God was not known prior to our Lord's advent, and that the God announced by the prophets was not the Father of Christ. This is a serpent's head which Irenaeus effectively cuts off.

In paragraph two, Irenaeus argues, "But if Christ did then [only] begin to have existence when He came [into the world] as man, and [if] the Father did remember [only] in the times of Tiberius Cæsar to provide for [the wants of] men, and His Word was shown to have not always coexisted with His creatures; [it may be remarked that] neither then was it necessary that another God should be proclaimed, but [rather] that the reasons for so great carelessness and neglect on His part should be made the subject of investigation." Irenaeus is saying that, rather than believe that God is fickle, careless, and guilty of neglecting His own creation, it makes more sense to look closer and deeper into His plan and purpose.

Irenaeus then continues his argument as he adds, "For it is fitting that no such question should arise, and gather such strength, that it would indeed both change God, and destroy our faith in that Creator who supports us by means of His creation." To direct our faith to anyone else but the Creator of the universe is true folly. "For as we do direct our faith towards the Son, so also should we possess a firm and immovable love towards the Father," Irenaeus tells us. In other words, to have faith in the Son is to receive the love of the Son for the Father. To believe in the Son is to share in the love relationship of the Son with the Father. This is true wisdom.

Irenaeus continues as he notes, "In his book against Marcion, Justin does well say: "I would not have believed the Lord Himself, if He had announced any other than He who is our framer, maker, and nourisher. But because the only-begotten Son came to us from the one God, who both made this world and formed us, and contains and administers all things, summing up His own handiwork in Himself, my faith towards Him is steadfast, and my love to the Father immovable, God bestowing both upon us." Irenaeus quotes Justin Martyr, who lived between A.D. 110-165. Justin makes sense.

In paragraph three, Irenaeus continues his argument as he reasons, "For no one can know the Father, unless through the Word of God, that is, unless by the Son revealing [Him]; neither can he have knowledge of the Son, unless through the good pleasure of the Father." Irenaeus thus shows us the unity of the purpose of God between the Father and the Son. He affirms here that the Son made it clear that there was no other Father than His own. Irenaeus affirms, "But the Son performs the good pleasure of the Father; for the Father sends, and the Son is sent, and comes," referring to John 5 (NASB):36 But the testimony which I have is greater than the testimony of John; for the works which the Father has given Me to accomplish—the very works that I do—testify about Me, that the Father has sent Me. 37 And the Father who sent Me, He has testified of Me. You have neither heard His voice at any time nor seen His form.

Irenaeus then explains, "And His Word knows that His Father is, as far as regards us, invisible and infinite; and since He cannot be declared [by anyone else], He does Himself declare Him to us; and, on the other hand, it is the Father alone who knows His own Word. And both these truths has our Lord declared." That is, the Son is the only one who can show us the Father. The Father is "invisible and infinite," yet known by the Son. "Wherefore the Son reveals the knowledge of the Father through His own manifestation," Irenaeus explains.

"For the manifestation of the Son is the knowledge of the Father," he affirms. Irenaeus here reminds us of Jesus' dialog with His disciples in the Gospel of John. Jesus begins by describing His home with the Father as in John 14 (NASB):1 "Do not let your heart be troubled; believe in God, believe also in Me. 2 In My Father's house are many dwelling places; if it were not so, I would have told you; for I go to prepare a place for you. 3 If I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you to Myself, that where I am, there you may be also. 4 And you know the way where I am going." 5 Thomas said to Him, "Lord, we do not know where You are going, how do we know the way?" 6 Jesus said to him, "I am the way, and the truth, and the life; no one comes to the Father but through Me. 7 If you had known Me, you would have known My Father also; from now on you know Him, and have seen Him."

But Philip then asks Jesus to just "show us the Father" and we're good as we read in John 14 (NASB):8 Philip said to Him, "Lord, show us the Father, and it is enough for us."

Jesus then patiently explains to Philip and the other disciples that He "reveals the knowledge of the Father through His own manifestation" as in John 14 (HCSB):9 Jesus said to him, "Have I been among you all this time without your knowing Me, Philip? The one who has seen Me has seen the Father. How can you say, 'Show us the Father'? 10 Don't you believe that I am in the Father and the Father is in Me? The words I speak to you I do not speak on My own. The Father who lives in Me does His works. 11 Believe Me that I am in the Father and the Father is in Me. Otherwise, believe because of the works themselves. 12 "I assure you: The one who believes in Me will also do the works that I do. And he will do even greater works than these, because I am going to the Father. 13 Whatever you ask in My name, I will do it so that the Father may be glorified in the Son. 14 If you ask Me anything in My name, I will do it.

Irenaeus continues as he affirms, "for all things are manifested through the Word. In order, therefore, that we might know that the Son who came is He who imparts to those believing on Him a knowledge of the Father, He said to His disciples: "No man knoweth the Son but the Father, nor the Father but the Son, and those to whomsoever the Son shall reveal Him," again referring to Matthew 11 (NASB):27 All things have been handed over to Me by My Father; and no one knows the Son except the Father; nor does anyone know the Father except the Son, and anyone to whom the Son wills to reveal Him.

Irenaeus echoes Jesus' words in John 14 (NASB):6 Jesus said to him, "I am the way, and the truth, and the life; no one comes to the Father but through Me.

Irenaeus concludes, "thus setting Himself forth and the Father as He [really] is, that we may not receive any other Father, except Him who is revealed by the Son."

Knowledge of the Father through the Son is ultimately a gift from the Father. The words Jesus spoke in Matthew 11:27, that "no one knows the Son except the Father; nor does anyone know the Father except the Son, and anyone to whom the Son wills to reveal Him," are a declaration by Jesus that thus set "Himself forth and the Father as He [really] is, that we may not receive any other Father, except Him who is revealed by the Son."

In paragraph four, Irenaeus testifies against the Gnostics as he says, "But this [Father] is the Maker of heaven and earth, as is shown from His words." That is, the very words of Jesus testify that His Father is the Maker of heaven and earth. Irenaeus continues as he affirms, "and not he, the false father, who has been invented by Marcion, or by Valentinus, or by Basilides, or by Carpocrates, or by Simon, or by the rest of the "Gnostics," falsely so called. For none of these was the Son of God; but Christ Jesus our Lord [was], against whom they set their teaching in opposition, and have the daring to preach an unknown God." Irenaeus then argues against the Gnostics as he reasons, "But they ought to hear [this] against themselves: How is it that He is unknown, who is known by them? for, whatever is known even by a few, is not unknown." Irenaeus concludes against the Gnostics, "But the Lord did not say that both the Father and the Son could not be known at all (in totum), for in that case His advent would have been superfluous. For why did He come hither? Was it that He should say to us, "Never mind seeking after God; for He is unknown, and ye shall not find Him;" as also the disciples of Valentinus falsely declare that Christ said to their Æons?" Irenaeus then judges, "But this is indeed vain. For the Lord taught us that no man is capable of knowing God, unless he be taught of God; that is, that God cannot be known without God: but that this is the express will of the Father, that God should be known. For they shall know Him to whomsoever the Son has revealed Him." Irenaeus makes perfect sense here.

It is obvious to Irenaeus that this unknown god of Marcion, Valentinus, Basilides, and the other Gnostics is an invention. The knowledge of the Gnostics is false knowledge, not being based in reality or verifiable. If God wanted to remain unknown, certainly it is in His power to do so. The reality is that Jesus Christ came to make Him known. Rather than the Gnostic invention that says, "Never mind seeking after God; for He is unknown, and ye shall not find Him," He tells us to seek Him as in Psalms 105 (NASB):4 Seek the LORD and His strength; Seek His face continually.

And all who seek to know Him will find Him through the Son, as He Himself has said in the scripture, as in Deuteronomy 4 (NASB):29 "But from there you will seek the LORD your God, and you will find Him if you search for Him with all your heart and all your soul.

This is the promise of God to all who would seek Him. He is worthy of praise.

In paragraph five, Irenaeus testifies, “And for this purpose did the Father reveal the Son, that through His instrumentality He might be manifested to all, and might receive those righteous ones who believe in Him into incorruption and everlasting enjoyment (now, to believe in Him is to do His will); but He shall righteously shut out into the darkness which they have chosen for themselves, those who do not believe, and who do consequently avoid His light.” Irenaeus again testifies, “The Father therefore has revealed Himself to all, by making His Word visible to all; and, conversely, the Word has declared to all the Father and the Son, since He has become visible to all. And therefore the righteous judgment of God [shall fall] upon all who, like others, have seen, but have not, like others, believed.”

Irenaeus is saying that the Lord had a purpose all along for His creation. His intent was that through the instrumentality of the Son, He might be manifested to all, and receive those righteous ones who believe in Him to be with Him in everlasting enjoyment. Those who choose unbelief also, according to His design, shall be shut out into darkness. This is a righteous judgment of God on those who believe not though they have seen and heard the Word of the Father.

In paragraph six, Irenaeus continues as he reasons, “For by means of the creation itself, the Word reveals God the Creator; and by means of the world [does He declare] the Lord the Maker of the world; and by means of the formation [of man] the Artificer who formed him; and by the Son that Father who begat the Son: and these things do indeed address all men in the same manner, but all do not in the same way believe them,” echoing Paul’s words in Romans 1 (NASB):18 For the wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men who suppress the truth in unrighteousness, 19 because that which is known about God is evident within them; for God made it evident to them. 20 For since the creation of the world His invisible attributes, His eternal power and divine nature, have been clearly seen, being understood through what has been made, so that they are without excuse.

Irenaeus affirms, “But by the law and the prophets did the Word preach both Himself and the Father alike [to all]; and all the people heard Him alike, but all did not alike believe,” echoing Jesus’ words in John 5 (NASB):37 “And the Father who sent Me, He has testified of Me. You have neither heard His voice at any time nor seen His form. 38 “You do not have His word abiding in you, for you do not believe Him whom He sent. 39 “You search the Scriptures because you think that in them you have eternal life; it is these that testify about Me; 40 and you are unwilling to come to Me so that you may have life.

Irenaeus then adds, “And through the Word Himself who had been made visible and palpable, was the Father shown forth, although all did not equally believe in Him; but all saw the Father in the Son: for the Father is the invisible of the Son, but the Son the visible of the Father,” referring again to John 14 (NASB):9 Jesus said to him, “Have I been so long with you, and yet you have not come to know Me, Philip? He who has seen Me has seen the Father; how can you say, ‘Show us the Father’?”

Moreover, the world of creation does not reveal the Father in a way that is personal and relational. And so the Father spoke through the law and the prophets, and all the people heard Him alike. And still the Father sent His Son as “the visible of the Father.”

Irenaeus then affirms, “And for this reason all spake with Christ when He was present [upon earth], and they named Him God.” Christ was named God by those who spoke with Him on earth, that is, His disciples as we read in John 1 (NASB):1 In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. 2 He was in the beginning with God. 3 All things came into being through Him, and apart from Him nothing came into being that has come into being. 4 In Him was life, and the life was the Light of men. 5 The Light shines in the darkness, and the darkness did not comprehend it.

This was intimated also by John the Baptist as recorded by the apostle John in John 1 (NASB):14 And the Word became flesh, and dwelt among us, and we saw His glory, glory as of the only begotten from the Father, full of grace and truth. 15 John testified about Him and cried out, saying, “This was He of whom I said, ‘He who comes after me has a higher rank than I, for He existed before me.’” 16 For of His fullness we have all received, and grace upon grace. 17 For the Law was given through Moses; grace and truth were realized through Jesus Christ. 18 No one has seen God at any time; the only begotten God who is in the bosom of the Father, He has explained Him.

Again, that Jesus was God is also stated by Paul in Romans 9 (NASB):5 whose are the fathers, and from whom is the Christ according to the flesh, who is over all, God blessed forever. Amen.

Irenaeus then adds, “Yea, even the demons exclaimed, on beholding the Son: “We know Thee who Thou art, the Holy One of God,” referring to Mark 1 (NASB):23 Just then there was a man in their synagogue with an unclean spirit; and he cried out, 24 saying, “What business do we have with each other, Jesus of Nazareth? Have You come to destroy us? I know who You are—the Holy One of God!”

Irenaeus then affirms, “And the devil looking at Him, and tempting Him, said: “If Thou art the Son of God,” referring to Matthew 4 (NASB):3 And the tempter came and said to Him, "If You are the Son of God, command that these stones become bread."

And Luke 4 (NASB):3 And the devil said to Him, "If You are the Son of God, tell this stone to become bread."

And Irenaeus concludes, “—all thus indeed seeing and speaking of the Son and the Father, but all not believing [in them].”

In paragraph seven, Irenaeus affirms, “For it was fitting that the truth should receive testimony from all, and should become [a means of] judgment for the salvation indeed of those who believe, but for the condemnation of those who believe not; that all should be fairly judged, and that the faith in the Father and Son should be approved by all, that is, that it should be established by all [as the one means of salvation], receiving testimony from all, both from those belonging to it, since they are its friends, and by those having no connection with it, though they are its enemies.” Irenaeus shows us that faith in the Father and the Son has been established by all as the one means of salvation for those who believe. Those who do not believe are fairly judged as enemies of the truth, while those who do believe are judged as its friends.

Irenaeus continues as he concludes, “For that evidence is true, and cannot be gainsaid, which elicits even from its adversaries striking testimonies in its behalf; they being convinced with respect to the matter in hand by their own plain contemplation of it, and bearing testimony to it, as well as declaring it. But after a while they break forth into enmity, and become accusers [of what they had approved], and are desirous that their own testimony should not be [regarded as] true.” Irenaeus is fighting heresy. Irenaeus then boldly testifies, “He, therefore, who was known, was not a different being from Him who declared “No man knoweth the Father,” but one and the same, the Father making all things subject to Him; while He received testimony from all that He was very man, and that He was very God, from the Father, from the Spirit, from angels, from the creation itself, from men, from apostate spirits and demons, from the enemy, and last of all, from death itself.” Irenaeus then affirms, “But the Son, administering all things for the Father, works from the beginning even to the end, and without Him no man can attain the knowledge of God,” referring to John 14 (NASB):6 Jesus said to him, "I am the way, and the truth, and the life; no one comes to the Father but through Me.

And Acts 4 (NASB):12 "And there is salvation in no one else; for there is no other name under heaven that has been given among men by which we must be saved."

Irenaeus continues as he reasons, “For the Son is the knowledge of the Father; but the knowledge of the Son is in the Father, and has been revealed through the Son; and this was the reason why the Lord declared: “No man knoweth the Son, but the Father; nor the Father, save the Son, and those to whomsoever the Son shall reveal [Him],” referring again to Matthew 11:27 and Luke 10:22. Irenaeus then testifies, “For “shall reveal” was said not with reference to the future alone, as if then [only] the Word had begun to manifest the Father when He was born of Mary, but it applies indifferently throughout all time. For the Son, being present with His own handiwork from the beginning, reveals the Father to all; to whom He wills, and when He wills, and as the Father wills.” And Irenaeus thus concludes as he affirms, “Wherefore, then, in all things, and through all things, there is one God, the Father, and one Word, and one Son, and one Spirit, and one salvation to all who believe in Him.”

Commentary Summary: Irenaeus’ Statement of Faith

Irenaeus shows us that faith in the Father and the Son has been established by all as the one means of salvation for those who believe. Those who do not believe are fairly judged as enemies of the truth, while those who do believe are judged as its friends. It is Irenaeus' strong statement of faith that "He, therefore, who was known, was not a different being from Him who declared "No man knoweth the Father," but one and the same, the Father making all things subject to Him; while He received testimony from all that He was very man, and that He was very God, from the Father, from the Spirit, from angels, from the creation itself, from men, from apostate spirits and demons, from the enemy, and last of all, from death itself."

Irenaeus further testifies that "the Son, administering all things for the Father, works from the beginning even to the end, and without Him no man can attain the knowledge of God." Irenaeus teaches us that the Father was known from the beginning of creation as he says that the words "shall reveal" were not said "with reference to the future alone, as if then [only] the Word had begun to manifest the Father when He was born of Mary, but it applies indifferently throughout all time. For the Son, being present with His own handiwork from the beginning, reveals the Father to all; to whom He wills, and when He wills, and as the Father wills." It is the Father who sent His Son that He might be further known to man. And so Irenaeus concludes this section with a final statement of faith as he says, "Wherefore, then, in all things, and through all things, there is one God, the Father, and one Word, and one Son, and one Spirit, and one salvation to all who believe in Him."

Chapter 5: His Reliance on the Scriptures

Book 2: Chapter XXVIII.—Perfect knowledge cannot be attained in the present life: many questions must be submissively left in the hands of God.

1. Having therefore the truth itself as our rule and the testimony concerning God set clearly before us, we ought not, by running after numerous and diverse answers to questions, to cast away the firm and true knowledge of God. But it is much more suitable that we, directing our inquiries after this fashion, should exercise ourselves in the investigation of the mystery and administration of the living God, and should increase in the love of Him who has done, and still does, so great things for us; but never should fall from the belief by which it is most clearly proclaimed that this Being alone is truly God and Father, who both formed this world, fashioned man, and bestowed the faculty of increase on His own creation, and called him upwards from lesser things to those greater ones which are in His own presence, just as He brings an infant which has been conceived in the womb into the light of the sun, and lays up wheat in the barn after He has given it full strength on the stalk. But it is one and the same Creator who both fashioned the womb and created the sun; and one and the same Lord who both reared the stalk of corn, increased and multiplied the wheat, and prepared the barn.

2. If, however, we cannot discover explanations of all those things in Scripture which are made the subject of investigation, yet let us not on that account seek after any other God besides Him who really exists. For this is the very greatest impiety. We should leave things of that nature to God who created us, being most properly assured that the Scriptures are indeed perfect, since they were spoken by the Word of God and His Spirit; but we, inasmuch as we are inferior to, and later in existence than, the Word of God and His Spirit, are on that very account 3213 Or, “to that degree.” destitute of the knowledge of His mysteries. And there is no cause for wonder if this is the case with us as respects things spiritual and heavenly, and such as require to be made known to us by revelation, since many even of those things which lie at our very feet (I mean such as belong to this world, which we handle, and see, and are in close contact with) transcend our knowledge, so that even these we must leave to God. For it is fitting that He should excel all [in knowledge]. For how stands the case, for instance, if we endeavour to explain the cause of the rising of the Nile? We may say a great deal, plausible or otherwise, on the subject; but what is true, sure, and incontrovertible regarding it, belongs only to God. Then, again, the dwelling-place of birds—of those, I mean, which come to us in spring, but fly away again on the approach of autumn—though it is a matter connected with this world, escapes our knowledge. What explanation, again, can we give of the flow and ebb of the ocean, although every one admits there must be a certain cause [for these phenomena]? Or what can we say as to the nature of those things which lie beyond it? 3214 Comp. Clem. Rom. Ep. to Cor., c. xx.; and August, De. Civit Dei, xvi. 9. What, moreover, can we say as to the formation of rain, lightning, thunder, gatherings of clouds, vapours, the bursting forth of winds, and such like things; or tell as to the storehouses of snow, hail, and other like things? [What do we know respecting] the conditions requisite for the preparation of clouds, or what is the real nature of the vapours in the sky? What as to the reason why the moon waxes and wanes, or what as to the cause of the difference of nature among various waters, metals, stones, and such like things? On all these points we may indeed say a great deal while we search into their causes, but God alone who made them can declare the truth regarding them.

3. If, therefore, even with respect to creation, there are some things [the knowledge of] which belongs only to God, and others which come within the range of our own knowledge, what ground is there for complaint, if, in regard to those things which we investigate in the Scriptures (which are throughout spiritual), we are able by the grace of God to explain some of them, while we must leave others in the hands of God, and that not only in the present world, but also in that which is to come, so that God should for ever teach, and man should for ever learn the things taught him by God? As the apostle has said on this point, that, when other things have been done away, then these three, “faith, hope, and charity, shall endure.” 3215 1 Cor. xiii. 13. For faith, which has respect to our Master, endures 3216 “Permanet firma,”—no doubt corresponding to the μένει of the apostle, 1 Cor. xiii. 13. Harvey here remarks, that “the author seems to misapprehend the apostle’s meaning.... There will be no longer room for hope, when the substance of things hoped for shall have become a matter of fruition; neither will there be any room for faith, when the soul shall be admitted to see God as He is.” But the best modern interpreters take the same view of the passage as Irenæus. They regard the νυνὶ δέ of St. Paul as not being temporal, but logical, and conclude therefore the meaning to be, that faith and hope, as well as love, will, in a sense, endure for ever. Comp., e.g., Alford, in loc. unchangeably, assuring us that there is but one true God, and that we should truly love Him for ever, seeing that He alone is our Father; while we hope ever to be receiving more and more from God, and to learn from Him, because He is good, and possesses boundless riches, a kingdom without end, and instruction that can never be exhausted. If, therefore, according to the rule which I have stated, we leave some questions in the hands of God, we shall both preserve our faith uninjured, and shall continue without danger; and all Scripture, which has been given to us by God, shall be found by us perfectly consistent; and the parables shall harmonize with those passages which are perfectly plain; and those statements the meaning of which is clear, shall serve to explain the parables; and through the many diversified utterances [of Scripture] there shall be heard 3217 The Latin text is here untranslatable. Grabe proposes to read, “una consonans melodia in nobis sentietur,” while Stieren and others prefer to exchange αἰσθήσεται for ἀσθήσεται. one harmonious melody in us, praising in hymns that God who created all things. If, for instance, any one asks, “What was God doing before He made the world?” we reply that the answer to such a question lies with God Himself. For that this world was formed perfect 3218 “Apotelescos.” This word, says Harvey, “may also refer to the vital energy of nature, whereby its effects are for ever reproduced in unceasing succession.” Comp. Hippol., Philos., vii. 24. by God, receiving a beginning in time, the Scriptures teach us; but no Scripture reveals to us what God was employed about before this event. The answer therefore to that question remains with God, and it is not proper 3219 We here follow Grabe, who understands deceť. Harvey less simply explains the very obscure Latin text. for us to aim at bringing forward foolish, rash, and blasphemous suppositions [in reply to it]; so, as by one’s imagining that he has discovered the origin of matter, he should in reality set aside God Himself who made all things.

4. For consider, all ye who invent such opinions, since the Father Himself is alone called God, who has a real existence, but whom ye style the Demiurge; since, moreover, the Scriptures acknowledge Him alone as God; and yet again, since the Lord confesses Him alone as His own Father, and knows no other, as I shall show from His very words, —when ye style this very Being the fruit of defect, and the offspring of ignorance, and describe Him as being ignorant of those things which are above Him, with the various other allegations which you make regarding Him,—consider the terrible blasphemy [ye are thus guilty of] against Him who truly is God. Ye seem to affirm gravely and honestly enough that ye believe in God; but then, as ye are utterly unable to reveal any other God, ye declare this very Being in whom ye profess to believe, the fruit of defect and the offspring of ignorance. Now this blindness and foolish talking flow to you from the fact that ye reserve nothing for God, but ye wish to proclaim the nativity and production both of God Himself, of His Ennoea, of His Logos, and Life, and Christ; and ye form the idea of these from no other than a mere human experience; not understanding, as I said before, that it is possible, in the case of man, who is a compound being, to speak in this way of the mind of man and the thought of man; and to say that thought (ennoea) springs from mind (sensus), intention (enthymesis) again from thought, and word (logos) from intention (but which logos? 3220 The Greek term λόγος, as is well known, denotes both ratio (reason) and sermo (speech). Some deem the above parenthesis an interpolation. for there is among the Greeks one logos which is the principle that thinks, and another which is the instrument by means of which thought is expressed); and [to say] that a man sometimes is at rest and silent, while at other times he speaks and is active. But since God is 3221 Comp. i. 12, 2. all mind, all reason, all active spirit, all light, and always exists one and the same, as it is both beneficial for us to think of God, and as we learn regarding Him from the Scriptures, such feelings and divisions [of operation] cannot fittingly be ascribed to Him. For our tongue, as being carnal, is not sufficient to minister to the rapidity of the human mind, inasmuch as that is of a spiritual nature, for which reason our word is restrained 3222 “Suffugatur:” some read “suffocatur;” and Harvey proposes “suffragatur,” as the representative of the Greek ψηφίζεσθαι. The meaning in any case is, that while ideas are instantaneously formed in the human mind, they can be expressed through means of words only fractionally, and by successive utterances. within us, and is not at once expressed as it has been conceived by the mind, but is uttered by successive efforts, just as the tongue is able to serve it.

5. But God being all Mind, and all Logos, both speaks exactly what He thinks, and thinks exactly what He speaks. For His thought is Logos, and Logos is Mind, and Mind comprehending all things is the Father Himself. He, therefore, who speaks of the mind of God, and ascribes to it a special origin of its own, declares Him a compound Being, as if God were one thing, and the original Mind another. So, again, with respect to Logos, when one attributes to him the third 3223 Thus: Bythus, Nous, Logos. place of production from the Father; on which supposition he is ignorant of His greatness; and thus Logos has been far separated from God. As for the prophet, he declares respecting Him, “Who shall describe His generation?” 3224 Isa. liii. 8. But ye pretend to set forth His generation from the Father, and ye transfer the production of the word of men which takes place by means of a tongue to the Word of God, and thus are righteously exposed by your own selves as knowing neither things human nor divine.

6. But, beyond reason inflated [with your own wisdom], ye presumptuously maintain that ye are acquainted with the unspeakable mysteries of God; while even the Lord, the very Son of God, allowed that the Father alone knows the very day and hour of judgment, when He plainly declares, “But of that day and that hour knoweth no man, neither the Son, but the Father only.” 3225 Mark xiii. 32. The words, “neither the angels which are in heaven,” are here omitted, probably because, as usual, the writer quotes from memory. If, then, the Son was not ashamed to ascribe the knowledge of that day to the Father only, but declared what was true regarding the matter, neither let us be ashamed to reserve for God those greater questions which may occur to us. For no man is superior to his master. 3226 Comp. Matt. x. 24; Luke xi. 40. If any one, therefore, says to us, “How then was the Son produced by the Father?” we reply to him, that no man understands that production, or generation, or calling, or revelation, or by whatever name one may describe His generation, which is in fact altogether indescribable. Neither Valentinus, nor Marcion, nor Saturninus, nor Basilides, nor angels, nor archangels, nor principalities, nor powers [possess this knowledge], but the Father only who begat, and the Son who was begotten. Since therefore His generation is unspeakable, those who strive to set forth generations and productions cannot be in their right mind, inasmuch as they undertake to describe things which are indescribable. For that a word is uttered at the bidding of thought and mind, all men indeed well understand. Those, therefore, who have excogitated [the theory of] emissions have not discovered anything great, or revealed any abstruse mystery, when they have simply transferred what all understand to the only-begotten Word of God; and while they style Him unspeakable and unnameable, they nevertheless set forth the production and formation of His first generation, as if they themselves had assisted at His birth, thus assimilating Him to the word of mankind formed by emissions.

7. But we shall not be wrong if we affirm the same thing also concerning the substance of matter, that God produced it. For we have learned from the Scriptures that God holds the supremacy over all things. But whence or in what way He produced it, neither has Scripture anywhere declared; nor does it become us to conjecture, so as, in accordance with our own opinions, to form endless conjectures concerning God, but we should leave such knowledge in the hands of God Himself. In like manner, also, we must leave the cause why, while all things were made by God, certain of His creatures sinned and revolted from a state of submission to God, and others, indeed the great majority, persevered, and do still persevere, in [willing] subjection to Him who formed them, and also of what nature those are who sinned, and of what nature those who persevere,—[we must, I say, leave the cause of these things] to God and His Word, to whom alone He said, “Sit at my right hand, until I make Thine enemies Thy footstool.” 3227 Ps. cx. 1. But as for us, we still dwell upon the earth, and have not yet sat down upon His throne. For although the Spirit of the Saviour that is in Him “searcheth all things, even the deep things of God,” 3228 1 Cor. ii. 10. yet as to us “there are diversities of gifts, differences of administrations, and diversities of operations;” 3229 1 Cor. xii. 4, 5, 6. and we, while upon the earth, as Paul also declares, “know in part, and prophesy in part.” 3230 1 Cor. xiii. 9. Since, therefore, we know but in part, we ought to leave all sorts of [difficult] questions in the hands of Him who in some measure, [and that only,] bestows grace on us. That eternal fire, [for instance,] is prepared for sinners, both the Lord has plainly declared, and the rest of the Scriptures demonstrate. And that God foreknew that this would happen, the Scriptures do in like manner demonstrate, since He prepared eternal fire from the beginning for those who were [afterwards] to transgress [His commandments]; but the cause itself of the nature of such transgressors neither has any Scripture informed us, nor has an apostle told us, nor has the Lord taught us. It becomes us, therefore, to leave the knowledge of this matter to God, even as the Lord does of the day and hour [of judgment], and not to rush to such an extreme of danger, that we will leave nothing in the hands of God, even though we have received only a measure of grace [from Him in this world]. But when we investigate points which are above us, and with respect to which we cannot reach satisfaction, [it is absurd 3231 Massuet proposes to insert these words, and some such supplement seems clearly necessary to complete the sense. But the sentence still remains confused and doubtful.] that we should display such an extreme of presumption as to lay open God, and things which are not yet discovered, 3232 [Gen. xl. 8; Deut. xxix. 29; Ps. cxxxii.] as if already we had found out, by the vain talk about emissions, God Himself, the Creator of all things, and to assert that He derived His substance from apostasy and ignorance, so as to frame an impious hypothesis in opposition to God.

8. Moreover, they possess no proof of their system, which has but recently been invented by them, sometimes resting upon certain numbers, sometimes on syllables, and sometimes, again, on names; and there are occasions, too, when, by means of those letters which are contained in letters, by parables not properly interpreted, or by certain [baseless] conjectures, they strive to establish that fabulous account which they have devised. For if any one should inquire the reason why the Father, who has fellowship with the Son in all things, has been declared by the Lord alone to know the hour and the day [of judgment], he will find at present no more suitable, or becoming, or safe reason than this (since, indeed, the Lord is the only true Master), that we may learn through Him that the Father is above all things. For “the Father,” says He, “is greater than I.” 3233 John xiv. 28. The Father, therefore, has been declared by our Lord to excel with respect to knowledge; for this reason, that we, too, as long as we are connected with the scheme of things in this world, should leave perfect knowledge, and such questions [as have been mentioned], to God, and should not by any chance, while we seek to investigate the sublime nature of the Father, fall into the danger of starting the question whether there is another God above God. 3234 [On the great matter of the περιχώρησις, the subordination of the Son, etc., Bull has explored Patristic doctrine, and may well be consulted here. Defens. Fid. Nicænæ, sect. iv.; see also vol. v. 363]

9. But if any lover of strife contradict what I have said, and also what the apostle affirms, that “we know in part, and prophesy in part,” 3235 1 Cor. xiii. 9. and imagine that he has acquired not a partial, but a universal, knowledge of all that exists, —being such an one as Valentinus, or Ptolemæus, or Basilides, or any other of those who maintain that they have searched out the deep 3236 “Altitudines,” literally, heights. things of God,—let him not (arraying himself in vainglory) boast that he has acquired greater knowledge than others with respect to those things which are invisible, or cannot be placed under our observation; but let him, by making diligent inquiry, and obtaining information from the Father, tell us the reasons (which we know not) of those things which are in this world, —as, for instance, the number of hairs on his own head, and the sparrows which are captured day by day, and such other points with which we are not previously acquainted,—so that we may credit him also with respect to more important points. But if those who are perfect do not yet understand the very things in their hands, and at their feet, and before their eyes, and on the earth, and especially the rule followed with respect to the hairs of their head, how can we believe them regarding things spiritual, and super-celestial, 3237 [Wisdom ix. 13, 17. A passage of marvellous beauty.] and those which, with a vain confidence, they assert to be above God? So much, then, I have said concerning numbers, and names, and syllables, and questions respecting such things as are above our comprehension, and concerning their improper expositions of the parables: [I add no more on these points,] since thou thyself mayest enlarge upon them.

Summary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus argues, “Having therefore the truth itself as our rule and the testimony concerning God set clearly before us, we ought not, by running after numerous and diverse answers to questions, to cast away the firm and true knowledge of God.” Instead, Irenaeus advises, “But it is much more suitable that we, directing our inquiries after this fashion, should exercise ourselves in the investigation of the mystery and administration of the living God, and should increase in the love of Him who has done, and still does, so great things for us;” And Irenaeus warns, “but never should fall from the belief by which it is most clearly proclaimed that this Being alone is truly God and Father, who both formed this world, fashioned man, and bestowed the faculty of increase on His own creation, and called him upwards from lesser things to those greater ones which are in His own presence, just as He brings an infant which has been conceived in the womb into the light of the sun, and lays up wheat in the barn after He has given it full strength on the stalk.” Irenaeus concludes wisely, “But it is one and the same Creator who both fashioned the womb and created the sun; and one and the same Lord who both reared the stalk of corn, increased and multiplied the wheat, and prepared the barn.”

In paragraph two, Irenaeus encourages, “If, however, we cannot discover explanations of all those things in Scripture which are made the subject of investigation, yet let us not on that account seek after any other God besides Him who really exists. For this is the very greatest impiety. We should leave things of that nature to God who created us, being most properly assured that the Scriptures are indeed perfect, since they were spoken by the Word of God and His Spirit;” Irenaeus then argues, “but we, inasmuch as we are inferior to, and later in existence than, the Word of God and His Spirit, are on that very account destitute of the knowledge of His mysteries.” Irenaeus then wisely points out, “And there is no cause for wonder if this is the case with us as respects things spiritual and heavenly, and such as require to be made known to us by revelation, since many even of those things which lie at our very feet (I mean such as belong to this world, which we handle, and see, and are in close contact with) transcend our knowledge, so that even these we must leave to God.” Irenaeus then reasons wisely, “For it is fitting that He should excel all [in knowledge]. For how stands the case, for instance, if we endeavour to explain the cause of the rising of the Nile? We may say a great deal, plausible or otherwise, on the subject; but what is true, sure, and incontrovertible regarding it, belongs only to God. Then, again, the dwelling-place of birds—of those, I mean, which come to us in spring, but fly away again on the approach of autumn—though it is a matter connected with this world, escapes our knowledge. What explanation, again, can we give of the flow and ebb of the ocean, although every one admits there must be a certain cause [for these phenomena]? Or what can we say as to the nature of those things which lie beyond it? What, moreover, can we say as to the formation of rain, lightning, thunder, gatherings of clouds, vapours, the bursting forth of winds, and such like things; or tell as to the storehouses of snow, hail, and other like things? [What do we know respecting] the conditions requisite for the preparation of clouds, or what is the real nature of the vapours in the sky? What as to the reason why the moon waxes and wanes, or what as to the cause of the difference of nature among various waters, metals, stones, and such like things? On all these points we may indeed say a great deal while we search into their causes, but God alone who made them can declare the truth regarding them.”

In paragraph three, Irenaeus continues as he reasons, “If, therefore, even with respect to creation, there are some things [the knowledge of] which belongs only to God, and others which come within the range of our own knowledge, what ground is there for complaint, if, in regard to those things which we investigate in the Scriptures (which are throughout spiritual), we are able by the grace of God to explain some of them, while we must leave others in the hands of God, and that not only in the present world, but also in that which is to come, so that God should for ever teach, and man should for ever learn the things taught him by God?” Irenaeus refers to the Apostle Paul as he says, “As the apostle has said on this point, that, when other things have been done away, then these three, “faith, hope, and charity, shall endure,” referring to 1 Corinthians 13:13. Irenaeus explains wisely, “For faith, which has respect to our Master, endures unchangeably, assuring us that there is but one true God, and that we should truly love Him for ever, seeing that He alone is our Father; while we hope ever to be receiving more and more from God, and to learn from Him, because He is good, and possesses boundless riches, a kingdom without end, and instruction that can never be exhausted.” Irenaeus’ trust in the Scripture is unwavering as he reasons, “If, therefore, according to the rule which I have stated, we leave some questions in the hands of God, we shall both preserve our faith uninjured, and shall continue without danger; and all Scripture, which has been given to us by God, shall be found by us perfectly consistent; and the parables shall harmonize with those passages which are perfectly plain; and those statements the meaning of which is clear, shall serve to explain the parables; and through the many diversified utterances [of Scripture] there shall be heard one harmonious melody in us, praising in hymns that God who created all things.” Irenaeus is convincing as he affirms, “If, for instance, any one asks, “What was God doing before He made the world?” we reply that the answer to such a question lies with God Himself. For that this world was formed perfect by God, receiving a beginning in time, the Scriptures teach us; but no Scripture reveals to us what God was employed about before this event. The answer therefore to that question remains with God, and it is not proper for us to aim at bringing forward foolish, rash, and blasphemous suppositions [in reply to it]; so, as by one’s imagining that he has discovered the origin of matter, he should in reality set aside God Himself who made all things.”

In paragraph four, Irenaeus speaks directly to the Gnostics as he says, “For consider, all ye who invent such opinions, since the Father Himself is alone called God, who has a real existence, but whom ye style the Demiurge; since, moreover, the Scriptures acknowledge Him alone as God; and yet again, since the Lord confesses Him alone as His own Father, and knows no other, as I shall show from His very words, —when ye style this very Being the fruit of defect, and the offspring of ignorance, and describe Him as being ignorant of those things which are above Him, with the various other allegations which you make regarding Him,— consider the terrible blasphemy [ye are thus guilty of] against Him who truly is God.” Irenaeus acknowledges the possibility that the Gnostics believe in God as he says, “Ye seem to affirm gravely and honestly enough that ye believe in God; but then, as ye are utterly unable to reveal any other God, ye declare this very Being in whom ye profess to believe, the fruit of defect and the offspring of ignorance.” Irenaeus now documents the Gnostic errors as he states, “Now this blindness and foolish talking flow to you from the fact that ye reserve nothing for God, but ye wish to proclaim the nativity and production both of God Himself, of His Ennoea, of His Logos, and Life, and Christ; and ye form the idea of these from no other than a mere human experience;” Irenaeus points out that the Gnostics were “not understanding, as I said before, that it is possible, in the case of man, who is a compound being, to speak in this way of the mind of man and the thought of man; and to say that thought (ennoea) springs from mind (sensus), intention (enthymesis) again from thought, and word (logos) from intention (but which logos? for there is among the Greeks one logos which is the principle that thinks, and another which is the instrument by means of which thought is expressed); and [to say] that a man sometimes is at rest and silent, while at other times he speaks and is active.” Irenaeus then points out, “But since God is all mind, all reason, all active spirit, all light, and always exists one and the same, as it is both beneficial for us to think of God, and as we learn regarding Him from the Scriptures, such feelings and divisions [of operation] cannot fittingly be ascribed to Him.” Irenaeus then explains, “For our tongue, as being carnal, is not sufficient to minister to the rapidity of the human mind, inasmuch as that is of a spiritual nature, for which reason our word is restrained within us, and is not at once expressed as it has been conceived by the mind, but is uttered by successive efforts, just as the tongue is able to serve it.”

In paragraph five, Irenaeus testifies, “But God being all Mind, and all Logos, both speaks exactly what He thinks, and thinks exactly what He speaks. For His thought is Logos, and Logos is Mind, and Mind comprehending all things is the Father Himself.” Irenaeus points out the error of the Gnostics as he says, “He, therefore, who speaks of the mind of God, and ascribes to it a special origin of its own, declares Him a compound Being, as if God were one thing, and the original Mind another.” And again, Irenaeus shows the error of the Gnostics as he says, “So, again, with respect to Logos, when one attributes to him the third place of production from the Father; on which supposition he is ignorant of His greatness; and thus Logos has been far separated from God.” Irenaeus then testifies, “As for the prophet, he declares respecting Him, “Who shall describe His generation?” referring to Isaiah 53:8. And again Irenaeus shows the error of the Gnostics as he says, “But ye pretend to set forth His generation from the Father, and ye transfer the production of the word of men which takes place by means of a tongue to the Word of God, and thus are righteously exposed by your own selves as knowing neither things human nor divine.”

In paragraph six, Irenaeus rebukes the Gnostics as he says, “But, beyond reason inflated [with your own wisdom], ye presumptuously maintain that ye are acquainted with the unspeakable mysteries of God; while even the Lord, the very Son of God, allowed that the Father alone knows the very day and hour of judgment, when He plainly declares, “But of that day and that hour knoweth no man, neither the Son, but the Father only,” referring to Mark 13:32. Irenaeus then exhorts, “If, then, the Son was not ashamed to ascribe the knowledge of that day to the Father only, but declared what was true regarding the matter, neither let us be ashamed to reserve for God those greater questions which may occur to us.” Irenaeus then testifies, “For no man is superior to his master,” referring to Matthew 10:24. Irenaeus then humbly admits, “If any one, therefore, says to us, “How then was the Son produced by the Father?,” we reply to him, that no man understands that production, or generation, or calling, or revelation, or by whatever name one may describe His generation, which is in fact altogether indescribable.” Yet, Irenaeus points out that, “Neither Valentinus, nor Marcion, nor Saturninus, nor Basilides, nor angels, nor archangels, nor principalities, nor powers [possess this knowledge], but the Father only who begat, and the Son who was begotten.” Irenaeus earnestly contends for the faith as he affirms, “Since therefore His generation is unspeakable, those who strive to set forth generations and productions cannot be in their right mind, inasmuch as they undertake to describe things which are indescribable.” Irenaeus then points out the folly of the Gnostics as he argues, “For that a word is uttered at the bidding of thought and mind, all men indeed well understand. Those, therefore, who have excogitated [the theory of] emissions have not discovered anything great, or revealed any abstruse mystery, when they have simply transferred what all understand to the only-begotten Word of God; and while they style Him unspeakable and unnameable, they nevertheless set forth the production and formation of His first generation, as if they themselves had assisted at His birth, thus assimilating Him to the word of mankind formed by emissions.”

In paragraph seven, Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “But we shall not be wrong if we affirm the same thing also concerning the substance of matter, that God produced it. For we have learned from the Scriptures that God holds the supremacy over all things. But whence or in what way He produced it, neither has Scripture anywhere declared;” Irenaeus rebukes the Gnostics as he continues, “nor does it become us to conjecture, so as, in accordance with our own opinions, to form endless conjectures concerning God, but we should leave such knowledge in the hands of God Himself.” Irenaeus then asserts, “In like manner, also, we must leave the cause why, while all things were made by God, certain of His creatures sinned and revolted from a state of submission to God, and others, indeed the great majority, persevered, and do still persevere, in [willing] subjection to Him who formed them, and also of what nature those are who sinned, and of what nature those who persevere,” and then Irenaeus wisely advises, “—[we must, I say, leave the cause of these things] to God and His Word, to whom alone He said, “Sit at my right hand, until I make Thine enemies Thy footstool,” referring to Psalm 110:1. Irenaeus then testifies, “But as for us, we still dwell upon the earth, and have not yet sat down upon His throne. For although the Spirit of the Saviour that is in Him “searcheth all things, even the deep things of God,” referring to 1 Corinthians 2:10, “yet as to us “there are diversities of gifts, differences of administrations, and diversities of operations,” referring to 1 Corinthians 12:4-6, “and we, while upon the earth, as Paul also declares, “know in part, and prophesy in part,” referring to 1 Corinthians 13:9. Irenaeus continues as he exhorts, “Since, therefore, we know but in part, we ought to leave all sorts of [difficult] questions in the hands of Him who in some measure, [and that only,] bestows grace on us.” Irenaeus continues as he reminds us, “That eternal fire, [for instance,] is prepared for sinners, both the Lord has plainly declared, and the rest of the Scriptures demonstrate. And that God foreknew that this would happen, the Scriptures do in like manner demonstrate, since He prepared eternal fire from the beginning for those who were [afterwards] to transgress [His commandments];” Irenaeus concludes as he asserts, “but the cause itself of the nature of such transgressors neither has any Scripture informed us, nor has an apostle told us, nor has the Lord taught us.” Irenaeus continues as he exhorts, “It becomes us, therefore, to leave the knowledge of this matter to God, even as the Lord does of the day and hour [of judgment], and not to rush to such an extreme of danger, that we will leave nothing in the hands of God, even though we have received only a measure of grace [from Him in this world].” And Irenaeus warns, “But when we investigate points which are above us, and with respect to which we cannot reach satisfaction, [it is absurd that we should display such an extreme of presumption as to lay open God, and things which are not yet discovered, referring to Genesis 40:8, Deuteronomy 29:29, and Psalm 131, “as if already we had found out, by the vain talk about emissions, God Himself, the Creator of all things, and to assert that He derived His substance from apostasy and ignorance, so as to frame an impious hypothesis in opposition to God.”

In paragraph eight, Irenaeus concludes against the Gnostics, “Moreover, they possess no proof of their system, which has but recently been invented by them, sometimes resting upon certain numbers, sometimes on syllables, and sometimes, again, on names; and there are occasions, too, when, by means of those letters which are contained in letters, by parables not properly interpreted, or by certain [baseless] conjectures, they strive to establish that fabulous account which they have devised.” Irenaeus then testifies, “For if any one should inquire the reason why the Father, who has fellowship with the Son in all things, has been declared by the Lord alone to know the hour and the day [of judgment], he will find at present no more suitable, or becoming, or safe reason than this (since, indeed, the Lord is the only true Master), that we may learn through Him that the Father is above all things. For “the Father,” says He, “is greater than I,” referring to John 14:28. And Irenaeus then warns the Gnostics, “The Father, therefore, has been declared by our Lord to excel with respect to knowledge; for this reason, that we, too, as long as we are connected with the scheme of things in this world, should leave perfect knowledge, and such questions [as have been mentioned], to God, and should not by any chance, while we seek to investigate the sublime nature of the Father, fall into the danger of starting the question whether there is another God above God.”

And in paragraph nine, Irenaeus continues to warn the Gnostics, as he says “But if any lover of strife contradict what I have said, and also what the apostle affirms, that “we know in part, and prophesy in part,” referring again to 1 Corinthians 13:9, “and imagine that he has acquired not a partial, but a universal, knowledge of all that exists, —being such an one as Valentinus, or Ptolemæus, or Basilides, or any other of those who maintain that they have searched out the deep things of God,—let him not (arraying himself in vainglory) boast that he has acquired greater knowledge than others with respect to those things which are invisible, or cannot be placed under our observation; but let him, by making diligent inquiry, and obtaining information from the Father, tell us the reasons (which we know not) of those things which are in this world, — as, for instance, the number of hairs on his own head, and the sparrows which are captured day by day, and such other points with which we are not previously acquainted,—so that we may credit him also with respect to more important points.” Irenaeus points out the obvious as he says, “But if those who are perfect do not yet understand the very things in their hands, and at their feet, and before their eyes, and on the earth, and especially the rule followed with respect to the hairs of their head, how can we believe them regarding things spiritual, and super-celestial, and those which, with a vain confidence, they assert to be above God?” Irenaeus concludes as he says, “So much, then, I have said concerning numbers, and names, and syllables, and questions respecting such things as are above our comprehension, and concerning their improper expositions of the parables: [I add no more on these points,] since thou thyself mayest enlarge upon them.”

Commentary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus argues, “Having therefore the truth itself as our rule and the testimony concerning God set clearly before us, we ought not, by running after numerous and diverse answers to questions, to cast away the firm and true knowledge of God.” Irenaeus’ confession is that he has the truth as his rule. Irenaeus believed that the testimony concerning God was set clearly before the Church in his time.

Therefore, Irenaeus advises, “But it is much more suitable that we, directing our inquiries after this fashion, should exercise ourselves in the investigation of the mystery and administration of the living God, and should increase in the love of Him who has done, and still does, so great things for us;” By “investigation” here, Irenaeus means the study of the Scriptures as he will state in paragraph two, and as he most certainly has done himself.

Irenaeus continues as he warns, “but never should fall from the belief by which it is most clearly proclaimed that this Being alone is truly God and Father, who both formed this world, fashioned man, and bestowed the faculty of increase on His own creation, and called him upwards from lesser things to those greater ones which are in His own presence, just as He brings an infant which has been conceived in the womb into the light of the sun, and lays up wheat in the barn after He has given it full strength on the stalk.” Irenaeus concludes wisely, "But it is one and the same Creator who both fashioned the womb and created the sun; and one and the same Lord who both reared the stalk of corn, increased and multiplied the wheat, and prepared the barn."

In paragraph two, Irenaeus encourages, "If, however, we cannot discover explanations of all those things in Scripture which are made the subject of investigation, yet let us not on that account seek after any other God besides Him who really exists. For this is the very greatest impiety. We should leave things of that nature to God who created us, being most properly assured that the Scriptures are indeed perfect, since they were spoken by the Word of God and His Spirit;" We see here that Irenaeus believed the Scriptures to be the word of God. This is certainly in agreement with Paul's statement to Timothy in 2 Timothy 3 (NASB):16 All Scripture is inspired by God and profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for training in righteousness; 17 so that the man of God may be adequate, equipped for every good work.

Irenaeus looked to the Scriptures as the source of his knowledge of God and things spiritual. The Scriptures don't tell us everything about everything, he says in paragraph two, but they do tell us the truth about God.

Irenaeus continues as he argues, "but we, inasmuch as we are inferior to, and later in existence than, the Word of God and His Spirit, are on that very account destitute of the knowledge of His mysteries." This is a humble admission of a creature. Irenaeus then wisely points out, "And there is no cause for wonder if this is the case with us as respects things spiritual and heavenly, and such as require to be made known to us by revelation, since many even of those things which lie at our very feet (I mean such as belong to this world, which we handle, and see, and are in close contact with) transcend our knowledge, so that even these we must leave to God." Is this not common sense? The mysteries of God and "things spiritual and heavenly" are revealed through a revelation from God to man, for there is no other way that man could know of them.

Irenaeus then reasons wisely, "For it is fitting that He should excel all [in knowledge]. For how stands the case, for instance, if we endeavour to explain the cause of the rising of the Nile? We may say a great deal, plausible or otherwise, on the subject; but what is true, sure, and incontrovertible regarding it, belongs only to God. Then, again, the dwelling-place of birds—of those, I mean, which come to us in spring, but fly away again on the approach of autumn—though it is a matter connected with this world, escapes our knowledge. What explanation, again, can we give of the flow and ebb of the ocean, although every one admits there must be a certain cause [for these phenomena]? Or what can we say as to the nature of those things which lie beyond it? What, moreover, can we say as to the formation of rain, lightning, thunder, gatherings of clouds, vapours, the bursting forth of winds, and such like things; or tell as to the storehouses of snow, hail, and other like things? [What do we know respecting] the conditions requisite for the preparation of clouds, or what is the real nature of the vapours in the sky? What as to the reason why the moon waxes and wanes, or what as to the cause of the difference of nature among various waters, metals, stones, and such like things? On all these points we may indeed say a great deal while we search into their causes, but God alone who made them can declare the truth regarding them."

Scripture is a revelation of God to man, and is inspired by God as Irenaeus plainly says. Irenaeus also argues that there is so much we don't even know about nature, and, if we investigate, we may search into the causes of natural phenomena like "the rising of the Nile," or the "flow and ebb of the ocean." But God alone knows that totality of truth about the things that He Himself has made, as Irenaeus says.

To summarize, in paragraph two, Irenaeus says that there are many things we cannot explain in Scripture, but that should not lead us to seek after "any other God besides Him who really exists." He says that "the Scriptures are indeed perfect, since they were spoken by the Word of God and His Spirit." He says that we were not there when the Word was spoken and, since the Mysteries of God deal with things heavenly and spiritual, the knowledge of such things "are made known to us by revelation." Therefore we should not wonder that there is much we don't know or understand in the Scriptures, for there is also much that we don't know about nature and the physical world. We may discover much about the truth of such things, "but God alone who made them can declare the truth regarding them."

In paragraph three, Irenaeus continues as he reasons, "If, therefore, even with respect to creation, there are some things [the knowledge of] which belongs only to God, and others which come within the range of our own knowledge, what ground is there for complaint, if, in regard to those things which we investigate in the Scriptures (which are throughout spiritual), we are able by the grace of God to explain some of them, while we must leave others in the hands of God, and that not only in the present world, but also in that which is to come, so that God should for ever teach, and man should for ever learn the things taught him by God?" Irenaeus speaks sound words here. Irenaeus then refers to the Apostle Paul as he says, "As the apostle has said on this point, that, when other things have been done away, then these three, "faith, hope, and charity, shall endure," referring to 1 Corinthians 13 (NASB):13 But now faith, hope, love, abide these three; but the greatest of these is love.

Irenaeus presses his point that the Scriptures are spiritual and we are only able by the grace of God to explain some of them, "while we must leave others in the hands of God." How right he is that God will forever teach us the things about Himself, and man forever "learn the things taught him by God. And when all things are done away, just as the Scriptures say, "faith, hope, and charity, shall endure" as we read in 1 Corinthians 13 (NASB):13 But now faith, hope, love, abide these three; but the greatest of these is love.

Irenaeus then explains wisely, "For faith, which has respect to our Master, endures unchangeably, assuring us that there is but one true God, and that we should truly love Him for ever, seeing that He alone is our Father; while we hope ever to be receiving more and more from God, and to learn from Him, because He is good, and possesses boundless riches, a kingdom without end, and instruction that can never be exhausted." Irenaeus' trust in the Scripture is unwavering as he reasons, "If, therefore, according to the rule which I have stated, we leave some questions in the hands of God, we shall both preserve our faith uninjured, and shall continue without danger; and all Scripture, which has been given to us by God, shall be found by us perfectly consistent; and the parables shall harmonize with those passages which are perfectly plain; and those statements the meaning of which is clear, shall serve to explain the parables; and through the many diversified utterances [of Scripture] there shall be heard one harmonious melody in us, praising in hymns that God who created all things." Irenaeus is convincing as he affirms, "If, for instance, any one asks, "What was God doing before He made the world?" we reply that the answer to such a question lies with God Himself. For that this world was formed perfect by God, receiving a beginning in time, the Scriptures teach us; but no Scripture reveals to us what God was employed about before this event. The answer therefore to that question remains with God, and it is not proper for us to aim at bringing forward foolish, rash, and blasphemous suppositions [in reply to it]; so, as by one's imagining that he has discovered the origin of matter, he should in reality set aside God Himself who made all things."

Again, Irenaeus has spoken sound words. We could also add that the Scriptures also say that we walk by faith and not by sight as we read in 2 Corinthians 5 (NASB):6 Therefore, being always of good courage, and knowing that while we are at home in the body we are absent from the Lord— 7 for we walk by faith, not by sight— 8 we are of good courage, I say, and prefer rather to be absent from the body and to be at home with the Lord.

And the Scriptures also say that the knowledge of God is higher than our thoughts as in Isaiah 55 (NASB):8 "For My thoughts are not your thoughts, Nor are your ways My ways," declares the LORD. 9 "For as the heavens are higher than the earth, So are My ways higher than your ways And My thoughts than your thoughts. 10 "For as the rain and the snow come down from heaven, And do not return there without watering the earth And making it bear and sprout, And furnishing seed to the sower and bread to the eater; 11 So will My word be which goes forth from My mouth; It will not return to Me empty, Without accomplishing what I desire, And without succeeding in the matter for which I sent it.

Irenaeus firmly believed that the Scriptures were given to us by God and that we would find them "perfectly consistent" if we would trust Him with the hard questions, leaving these "in the hands of God." And the statements where the meaning is clear shall help clarify the parables and other things in the word of God that are not so clear. Irenaeus encourages us to let the answers to questions we cannot answer "remain with God."

To summarize, in paragraph three, Irenaeus says that some things are "within the range of our own knowledge" and "therefore some things [the knowledge of] which belongs only to God." He says, "we are able by the grace of God to explain some of them, while we must leave others in the hands of God." The fact is that God will "forever teach" and man will "forever learn the things taught him by God." And after all, "faith, hope, and charity shall endure." Irenaeus says that all Scripture "has been given to us by God" and "shall be found by us perfectly consistent" if "we leave some questions in the hands of God." Irenaeus gives us an example of a silly question, that is, “What was God employed about before He made the world?” The Scriptures do not say, and since such knowledge is beyond us, “it is not proper for us to aim at bringing forward foolish, rash, and blasphemous suppositions [in reply to it]; so, as by one’s imagining that he has discovered the origin of matter, he should in reality set aside God Himself who made all things.” These are wise words.

In paragraph four, Irenaeus speaks directly to the Gnostics as he says, “For consider, all ye who invent such opinions, since the Father Himself is alone called God, who has a real existence, but whom ye style the Demiurge; since, moreover, the Scriptures acknowledge Him alone as God; and yet again, since the Lord confesses Him alone as His own Father, and knows no other, as I shall show from His very words, —when ye style this very Being the fruit of defect, and the offspring of ignorance, and describe Him as being ignorant of those things which are above Him, with the various other allegations which you make regarding Him,— consider the terrible blasphemy [ye are thus guilty of] against Him who truly is God.”

Irenaeus boldly challenges the Gnostics calling their beliefs “terrible blasphemy.” The Gnostics actually believed that there was another god above the God of the prophets, that is, who was above the God of the Old Testament.

Now Irenaeus acknowledges the possibility that the Gnostics believe in God as he says, “Ye seem to affirm gravely and honestly enough that ye believe in God; but then, as ye are utterly unable to reveal any other God, ye declare this very Being in whom ye profess to believe, the fruit of defect and the offspring of ignorance.” Irenaeus now documents the Gnostic errors as he states, “Now this blindness and foolish talking flow to you from the fact that ye reserve nothing for God, but ye wish to proclaim the nativity and production both of God Himself, of His Ennoea, of His Logos, and Life, and Christ; and ye form the idea of these from no other than a mere human experience;” Gnostic beliefs are rather complex and often contradict each other. We will present a more complete discussion of Gnostic beliefs in Chapter 34: Gnosticism.

Irenaeus continues as he points out that the Gnostics were “not understanding, as I said before, that it is possible, in the case of man, who is a compound being, to speak in this way of the mind of man and the thought of man; and to say that thought (ennoea) springs from mind (sensus), intention (enthymesis) again from thought, and word (logos) from intention (but which logos? for there is among the Greeks one logos which is the principle that thinks, and another which is the instrument by means of which thought is expressed); and [to say] that a man sometimes is at rest and silent, while at other times he speaks and is active.” Irenaeus then points out, “But since God is all mind, all reason, all active spirit, all light, and always exists one and the same, as it is both beneficial for us to think of God, and as we learn regarding Him from the Scriptures, such feelings and divisions [of operation] cannot fittingly be ascribed to Him.” Irenaeus then explains, “For our tongue, as being carnal, is not sufficient to minister to the rapidity of the human mind, inasmuch as that is of a spiritual nature, for which reason our word is restrained within us, and is not at once expressed as it has been conceived by the mind, but is uttered by successive efforts, just as the tongue is able to serve it.”

Irenaeus thoughts in paragraph four seem to indicate that he heard something special in the word of God that made it stand out as different from the words of men. It reminds me of what the Scripture says about Jesus, that “never man spoke like this man,” as in John 7 (NASB):45 The (officers then came to the chief priests and Pharisees, and they said to them, “Why did you not bring Him?” 46 The officers answered, “Never has a man spoken the way this man speaks.”

To summarize, in paragraph four, Irenaeus now points to the source of these silly questions. It is the Gnostics who “invent such opinions” such as the Demiurge, whom they say is the Father, that is God. Yet the Gnostics claim that this, the real God, is actually the “fruit of defect, and the offspring of ignorance,” and “ignorant of those things which are above Him.” Irenaeus says such opinions are blasphemy “against Him who truly is God” alone. Irenaeus says that the Gnostics “seem to affirm gravely and honestly enough” that they believe in God, but they then declare this very Being in whom they profess to believe, “the fruit of defect and the offspring of ignorance.” Even though they are “utterly unable to reveal any other God,” they still “reserve nothing for God,” and in this way let blindness and foolish talking flow to themselves, forming their ideas “from no other than a mere human experience.” Irenaeus says in essence that it takes time for man to express his thoughts and may take successive efforts to express what his mind thinks. The human mind is “of a spiritual nature,” he says, and thinks faster than the tongue can utter speech.

The words of the Gnostics are a pretension of knowledge. There is no history to them that shows a unity of purpose in comparison to the word of God which has abundant proofs such as the fulfillment of prophecy and the testimony of miracles.

In paragraph five, Irenaeus testifies, "But God being all Mind, and all Logos, both speaks exactly what He thinks, and thinks exactly what He speaks. For His thought is Logos, and Logos is Mind, and Mind comprehending all things is the Father Himself." Irenaeus points out the error of the Gnostics as he says, "He, therefore, who speaks of the mind of God, and ascribes to it a special origin of its own, declares Him a compound Being, as if God were one thing, and the original Mind another." Apparently the Gnostics were ascribing to the mind of God "a special origin of its own." Irenaeus says that to do this is to declare "Him a compound Being as if God were one thing, and the original Mind another."

And again, Irenaeus shows the error of the Gnostics as he says, "So, again, with respect to Logos, when one attributes to him the third place of production from the Father; on which supposition he is ignorant of His greatness; and thus Logos has been far separated from God." Apparently, the Gnostics were attributing to the Logos "the third place of production from the Father," making the Logos "far separated from God."

Irenaeus then testifies, "As for the prophet, he declares respecting Him, "Who shall describe His generation?" referring to Isaiah 53 (Septuagint):8 In his humiliation his judgment was taken away: who shall declare his generation? for his life is taken away from the earth: because of the iniquities of my people he was led to death.

This verse is also translated as in Isaiah 53 (NASB):8 By oppression and judgment He was taken away; And as for His generation, who considered That He was cut off out of the land of the living For the transgression of my people, to whom the stroke was due?

I believe Irenaeus means to say by this Scripture that no one could trace his generation, or beginning.

And again Irenaeus shows the error of the Gnostics as he says, "But ye pretend to set forth His generation from the Father, and ye transfer the production of the word of men which takes place by means of a tongue to the Word of God, and thus are righteously exposed by your own selves as knowing neither things human nor divine."

Irenaeus says that the prophet declared, respecting the Logos, that His generation was indescribable. But the Gnostics say that His generation is from the Father. This does not agree with the Word of God, and so Irenaeus says that they "transfer the production of the word of men which takes place by means of a tongue to the Word of God." Thus they are "exposed" by their pretending by which it is evident they know nothing either "human or divine."

In paragraph six, Irenaeus rebukes the Gnostics as he says, "But, beyond reason inflated [with your own wisdom], ye presumptuously maintain that ye are acquainted with the unspeakable mysteries of God; while even the Lord, the very Son of God, allowed that the Father alone knows the very day and hour of judgment, when He plainly declares, "But of that day and that hour knoweth no man, neither the Son, but the Father only," referring to Mark 13 (NASB):32 "But of that day or hour no one knows, not even the angels in heaven, nor the Son, but the Father alone."

Irenaeus then exhorts, "If, then, the Son was not ashamed to ascribe the knowledge of that day to the Father only, but declared what was true regarding the matter, neither let us be ashamed to reserve for God those greater questions which may occur to us." Irenaeus then testifies, "For no man is superior to his master," referring to Matthew 10 (NASB):24 "A disciple is not above his teacher, nor a slave above his master."

Irenaeus then humbly, as a true son of the Creator, admits, "If any one, therefore, says to us, "How then was the Son produced by the Father?" we reply to him, that no man understands that production, or generation, or calling, or revelation, or by whatever name one may describe His generation, which is in fact altogether indescribable." Irenaeus then argues that, "Neither Valentinus, nor Marcion, nor Saturninus, nor Basilides, nor angels, nor archangels, nor principalities, nor powers [possess this knowledge], but the Father only who begat, and the Son who was begotten." Irenaeus earnestly contends for the faith as he says, "Since therefore His generation is unspeakable, those who strive to set forth generations and productions cannot be in their right mind, inasmuch as they undertake to describe things which are indescribable." In fact, they have been deceived by demons as Paul says in 1 Timothy 4 (NASB):1 But the Spirit explicitly says that in later times some will fall away from the faith, paying attention to deceitful spirits and doctrines of demons.

Irenaeus then points out the folly of the Gnostics as he argues, "For that a word is uttered at the bidding of thought and mind, all men indeed well understand. Those, therefore, who have excogitated [the theory of] emissions have not discovered anything great, or revealed any abstruse mystery, when they have simply transferred what all understand to the only-begotten Word of God; and while they style Him unspeakable and unnameable, they nevertheless set forth the production and formation of His first generation, as if they themselves had assisted at His birth, thus assimilating Him to the word of mankind formed by emissions.” What exactly the “theory emissions” was is difficult to say. But from Irenaeus’ writing here he seems to describe the Gnostic belief that the Son of God was generated by another being known to the Gnostics when this being had a thought, and then spoke that thought. So the word that was spoken was the emission, much like the word of mankind is formed in the mind and then spoken. This is nothing but pure fantasy, and the imaginings of men.

To summarize, in paragraph six, Irenaeus says that we should not be “ashamed to reserve for God those greater questions which may occur to us,” even as Jesus Himself acknowledged that He did not know the day or the hour of His return and the coming judgment day, but only the Father. Irenaeus says the Gnostics don’t know what “is in fact indescribable,” that is, how the Son was begotten. Irenaeus says “His generation is unspeakable” and those who pretend to understand this try to “set forth the production and formation of His first generation, as if they themselves had assisted at His birth, thus assimilating Him to the word of mankind formed by emissions.”

In paragraph seven, Irenaeus rolls on, continuing his argument that knowledge of some things are to be left in the hands of God since there is no way for us to know them without His revealing them to us. This is the plain statement of Scripture in 1 Corinthians 2 (NASB):10 For to us God revealed them through the Spirit; for the Spirit searches all things, even the depths of God. 11 For who among men knows the thoughts of a man except the spirit of the man which is in him? Even so the thoughts of God no one knows except the Spirit of God.

This, he says, is true of the origin of matter which He says the Scriptures tell us that God produced but not how He produced it. Irenaeus says it does not “become us to conjecture, so as, in accordance with our own opinions, to form endless conjectures concerning God, but we should leave such knowledge in the hands of God Himself.” Again the Scripture says the same in Hebrews 11 (NASB):1 By faith we understand that the worlds were prepared by the word of God, so that what is seen was not made out of things which are visible.

It is by faith that we understand.

However, Irenaeus then says “we must leave the cause why, while all things were made by God, certain of His creatures sinned and revolted from a state of submission to God, and others, indeed the great majority, persevered, and do still persevere, in [willing] subjection to Him who formed them, and also of what nature those are who sinned, and of what nature those who persevere.” This statement makes it sound as if there are some, “indeed the great majority,” who were born without sin, and persevere in submission to God “who formed them.” Yet there are others who “sinned and revolted from a state of submission to God.” And, it seems it is an open question to Irenaeus “of what nature those are who sinned, and of what nature those who persevere.” The Scriptures are clear on both questions. When Adam sinned, he passed sin upon the entire human race as stated in Romans 5 (NASB):12 Therefore, just as through one man sin entered into the world, and death through sin, and so death spread to all men, because all sinned—

And in 1 Corinthians 15 (NASB):21 For since by a man came death, by a man also came the resurrection of the dead. 22 For as in Adam all die, so also in Christ all will be made alive.

All are spiritually dead in sin until they accept Christ as Paul tells us in Ephesians 2 (NASB):1 And you were dead in your trespasses and sins, 2 in which you formerly walked according to the course of this world, according to the prince of the power of the air, of the spirit that is now working in the sons of disobedience. 3 Among them we too all formerly lived in the lusts of our flesh, indulging the desires of the flesh and of the mind, and were by nature children of wrath, even as the rest.

All stand condemned until they accept Christ as Jesus tells us in John 3 (NASB):18 "He who believes in Him is not judged; he who does not believe has been judged already, because he has not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God.

Irenaeus does use the word “creatures.” He therefore could be referring to the angels who did not fall when Lucifer fell when he says that “others, indeed the great majority, persevered, and do still persevere, in [willing] subjection to Him who formed them.” However he is not clear here.

Irenaeus then wisely advises, “[we must, I say, leave the cause of these things] to God and His Word, to whom alone He said, “Sit at my right hand, until I make Thine enemies Thy footstool,” referring to Psalm 110 (NASB):1 A Psalm of David. The LORD says to my Lord: "Sit at My right hand Until I make Your enemies a footstool for Your feet."

Irenaeus then testifies, “But as for us, we still dwell upon the earth, and have not yet sat down upon His throne. For although the Spirit of the Saviour that is in Him “searcheth all things, even the deep things of God,” referring to 1 Corinthians 2 (NASB):10 For to us God revealed them through the Spirit; for the Spirit searches all things, even the depths of God.

Irenaeus continues as he says, “yet as to us “there are diversities of gifts, differences of administrations, and diversities of operations,” referring to 1 Corinthians 12 (NASB):4 Now there are varieties of gifts, but the same Spirit. 5 And there are varieties of ministries, and the same Lord. 6 There are varieties of effects, but the same God who works all things in all persons.

Irenaeus then continues, “and we, while upon the earth, as Paul also declares, “know in part, and prophesy in part,” referring to 1 Corinthians 13 (NASB):9 For we know in part and we prophesy in part;

Irenaeus continues as he exhorts, “Since, therefore, we know but in part, we ought to leave all sorts of [difficult] questions in the hands of Him who in some measure, [and that only,] bestows grace on us.” And Irenaeus reminds us, “That eternal fire, [for instance,] is prepared for sinners, both the Lord has plainly declared, and the rest of the Scriptures demonstrate. And that God foreknew that this would happen, the Scriptures do in like manner demonstrate, since He prepared eternal fire from the beginning for those who were [afterwards] to transgress [His commandments];” This is stated in Matthew 25 (NASB):41 "Then He will also say to those on His left, 'Depart from Me, accursed ones, into the eternal fire which has been prepared for the devil and his angels;

And in Mark 9 (HCSB):42 “But whoever causes the downfall of one of these little ones who believe in Me—it would be better for him if a heavy millstone were hung around his neck and he were thrown into the sea. 43 And if your hand causes your downfall, cut it off. It is better for you to enter life maimed than to have two hands and go to hell—the unquenchable fire, [44 where Their worm does not die, and the fire is not quenched.] 45 And if your foot causes your downfall, cut it off. It is better for you to enter life lame than to have two feet and be thrown into hell— [the unquenchable fire, 46 where Their worm does not die, and the fire is not quenched.] 47 And if your eye causes your downfall, gouge it out. It is better for you to enter the kingdom of God with one eye than to have two eyes and be thrown into hell, 48 where Their worm does not die, and the fire is not quenched.

Irenaeus concludes by asserting, “but the cause itself of the nature of such transgressors neither has any Scripture informed us, nor has an apostle told us, nor has the Lord taught us.” But the Scriptures most certainly do inform us of the cause of the nature of such transgressors. The cause is the sin of Adam. The nature is the Adamic nature which the whole human race inherits as descendants of Adam.

Irenaeus then continues as he exhorts, “It becomes us, therefore, to leave the knowledge of this matter to God, even as the Lord does of the day and hour [of judgment], and not to rush to such an extreme of danger, that we will leave nothing in the hands of God, even though we have received only a measure of grace [from Him in this world].”

Yes, we who believe have been given a measure of faith and gifts differing according to the grace given to us, as we read in Romans 12 (NASB):3 For through the grace given to me I say to everyone among you not to think more highly of himself than he ought to think; but to think so as to have sound judgment, as God has allotted to each a measure of faith. 4 For just as we have many members in one body and all the members do not have the same function, 5 so we, who are many, are one body in Christ, and individually members one of another. 6 Since we have gifts that differ according to the grace given to us, each of us is to exercise them accordingly: if prophecy, according to the proportion of his faith;

Then also in Ephesians 4 (NASB):7 But unto every one of us is given grace according to the measure of the gift of Christ.

Irenaeus then warns, “But when we investigate points which are above us, and with respect to which we cannot reach satisfaction, [it is absurd that we should display such an extreme of presumption as to lay open God, and things which are not yet discovered, referring to Genesis 40:8, Deuteronomy 29:29, and Psalm 131,

“as if already we had found out, by the vain talk about emissions, God Himself, the Creator of all things, and to assert that He derived His substance from apostasy and ignorance, so as to frame an impious hypothesis in opposition to God.”

Irenaeus gives us wise counsel as he draws from Genesis 40 (NASB):8 Then they said to him, "We have had a dream and there is no one to interpret it." Then Joseph said to them, "Do not interpretations belong to God? Tell it to me, please."

And from Deuteronomy 29 (NASB):29 “The secret things belong to the LORD our God, but the things revealed belong to us and to our sons forever, that we may observe all the words of this law

And from Psalms 131 (NASB):1 O LORD, my heart is not proud, nor my eyes haughty; Nor do I involve myself in great matters, Or in things too difficult for me. 2 Surely I have composed and quieted my soul; Like a weaned child rests against his mother, My soul is like a weaned child within me. 3 O Israel, hope in the LORD From this time forth and forever.

Our work is to believe in Him whom He has sent as in John 6 (NASB):29 Jesus answered and said to them, “This is the work of God, that you believe in Him whom He has sent.”

For without faith, it is impossible to please God as we read in Hebrews 11 (NASB):6 And without faith it is impossible to please Him, for he who comes to God must believe that He is and that He is a rewarder of those who seek Him.

In paragraph eight, Irenaeus concludes against the Gnostics, “Moreover, they possess no proof of their system, which has but recently been invented by them, sometimes resting upon certain numbers, sometimes on syllables, and sometimes, again, on names; and there are occasions, too, when, by means of those letters which are contained in letters, by parables not properly interpreted, or by certain [baseless] conjectures, they strive to establish that fabulous account which they have devised.” Irenaeus then testifies, “For if any one should inquire the reason why the Father, who has fellowship with the Son in all things, has been declared by the Lord alone to know the hour and the day [of judgment], he will find at present no more suitable, or becoming, or safe reason than this (since, indeed, the Lord is the only true Master), that we may learn through Him that the Father is above all things. For “the Father,” says He, “is greater than I,” referring to John 14 (NASB):28 "You heard that I said to you, 'I go away, and I will come to you.' If you loved Me, you would have rejoiced because I go to the Father, for the Father is greater than I.

And Irenaeus warns the Gnostics, “The Father, therefore, has been declared by our Lord to excel with respect to knowledge; for this reason, that we, too, as long as we are connected with the scheme of things in this world, should leave perfect knowledge, and such questions [as have been mentioned], to God, and should not by any chance, while we seek to investigate the sublime nature of the Father, fall into the danger of starting the question whether there is another God above God.” This is what Paul warns us to avoid in 2 Timothy 2 (NASB):23 But refuse foolish and ignorant speculations, knowing that they produce quarrels.

And in paragraph nine, Irenaeus continues to warn the Gnostics, as he says “But if any lover of strife contradict what I have said, and also what the apostle affirms, that “we know in part, and prophesy in part,” referring again to 1 Corinthians 13 (NASB):9 For we know in part and we prophesy in part;

Continuing, Irenaeus argues, “and imagine that he has acquired not a partial, but a universal, knowledge of all that exists, —being such an one as Valentinus, or Ptolemæus, or Basilides, or any other of those who maintain that they have searched out the deep things of God,—let him not (arraying himself in vainglory) boast that he has acquired greater knowledge than others with respect to those things which are invisible, or cannot be placed under our observation; but let him, by making diligent inquiry, and obtaining information from the Father, tell us the reasons (which we know not) of those things which are in this world, —as, for instance, the number of hairs on his own head, and the sparrows which are captured day by day, and such other points with which we are not previously acquainted,—so that we may credit him also with respect to more important points.” Irenaeus then reasons rightly, “But if those who are perfect do not yet understand the very things in their hands, and at their feet, and before their eyes, and on the earth, and especially the rule followed with respect to the hairs of their head, how can we believe them regarding things spiritual, and super-celestial, and those which, with a vain confidence, they assert to be above God?” Irenaeus concludes as he says, “So much, then, I have said concerning numbers, and names, and syllables, and questions respecting such things as are above our comprehension, and concerning their improper expositions of the parables: [I add no more on these points,] since thou thyself mayest enlarge upon them.”

We see here in this chapter that Irenaeus argues from the Scriptures, and that he believes that the Scriptures were inspired by God, and are His words. And his arguments agree with the Scriptures, though this is not always the case as we shall see. However, I believe he does his best to agree with the Scriptures, and we see here that he trusts and relies on the Scriptures, and esteems them as the word of God.

Book 3: Preface.

Thou hast indeed enjoined upon me, my very dear friend, that I should bring to light the Valentinian doctrines, concealed, as their votaries imagine; that I should exhibit their diversity, and compose a treatise in refutation of them. I therefore have undertaken—showing that they spring from Simon, the father of all heretics—to exhibit both their doctrines and successions, and to set forth arguments against them all. Wherefore, since the conviction of these men and their exposure is in many points but one work, I have sent unto thee [certain] books, of which the first comprises the opinions of all these men, and exhibits their customs, and the character of their behaviour. In the second, again, their perverse teachings are cast down and overthrown, and, such as they really are, laid bare and open to view. But in this, the third book I shall adduce proofs from the Scriptures, so that I may come behind in nothing of what thou hast enjoined; yea, that over and above what thou didst reckon upon, thou mayest receive from me the means of combating and vanquishing those who, in whatever manner, are propagating falsehood. For the love of God, being rich and ungrudging, confers upon the suppliant more than he can ask from it. Call to mind then, the things which I have stated in the two preceding books, and, taking these in connection with them, thou shalt have from me a very copious refutation of all the heretics; and faithfully and strenuously shalt thou resist them in defence of the only true and life-giving faith, which the Church has received from the apostles and imparted to her sons. For the Lord of all gave to His apostles the power of the Gospel, through whom also we have known the truth, that is, the doctrine of the Son of God; to whom also did the Lord declare: “He that heareth you, heareth Me; and he that despiseth you, despiseth Me, and Him that sent Me.” 3308 Luke x. 16.

Summary: Irenaeus here states that the reason he is writing is to “bring to light the Valentinian doctrines,” and to “exhibit their diversity, and compose a treatise in refutation of them.” Irenaeus asserts that the Gnostic heretics “spring from Simon, the father of all heretics.” Irenaeus unqualifyingly wants to “exhibit both their doctrines and successions, and to set forth arguments against them all.” Irenaeus explains that his first book “comprises the opinions of all these men, and exhibits their customs, and the character of their behaviour.” In the second book, he casts down and overthrows “their perverse teachings,” and lays them “bare and open to view.” However, “in this third book,” Irenaeus’s goal is to “adduce proofs from the Scriptures” in order to provide the reader with “the means of combating and vanquishing those who, in whatever manner, are propagating falsehood.” Irenaeus notes, “For the love of God, being rich and ungrudging, confers upon the suppliant more than he can ask from it,” reminding us of Ephesians 3:20-21. Irenaeus wishes to provide the reader with “a very copious refutation of all the heretics.” By doing so, the reader “faithfully and strenuously” will be able to “resist them in defence of the only true and life-giving faith, which the Church has received from the apostles and imparted to her sons.” Irenaeus states that the “Lord of all gave to His apostles the power of the Gospel, through whom also we have known the truth, that is, the doctrine of the Son of God,” in order that we might faithfully pass it on as the Lord declared, “He that heareth you, heareth Me; and he that despiseth you, despiseth Me, and Him that sent Me,” referring to Luke 10: 16.

Commentary: Irenaeus states the reasons he is writing Against Heresies as he states the following:

- “that I should bring to light the Valentinian doctrines, concealed, as their votaries imagine;“
- “that I should exhibit their diversity, and compose a treatise in refutation of them.”
- “to exhibit both their doctrines and successions, and to set forth arguments against them all.”

- To show “the opinions of all these men,” and exhibit “their customs, and the character of their behaviour.”
- To cast down and overthrow “their perverse teachings” and show them to be “such as they really are, laid bare and open to view.”
- To “adduce proofs from the Scriptures” in order to show their teachings false.
- To provide “the means of combating and vanquishing those who, in whatever manner, are propagating falsehood.”
- To provide “a very copious refutation of all the heretics;”
- To provide a defense “of the only true and life-giving faith, which the Church has received from the apostles and imparted to her sons.”
- That all may know that “Lord of all gave to His apostles the power of the Gospel, through whom also we have known the truth, that is, the doctrine of the Son of God; to whom also did the Lord declare: “He that heareth you, heareth Me; and he that despiseth you, despiseth Me, and Him that sent Me.”

These are lofty goals for Irenaeus, and he is to be commended for having them. The important thing to note here is that Irenaeus’ reason for writing his third book was to “adduce proofs from the Scriptures” in order to combat and vanquish “those who, in whatever manner, are propagating falsehood.” He was also writing to equip others, using the Scriptures, in order that they may have the means to “faithfully and strenuously” resist heretics “in defense of the only true and life-giving faith which the Church has received from the apostles and imparted to her sons.” Irenaeus is unflinching in his staunch defense of the truth of the Gospel against any and all heresy. The Lord, he says, “gave to His apostles the power of the Gospel, through whom also we have known the truth, that is, the doctrine of the Son of God.” The Lord also said as much in Luke 10 (NASB):16 “The one who listens to you listens to Me, and the one who rejects you rejects Me; and he who rejects Me rejects the One who sent Me.”

The Church, Irenaeus says, has received from the apostles this “only true and life-giving faith” and has imparted it to her sons. So the Lord works through those who are in the body of Christ in order that other sons and daughters may be added to the Church, and these might know the doctrine of the Son of God. Doctrine is simply Biblical truth, and teaching material from the word of God. The doctrine or teaching of the Son of God is what Jesus taught as revealed by those closest to Him as we read in 2 Peter 1 (NASB):19 So we have the prophetic word made more sure, to which you do well to pay attention as to a lamp shining in a dark place, until the day dawns and the morning star arises in your hearts.

The apostles’ words are recorded in the Scriptures. Irenaeus wanted to give us “a very copious refutation of all the heretics” so that we might resist them with the truth. As Christians we are to take up the sword of the Spirit as in Ephesians 6 (NASB):17 And take the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God:

And in Hebrews 4 (NASB):12 For the word of God [is] quick, and powerful, and sharper than any two edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and [is] a discernor of the thoughts and intents of the heart.

In this segment of his writing, we notice that Irenaeus desires to propagate the truth which he sees in the Scriptures. That is, Irenaeus is not trying to back up his own perception with Scripture references, but rather to “adduce proofs from the Scriptures,” that is, to show what the Scriptures teach by using the Scriptures themselves. Let us remember Irenaeus’ words, “For the love of God, being rich and ungrudging, confers upon the suppliant more than he can ask from it,” reminding us of Paul’s words in Ephesians 3 (KJV):20 Now unto him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us, 21 Unto him be glory in the church by Christ Jesus throughout all ages, world without end. Amen.

Book 3: Chapter I.—The apostles did not commence to preach the Gospel, or to place anything on record until they were endowed with the gifts and power of the Holy Spirit. They preached one God alone, Maker of heaven and earth.

1. We have learned from none others the plan of our salvation, than from those through whom the Gospel has come down to us, which they did at one time proclaim in public, and, at a later period, by the will of God, handed down to us in the Scriptures, to be the ground and pillar of our faith.

3309 See 1 Tim. iii. 15, where these terms are used in reference to the Church. For it is unlawful to assert that they preached before they possessed “perfect knowledge,” as some do even venture to say, boasting themselves as improvers of the apostles. For, after our Lord rose from the dead, [the apostles] were invested with power from on high when the Holy Spirit came down [upon them], were filled from all [His gifts], and had perfect knowledge: they departed to the ends of the earth, preaching the glad tidings of the good things [sent] from God to us, and proclaiming the peace of heaven to men, who indeed do all equally and individually possess the Gospel of God. Matthew also issued a written Gospel among the Hebrews 3310 On this and similar statements in the Fathers, the reader may consult Dr. Roberts’s Discussions on the Gospels, in which they are fully criticised, and the Greek original of St. Matthew’s Gospel maintained. in their own dialect, while Peter and Paul were preaching at Rome, and laying the foundations of the Church. After their departure, Mark, the disciple and interpreter of Peter, did also hand down to us in writing what had been preached by Peter. Luke also, the companion of Paul, recorded in a book the Gospel preached by him. Afterwards, John, the disciple of the Lord, who also had leaned upon His breast, did himself publish a Gospel during his residence at Ephesus in Asia.

2. These have all declared to us that there is one God, Creator of heaven and earth, announced by the law and the prophets; and one Christ the Son of God. If any one do not agree to these truths, he despises the companions of the Lord; nay more, he despises Christ Himself the Lord; yea, he despises the Father also, and stands self-condemned, resisting and opposing his own salvation, as is the case with all heretics.

Summary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus testifies that “We have learned from none others the plan of our salvation, than from those through whom the Gospel has come down to us, which they did at one time proclaim in public, and, at a later period, by the will of God, handed down to us in the Scriptures, to be the ground and pillar of our faith.” Irenaeus then asserts, “For it is unlawful to assert that they preached before they possessed “perfect knowledge,” as some do even venture to say, boasting themselves as improvers of the apostles.” Irenaeus then asserts, “For, after our Lord rose from the dead, [the apostles] were invested with power from on high when the Holy Spirit came down [upon them], were filled from all [His gifts], and had perfect knowledge:” Irenaeus continues as he then testifies, “they departed to the ends of the earth, preaching the glad tidings of the good things [sent] from God to us, and proclaiming the peace of heaven to men, who indeed do all equally and individually possess the Gospel of God.” Irenaeus continues as he records, “Matthew also issued a written Gospel among the Hebrews in their own dialect, while Peter and Paul were preaching at Rome, and laying the foundations of the Church.” Irenaeus also records, “After their departure, Mark, the disciple and interpreter of Peter, did also hand down to us in writing what had been preached by Peter.” Irenaeus then testifies, that “Luke also, the companion of Paul, recorded in a book the Gospel preached by him. Afterwards, John, the disciple of the Lord, who also had leaned upon His breast, did himself publish a Gospel during his residence at Ephesus in Asia.”

In paragraph two, Irenaeus testifies, “These have all declared to us that there is one God, Creator of heaven and earth, announced by the law and the prophets; and one Christ the Son of God.” Irenaeus then warns, “If any one do not agree to these truths, he despises the companions of the Lord; nay more, he despises Christ Himself the Lord; yea, he despises the Father also, and stands self-condemned, resisting and opposing his own salvation, as is the case with all heretics.”

Commentary: Picture yourself in a world where no one has ever heard of Moses or Elijah or the prophets or Jesus, or even God, the Father. This would truly be a dark place. But this is the world the apostles preached to when they went outside Israel's borders. It is no wonder that those who heard the message of the Gospel had second thoughts. At first, it sounded like something they had heard in their cultural religion. The Gospel began by being additional knowledge in their thinking. Then they began to assimilate some of the concepts and blend it with their original understanding of the world. Gradually, they began to understand that the Gospel was life changing. It turned their world upside down as the Book of Acts says of Paul and Silas in Thessalonica in Acts 17 (NASB):6 When they did not find them, they began dragging Jason and some brethren before the city authorities, shouting, "These men who have upset the world have come here also;

For some, it meant a career change overnight. If they were selling idols, they needed to quit and find another livelihood. Of course, this was not easy. If you were a Jew living in a Gentile land, the Gospel was life changing but in a different way. Jesus is the fulfillment of the promises in the Old Testament. This took a while to sink in. What they had waited for through the centuries had finally come to pass. It was too good to be true at first. For some, it really was too good to be true, and they rejected it. For others, the truth of the message persuaded them, and God began to increase in their lives.

In paragraph one, Irenaeus testifies that, "We have learned from none others the plan of our salvation, than from those through whom the Gospel has come down to us, which they did at one time proclaim in public, and, at a later period, by the will of God, handed down to us in the Scriptures, to be the ground and pillar of our faith." To Irenaeus, the Scriptures were the ground and pillar of our faith. This echoes what Paul tells Timothy in 2 Timothy 3 (NASB):16 All Scripture is inspired by God and profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for training in righteousness; 17 so that the man of God may be adequate, equipped for every good work.

And the Psalmist tells us in Psalms 119 (NASB):105 Nun. Your word is a lamp to my feet And a light to my path.

Note that "Nun" is the Hebrew letter for "N".

Now Jesus also teaches this in John 8 (NASB):31 So Jesus was saying to those Jews who had believed Him, "If you continue in My word, then you are truly disciples of Mine; 32 and you will know the truth, and the truth will make you free.

The word of God is all important if we are to know the truth and be free. Now we note that Paul in 1 Timothy tells us that the church is the pillar and support of the truth as we read in 1 Timothy 3 (NASB):14 I am writing these things to you, hoping to come to you before long; 15 but in case I am delayed, I write so that you will know how one ought to conduct himself in the household of God, which is the church of the living God, the pillar and support of the truth.

The church is pictured by Paul as the pillar and support of the truth, but not the pillar and ground of our faith. We don't believe in the Church, and so we are saved. We believe in the truth of the Word of God, and thus we are saved. So the Church is the pillar and support of the truth as Paul tells us in 1 Timothy 3:14-15, and it is the truth in the Scriptures that is the pillar and ground of our faith, as Irenaeus says. That is, the Scriptures tell us about Jesus, and we believe in Him and we are saved. It is our faith in Him that gives us relationship with Him. And this relationship is nurtured by the word of God.

Irenaeus then asserts, "For it is unlawful to assert that they preached before they possessed "perfect knowledge," as some do even venture to say, boasting themselves as improvers of the apostles." Apparently, the Gnostics were trying to add to the Gospel message by saying that the apostles told only part of the truth, and that they, the Gnostics, preached the complete truth. Irenaeus then asserts, "For, after our Lord rose from the dead, [the apostles] were invested with power from on high when the Holy Spirit came down [upon them], were filled from all [His gifts], and had perfect knowledge:" The apostles were to be invested with power from on high as Jesus promised in Luke 24 (NASB):31 "And behold, I am sending forth the promise of My Father upon you; but you are to stay in the city until you are clothed with power from on high."

And Jesus spoke to them just before ascended. Jesus told the disciples that they would be baptized with the Holy Spirit in not many days as in Acts 1 (HCSB):4 While He was together with them, He commanded them not to leave Jerusalem, but to wait for the Father's promise. "This," He said, "is what you heard from Me; 5 for John baptized with water, but you will be baptized with the Holy Spirit not many days from now."

Jesus then told the disciples that they would be invested with power when the promise of the Holy Spirit came upon them as we read in Acts 1 (HCSB):6 So when they had come together, they asked Him, “Lord, are You restoring the kingdom to Israel at this time?” 7 He said to them, “It is not for you to know times or periods that the Father has set by His own authority. 8 But you will receive power when the Holy Spirit has come on you, and you will be My witnesses in Jerusalem, in all Judea and Samaria, and to the ends of the earth.”

And all this happened just as Jesus promised as we read in Acts 2 (NASB):1 When the day of Pentecost had come, they were all together in one place. 2 And suddenly there came from heaven a noise like a violent rushing wind, and it filled the whole house where they were sitting. 3 And there appeared to them tongues as of fire distributing themselves, and they rested on each one of them. 4 And they were all filled with the Holy Spirit and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit was giving them utterance.

Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “they departed to the ends of the earth, preaching the glad tidings of the good things [sent] from God to us, and proclaiming the peace of heaven to men, who indeed do all equally and individually possess the Gospel of God.”

The message of the Gospel preached by the apostles was the true Gospel, and it cannot be improved upon. The apostles did preach the truth of the Gospel. Their message was perfect, or complete, in that it contained all we need to know to be saved. However, when Irenaeus says that the apostles had “perfect knowledge,” he leads us to believe that there was something extra that the apostles received when the Holy Spirit came upon them. In Book 4: Chapter XXVI, paragraph 2, of his writing, Irenaeus says, “Wherefore it is incumbent to obey the presbyters who are in the Church,—those who, as I have shown, possess the succession from the apostles; those who, together with the succession of the episcopate, have received the certain gift of truth, according to the good pleasure of the Father.” Irenaeus believed that the apostles had received a gift of truth when they were baptized in the Holy Spirit at Pentecost. We will talk more about this in Chapter 20: The Teaching of Apostolic Succession. For now, we must understand that there were about 120 people in the upper room when the Holy Spirit came at Pentecost as Luke records in Acts 1 (NASB):13 When they had entered the city, they went up to the upper room where they were staying; that is, Peter and John and James and Andrew, Philip and Thomas, Bartholomew and Matthew, James the son of Alphaeus, and Simon the Zealot, and Judas the son of James. 14 These all with one mind were continually devoting themselves to prayer, along with the women, and Mary the mother of Jesus, and with His brothers. 15 At this time Peter stood up in the midst of the brethren (a gathering of about one hundred and twenty persons was there together), and said...

When the Holy Spirit then came at Pentecost, it was the fulfillment of the promise that Jesus gave them in Acts 1:4-5. But the promise was not for the apostles only, but for the whole church as Peter tells us in Acts 2 (HCSB):13 But some sneered and said, “They’re full of new wine!” 14 But Peter stood up with the Eleven, raised his voice, and proclaimed to them: “Men of Judah and all you residents of Jerusalem, let me explain this to you and pay attention to my words. 15 For these people are not drunk, as you suppose, since it’s only nine in the morning. 16 On the contrary, this is what was spoken through the prophet Joel: 17 And it will be in the last days, says God, that I will pour out My Spirit on all humanity; then your sons and your daughters will prophesy, your young men will see visions, and your old men will dream dreams. 18 I will even pour out My Spirit on My male and female slaves in those days, and they will prophesy.

Peter tells us in Acts 2:16 that the promise that Jesus spoke of was the same promise that the Holy Spirit spoke of through the prophet Joel as we read in Joel 2 (NASB):28 "It will come about after this That I will pour out My Spirit on all mankind; And your sons and daughters will prophesy, Your old men will dream dreams, Your young men will see visions. 29 "Even on the male and female servants I will pour out My Spirit in those days.

Then when Peter had finished preaching the first Gospel message, the people were convicted and asked him what they should do as we read in Acts 2 (NASB):37 Now when they heard this, they were pierced to the heart, and said to Peter and the rest of the apostles, “Brethren, what shall we do?” 38 Peter said to them, “Repent, and each of you be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the forgiveness of your sins; and you will receive the gift of the Holy Spirit. 39 For the promise is for you and your children and for all who are far off, as many as the Lord our God will call to Himself.”

Peter tells us in verse 39 that this promise, that is, the same promise that Jesus promised the apostles, “is for you and your children and for all who are far off, as many as the Lord our God will call to Himself.” That is, the promise Jesus made to the disciples that they would be empowered by the Holy Spirit was a promise for the whole Church. This is the statement of the apostle Peter himself.

Now Jesus taught the apostles when He was with them that their knowledge was incomplete, and that, when the Holy Spirit came, He would guide them into all truth as in John 16 (NASB):12 I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now. 13 Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth: for he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, [that] shall he speak: and he will shew you things to come.

The apostles, and the rest of the disciples in the upper room, were just men when the Holy Spirit came upon them, and baptized them with His presence. They did not receive a “gift of truth,” but the “gift of the Holy Spirit” who would be the guide who would lead them into all truth. The Holy Spirit was not just for the apostles but for all, both men and women, as many as the Lord will call to Himself. The Lord by the Holy Spirit revealed the truth of the New Testament Scriptures to the apostles, and He illuminates that truth to us, their disciples. In other words, the same truth that the Holy Spirit guided the apostles into is the same truth that He guides us into. Only He does not reveal to us more than He revealed through the apostles. The word of God is complete in the 49 books of the Old Testament and the 27 books of the New Testament.

Irenaeus is defending the Church against heresy, and the heresy he is defending against was that of the Gnostics who were calling into question the truth of the Gospel, and were even adding other gospel writings beside the four of Mathew, Mark, Luke, and John. However, when Irenaeus says of the apostles, “For it is unlawful to assert that they preached before they possessed “perfect knowledge,” as some do even venture to say, boasting themselves as improvers of the apostles,” we must not allow ourselves to elevate the apostles to a sort of untouchable place where they could do no wrong. The apostles gave us the word of God by the Spirit of God, as Peter testifies in 2 Peter 1 (NASB):20 Knowing this first, that no prophecy of the scripture is of any private interpretation. 21 For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man: but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost.

Our trust is not in the apostles, but in God who spoke by the apostles. As the Holy Spirit guided the apostles into truth, and they spoke and wrote the words the Holy Spirit gave them, so we are guided by the same Holy Spirit into the truth that was written by the Holy Spirit through the apostles. The Holy Spirit revealed His truth through the apostles, and the Holy Spirit illuminates our minds to understand and know this same truth.

Now, in addition, Irenaeus used the word “unlawful” as he states that “it is unlawful to assert that they preached before they possessed “perfect knowledge,” as some do even venture to say, boasting themselves as improvers of the apostles.” This word “unlawful” seems to be used by Irenaeus to indicate that he is in a place of authority in the Church. Indeed, he was a bishop of Lyons in southern France after Pothinius, starting about 177 A.D. It is interesting that we do not hear of any of the apostles in any of their writings state that anything is unlawful except in the case of Peter in his visit to the house of Cornelius as in Acts 10 (NASB):28 And he said to them, "You yourselves know how unlawful it is for a man who is a Jew to associate with a foreigner or to visit him; and yet God has shown me that I should not call any man unholy or unclean.

Jesus did not say that they would be instantly filled with perfect or complete knowledge when the Holy Spirit came down from heaven and filled them. He said the Holy Spirit would guide them into all truth. An example of how the Holy Spirit did this is given us in the Scriptures. In the book of Acts, it is recorded that the apostles did not know at first that the Gospel was meant for the Gentiles. This knowledge was only gradually revealed to them. Peter was the first to be guided by the Holy Spirit into this truth as we read in Acts 10 (NASB):44 While Peter was still speaking these words, the Holy Spirit fell upon all those who were listening to the message. 45 All the circumcised believers who came with Peter were amazed, because the gift of the Holy Spirit had been poured out on the Gentiles also. 46 For they were hearing them speaking with tongues and exalting God. Then Peter answered, 47 “Surely no one can refuse the water for these to be baptized who have received the Holy Spirit just as we did, can he?” 48 And he ordered them to be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ. Then they asked him to stay on for a few days.

Peter later tells the whole story of what happened at the house of Cornelius, and how he came to know that the Gentiles were meant to hear the Gospel as well. He tells this to those of the circumcision at Jerusalem who took issue with him about eating with uncircumcised men as we read in Acts 11 (NKJV):1 Now the apostles and brethren who were in Judea heard that the Gentiles had also received the word of God. 2 And when

Peter came up to Jerusalem, those of the circumcision contended with him, 3 saying, “You went in to uncircumcised men and ate with them!” 4 But Peter explained it to them in order from the beginning, saying: 5 “I was in the city of Joppa praying; and in a trance I saw a vision, an object descending like a great sheet, let down from heaven by four corners; and it came to me. 6 When I observed it intently and considered, I saw four-footed animals of the earth, wild beasts, creeping things, and birds of the air. 7 And I heard a voice saying to me, ‘Rise, Peter; kill and eat.’ 8 But I said, ‘Not so, Lord! For nothing common or unclean has at any time entered my mouth.’ 9 But the voice answered me again from heaven, ‘What God has cleansed you must not call common.’ 10 Now this was done three times, and all were drawn up again into heaven. 11 At that very moment, three men stood before the house where I was, having been sent to me from Caesarea. 12 Then the Spirit told me to go with them, doubting nothing. Moreover these six brethren accompanied me, and we entered the man’s house. 13 And he told us how he had seen an angel standing in his house, who said to him, ‘Send men to Joppa, and call for Simon whose surname is Peter, 14 who will tell you words by which you and all your household will be saved.’ 15 And as I began to speak, the Holy Spirit fell upon them, as upon us at the beginning. 16 Then I remembered the word of the Lord, how He said, ‘John indeed baptized with water, but you shall be baptized with the Holy Spirit.’ 17 If therefore God gave them the same gift as He gave us when we believed on the Lord Jesus Christ, who was I that I could withstand God?” 18 When they heard these things they became silent; and they glorified God, saying, “Then God has also granted to the Gentiles repentance to life.”

The apostles and elders and those of the circumcision in Jerusalem at first did not know that the Gospel was to be preached to the Gentiles as this story illustrates. Even after the day of Pentecost when the Spirit was poured out, Peter himself did not know this. God spoke by the Holy Spirit to him in a vision, and also to Cornelius the centurion in Caesarea by an angel as we read in Acts 10, so that they all would believe that the Gospel was to be preached to the Gentiles as well as to the Jews. The apostles did not therefore have perfect or complete or all knowledge as the words of Irenaeus could be interpreted to mean. This is not to say that they did not preach by the Holy Spirit or write the Gospels by the Holy Spirit, or that the word of God which we have received through them is imperfect or can be improved upon. The apostles walked by faith as this story in Acts illustrates so well. To walk by faith is to not walk by sight as Paul tells us in 2 Corinthians 5 (NASB):6 Therefore, being always of good courage, and knowing that while we are at home in the body we are absent from the Lord— 7 for we walk by faith, not by sight—8 we are of good courage, I say, and prefer rather to be absent from the body and to be at home with the Lord.

The apostles were eyewitnesses of the Lord Jesus as Peter records in 2 Peter 1 (NASB):16 For we did not follow cleverly devised tales when we made known to you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but we were eyewitnesses of His majesty. 17 For when He received honor and glory from God the Father, such an utterance as this was made to Him by the Majestic Glory, "This is My beloved Son with whom I am well-pleased"— 18 and we ourselves heard this utterance made from heaven when we were with Him on the holy mountain.

The apostles did not make up the Gospels from their own imagination but spoke of what they saw and heard. And Peter tells us that they have the prophetic word more sure as we read again in 2 Peter 1 (NASB):19 So we have the prophetic word made more sure, to which you do well to pay attention as to a lamp shining in a dark place, until the day dawns and the morning star arises in your hearts. 20 But know this first of all, that no prophecy of Scripture is a matter of one's own interpretation, 21 for no prophecy was ever made by an act of human will, but men moved by the Holy Spirit spoke from God.

The word translated “moved” in verse 21 is φερόμενοι (pronounced pheromenoi) in the Greek, and is in the nominative, plural, masculine, participle, present, passive form of φερω (pronounced phero), meaning to bear, to carry, to bring. So we could also translate this verse as “but men carried by the Holy Spirit spoke from God.” In other words, those who wrote the Scriptures were inspired by God to write them, and were carried by the Holy Spirit so that they wrote the words of God, and not their own.

Paul says the same in 2 Timothy 3 (NASB):16 All Scripture is inspired by God and profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for training in righteousness;

Irenaeus himself also has said so well that we can know what is revealed, but we cannot go beyond that. Even the apostles testified that they knew in part as we read in 1 Corinthians 13 (NASB):9 For we know in part and we prophesy in part; 10 but when the perfect comes, the partial will be done away. 11 When I was a child, I used to speak like a child, think like a child, reason like a child; when I became a man, I did away with childish things. 12 For now we see in a mirror dimly, but then face to face; now I know in part, but then I will know fully just as I also have been fully known.

The time when the perfect will come is revealed by John in 1 John 3 (NASB):2 Beloved, now we are children of God, and it has not appeared as yet what we will be. We know that when He appears, we will be like Him, because we will see Him just as He is.

When we see Jesus, we will be like Him, and we will know fully as we have been fully known. Until then, we know in part, just as the apostles did.

Now, Irenaeus continues as he records, “Matthew also issued a written Gospel among the Hebrews in their own dialect, while Peter and Paul were preaching at Rome, and laying the foundations of the Church.” There is no historical evidence that Peter was ever in Rome, but it is in Irenaeus’ testimony that he was.

Irenaeus also records, “After their departure, Mark, the disciple and interpreter of Peter, did also hand down to us in writing what had been preached by Peter.” Irenaeus then testifies, that “Luke also, the companion of Paul, recorded in a book the Gospel preached by him. Afterwards, John, the disciple of the Lord, who also had leaned upon His breast, did himself publish a Gospel during his residence at Ephesus in Asia.”

In paragraph two, Irenaeus testifies, “These have all declared to us that there is one God, Creator of heaven and earth, announced by the law and the prophets; and one Christ the Son of God.” Irenaeus then warns, “If any one do not agree to these truths, he despises the companions of the Lord; nay more, he despises Christ Himself the Lord; yea, he despises the Father also, and stands self-condemned, resisting and opposing his own salvation, as is the case with all heretics.”

Irenaeus very strongly stands with the apostles and the prophets declaring that there is “one God, Creator of heaven and earth, announced by the law and the prophets; and one Christ the Son of God.” I stand strong with Irenaeus here. This is a very strong assertion by Irenaeus of the truth of the Scriptures, and his own reliance on them.

Book 3: Chapter II.—The heretics follow neither Scripture nor tradition.

1. When, however, they are confuted from the Scriptures, they turn round and accuse these same Scriptures, as if they were not correct, nor of authority, and [assert] that they are ambiguous, and that the truth cannot be extracted from them by those who are ignorant of tradition. For [they allege] that the truth was not delivered by means of written documents, but vivâ voce: wherefore also Paul declared, “But we speak wisdom among those that are perfect, but not the wisdom of this world.” 3311 1 Cor. ii. 6. And this wisdom each one of them alleges to be the fiction of his own inventing, forsooth; so that, according to their idea, the truth properly resides at one time in Valentinus, at another in Marcion, at another in Cerinthus, then afterwards in Basilides, or has even been indifferently in any other opponent, 3312 This is Harvey’s rendering of the old Latin, *in illo qui contra disputat. who could speak nothing pertaining to salvation. For every one of these men, being altogether of a perverse disposition, depraving the system of truth, is not ashamed to preach himself.

2. But, again, when we refer them to that tradition which originates from the apostles, [and] which is preserved by means of the succession of presbyters in the Churches, they object to tradition, saying that they themselves are wiser not merely than the presbyters, but even than the apostles, because they have discovered the unadulterated truth. For [they maintain] that the apostles intermingled the things of the law with the words of the Saviour; and that not the apostles alone, but even the Lord Himself, spoke as at one time from the Demiurge, at another from the intermediate place, and yet again from the Pleroma, but that they themselves, indubitably, unsulliedly, and purely, have knowledge of the hidden mystery: this is, indeed, to blaspheme their Creator after a most impudent manner! It comes to this, therefore, that these men do now consent neither to Scripture nor to tradition.

3. Such are the adversaries with whom we have to deal, my very dear friend, endeavouring like slippery serpents to escape at all points. Where-fore they must be opposed at all points, if per-chance, by cutting off their retreat, we may succeed in turning them back to the truth. For, though it is not an easy thing for a soul under the influence of error to repent, yet, on the other hand, it is not altogether impossible to escape from error when the truth is brought alongside it.

Summary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus records of the heretics, “When, however, they are confuted from the Scriptures, they turn round and accuse these same Scriptures, as if they were not correct, nor of authority, and [assert] that they are ambiguous, and that the truth cannot be extracted from them by those who are ignorant of tradition.” Irenaeus testifies, “For [they allege] that the truth was not delivered by means of written documents, but vivâ voce: wherefore also Paul declared, “But we speak wisdom among those that are perfect, but not the wisdom of this world,” referring to 1 Corinthians 2:6. Irenaeus also records, “And this wisdom each one of them alleges to be the fiction of his own inventing, forsooth; so that, according to their idea, the truth properly resides at one time in Valentinus, at another in Marcion, at another in Cerinthus, then afterwards in Basilides, or has even been indifferently in any other opponent who could speak nothing pertaining to salvation.” Irenaeus concludes as he testifies, “For every one of these men, being altogether of a perverse disposition, depraving the system of truth, is not ashamed to preach himself.”

In paragraph two, Irenaeus records, “But, again, when we refer them to that tradition which originates from the apostles, [and] which is preserved by means of the succession of presbyters in the Churches, they object to tradition, saying that they themselves are wiser not merely than the presbyters, but even than the apostles, because they have discovered the unadulterated truth.” Irenaeus then explains, “For [they maintain] that the apostles intermingled the things of the law with the words of the Saviour; and that not the apostles alone, but even the Lord Himself, spoke as at one time from the Demiurge, at another from the intermediate place, and yet again from the Pleroma, but that they themselves, indubitably, unsulliedly, and purely, have knowledge of the hidden mystery: this is, indeed, to blaspheme their Creator after a most impudent manner! It comes to this, therefore, that these men do now consent neither to Scripture nor to tradition.”

In paragraph three, Irenaeus testifies, “Such are the adversaries with whom we have to deal, my very dear friend, endeavouring like slippery serpents to escape at all points.” Irenaeus then nobly states, “Where-fore they must be opposed at all points, if per-chance, by cutting off their retreat, we may succeed in turning them back to the truth. For, though it is not an easy thing for a soul under the influence of error to repent, yet, on the other hand, it is not altogether impossible to escape from error when the truth is brought alongside it.”

Commentary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus records of the heretics, “When, however, they are confuted from the Scriptures, they turn round and accuse these same Scriptures, as if they were not correct, nor of authority, and [assert] that they are ambiguous, and that the truth cannot be extracted from them by those who are ignorant of tradition.” Irenaeus testifies here that he used the Scriptures to confute the heretics.

Irenaeus testifies, “For [they allege] that the truth was not delivered by means of written documents, but vivâ voce: wherefore also Paul declared, “But we speak wisdom among those that are perfect, but not the wisdom of this world,” referring to 1 Corinthians 2 (KJV):6 Howbeit we speak wisdom among them that are perfect: yet not the wisdom of this world, nor of the princes of this world, that come to nought:

Irenaeus also records, “And this wisdom each one of them alleges to be the fiction of his own inventing, forsooth; so that, according to their idea, the truth properly resides at one time in Valentinus, at another in Marcion, at another in Cerinthus, then afterwards in Basilides, or has even been indifferently in any other opponent who could speak nothing pertaining to salvation.” Irenaeus concludes as he testifies, “For every one of these men, being altogether of a perverse disposition, depraving the system of truth, is not ashamed to preach himself.”

Irenaeus is saying that the heretics, even after presented with the truth in the Scriptures, do not receive it but claim to have heard the truth vivâ voce, that is, by word of mouth, and that each of these heretics, in particular Marcion, Valentinus, Cerinthus. and Basilides, has their own version of the truth, which does not agree with the Scriptures but is really a preaching of the heretic himself, as if he was a savior. These heretics also will agree with anyone else who opposes Irenaeus and his fellow believers.

In paragraph two, Irenaeus records, “But, again, when we refer them to that tradition which originates from the apostles, [and] which is preserved by means of the succession of presbyters in the Churches, they object to tradition, saying that they themselves are wiser not merely than the presbyters, but even than the apostles, because they have discovered the unadulterated truth.” Irenaeus then explains, “For [they maintain] that the apostles intermingled the things of the law with the words of the Saviour; and that not the apostles alone, but even the Lord Himself, spoke as at one time from the Demiurge, at another from the intermediate place, and yet again from the Pleroma, but that they themselves, indubitably, unsulliedly, and purely, have knowledge of the hidden mystery: this is, indeed, to blaspheme their Creator after a most impudent manner! It comes to this, therefore, that these men do now consent neither to Scripture nor to tradition.”

Irenaeus is saying that the tradition originating from the apostles, and “which is preserved by means of the succession of presbyters in the Churches,” is not enough to convert the heretics because the heretics say they have discovered the unadulterated truth. He says that the heretics use the Scriptures but insert their various meanings into the words of Jesus and the apostles in accordance with their beliefs about the Demiurge and the Pleroma. Irenaeus concludes by saying, “It comes to this, therefore, that these men do now consent neither to Scripture nor to tradition.”

So Irenaeus is saying that he believes in both the Scripture and tradition as valid sources of truth, as long as that tradition originated from an apostle, being “preserved by means of the succession of presbyters in the Churches.” But these heretics that Irenaeus was speaking to were claiming that their tradition enabled them to know the truth of the Scriptures. Irenaeus refused to accept this tradition as valid, knowing that it did not originate with the apostles. He is also saying that he believes in a succession of presbyters in the Churches which preserves tradition handed down by the apostles. We will discuss this second belief in Chapter 20: The Teaching of Apostolic Succession. But here we will simply comment on Irenaeus’ belief in this tradition handed down by the apostles.

First of all, Irenaeus does not define what this tradition is, but I believe it was a way of interpreting the Gospels in such a way that agrees with his statement of faith in Book 1: Chapter X, which is also discussed in Chapter 4: Irenaeus’ Statement of Faith. I don’t think that the tradition he speaks of in this chapter was a hidden meaning of some sort in the Scriptures that was passed down and followed by rote by the churches. That is, in Irenaeus’ mind, the tradition handed down by the apostles was not something that disagreed with the Scriptures or was something extra, in addition to, the Scriptures. Rather it was a right way of interpreting them that followed after truth and held fast to relationship with Jesus, the head of the Church.

Whatever Irenaeus believed, it is very important that we today do not break the commands of God in order to keep our tradition, which Jesus defines as the rules of men as He pointed out in Matthew 15 (HCSB):1 Then Pharisees and scribes came from Jerusalem to Jesus and asked, 2 “Why do Your disciples break the tradition of the elders? For they don’t wash their hands when they eat!” 3 He answered them, “And why do you break God’s commandment because of your tradition? 4 For God said: Honor your father and your mother; and, The one who speaks evil of father or mother must be put to death. 5 But you say, ‘Whoever tells his father or mother, “Whatever benefit you might have received from me is a gift committed to the temple”— 6 he does not have to honor his father.’ In this way, you have revoked God’s word because of your tradition. 7 Hypocrites! Isaiah prophesied correctly about you when he said: 8 These people honor Me with their lips, but their heart is far from Me. 9 They worship Me in vain, teaching as doctrines the commands of men.” 10 Summoning the crowd, He told them, “Listen and understand: 11 It’s not what goes into the mouth that defiles a man, but what comes out of the mouth, this defiles a man.” 12 Then the disciples came up and told Him, “Do You know that the Pharisees took offense when they heard this statement?” 13 He replied, “Every plant that My heavenly Father didn’t plant will be uprooted. 14 Leave them alone! They are blind guides. And if the blind guide the blind, both will fall into a pit.” 15 Then Peter replied to Him, “Explain this parable to us.” 16 “Are even you still lacking in understanding?” He asked. 17 “Don’t you realize that whatever goes into the mouth passes into the stomach and is eliminated? 18 But what comes out of the mouth comes from the heart, and this defiles a man. 19 For from the heart come evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, sexual immoralities, thefts, false testimonies, blasphemies. 20 These are the things that defile a man, but eating with unwashed hands does not defile a man.”

We must be very careful that we don’t become blind guides as a result of holding to traditions rather than to the simple truth found in the word of God. We are not to teach for doctrines the rules of men. We are not to make the word of God void by our tradition, as many of the Jews in Jesus' day did. We must obey our Master rather than men.

Irenaeus gives a place to tradition that is second to the Scriptures. It is evident that the Church in Irenaeus' day missed having the apostolic government of the Church in place, and tried to substitute tradition as a support for what they thought they heard the apostles teach them. Suppose we imagine ourselves to have lived during the time of Irenaeus. There were no typewriters, or computers, or cell phones. At first, the churches of the Romans did not have the epistles to the Corinthians, or the Ephesians, or the Galatians. Likewise, the churches at Corinth did not have the epistle to the Romans or the other epistles. Paul wrote to the needs of the specific church he was writing to. The weight of his epistles was only realized later. Copies of the Old Testament would not have been in ready supply to the Gentile churches, let alone the churches in Israel who would have been ostracized from the Jewish synagogues.

At first, each church would have to rely on the words preached to them by an apostle or even just a disciple, depending on how the word of God reached them. As the churches grew, the apostles realized the need for correction or simply further instruction. This is why the epistles were written. None of the apostles knew they were writing the New Testament. Neither did the churches. As time went on, the churches became aware of the other writings of the apostles, and each began to collect them as they were able. As we see the epistles to differ depending on the churches the apostles were writing to, it is evident that different churches had different understandings of what was preached. The words preached had a definite place in the hearts of the churches, but it was only later that they realized that they needed to check their perception of what was preached with the written word. This took time. It is no wonder that the churches only gradually became confident that the canon was closed. They had to be sure that there were no more writings of an apostle to be gathered. Would their perception change if a new writing, a Scripture, were found? Therefore they relied on the words they heard from the beginning which became the tradition of each church. Irenaeus recognized this and in order to get the churches to give up this reliance on tradition, he encouraged all to follow the tradition of the Church of Rome as he says in Book 3: Chapter III, paragraph 2, "For it is a matter of necessity that every Church should agree with this Church, on account of its preeminent authority," We will discuss this in detail in Chapter 20: The Teaching of Apostolic Succession.

It does seem that Irenaeus is trying in his writing to find Scriptural support for all that the Church was teaching in his time. However, it is evident that he at times simply relied on the tradition that was being taught by the Church during his life time as if it were an addition to the Scriptures, but had the weight of supposed apostolic origin. The churches should have recognized that the canon was closed when the last apostle died, but of course there was no announcement by angel or man that this was so. They did not have the instantaneous communication that we have now. In Irenaeus' time, it took time for the canon of Scripture to be recognized as closed. Looking back, we count the historical closure to be official with the Easter letter of Athanasius in 367 A.D. This time period, an interval of 267 years, allowed this supposed tradition of apostolic origin to accumulate in the Church, and to grow stronger and not weaker. We will look at what this tradition was as we read Irenaeus' writings.

Book3: Chapter VII.—Reply to an objection founded on the words of St. Paul (2 Cor. iv. 4). St. Paul occasionally uses words not in their grammatical sequence.

1. As to their affirming that Paul said plainly in the Second [Epistle] to the Corinthians, "In whom the god of this world hath blinded the minds of them that believe not," 3358 2 Cor. iv. 4. and maintaining that there is indeed one god of this world, but another who is beyond all principality, and beginning, and power, we are not to blame if they, who give out that they do themselves know mysteries beyond God, know not how to read Paul. For if any one read the passage thus—according to Paul's custom, as I show elsewhere, and by many examples, that he uses transposition of words—"In whom God," then pointing it off, and making a slight interval, and at the same time read also the rest [of the sentence] in one [clause], “hath blinded the minds of them of this world that believe not,” he shall find out the true [sense]; that it is contained in the expression, “God hath blinded the minds of the unbelievers of this world.” And this is shown by means of the little interval [between the clause]. For Paul does not say, “the God of this world,” as if recognising any other beyond Him; but he confessed God as indeed God. And he says, “the unbelievers of this world,” because they shall not inherit the future age of incorruption. I shall show from Paul himself, how it is that God has blinded the minds of them that believe not, in the course of this work, that we may not just at present distract our mind from the matter in hand, [by wandering] at large.

2. From many other instances also, we may discover that the apostle frequently uses a transposed order in his sentences, due to the rapidity of his discourses, and the impetus of the Spirit which is in him. An example occurs in the [Epistle] to the Galatians, where he expresses himself as follows: “Wherefore then the law of works? 3359 This is according to the reading of the old Italic version, for it is not so read in any of our existing manuscripts of the Greek New Testament. It was added, until the seed should come to whom the promise was made; [and it was] ordained by angels in the hand of a Mediator.” 3360 Gal. iii. 19. For the order of the words runs thus: “Wherefore then the law of works? Ordained by angels in the hand of a Mediator, it was added until the seed should come to whom the promise was made,”— man thus asking the question, and the Spirit making answer. And again, in the Second to the Thessalonians, speaking of Antichrist, he says, “And then shall that wicked be revealed, whom the Lord Jesus Christ 3361 This world is not found in the second quotation of this passage immediately following. shall slay with the Spirit of His mouth, and shall destroy him 3362 This world is not found in the second quotation of this passage immediately following. with the presence of his coming; [even him] whose coming is after the working of Satan, with all power, and signs, and lying wonders.” 3363 2 Thess. ii. 8. Now in these [sentences] the order of the words is this: “And then shall be revealed that wicked, whose coming is after the working of Satan, with all power, and signs, and lying wonders, whom the Lord Jesus shall slay with the Spirit of His mouth, and shall destroy with the presence of His coming.” For he does not mean that the coming of the Lord is after the working of Satan; but the coming of the wicked one, whom we also call Antichrist. If, then, one does not attend to the [proper] reading [of the passage], and if he do not exhibit the intervals of breathing as they occur, there shall be not only incongruities, but also, when reading, he will utter blasphemy, as if the advent of the Lord could take place according to the working of Satan. So therefore, in such passages, the hyperbaton must be exhibited by the reading, and the apostle’s meaning following on, preserved; and thus we do not read in that passage, “the god of this world,” but, “God,” whom we do truly call God; and we hear [it declared of] the unbelieving and the blinded of this world, that they shall not inherit the world of life which is to come.

Summary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus chides the Gnostics as he says, “As to their affirming that Paul said plainly in the Second [Epistle] to the Corinthians, “In whom the god of this world hath blinded the minds of them that believe not,” referring to 2 Corinthians 4:4, “and maintaining that there is indeed one god of this world, but another who is beyond all principality, and beginning, and power, we are not to blame if they, who give out that they do themselves know mysteries beyond God, know not how to read Paul.” Irenaeus then asserts, “For if any one read the passage thus—according to Paul’s custom, as I show elsewhere, and by many examples, that he uses transposition of words—“In whom God,” then pointing it off, and making a slight interval, and at the same time read also the rest [of the sentence] in one [clause], “hath blinded the minds of them of this world that believe not,” he shall find out the true [sense]; that it is contained in the expression, “God hath blinded the minds of the unbelievers of this world.” Irenaeus then interprets what he means as he says, “And this is shown by means of the little interval [between the clause]. For Paul does not say, “the God of this world,” as if recognising any other beyond Him; but he confessed God as indeed God.” Irenaeus continues as he explains, “And he says, “the unbelievers of this world,” because they shall not inherit the future age of incorruption.” Irenaeus then asserts, “I shall show from Paul himself, how it is that God has blinded the minds of them that believe not, in the course of this work, that we may not just at present distract our mind from the matter in hand, [by wandering] at large.”

In paragraph two, Irenaeus asserts, “From many other instances also, we may discover that the apostle frequently uses a transposed order in his sentences, due to the rapidity of his discourses, and the impetus of the Spirit which is in him. An example occurs in the [Epistle] to the Galatians, where he expresses himself as follows: “Wherefore then the law of works? It was added, until the seed should come to whom the promise was made; [and it was] ordained by angels in the hand of a Mediator,” referring to Galatians 3:19. Irenaeus then explains what he means as he says, “For the order of the words runs thus: “Wherefore then the law of works? Ordained by angels in the hand of a Mediator, it was added until the seed should come to whom the promise was made,”— man thus asking the question, and the Spirit making answer.” Irenaeus then gives a second example to illustrate his meaning as he says, “And again, in the Second to the Thessalonians, speaking of Antichrist, he says, “And then shall that wicked be revealed, whom the Lord Jesus Christ shall slay with the Spirit of His mouth, and shall destroy him with the presence of his coming; [even him] whose coming is after the working of Satan, with all power, and signs, and lying wonders,” referring to 2 Thessalonians 2:8. Irenaeus then explains, “Now in these [sentences] the order of the words is this: “And then shall be revealed that wicked, whose coming is after the working of Satan, with all power, and signs, and lying wonders, whom the Lord Jesus shall slay with the Spirit of His mouth, and shall destroy with the presence of His coming.” Irenaeus continues as he exhorts us to rightly divide the word and says, “For he does not mean that the coming of the Lord is after the working of Satan; but the coming of the wicked one, whom we also call Antichrist.” Irenaeus then teaches, “If, then, one does not attend to the [proper] reading [of the passage], and if he do not exhibit the intervals of breathing as they occur, there shall be not only incongruities, but also, when reading, he will utter blasphemy, as if the advent of the Lord could take place according to the working of Satan.” Irenaeus then asserts, “So therefore, in such passages, the hyperbaton must be exhibited by the reading, and the apostle’s meaning following on, preserved; and thus we do not read in that passage, “the god of this world,” but, “God,” whom we do truly call God; and we hear [it declared of] the unbelieving and the blinded of this world, that they shall not inherit the world of life which is to come.”

Commentary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus begins his argument here by chiding the Gnostics as he says, “As to their affirming that Paul said plainly in the Second [Epistle] to the Corinthians, “In whom the god of this world hath blinded the minds of them that believe not,” referring in context to 2 Corinthians 4 (NASB):3 And even if our gospel is veiled, it is veiled to those who are perishing, 4 in whose case the god of this world has blinded the minds of the unbelieving so that they might not see the light of the gospel of the glory of Christ, who is the image of God.

Irenaeus points out their error as he says that they are “maintaining that there is indeed one god of this world, but another who is beyond all principality, and beginning, and power.” Irenaeus points out that “we are not to blame if they, who give out that they do themselves know mysteries beyond God, know not how to read Paul.” However, Irenaeus then misinterprets the passage himself as he asserts, “For if any one read the passage thus—according to Paul’s custom, as I show elsewhere, and by many examples, that he uses transposition of words—“In whom God,” then pointing it off, and making a slight interval, and at the same time read also the rest [of the sentence] in one [clause], “hath blinded the minds of them of this world that believe not,” he shall find out the true [sense]; that it is contained in the expression, “God hath blinded the minds of the unbelievers of this world.” In his zeal to defend the faith against the Gnostic heresy, Irenaeus misinterprets what Paul is saying. Although the Gnostics did misinterpret the verse making God the god of this world, Irenaeus doesn’t place the words in the right order either. Here is the verse as it is in the Greek.

2 Corinthians 4 (1881 Westcott-Hort New Testament):

4 εν οἷς ὁ θεὸς τοῦ αἰῶνος τούτου ἐτυφλώσεν τὰ νοήματα τῶν ἀπιστῶν
In whom the God of world this has blinded the minds of the ones who don’t believe εἰς τὸ μὴ ἀγασαὶ τὸν φωτισμὸν τοῦ εὐαγγελίου τῆς δόξης τοῦ χριστοῦ in order that the not to shine forth the enlightenment of the Gospel of the glory of the Christ ὅς ἐστιν εἰκὼν τοῦ θεοῦ.
who is (the) image of God

Literally this verse reads, “in whom the god of this world has blinded the thoughts of those who are unbelieving so that the enlightenment of the gospel of the glory of Christ should not shine forth, who is the image of God.”

Paul speaks in this epistle of “the god of this world,” and not “them of this world that believe not,” or “the unbelievers of this world,” as Irenaeus says above. That Satan is the god of this world is inferred in the temptation of Jesus as we read in Matthew 4 (NASB):8 Again, the devil took Him to a very high mountain and showed Him all the kingdoms of the world and their glory; 9 and he said to Him, “All these things I will give You, if You fall down and worship me.” 10 Then Jesus said to him, “Go, Satan! For it is written, ‘YOU SHALL WORSHIP THE LORD YOUR GOD, AND SERVE HIM ONLY.’” 11 Then the devil left Him; and behold, angels came and began to minister to Him.

Jesus Himself calls Satan the ruler of this world in John 12 (NASB):31 "Now judgment is upon this world; now the ruler of this world will be cast out.

And in John 16 (NASB):11 and concerning judgment, because the ruler of this world has been judged.

That this world is under the control of Satan is again referred to in Ephesians 2 (NASB):1 And you were dead in your trespasses and sins, 2 in which you formerly walked according to the course of this world, according to the prince of the power of the air, of the spirit that is now working in the sons of disobedience. 3 Among them we too all formerly lived in the lusts of our flesh, indulging the desires of the flesh and of the mind, and were by nature children of wrath, even as the rest. 4 But God, being rich in mercy, because of His great love with which He loved us, 5 even when we were dead in our transgressions, made us alive together with Christ (by grace you have been saved),...

Notice Paul says that we “walked according to the course of this world, according to the prince of the power of the air, of the spirit that is now working in the sons of disobedience” which included all of us at some time in our lives.

Again, the apostle John states in 1 John 5 (NASB):19 We know that we are of God, and that the whole world lies in the power of the evil one.

Again in Revelation 12 (NASB):9 And the great dragon was thrown down, the serpent of old who is called the devil and Satan, who deceives the whole world; he was thrown down to the earth, and his angels were thrown down with him.

Satan is the god of this world now, but there will be a time when the kingdom of the world will become the kingdom of our Lord and of His Christ as we read in Revelation 11 (NASB):14 The second woe is past; behold, the third woe is coming quickly. 15 Then the seventh angel sounded; and there were loud voices in heaven, saying, “The kingdom of the world has become the kingdom of our Lord and of His Christ; and He will reign forever and ever.”

This is why Paul encourages us to put on the full armor of God as he says in Ephesians 6 (NASB):10 Finally, be strong in the Lord and in the strength of His might. 11 Put on the full armor of God, so that you will be able to stand firm against the schemes of the devil. 12 For our struggle is not against flesh and blood, but against the rulers, against the powers, against the world forces of this darkness, against the spiritual forces of wickedness in the heavenly places.

Irenaeus then continues to misinterpret the verse as he says, “And this is shown by means of the little interval [between the clause]. For Paul does not say, “the God of this world,” as if recognising any other beyond Him; but he confessed God as indeed God.” It is true that Paul did not recognize any other God as God as he says in 1 Corinthians 8 (NASB):5 For even if there are so-called gods whether in heaven or on earth, as indeed there are many gods and many lords, 6 yet for us there is but one God, the Father, from whom are all things and we exist for Him; and one Lord, Jesus Christ, by whom are all things, and we exist through Him.

Irenaeus continues as he explains, “And he says, “the unbelievers of this world,” because they shall not inherit the future age of incorruption.” Irenaeus then asserts, “I shall show from Paul himself, how it is that God has blinded the minds of them that believe not, in the course of this work, that we may not just at present distract our mind from the matter in hand, [by wandering] at large.” Again, this is a misinterpretation of the verse in 2 Corinthians 4:4. Jesus Himself explains how the evil one snatches the word away in Matthew 13 (NASB):18 “Hear then the parable of the sower. 19 When anyone hears the word of the kingdom and does not understand it, the evil one comes and snatches away what has been sown in his heart. This is the one on whom seed was sown beside the road.

In paragraph two, Irenaeus asserts, “From many other instances also, we may discover that the apostle frequently uses a transposed order in his sentences, due to the rapidity of his discourses, and the impetus of the Spirit which is in him. An example occurs in the [Epistle] to the Galatians, where he expresses himself as follows: “Wherefore then the law of works? It was added, until the seed should come to whom the promise was made; [and it was] ordained by angels in the hand of a Mediator,” referring to Galatians 3 (NASB):19 Why the Law then? It was added because of transgressions, having been ordained through angels by the agency of a mediator, until the seed would come to whom the promise had been made.

Notice that the word “work” is not present in Galatians 3:19 in the NASB. Irenaeus then interprets as he says, “For the order of the words runs thus: “Wherefore then the law of works? Ordained by angels in the hand of a Mediator, it was added until the seed should come to whom the promise was made,”— man thus asking the question, and the Spirit making answer.” The actual verse in the Greek reads as follows:

Galatians 4 (Morphological Greek New Testament (mGNT)):

4 τί οὖν ὁ νόμος τῶν παραβάσεων χάριν προσετέθη ἄχρις οὗ ἔλθῃ why therefore the law the transgressions by reason of it was added until would come τὸ σπέρμα ᾧ ἐπήγγελλται διαταγεῖς δι’ ἀγγέλων ἐν χειρὶ μεσίτου the seed to whom it has been promised being ordained through angels by (the) hand of a mediator

Literally this verse reads, “Why therefore the law? It was added by reason of the transgressions until the seed would come to whom it has been promised, being ordained through angels by the hand of a mediator.

Irenaeus gives the correct translation and meaning of the verse in this example, but he adds the word “works” to the verse which is not found in the Greek text. He then gives a second example to illustrate his meaning as he says, “And again, in the Second to the Thessalonians, speaking of Antichrist, he says, “And then shall that wicked be revealed, whom the Lord Jesus Christ shall slay with the Spirit of His mouth, and shall destroy him with the presence of his coming; [even him] whose coming is after the working of Satan, with all power, and signs, and lying wonders,” referring in context to 2 Thessalonians 2 (NASB):8 Then that lawless one will be revealed whom the Lord will slay with the breath of His mouth and bring to an end by the appearance of His coming; 9 that is, the one whose coming is in accord with the activity of Satan, with all power and signs and false wonders, 10 and with all the deception of wickedness for those who perish, because they did not receive the love of the truth so as to be saved. 11 For this reason God will send upon them a deluding influence so that they will believe what is false, 12 in order that they all may be judged who did not believe the truth, but took pleasure in wickedness.

Irenaeus then interprets as he explains, “Now in these [sentences] the order of the words is this: “And then shall be revealed that wicked, whose coming is after the working of Satan, with all power, and signs, and lying wonders, whom the Lord Jesus shall slay with the Spirit of His mouth, and shall destroy with the presence of His coming.” Irenaeus continues as he encourages us to rightly divide the word and says, “For he does not mean that the coming of the Lord is after the working of Satan; but the coming of the wicked one, whom we also call Antichrist.” Irenaeus then teaches, “If, then, one does not attend to the [proper] reading [of the passage], and if he do not exhibit the intervals of breathing as they occur, there shall be not only incongruities, but also, when reading, he will utter blasphemy, as if the advent of the Lord could take place according to the working of Satan.” Irenaeus then asserts, “So therefore, in such passages, the hyperbaton must be exhibited by the reading, and the apostle’s meaning following on, preserved; and thus we do not read in that passage, “the god of this world,” but, “God,” whom we do truly call God; and we hear [it declared of] the unbelieving and the blinded of this world, that they shall not inherit the world of life which is to come.”

Wikipedia has the following for the word, hyperbaton:

Hyperbaton /hai'pərbəton/ is a figure of speech that consists of an alteration of the logical order of the words in a sentence, or in which normally associated words are separated. The term may also be used more generally for all different figures of speech which transpose natural word order in sentences.

So did Irenaeus rely on the scriptures here? For the most part, yes, but in part, though his intentions were honorable, he exceeded what was written. His purpose was to refute error which is good. But saying that the word order of Paul may be changed to suit our goals is not using the word of God rightly. The fact is that he switched the order of two words, “this world,” in his better rendering of the verse in 2 Corinthians 4:4, and placed them next to unbelievers when he says “the unbelievers of this world.” As you can see from the Greek above, this is taking liberty with the text that is not valid, or should I say, “unlawful.” But he is correct in his statement that Paul did not recognize any other God but the one and only God. And he interprets Galatians 3:19 and 2 Thessalonians 2:8 correctly.

Fragment XLVI.

“The 4892 From the Catena on St. Paul’s Epistles to the Corinthians, edited by Dr. Cramer, and reprinted by Stieren god of the world;” 4893 2 Cor. iv. 4 that is, Satan, who was designated God to those who believe not.

Summary: In this fragment Irenaeus teaches us that there is a god of those who believe not, that is, Satan, the god of the world.

Commentary: Irenaeus is still defending the faith, and does not mean that there are two different gods, one in the Old Testament, and one in the New. But he corrects himself here from what he said previously in Book 3: Chapter VII, of the previous section. Irenaeus testifies here that the reference to God in 2 Corinthians 4: 4 is not the one and only true God, but the god of this world, Satan, as in 2 Corinthians 4 (NASB):3 And even if our gospel is veiled, it is veiled to those who are perishing, 4 in whose case the god of this world has blinded the minds of the unbelieving so that they might not see the light of the gospel of the glory of Christ, who is the image of God.

He does not however reverse his previous statements that the one true God blinds those who believe not. Yet the statement in this fragment is a testimony to Irenaeus’ apparent willingness to be corrected by the Lord. This shows growth in his teaching. Bravo Irenaeus.

Book 3: Chapter X.—Proofs of the foregoing, drawn from the Gospels of Mark and Luke.

5. Wherefore also Mark, the interpreter and follower of Peter, does thus commence his Gospel narrative: “The beginning of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God; as it is written in the prophets, Behold, I send My messenger before Thy face, which shall prepare Thy way. 3424 The Greek of this passage in St. Mark i. 2 reads, τὰς τρίβους αὐτοῦ, i.e., His paths, which varies from the Hebrew original, to which the text of Irenæus seems to revert, unless indeed his copy of the Gospels contained the reading of the Codex Bezae. [See book iii. cap. xii. 3, 14, below; also, xiv. 2 and xxiii. 3. On this Codex, see Burgon, Revision Revised, p. 12, etc., and references.] The voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make the paths straight before our God.” Plainly does the commencement of the Gospel quote the words of the holy prophets, and point out Him at once, whom they confessed as God and Lord; Him, the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who had also made promise to Him, that He would send His messenger before His face, who was John, crying in the wilderness, in “the spirit and power of Elias,” 3425 Luke i. 17. “Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make straight paths before our God.” For the prophets did not announce one and another God, but one and the same; under various aspects, however, and many titles. For varied and rich in attribute is the Father, as I have already shown in the book preceding 3426 See ii. 35, 3. this; and I shall show [the same truth] from the prophets themselves in the further course of this work. Also, towards the conclusion of his Gospel, Mark says: “So then, after the Lord Jesus had spoken to them, He was received up into heaven, and sitteth on the right hand of God;” 3427 Mark xvi. 19. confirming what had been spoken by the prophet: “The Lord said to my Lord, Sit Thou on My right hand, until I make Thy foes Thy footstool.” 3428 Ps. cx. 1. Thus God and the Father are truly one and the same; He who was announced by the prophets, and handed down by the true Gospel; whom we Christians worship and love with the whole heart, as the Maker of heaven and earth, and of all things therein.

Summary: In paragraph five, Irenaeus testifies, “Wherefore also Mark, the interpreter and follower of Peter, does thus commence his Gospel narrative: “The beginning of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God; as it is written in the prophets, Behold, I send My messenger before Thy face, which shall prepare Thy way. The voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make the paths straight before our God,” referring to Mark 1:1-3. Irenaeus then points out, “Plainly does the commencement of the Gospel quote the words of the holy prophets, and point out Him at once, whom they confessed as God and Lord; Him, the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who had also made promise to Him, that He would send His messenger before His face, who was John, crying in the wilderness, in “the spirit and power of Elias,” referring to Luke 1:17, “Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make straight paths before our God,” again referring to Mark 1:3. Irenaeus explains the course he has taken in his writing as he says, “For the prophets did not announce one and another God, but one and the same; under various aspects, however, and many titles. For varied and rich in attribute is the Father, as I have already shown in the book preceding this; and I shall show [the same truth] from the prophets themselves in the further course of this work.” Again, Irenaeus testifies, “Also, towards the conclusion of his Gospel, Mark says: “So then, after the Lord Jesus had spoken to them, He was received up into heaven, and sitteth on the right hand of God,” referring to Mark 16:19, “confirming what had been spoken by the prophet: “The Lord said to my Lord, Sit Thou on My right hand, until I make Thy foes Thy footstool,” referring to Psalm 110:1. Irenaeus concludes as he affirms, “Thus God and the Father are truly one and the same; He who was announced by the prophets, and handed down by the true Gospel; whom we Christians worship and love with the whole heart, as the Maker of heaven and earth, and of all things therein.”

Commentary: In paragraph five, Irenaeus testifies, “Wherefore also Mark, the interpreter and follower of Peter, does thus commence his Gospel narrative: “The beginning of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God; as it is written in the prophets, Behold, I send My messenger before Thy face, which shall prepare Thy way. The voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make the paths straight before our God,” referring to Mark 1 (NASB):1 The beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God. 2 As it is written in Isaiah the prophet: “BEHOLD, I SEND MY MESSENGER AHEAD OF YOU, WHO WILL PREPARE YOUR WAY; 3 THE VOICE OF ONE CRYING IN THE WILDERNESS, ‘MAKE READY THE WAY OF THE LORD, MAKE HIS PATHS STRAIGHT.’”

Irenaeus clearly testifies that the Gospel of Mark is a record of the fulfillment of what was written in the prophets. Irenaeus then points out, “Plainly does the commencement of the Gospel quote the words of the holy prophets, and point out Him at once, whom they confessed as God and Lord; Him, the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who had also made promise to Him, that He would send His messenger before His face, who was John, crying in the wilderness, in “the spirit and power of Elias,” referring to Luke 1 (NASB):17 “It is he who will go as a forerunner before Him in the spirit and power of Elijah, TO TURN THE HEARTS OF THE FATHERS BACK TO THE CHILDREN, and the disobedient to the attitude of the righteous, so as to make ready a people prepared for the Lord.”

Irenaeus continues as he says, “Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make straight paths before our God,” again referring to Mark 1:3. Irenaeus then explains the course he has taken in his writing in defense of the faith as he says, “For the prophets did not announce one and another God, but one and the same; under various aspects, however, and many titles. For varied and rich in attribute is the Father, as I have already shown in the book preceding this; and I shall show [the same truth] from the prophets themselves in the further course of this work.” Again, Irenaeus testifies, “Also, towards the conclusion of his Gospel, Mark says: “So then, after the Lord Jesus had spoken to them, He was received up into heaven, and sitteth on the right hand of God,” referring to Mark 16 (NASB):19 So then, when the Lord Jesus had spoken to them, He was received up into heaven and sat down at the right hand of God.

Irenaeus continues as he points out that Mark was “confirming what had been spoken by the prophet: “The Lord said to my Lord, Sit Thou on My right hand, until I make Thy foes Thy footstool,” referring to Psalm 110 (NASB):1 The LORD says to my Lord: “Sit at My right hand Until I make Your enemies a footstool for Your feet.”

Jesus Himself confirms the same in Matthew 22 (HCSB):41 While the Pharisees were together, Jesus questioned them, 42 “What do you think about the Messiah? Whose Son is He?” “David’s,” they told Him. 43 He asked them, “How is it then that David, inspired by the Spirit, calls Him ‘Lord’: 44 The Lord declared to my Lord, ‘Sit at My right hand until I put Your enemies under Your feet’? 45 “If David calls Him ‘Lord,’ how then can the Messiah be his Son?” 46 No one was able to answer Him at all, and from that day no one dared to question Him anymore.

Irenaeus concludes as he affirms, “Thus God and the Father are truly one and the same; He who was announced by the prophets, and handed down by the true Gospel; whom we Christians worship and love with the whole heart, as the Maker of heaven and earth, and of all things therein.”

It is also worth noting that we have a very early reference, by Irenaeus, to Mark 16:19 above. Irenaeus wrote during the rule of Eleutherius who was bishop of Rome from about 177 to 190 A.D., so this is a very early testimony to the ending of Mark’s Gospel, and the verses in Mark 16:9-20.

Book 4: Chapter XIX.—Earthly things may be the type of heavenly, but the latter cannot be the types of others still superior and unknown; nor can we, without absolute madness, maintain that God is known to us only as the type of a still unknown and superior being.

3. But if man comprehends not the fulness and the greatness of His hand, how shall any one be able to understand or know in his heart so great a God? Yet, as if they had now measured and thoroughly investigated Him, and explored Him on every side, 4062 The Latin is, “et universum eum decurrerint.” Harvey imagines that this last word corresponds to κατατρέχωσι but it is difficult to fit such a meaning into the context. they feign that beyond Him there exists another Pleroma of Æons, and another Father; certainly not looking up to celestial things, but truly descending into a profound abyss (Bythus) of madness; maintaining that their Father extends only to the border of those things which are beyond the Pleroma, but that, on the other hand, the Demiurge does not reach so far as the Pleroma; and thus they represent neither of them as being perfect and comprehending all things. For the former will be defective in regard to the whole world formed outside of the Pleroma, and the latter in respect of that [ideal] world which was formed within the Pleroma; and [therefore] neither of these can be the God of all. But that no one can fully declare the goodness of God from the things made by Him, is a point evident to all. And that His greatness is not defective, but contains all things, and extends even to us, and is with us, every one will confess who entertains worthy conceptions of God.

Summary: In paragraph three, Irenaeus argues, “But if man comprehends not the fulness and the greatness of His hand, how shall any one be able to understand or know in his heart so great a God?” Irenaeus continues as he testifies against the Gnostics saying, “Yet, as if they had now measured and thoroughly investigated Him, and explored Him on every side, they feign that beyond Him there exists another Pleroma of Æons, and another Father; certainly not looking up to celestial things, but truly descending into a profound abyss (Bythus) of madness; maintaining that their Father extends only to the border of those things which are beyond the Pleroma, but that, on the other hand, the Demiurge does not reach so far as the Pleroma; and thus they represent neither of them as being perfect and comprehending all things.” Irenaeus then points out, “For the former will be defective in regard to the whole world formed outside of the Pleroma, and the latter in respect of that [ideal] world which was formed within the Pleroma; and [therefore] neither of these can be the God of all.” Irenaeus then affirms, “But that no one can fully declare the goodness of God from the things made by Him, is a point evident to all. And that His greatness is not defective, but contains all things, and extends even to us, and is with us, every one will confess who entertains worthy conceptions of God.”

Commentary: Here in paragraph three, Irenaeus argues “But if man comprehends not the fulness and the greatness of His hand, how shall any one be able to understand or know in his heart so great a God?” Irenaeus continues as he testifies against the Gnostics saying, “Yet, as if they had now measured and thoroughly investigated Him, and explored Him on every side, they feign that beyond Him there exists another Pleroma of Æons, and another Father; certainly not looking up to celestial things, but truly descending into a profound abyss (Bythus) of madness; maintaining that their Father extends only to the border of those things which are beyond the Pleroma, but that, on the other hand, the Demiurge does not reach so far as the Pleroma; and thus they represent neither of them as being perfect and comprehending all things.” Irenaeus is showing us what the Gnostic system looks like:

- Beyond Him, that is, God, there exists another Pleroma of Aeons, and another Father.
- They, the Gnostics are “certainly not looking up to celestial things, but truly descending into a profound abyss (Bythus) of madness.” Bythus was the Gnostic unknown god whom they believed created the Demiurge, and was the ultimate creator of all things.
- The Gnostics maintain that their Father extends “only to the border of those things which are beyond the Pleroma.”
- The Demiurge, who the Gnostics claim is God of the Old Testament, “does not reach so far as the Pleroma.”
- The Gnostics thus “represent neither of them as being perfect and comprehending all things.”

Irenaeus points out that, in such a schema, neither of these Fathers is “perfect and comprehends all things,” and therefore, “neither of these can be the God of all.” Irenaeus says that a worthy conception of God is one that considers the goodness of God as not fully known, and that “His greatness is not defective, but contains all things, and extends even to us, and is with us.”

Now Irenaeus here tells us just some of the points of Gnostic belief. Though Gnostic beliefs are very difficult to pin down to one unified teaching, there is some agreement between them about these basic tenets:

- Matter is evil and spirit is good.
- The true God, Bythus, relating to the abyss, is unknowable.
- The Demiurge, creator of the earth and whom they believe to be the God of the Old Testament and of the Jews, is inferior to Bythus.
- The Pleroma is where the aeons dwell.
- The aeons are beings born of Bythus and a consort.

Irenaeus then affirms, “But that no one can fully declare the goodness of God from the things made by Him, is a point evident to all. And that His greatness is not defective, but contains all things, and extends even to us, and is with us, every one will confess who entertains worthy conceptions of God.”

It is true that God cannot be measured. However, He can still be known by him “who entertains worthy conceptions of God.” This section is preparatory for the understanding of the next in which we will see Irenaeus’ great love for the word of God. See Chapter 11: The Teaching of Marcion and the Gnostics, and Chapter 34: Gnosticism for more on the Gnostic belief system.

Book 4: Chapter XX.—That one God formed all things in the world, by means of the Word and the Holy Spirit: and that although He is to us in this life invisible and incomprehensible, nevertheless He is not unknown; inasmuch as His works do declare Him, and His Word has shown that in many modes He may be seen and known.

1. As regards His greatness, therefore, it is not possible to know God, for it is impossible that the Father can be measured; but as regards His love (for this it is which leads us to God by His Word), when we obey Him, we do always learn that there is so great a God, and that it is He who by Himself has established, and selected, and adorned, and contains all things; and among the all things, both ourselves and this our world. We also then were made, along with those things which are contained by Him. And this is He of whom the Scripture says, “And God formed man, taking clay of the earth, and breathed into his face the breath of life.” 4063 Gen. ii. 7. It was not angels, therefore, who made us, nor who formed us, neither had angels power to make an image of God, nor any one else, except the Word of the Lord, nor any Power remotely distant from the Father of all things. For God did not stand in need of these [beings], in order to the accomplishing of what He had Himself determined with Himself beforehand should be done, as if He did not possess His own hands. For with Him were always present the Word and Wisdom, the Son and the Spirit, by whom and in whom, freely and spontaneously, He made all things, to whom also He speaks, saying, “Let Us make man after Our image and likeness;” 4064 Gen. i. 26. He taking from Himself the substance of the creatures [formed], and the pattern of things made, and the type of all the adornments in the world.

2. Truly, then, the Scripture declared, which says, “First 4065 This quotation is taken from the Shepherd of Hermas, book ii. sim. 1. of all believe that there is one God, who has established all things, and completed them, and having caused that from what had no being, all things should come into existence:” He who contains all things, and is Himself contained by no one. Rightly also has Malachi said among the prophets: “Is it not one God who hath established us? Have we not all one Father?” 4066 Mal. ii. 10. In accordance with this, too, does the apostle say, “There is one God, the Father, who is above all, and in us all.” 4067 Eph. iv. 6. Likewise does the Lord also say: “All things are delivered to Me by My Father;” 4068 Matt. xi. 27. manifestly by Him who made all things; for He did not deliver to Him the things of another, but His own. But in all things [it is implied that] nothing has been kept back [from Him], and for this reason the same person is the Judge of the living and the dead; “having the key of David: He shall open, and no man shall shut: He shall shut, and no man shall open.” 4069 Rev. iii. 7. For no one was able, either in heaven or in earth, or under the earth, to open the book of the Father, or to behold Him, with the exception of the Lamb who was slain, and who redeemed us with His own blood, receiving power over all things from the same God who made all things by the Word, and adorned them by [His] Wisdom, when “the Word was made flesh;” that even as the Word of God had the sovereignty in the heavens, so also might He have the sovereignty in earth, inasmuch as [He was] a righteous man, “who did no sin, neither was there found guile in His mouth;” 4070 1 Pet. ii. 23. and that He might have the preeminence over those things which are under the earth, He Himself being made “the first-begotten of the dead;” 4071 Col. i. 18. and that all things, as I have already said, might behold their King; and that the paternal light might meet with and rest upon the flesh of our Lord, and come to us from His resplendent flesh, and that thus man might attain to immortality, having been invested with the paternal light.

3. I have also largely demonstrated, that the Word, namely the Son, was always with the Father; and that Wisdom also, which is the Spirit, was present with Him, anterior to all creation, He declares by Solomon: “God by Wisdom founded the earth, and by understanding hath He established the heaven. By His knowledge the depths burst forth, and the clouds dropped down the dew.” 4072 Prov. iii. 19, 20. And again: “The Lord created me the beginning of His ways in His work: He set me up from everlasting, in the beginning, before He made the earth, before He established the depths, and before the fountains of waters gushed forth; before the mountains were made strong, and before all the hills, He brought me forth.” 4073 Prov. viii. 22–25. [This is one of the favourite Messianic quotations of the Fathers, and is considered as the base of the first chapter of St. John’s Gospel.] And again: “When He prepared the heaven, I was with Him, and when He established the fountains of the deep; when He made the foundations of the earth strong, I was with Him preparing [them]. I was He in whom He rejoiced, and throughout all time I was daily glad before His face, when He rejoiced at the completion of the world, and was delighted in the sons of men.” 4074 Prov. viii. 27–31.

4. There is therefore one God, who by the Word and Wisdom created and arranged all things; but this is the Creator (Demiurge) who has granted this world to the human race, and who, as regards His greatness, is indeed unknown to all who have been made by Him (for no man has searched out His height, either among the ancients who have gone to their rest, or any of those who are now alive); but as regards His love, He is always known through Him by whose means He ordained all things. Now this is His Word, our Lord Jesus Christ, who in the last times was made a man among men, that He might join the end to the beginning, that is, man to God. Wherefore the prophets, receiving the prophetic gift from the same Word, announced His advent according to the flesh, by which the blending and communion of God and man took place according to the good pleasure of the Father, the Word of God foretelling from the beginning that God should be seen by men, and hold converse with them upon earth, should confer with them, and should be present with His own creation, saving it, and becoming capable of being perceived by it, and freeing us from the hands of all that hate us, that is, from every spirit of wickedness; and causing us to serve Him in holiness and righteousness all our days, 4075 Luke i. 71, 75 in order that man, having embraced the Spirit of God, might pass into the glory of the Father.

5. These things did the prophets set forth in a prophetic manner; but they did not, as some allege, [proclaim] that He who was seen by the prophets was a different [God], the Father of all being invisible. Yet this is what those [heretics] declare, who are altogether ignorant of the nature of prophecy. For prophecy is a prediction of things future, that is, a setting forth beforehand of those things which shall be afterwards. The prophets, then, indicated beforehand that God should be seen by men; as the Lord also says, “Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God.” 4076 Matt. v. 8. But in respect to His greatness, and His wonderful glory, “no man shall see God and live,”

4077 Ex. xxxiii. 20. for the Father is incomprehensible; but in regard to His love, and kindness, and as to His infinite power, even this He grants to those who love Him, that is, to see God, which thing the prophets did also predict. “For those things that are impossible with men, are possible with God.”

4078 Luke xviii. 27. For man does not see God by his own powers; but when He pleases He is seen by men, by whom He wills, and when He wills, and as He wills. For God is powerful in all things, having been seen at that time indeed, prophetically through the Spirit, and seen, too, adoptively through the Son; and He shall also be seen paternally in the kingdom of heaven, the Spirit truly preparing man in the Son 4079 Some read “in filium” instead of “in filio,” as above. of God, and the Son leading him to the Father, while the Father, too, confers [upon him] incorruption for eternal life, which comes to every one from the fact of his seeing God. For as those who see the light are within the light, and partake of its brilliancy; even so, those who see God are in God, and receive of His splendour. But [His] splendour vivifies them; those, therefore, who see God, do receive life. And for this reason, He, [although] beyond comprehension, and boundless and invisible, rendered Himself visible, and comprehensible, and within the capacity of those who believe, that He might vivify those who receive and behold Him through faith. 4080 A part of the original Greek text is preserved here, and has been followed, as it makes the better sense. For as His greatness is past finding out, so also His goodness is beyond expression; by which having been seen, He bestows life upon those who see Him. It is not possible to live apart from life, and the means of life is found in fellowship with God; but fellowship with God is to know God, and to enjoy His goodness.

6. Men therefore shall see God, that they may live, being made immortal by that sight, and attaining even unto God; which, as I have already said, was declared figuratively by the prophets, that God should be seen by men who bear His Spirit [in them], and do always wait patiently for His coming. As also Moses says in Deuteronomy, “We shall see in that day that God will talk to man, and he shall live.” 4081 Deut. v. 24. For certain of these men used to see the prophetic Spirit and His active influences poured forth for all kinds of gifts; others, again, [beheld] the advent of the Lord, and that dispensation which obtained from the beginning, by which He accomplished the will of the Father with regard to things both celestial and terrestrial; and others [beheld] paternal glories adapted to the times, and to those who saw and who heard them then, and to all who were subsequently to hear them. Thus, therefore, was God revealed; for God the Father is shown forth through all these [operations], the Spirit indeed working, and the Son ministering, while the Father was approving, and man’s salvation being accomplished. As He also declares through Hosea the prophet: “I,” He says, “have multiplied visions, and have used similitudes by the ministry (in manibus) of the prophets.” 4082 Hos. xii. 10. But the apostle expounded this very passage, when he said, “Now there are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit; and there are differences of ministrations, but the same Lord; and there are diversities of operations, but it is the same God which worketh all in all. But the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal.” 4083 1 Cor. xii. 4–7 But as He who worketh all things in all is God, [as to the points] of what nature and how great He is, [God] is invisible and indescribable to all things which have been made by Him, but He is by no means unknown: for all things learn through His Word that there is one God the Father, who contains all things, and who grants existence to all, as is written in the Gospel: “No man hath seen God at any time, except the only-begotten Son, who is in the bosom of the Father; He has declared [Him].” 4084 John i. 18.

Summary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus affirms, “As regards His greatness, therefore, it is not possible to know God, for it is impossible that the Father can be measured; but as regards His love (for this it is which leads us to God by His Word), when we obey Him, we do always learn that there is so great a God, and that it is He who by Himself has established, and selected, and adorned, and contains all things; and among the all things, both ourselves and this our world.” Irenaeus continues as he again testifies, “We also then were made, along with those things which are contained by Him. And this is He of whom the Scripture says, “And God formed man, taking clay of the earth, and breathed into his face the breath of life,” referring to Genesis 2:7. Irenaeus again affirms, “It was not angels, therefore, who made us, nor who formed us, neither had angels power to make an image of God, nor any one else, except the Word of the Lord, nor any Power remotely distant from the Father of all things.” Irenaeus contends for the faith as he argues, “For God did not stand in need of these [beings], in order to the accomplishing of what He had Himself determined with Himself beforehand should be done, as if He did not possess His own hands. For with Him were always present the Word and Wisdom, the Son and the Spirit, by whom and in whom, freely and spontaneously, He made all things, to whom also He speaks, saying, “Let Us make man after Our image and likeness,” referring to Genesis 1:26. Irenaeus explains, “He taking from Himself the substance of the creatures [formed], and the pattern of things made, and the type of all the adornments in the world.”

In paragraph two, Irenaeus asserts, “Truly, then, the Scripture declared, which says, “First of all believe that there is one God, who has established all things, and completed them, and having caused that from what had no being, all things should come into existence,” referring to the Shepherd of Hermas, book ii. sim. 1. Irenaeus then testifies, “He who contains all things, and is Himself contained by no one. Rightly also has Malachi said among the prophets: “Is it not one God who hath established us? Have we not all one Father?” He is referring to Malachi 2:10. Irenaeus continues to testify as he says, “In accordance with this, too, does the apostle say, “There is one God, the Father, who is above all, and in us all,” referring to Ephesians 4:6. Irenaeus continues as he then testifies, “Likewise does the Lord also say: “All things are delivered to Me by My Father,” referring to Matthew 11:27, “manifestly by Him who made all things; for He did not deliver to Him the things of another, but His own.” Irenaeus then affirms, “But in all things [it is implied that] nothing has been kept back [from Him], and for this reason the same person is the Judge of the living and the dead,” referring to Acts 10:42, and “having the key of David: He shall open, and no man shall shut: He shall shut, and no man shall open,” referring to Revelation 3:7. Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “For no one was able, either in heaven or in earth, or under the earth, to open the book of the Father, or to behold Him, with the exception of the Lamb who was slain, and who redeemed us with His own blood,” referring to Revelation 5:1-9, “receiving power over all things from the same God who made all things by the Word,” referring to John 1:1-2, “and adorned them by [His] Wisdom, when “the Word was made flesh,” referring to John 1:14, “that even as the Word of God had the sovereignty in the heavens, so also might He have the sovereignty in earth, inasmuch as [He was] a righteous man, “who did no sin, neither was there found guile in His mouth,” referring to 1 Peter 2:21-22, “and that He might have the preeminence over those things which are under the earth, He Himself being made “the first-begotten of the dead,” referring to Colossians 1:18, ”and that all things, as I have already said, might behold their King;” Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “and that the paternal light might meet with and rest upon the flesh of our Lord, and come to us from His resplendent flesh, and that thus man might attain to immortality, having been invested with the paternal light,” referring most probably in context to John 1:1-14.

In paragraph three, Irenaeus testifies, “I have also largely demonstrated, that the Word, namely the Son, was always with the Father,” referring to John 1:1, “and that Wisdom also, which is the Spirit, was present with Him, anterior to all creation, He declares by Solomon: “God by Wisdom founded the earth, and by understanding hath He established the heaven. By His knowledge the depths burst forth, and the clouds dropped down the dew,” referring to Proverbs 3:19-20. Irenaeus continues as he affirms, “And again: “The Lord created me the beginning of His ways in His work: He set me up from everlasting, in the beginning, before He made the earth, before He established the depths, and before the fountains of waters gushed forth; before the mountains were made strong, and before all the hills, He brought me forth,” referring to Proverbs 8:22-25. Irenaeus then continues as he affirms, “And again: “When He prepared the heaven, I was with Him, and when He established the fountains of the deep; when He made the foundations of the earth strong, I was with Him preparing [them]. I was He in whom He rejoiced, and throughout all time I was daily glad before His face, when He rejoiced at the completion of the world, and was delighted in the sons of men,” referring to Proverbs 8:27-31.

In paragraph four, Irenaeus continues to testify that “There is therefore one God, who by the Word and Wisdom created and arranged all things; but this is the Creator (Demiurge) who has granted this world to the human race, and who, as regards His greatness, is indeed unknown to all who have been made by Him (for no man has searched out His height, either among the ancients who have gone to their rest, or any of those who are now alive); but as regards His love, He is always known through Him by whose means He ordained all things.” Irenaeus continues his testimony as he says, “Now this is His Word, our Lord Jesus Christ, who in the last times was made a man among men, that He might join the end to the beginning, that is, man to God,” referring to John 1:14. Irenaeus then affirms, “Wherefore the prophets, receiving the prophetic gift from the same Word, announced His advent according to the flesh, by which the blending and communion of God and man took place according to the good pleasure of the Father, the Word of God foretelling from the beginning that God should be seen by men, and hold converse with them upon earth, should confer with them, and should be present with His own creation, saving it, and becoming capable of being perceived by it, and freeing us from the hands of all that hate us, that is, from every spirit of wickedness; and causing us to serve Him in holiness and righteousness all our days,” referring to Luke 1:71,74-75, “in order that man, having embraced the Spirit of God, might pass into the glory of the Father.”

In paragraph five, Irenaeus continues as he earnestly defends the faith saying, “These things did the prophets set forth in a prophetic manner; but they did not, as some allege, [proclaim] that He who was seen by the prophets was a different [God], the Father of all being invisible.” Irenaeus then testifies against the Gnostics as he says, “Yet this is what those [heretics] declare, who are altogether ignorant of the nature of prophecy.” Irenaeus continues as he explains, “For prophecy is a prediction of things future, that is, a setting forth beforehand of those things which shall be afterwards. The prophets, then, indicated beforehand that God should be seen by men; as the Lord also says, “Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God,” referring to Matthew 5:8. Irenaeus then affirms, “But in respect to His greatness, and His wonderful glory, “no man shall see God and live,” referring to Exodus 33:20, “for the Father is incomprehensible; but in regard to His love, and kindness, and as to His infinite power, even this He grants to those who love Him, that is, to see God, which thing the prophets did also predict. “For those things that are impossible with men, are possible with God,” referring to Luke 18:27. Irenaeus continues as he says, “For man does not see God by his own powers; but when He pleases He is seen by men, by whom He wills, and when He wills, and as He wills. For God is powerful in all things, having been seen at that time indeed, prophetically through the Spirit, and seen, too, adoptively through the Son; and He shall also be seen paternally in the kingdom of heaven, the Spirit truly preparing man in the Son of God, and the Son leading him to the Father, while the Father, too, confers [upon him] incorruption for eternal life, which comes to every one from the fact of his seeing God.” Irenaeus continues as he reasons, “For as those who see the light are within the light, and partake of its brilliancy; even so, those who see God are in God, and receive of His splendour. But [His] splendour vivifies them; those, therefore, who see God, do receive life.” Irenaeus then explains, “And for this reason, He, [although] beyond comprehension, and boundless and invisible, rendered Himself visible, and comprehensible, and within the capacity of those who believe, that He might vivify those who receive and behold Him through faith,” referring most likely to John 6:40. Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “For as His greatness is past finding out, so also His goodness is beyond expression; by which having been seen, He bestows life upon those who see Him. It is not possible to live apart from life, and the means of life is found in fellowship with God; but fellowship with God is to know God, and to enjoy His goodness.”

In paragraph six, Irenaeus asserts, “Men therefore shall see God, that they may live, being made immortal by that sight, and attaining even unto God; which, as I have already said, was declared figuratively by the prophets, that God should be seen by men who bear His Spirit [in them], and do always wait patiently for His coming.” Irenaeus then affirms, “As also Moses says in Deuteronomy, “We shall see in that day that God will talk to man, and he shall live,” referring to Deuteronomy 5:24. Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “For certain of these men used to see the prophetic Spirit and His active influences poured forth for all kinds of gifts; others, again, [beheld] the advent of the Lord, and that dispensation which obtained from the beginning, by which He accomplished the will of the Father with regard to things both celestial and terrestrial; and others [beheld] paternal glories adapted to the times, and to those who saw and who heard them then, and to all who were subsequently to hear them. Thus, therefore, was God revealed; for God the Father is shown forth through all these [operations], the Spirit indeed working, and the Son ministering, while the Father was approving, and man’s salvation being accomplished,” reminding us of 1 Corinthians 12:4-6. And Irenaeus then explains, “As He also declares through Hosea the prophet: “I,” He says, “have multiplied visions, and have used similitudes by the ministry (in manibus) of the prophets,” referring to Hosea 12:10. Irenaeus then quotes from Paul as he says, “But the apostle expounded this very passage, when he said, “Now there are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit; and there are differences of ministrations, but the same Lord; and there are diversities of operations, but it is the same God which worketh all in all. But the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal,” referring to 1 Corinthians 12:4-7. Again, Irenaeus points out, “But as He who worketh all things in all is God,” referring to 1 Corinthians 12:6, “[as to the points] of what nature and how great He is, [God] is invisible and indescribable to all things which have been made by Him, but He is by no means unknown: for all things learn through His Word that there is one God the Father, who contains all things, and who grants existence to all, as is written in the Gospel: “No man hath seen God at any time, except the only-begotten Son, who is in the bosom of the Father; He has declared [Him],” referring to John 1:18.

Commentary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus affirms, “As regards His greatness, therefore, it is not possible to know God, for it is impossible that the Father can be measured; but as regards His love (for this it is which leads us to God by His Word), when we obey Him, we do always learn that there is so great a God, and that it is He who by Himself has established, and selected, and adorned, and contains all things; and among the all things, both ourselves and this our world.” Irenaeus points out that it is in obeying God, that is, in submission to God that we learn of Him and know Him. Irenaeus continues as he again testifies, “We also then were made, along with those things which are contained by Him. And this is He of whom the Scripture says, “And God formed man, taking clay of the earth, and breathed into his face the breath of life,” referring to Genesis 2 (NASB):7 Then the LORD God formed man of dust from the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living being.

Irenaeus again affirms, “It was not angels, therefore, who made us, nor who formed us, neither had angels power to make an image of God, nor any one else, except the Word of the Lord, nor any Power remotely distant from the Father of all things.” Irenaeus contends for the faith as he argues, “For God did not stand in need of these [beings], in order to the accomplishing of what He had Himself determined with Himself beforehand should be done, as if He did not possess His own hands.” This reminds us of Paul’s preaching on Mars Hill in Acts 17 (NKJV):22 Then Paul stood in the midst of the Areopagus and said, “Men of Athens, I perceive that in all things you are very religious; 23 for as I was passing through and considering the objects of your worship, I even found an altar with this inscription: Therefore, the One whom you worship without knowing, Him I proclaim to you: 24 “God, who made the world and everything in it, since He is Lord of heaven and earth, does not dwell in temples made with hands. 25 Nor is He worshiped with men’s hands, as though He needed anything, since He gives to all life, breath, and all things. 26 And He has made from one blood[c] every nation of men to dwell on all the face of the earth, and has determined their preappointed times and the boundaries of their dwellings, 27 so that they should seek the Lord, in the hope that they might grope for Him and find Him, though He is not far from each one of us; 28 for in Him we live and move and have our being, as also some of your own poets have said, ‘For we are also His offspring.’ 29 Therefore, since we are the offspring of God, we ought not to think that the Divine Nature is like gold or silver or stone, something shaped by art and man’s devising. 30 Truly, these times of ignorance God overlooked, but now commands all men everywhere to repent, 31 because He has appointed a day on which He will judge the world in righteousness by the Man whom He has ordained. He has given assurance of this to all by raising Him from the dead.”

Irenaeus continues as he affirms, “For with Him were always present the Word and Wisdom, the Son and the Spirit, by whom and in whom, freely and spontaneously, He made all things, to whom also He speaks, saying, “Let Us make man after Our image and likeness,” referring to Genesis 1 (NASB):26 Then God said, “Let Us make man in Our image, according to Our likeness.”

Irenaeus then explains, “He taking from Himself the substance of the creatures [formed], and the pattern of things made, and the type of all the adornments in the world,” reminding us of Hebrews 11 (NASB):3 By faith we understand that the worlds were prepared by the word of God, so that what is seen was not made out of things which are visible.

That is, by faith we understand that we are made in the image and likeness of God.

In paragraph two, Irenaeus asserts, “Truly, then, the Scripture declared, which says, “First of all believe that there is one God, who has established all things, and completed them, and having caused that from what had no being, all things should come into existence,” referring to the Shepherd of Hermas, book ii. sim. 1. Irenaeus then testifies, “He who contains all things, and is Himself contained by no one. Rightly also has Malachi said among the prophets: “Is it not one God who hath established us? Have we not all one Father?” He is referring to Malachi 2 (NASB):10 “Do we not all have one father? Has not one God created us? Why do we deal treacherously each against his brother so as to profane the covenant of our fathers?”

Irenaeus continues to testify as he says, “In accordance with this, too, does the apostle say, “There is one God, the Father, who is above all, and in us all,” referring in context to Ephesians 4 (NASB):4 There is one body and one Spirit, just as also you were called in one hope of your calling; 5 one Lord, one faith, one baptism, 6 one God and Father of all who is over all and through all and in all.

Irenaeus continues as he then testifies, “Likewise does the Lord also say: “All things are delivered to Me by My Father,” referring to Matthew 11 (NASB):27 “All things have been handed over to Me by My Father; and no one knows the Son except the Father; nor does anyone know the Father except the Son, and anyone to whom the Son wills to reveal Him.

And Irenaeus continues, “manifestly by Him who made all things; for He did not deliver to Him the things of another, but His own.” Irenaeus then affirms, “But in all things [it is implied that] nothing has been kept back [from Him], and for this reason the same person is the Judge of the living and the dead,” just as Peter testifies when he preached the Gospel at the house of Cornelius as in Acts 10 (NASB):42 “And He ordered us to preach to the people, and solemnly to testify that this is the One who has been appointed by God as Judge of the living and the dead.

And Irenaeus continues, “having the key of David: He shall open, and no man shall shut: He shall shut, and no man shall open,” referring to Revelations 3 (NASB):7 “And to the angel of the church in Philadelphia write: He who is holy, who is true, who has the key of David, who opens and no one will shut, and who shuts and no one opens, says this. . .

Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “For no one was able, either in heaven or in earth, or under the earth, to open the book of the Father, or to behold Him, with the exception of the Lamb who was slain, and who redeemed us with His own blood,” referring in context to Revelation 5 (NKJV):1 And I saw in the right hand of Him who sat on the throne a scroll written inside and on the back, sealed with seven seals. 2 Then I saw a strong angel proclaiming with a loud voice, “Who is worthy to open the scroll and to loose its seals?” 3 And no one in heaven or on the earth or under the earth was able to open the scroll, or to look at it. 4 So I wept much, because no one was found worthy to open and read the scroll, or to look at it. 5 But one of the elders said to me, “Do not weep. Behold, the Lion of the tribe of Judah, the Root of David, has prevailed to open the scroll and to loose its seven seals.” 6 And I looked, and behold, in the midst of the throne and of the four living creatures, and in the midst of the elders, stood a Lamb as though it had been slain, having seven horns and seven eyes, which are the seven Spirits of God sent out into all the earth. 7 Then He came and took the scroll out of the right hand of Him who sat on the throne. 8 Now when He had taken the scroll, the four living creatures and the twenty-four elders fell down before the Lamb, each having a harp, and golden bowls full of incense, which are the prayers of the saints. 9 And they sang a new song, saying: “You are worthy to take the scroll, And to open its seals; For You were slain, And have redeemed us to God by Your blood Out of every tribe and tongue and people and nation, 10 And have made us kings and priests to our God; And we shall reign on the earth.”

Irenaeus then continues, “receiving power over all things from the same God who made all things by the Word,” referring to John 1 (NASB):1 In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. 2 He was in the beginning with God. 3 All things came into being through Him, and apart from Him nothing came into being that has come into being.

Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “and adorned them by [His] Wisdom, when “the Word was made flesh,” referring to John 1 (NASB):14 And the Word became flesh, and dwelt among us, and we saw His glory, glory as of the only begotten from the Father, full of grace and truth.

Irenaeus continues his testimony as he says, “that even as the Word of God had the sovereignty in the heavens, so also might He have the sovereignty in earth, inasmuch as [He was] a righteous man, “who did no sin, neither was there found guile in His mouth,” referring to 1 Peter 2 (NASB):21 For you have been called for this purpose, since Christ also suffered for you, leaving you an example for you to follow in His steps, 22 WHO COMMITTED NO SIN, NOR WAS ANY DECEIT FOUND IN HIS MOUTH;

Again Irenaeus continues his testimony as he says, “and that He might have the preeminence over those things which are under the earth, He Himself being made “the first-begotten of the dead,” referring to Colossians 1 (NASB):18 He is also head of the body, the church; and He is the beginning, the firstborn from the dead, so that He Himself will come to have first place in everything.

And then Irenaeus concludes, “and that all things, as I have already said, might behold their King; and that the paternal light might meet with and rest upon the flesh of our Lord, and come to us from His resplendent flesh, and that thus man might attain to immortality, having been invested with the paternal light.” Now Irenaeus also mentions “the paternal light” in Book 3, Chapter XI, paragraph 4, of his writings where he says “For all the heretics have decided that the Demiurge was ignorant of that Power above him, whose witness and herald John is found to be. Wherefore the Lord said that He deemed him “more than a prophet. For all the other prophets preached the advent of the paternal Light, and desired to be worthy of seeing Him whom they preached; but John did both announce [the advent] beforehand, in a like manner as did the others, and actually saw Him when He came, and pointed Him out, and persuaded many to believe on Him, so that he did himself hold the place of both prophet and apostle. For this is to be more than a prophet, because, “first apostles, secondarily prophets;” but all things from one and the same God Himself.”

The expression “paternal light” is not found in the Scriptures. However it may be inferred from John 1:1-14. Irenaeus has already referred to John 1:1,2, and verse 14. The apostles John speaks of the Light which coming into the world enlightens every man, and John plainly identifies the Light to be Jesus Christ as we read in John 1 (NKJV):4 In Him was life, and the life was the light of men. 5 And the light shines in the darkness, and the darkness did not comprehend it. 6 There was a man sent from God, whose name was John. 7 This man came for a witness, to bear witness of the Light, that all through him might believe. 8 He was not that Light, but was sent to bear witness of that Light. 9 That was the true Light which gives light to every man coming into the world. 10 He was in the world, and the world was made through Him, and the world did not know Him. 11 He came to His own, and His own did not receive Him. 12 But as many as received Him, to them He gave the right to become children of God, to those who believe in His name: 13 who were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God.

And in the epistle of 1 John we read 1 John 1 (NASB):5 This is the message we have heard from Him and announce to you, that God is Light, and in Him there is no darkness at all. 6 If we say that we have fellowship with Him and yet walk in the darkness, we lie and do not practice the truth; 7 but if we walk in the Light as He Himself is in the Light, we have fellowship with one another, and the blood of Jesus His Son cleanses us from all sin.

From these passages we see that in Jesus was true life, and this life was “the light of men” which the darkness does not comprehend. John the Baptist came “to testify about the Light, so that all might believe through him.” Jesus was the true light which “coming into the world, enlightens every man.” The world is in darkness but all who receive Jesus, even “those who believe in His name,” will be given the “right to become children of God.” The “paternal light” is the light from the Father. Jesus being His Son, and being sent into the world by the Father, brought the light of life. This is the “glory of the only begotten from the Father, full of grace and truth,” that was seen by the first disciples.

And the light of the Father has shown through Jesus to us as we read in 2 Corinthians 4 (NASB):6 For God, who said, "Light shall shine out of darkness," is the One who has shone in our hearts to give the Light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Christ.

And if we see and acknowledge this Jesus, that is, that we acknowledge who He truly is, we have immortality, that is true or eternal life.

In paragraph three, Irenaeus testifies, “I have also largely demonstrated, that the Word, namely the Son, was always with the Father,” referring to John 1 (NASB):1 In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God.

And Irenaeus continues, “and that Wisdom also, which is the Spirit, was present with Him, anterior to all creation, He declares by Solomon: “God by Wisdom founded the earth, and by understanding hath He established the heaven. By His knowledge the depths burst forth, and the clouds dropped down the dew,” referring to Proverbs 3 (NASB):19 The LORD by wisdom founded the earth, By understanding He established the heavens. 20 By His knowledge the deeps were broken up And the skies drip with dew.

Irenaeus continues as he affirms, “And again: “The Lord created me the beginning of His ways in His work: He set me up from everlasting, in the beginning, before He made the earth, before He established the depths, and before the fountains of waters gushed forth; before the mountains were made strong, and before all the hills, He brought me forth,” referring to Proverbs 8 (Septuagint):22 The Lord made me the beginning of his ways for his works. 23 He established me before time was in the beginning, before he made the earth: 24 even before he made the depths; before the fountains of water came forth: 25 before the mountains were settled, and before all hills, he begets me.

In Irenaeus’ quotation of the passage, note that he says, “The Lord created me...” while the Septuagint simply says in verse 22, “The Lord made...” Irenaeus then continues as he affirms, “And again: “When He prepared the heaven, I was with Him, and when He established the fountains of the deep; when He made the foundations of the earth strong, I was with Him preparing [them]. I was He in whom He rejoiced, and throughout all time I was daily glad before His face, when He rejoiced at the completion of the world, and was delighted in the sons of men,” referring to Proverbs 8:27-31.

Irenaeus is arguing all of this to show that “there is therefore one God, who by the Word and Wisdom created and arranged all things,” as Irenaeus will state in the beginning of paragraph four. Irenaeus is trying to show us here that the one God, the Father, and the Word, His Son, and wisdom, the Spirit of God, were always present throughout the creation of the world. However, Proverbs 8:12-25, which Irenaeus says refers to the Spirit, could also be a description of Jesus as well. Here is the complete passage, including verses 12-21 which Irenaeus did not include in his quotations of Proverbs, chapter 8.

Proverbs 8 (NKJV):12 “I, wisdom, dwell with prudence, And find out knowledge and discretion. 13 The fear of the LORD is to hate evil; Pride and arrogance and the evil way And the perverse mouth I hate. 14 Counsel is mine, and sound wisdom; I am understanding, I have strength. 15 By me kings reign, And rulers decree justice. 16 By me princes rule, and nobles, All the judges of the earth. 17 I love those who love me, And those who seek me diligently will find me. 18 Riches and honor are with me, Enduring riches and righteousness. 19 My fruit is better than gold, yes, than fine gold, And my revenue than choice silver. 20 I traverse the way of righteousness, In the midst of the paths of justice, 21 That I may cause those who love me to inherit wealth, That I may fill their treasuries. 22 “The LORD possessed me at the beginning of His way, Before His works of old. 23 I have been established from everlasting, From the beginning, before there was ever an earth. 24 When there were no depths I was brought forth, When there were no fountains abounding with water. 25 Before the mountains were settled, Before the hills, I was brought forth; 26 While as yet He had not made the earth or the fields, Or the primal dust of the world. 27 When He prepared the heavens, I was there, When He drew a circle on the face of the deep, 28 When He established the clouds above, When He strengthened the fountains of the deep, 29 When He assigned to the sea its limit, So that the waters would not transgress His command, When He marked out the foundations of the earth, 30 Then I was beside Him as a master craftsman; And I was daily His delight, Rejoicing always before Him, 31 Rejoicing in His inhabited world, And my delight was with the sons of men.

We note again in verse 22 that Irenaeus used the word “created” as he says, “And again: “The Lord created me the beginning of His ways in His work: He set me up from everlasting, in the beginning, before He made the earth, before He established the depths, and before the fountains of waters gushed forth; before the mountains were made strong, and before all the hills, He brought me forth.”

The word “created” that Irenaeus used here is a translation of the Hebrew word kannah which means literally to erect, to set upright, hence to found or create. But it also means to acquire for oneself, to possess, as it is used in Proverbs 4 (NASB):7 Wisdom is the principal thing; therefore get wisdom: and with all thy getting get understanding.

There is a note in Gesenius’ Hebrew-Chaldee Lexicon to the Old Testament which says “Note: There does not appear to be any sufficient ground for ascribing the sense of to create to this verb; in all the passages cited for that sense, to possess appears to be the true meaning.” Gesenius’ Hebrew-Chaldee Lexicon to the Old Testament, Samuel Prideaux Tregelles, LL.D., 1979, page 735.

I would agree with Gesenius here, that the meaning seems to be “possessed” as it is translated in Proverbs 8 (NASB):22 “The LORD possessed me at the beginning of His way, Before His works of old.

Nevertheless, Jesus, the Son of God, was present at creation as Paul says in Colossians 1 (NASB):16 For by Him all things were created, both in the heavens and on earth, visible and invisible, whether thrones or dominions or rulers or authorities--all things have been created through Him and for Him.

Now note 4073 by the Ante Nicene editors states that Proverbs 8:22-25 “is one of the favourite Messianic quotations of the Fathers, and is considered as the base of the first chapter of St. John’s Gospel.”

As for this passage of Scripture being “the base of the first chapter of St. John’s Gospel,” as note 4073 says, I believe that there is a better explanation for the base of the first chapter of St. John’s Gospel. When we look at Jesus in the Gospels, we see how he referred to Himself as the fulfillment of the scriptures, as in Matthew 5:17 (NASB):17 “Do not think that I came to abolish the Law or the Prophets; I did not come to abolish but to fulfill.”

Jesus saw Himself in the Scriptures. He saw Himself as the stone the builders rejected in Matthew 21 (NKJV):33 “Hear another parable: There was a certain landowner who planted a vineyard and set a hedge around it, dug a winepress in it and built a tower. And he leased it to vinedressers and went into a far country. 34 Now when vintage-time drew near, he sent his servants to the vinedressers, that they might receive its fruit. 35 And the vinedressers took his servants, beat one, killed one, and stoned another. 36 Again he sent other servants, more than the first, and they did likewise to them. 37 Then last of all he sent his son to them, saying, ‘They will respect my son.’ 38 But when the vinedressers saw the son, they said among themselves, ‘This is the heir. Come, let us kill him and seize his inheritance.’ 39 So they took him and cast him out of the vineyard and killed him. 40 “Therefore, when the owner of the vineyard comes, what will he do to those vinedressers?” 41 They said to Him, “He will destroy those wicked men miserably, and lease his vineyard to other vinedressers who will render to him the fruits in their seasons.” 42 Jesus said to them, “Have you never read in the Scriptures: ‘The stone which the builders rejected Has become the chief cornerstone. This was the LORD’s doing, And it is marvelous in our eyes’? 43 “Therefore I say to you, the kingdom of God will be taken from you and given to a nation bearing the fruits of it. 44 And whoever falls on this stone will be broken; but on whomever it falls, it will grind him to powder.”

He saw Himself as the fulfillment of Isaiah's prophecy as we read in Luke 4 (KJV):17 And He was handed the book of the prophet Isaiah. And when He had opened the book, He found the place where it was written: 18 "The Spirit of the LORD is upon Me, Because He has anointed Me To preach the gospel to the poor; He has sent Me to heal the brokenhearted, To proclaim liberty to the captives And recovery of sight to the blind, To set at liberty those who are oppressed; 19 To proclaim the acceptable year of the LORD." 20 Then He closed the book, and gave it back to the attendant and sat down. And the eyes of all who were in the synagogue were fixed on Him. 21 And He began to say to them, "Today this Scripture is fulfilled in your hearing."

Jesus personified the Scriptures, and held to them unswervingly. He did this to fulfill all righteousness as when He came to be baptized by John in Matthew 3 (NKJV):13 Then Jesus came from Galilee to the Jordan to be baptised by John. 14 But John tried to deter him, saying, 'I need to be baptised by you, and do you come to me?' 15 Jesus replied, 'Let it be so now; it is proper for us to do this to fulfil all righteousness.' Then John consented. 16 As soon as Jesus was baptised, he went up out of the water. At that moment heaven was opened, and he saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove and alighting on him. 17 And a voice from heaven said, 'This is my Son, whom I love; with him I am well pleased.'

It is Jesus who fulfilled the word of God to the letter. That is why He is called the very word of God in John 1 (NKJV):1 In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. 2 He was with God in the beginning. 3 Through him all things were made; without him nothing was made that has been made. 4 In him was life, and that life was the light of all mankind.

In paragraph four, Irenaeus continues to testify that "There is therefore one God, who by the Word and Wisdom created and arranged all things; but this is the Creator (Demurge) who has granted this world to the human race, and who, as regards His greatness, is indeed unknown to all who have been made by Him (for no man has searched out His height, either among the ancients who have gone to their rest, or any of those who are now alive)," as we read in Job 26 (NASB):13 "By His breath the heavens are cleared; His hand has pierced the fleeing serpent. 14 "Behold, these are the fringes of His ways; And how faint a word we hear of Him! But His mighty thunder, who can understand?"

Irenaeus continues as he says, "but as regards His love, He is always known through Him by whose means He ordained all things," reminding us of John 1 (NKJV):16 And of His fullness we have all received, and grace for grace. 17 For the law was given through Moses, but grace and truth came through Jesus Christ. 18 No one has seen God at any time. The only begotten Son, who is in the bosom of the Father, He has declared Him.

Irenaeus continues his testimony as he says, "Now this is His Word, our Lord Jesus Christ, who in the last times was made a man among men," referring to John 1 (NASB):14 And the Word became flesh, and dwelt among us, and we saw His glory, glory as of the only begotten from the Father, full of grace and truth.

Irenaeus then finishes his thought as he says, "that He might join the end to the beginning, that is, man to God." Irenaeus then affirms, "Wherefore the prophets, receiving the prophetic gift from the same Word, announced His advent according to the flesh, by which the blending and communion of God and man took place according to the good pleasure of the Father, the Word of God foretelling from the beginning that God should be seen by men, and hold converse with them upon earth, should confer with them, and should be present with His own creation, saving it, and becoming capable of being perceived by it, and freeing us from the hands of all that hate us, that is, from every spirit of wickedness; and causing us to serve Him in holiness and righteousness all our days," referring in context to Luke 1 (NASB):68 "Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, For He has visited us and accomplished redemption for His people, 69 And has raised up a horn of salvation for us In the house of David His servant— 70 As He spoke by the mouth of His holy prophets from of old— Salvation FROM OUR ENEMIES, And FROM THE HAND OF ALL WHO HATE US;

And to Luke 1 (NASB):74 To grant us that we, being rescued from the hand of our enemies, Might serve Him without fear, In holiness and righteousness before Him all our days.

Irenaeus concludes, "in order that man, having embraced the Spirit of God, might pass into the glory of the Father."

In paragraph five, Irenaeus continues as he earnestly defends the faith saying, "These things did the prophets set forth in a prophetic manner; but they did not, as some allege, [proclaim] that He who was seen by the prophets was a different [God], the Father of all being invisible," possibly referring to 1 Timothy 1

(NASB):17 Now to the King eternal, immortal, invisible, the only God, be honor and glory forever and ever. Amen.

Or to Colossians 1 (NASB):15 He is the image of the invisible God, the firstborn of all creation.

Irenaeus then testifies against the Gnostics as he says, “Yet this is what those [heretics] declare, who are altogether ignorant of the nature of prophecy.” Irenaeus continues as he clearly explains, “For prophecy is a prediction of things future, that is, a setting forth beforehand of those things which shall be afterwards. The prophets, then, indicated beforehand that God should be seen by men; as the Lord also says, “Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God,” referring to Matthew 5 (NASB):8 "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God.”

That the prophets declared that man would see God is also stated by Job in Job 19(NASB):25 “As for me, I know that my Redeemer lives, And at the last He will take His stand on the earth. 26 “Even after my skin is destroyed, Yet from my flesh I shall see God; 27 Whom I myself shall behold, And whom my eyes will see and not another. My heart faints within me!

Irenaeus then affirms, “But in respect to His greatness, and His wonderful glory, “no man shall see God and live,” referring to Exodus 33 (NASB):20 But He said, "You cannot see My face, for no man can see Me and live!"

Irenaeus continues as he says, “for the Father is incomprehensible; but in regard to His love, and kindness, and as to His infinite power, even this He grants to those who love Him, that is, to see God, which thing the prophets did also predict. “For those things that are impossible with men, are possible with God,” referring to Luke 18 (NASB):27 But He said, "The things that are impossible with people are possible with God."

Irenaeus continues as he says, “For man does not see God by his own powers; but when He pleases He is seen by men, by whom He wills, and when He wills, and as He wills. For God is powerful in all things, having been seen at that time indeed, prophetically through the Spirit, and seen, too, adoptively through the Son; and He shall also be seen paternally in the kingdom of heaven, the Spirit truly preparing man in the Son of God, and the Son leading him to the Father, while the Father, too, confers [upon him] incorruption for eternal life, which comes to every one from the fact of his seeing God.” Irenaeus continues as he reasons, “For as those who see the light are within the light, and partake of its brilliancy; even so, those who see God are in God, and receive of His splendour. But [His] splendour vivifies them; those, therefore, who see God, do receive life.” Irenaeus then explains, “And for this reason, He, [although] beyond comprehension, and boundless and invisible, rendered Himself visible, and comprehensible, and within the capacity of those who believe, that He might vivify those who receive and behold Him through faith,” referring most likely to John 6 (NASB):40 "For this is the will of My Father, that everyone who beholds the Son and believes in Him will have eternal life, and I Myself will raise him up on the last day."

Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “For as His greatness is past finding out, so also His goodness is beyond expression.” This echoes Paul who says as much in Romans 11 (NASB):33 Oh, the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! How unsearchable are His judgments and unfathomable His ways! 34 For WHO HAS KNOWN THE MIND OF THE LORD, OR WHO BECAME HIS COUNSELOR? 35 Or WHO HAS FIRST GIVEN TO HIM THAT IT MIGHT BE PAID BACK TO HIM AGAIN? 36 For from Him and through Him and to Him are all things. To Him be the glory forever. Amen.

Irenaeus continues as he affirms, “by which having been seen, He bestows life upon those who see Him. It is not possible to live apart from life, and the means of life is found in fellowship with God; but fellowship with God is to know God, and to enjoy His goodness.”

In paragraph six, Irenaeus asserts, “Men therefore shall see God, that they may live, being made immortal by that sight, and attaining even unto God; which, as I have already said, was declared figuratively by the prophets, that God should be seen by men who bear His Spirit [in them], and do always wait patiently for His coming.”

Now when Irenaeus says that men will be “made immortal by that sight, and attaining even unto God,” I believe he means that man will live eternally with God, and not that man will be equal with God. Irenaeus then affirms, “As also Moses says in Deuteronomy, “We shall see in that day that God will talk to man, and he shall live,” referring most likely to Deuteronomy 5 (NKJV):22 These are the commandments the LORD proclaimed in a loud voice to your whole assembly there on the mountain from out of the fire, the cloud and the deep darkness; and he added nothing more. Then he wrote them on two stone tablets and gave them to me. 23 When you heard the voice out of the darkness, while the mountain was ablaze with fire, all the leaders of your tribes and your elders came to me. 24 And you said, ‘The LORD our God has shown us his glory and his majesty, and we have heard his voice from the fire. Today we have seen that a person can live even if God speaks with them. 25 But now, why should we die? This great fire will consume us, and we will die if we hear the voice of the LORD our God any longer. 26 For what mortal has ever heard the voice of the living God speaking out of fire, as we have, and survived? 27 Go near and listen to all that the LORD our God says. Then tell us whatever the LORD our God tells you. We will listen and obey.’

However, Moses did tell the Israelites that they only heard a voice but saw no form in the assembly mentioned above as in Deuteronomy 4 (NASB):12 Then the LORD spoke to you from the midst of the fire; you heard the sound of words, but you saw no form—only a voice.

As to the fact that the righteous will see God, Job mentions this as in Job 19 (NASB):26 "Even after my skin is destroyed, Yet from my flesh I shall see God;

This is also promised in the book of Revelation as we read in Revelation 22 (NKJV):1 Then the angel showed me the river of the water of life, as clear as crystal, flowing from the throne of God and of the Lamb 2 down the middle of the great street of the city. On each side of the river stood the tree of life, bearing twelve crops of fruit, yielding its fruit every month. And the leaves of the tree are for the healing of the nations. 3 No longer will there be any curse. The throne of God and of the Lamb will be in the city, and his servants will serve him. 4 They will see his face, and his name will be on their foreheads. 5 There will be no more night. They will not need the light of a lamp or the light of the sun, for the Lord God will give them light. And they will reign for ever and ever.

Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “For certain of these men used to see the prophetic Spirit and His active influences poured forth for all kinds of gifts; others, again, [beheld] the advent of the Lord, and that dispensation which obtained from the beginning, by which He accomplished the will of the Father with regard to things both celestial and terrestrial; and others [beheld] paternal glories adapted to the times, and to those who saw and who heard them then, and to all who were subsequently to hear them.” And Irenaeus then testifies, “Thus, therefore, was God revealed; for God the Father is shown forth through all these [operations], the Spirit indeed working, and the Son ministering, while the Father was approving, and man’s salvation being accomplished,” reminding us of 1 Corinthians 12:4-6. And Irenaeus then explains, “As He also declares through Hosea the prophet: ‘I,’ He says, ‘have multiplied visions, and have used similitudes by the ministry (in manibus) of the prophets,” referring to Hosea 12 (NASB):10 I have also spoken to the prophets, And I gave numerous visions, And through the prophets I gave parables.

Irenaeus here draws from Hosea to say that God has through all time revealed Himself through manifestations of the Spirit.

Irenaeus then testifies, “But the apostle expounded this very passage, when he said, “Now there are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit; and there are differences of ministrations, but the same Lord; and there are diversities of operations, but it is the same God which worketh all in all. But the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal,” referring to 1 Corinthians 12 (KJV):4 Now there are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit. 5 And there are differences of administrations, but the same Lord. 6 And there are diversities of operations, but it is the same God which worketh all in all. 7 But the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal.

Again, Irenaeus points out, “But as He who worketh all things in all is God,” referring again to 1 Corinthians 12:6, “[as to the points] of what nature and how great He is, [God] is invisible and indescribable to all things which have been made by Him, but He is by no means unknown: for all things learn through His Word that there is one God the Father, who contains all things, and who grants existence to all, as is written in the Gospel: “No man hath seen God at any time, except the only-begotten Son, who is in the bosom of the Father; He has declared [Him],” referring to John 1 (NASB):18 No one has seen God at any time; the only begotten God who is in the bosom of the Father, He has explained Him.

In this section we see a marvelous display of the word of God in Irenaeus’ writing. Without chapter and verse, which were not added to the Bible until after 1200 A.D., Irenaeus has cogently written in defense of the faith. Irenaeus believed in the cohesiveness and consistency of Scripture. The Scriptures were the truth to Irenaeus. Also, we note that Irenaeus perceived that it is the love of God that leads us to God by His word.

Book 4: Chapter XXIV.—The conversion of the Gentiles was more difficult than that of the Jews; the labours of those apostles, therefore who engaged in the former task, were greater than those who undertook the latter.

1. Wherefore also Paul, since he was the apostle of the Gentiles, says, “I laboured more than they all.” 4137 1 Cor. xv. 10. For the instruction of the former, [viz., the Jews,] was an easy task, because they could allege proofs from the Scriptures, and because they, who were in the habit of hearing Moses and the prophets, did also readily receive the First-begotten of the dead, and the Prince of the life of God, —Him who, by the spreading forth of hands, did destroy Amalek, and vivify man from the wound of the serpent, by means of faith which was [exercised] towards Him. As I have pointed out in the preceding book, the apostle did, in the first place, instruct the Gentiles to depart from the superstition of idols, and to worship one God, the Creator of heaven and earth, and the Framers of the whole creation; and that His Son was His Word, by whom He founded all things; and that He, in the last times, was made a man among men; that He reformed the human race, but destroyed and conquered the enemy of man, and gave to His handiwork victory against the adversary. But although they who were of the circumcision still did not obey the words of God, for they were despisers, yet they were previously instructed not to commit adultery, nor fornication, nor theft, nor fraud; and that whatsoever things are done to our neighbours’ prejudice, were evil, and detested by God. Wherefore also they did readily agree to abstain from these things, because they had been thus instructed.

2. But they were bound to teach the Gentiles also this very thing, that works of such a nature were wicked, prejudicial, and useless, and destructive to those who engaged in them. Wherefore he who had received the apostolate to the Gentiles, 4138 [A clear note of recognition on the part of our author, that St. Paul’s mission was world-wide, while St. Peter’s was limited.] did labour more than those who preached the Son of God among them of the circumcision. For they were assisted by the Scriptures, which the Lord confirmed and fulfilled, in coming such as He had been announced; but here, [in the case of the Gentiles,] there was a certain foreign erudition, and a new doctrine [to be received, namely], that the gods of the nations not only were no gods at all, but even the idols of demons; and that there is one God, who is “above all principality, and dominion, and power, and every name which is named;” 4139 Eph. i. 21, and that His Word, invisible by nature, was made palpable and visible among men, and did descend “to death, even the death of the cross;” 4140 Phil. ii. 8, also, that they who believe in Him shall be incorruptible and not subject to suffering, and shall receive the kingdom of heaven. These things, too, were preached to the Gentiles by word, without [the aid of] the Scriptures: wherefore, also, they who preached among the Gentiles underwent greater labour. But, on the other hand, the faith of the Gentiles is proved to be of a more noble description, since they followed the word of God without the instruction [derived] from the [sacred] writings (sine instructione literarum).

Summary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus testifies, “Wherefore also Paul, since he was the apostle of the Gentiles, says, “I laboured more than they all,” referring to 1 Corinthians 15:10. Irenaeus asserts, “For the instruction of the former, [viz., the Jews,] was an easy task, because they could allege proofs from the Scriptures, and because they, who were in the habit of hearing Moses and the prophets, did also readily receive the First-begotten of the dead, and the Prince of the life of God, —Him who, by the spreading forth of hands, did destroy Amalek,” referring to Exodus 17:11-13, “and vivify man from the wound of the serpent, by means of faith which was [exercised] towards Him,” referring to Numbers 24:4-9 and John 3:14-15. Irenaeus testifies,

“As I have pointed out in the preceding book, the apostle did, in the first place, instruct the Gentiles to depart from the superstition of idols, and to worship one God, the Creator of heaven and earth, and the Framers of the whole creation,” referring possibly to Acts 17:24,29 and 1 John 5:21, “and that His Son was His Word, by whom He founded all things; and that He, in the last times, was made a man among men; that He reformed the human race, but destroyed and conquered the enemy of man, and gave to His handiwork victory against the adversary,” referring in part to Luke 10:19. Irenaeus affirms, “But although they who were of the circumcision still did not obey the words of God, for they were despisers, yet they were previously instructed not to commit adultery, nor fornication, nor theft, nor fraud; and that whatsoever things are done to our neighbours’ prejudice, were evil, and detested by God,” referring to Exodus 20:14-16 and Leviticus 19:18. And Irenaeus attests, “Wherefore also they did readily agree to abstain from these things, because they had been thus instructed.”

In paragraph two, Irenaeus testifies, “But they were bound to teach the Gentiles also this very thing, that works of such a nature were wicked, prejudicial, and useless, and destructive to those who engaged in them. Wherefore he who had received the apostolate to the Gentiles, did labour more than those who preached the Son of God among them of the circumcision,” referring to Galatians 2:7-9 and 1 Corinthians 15:10. Irenaeus then testifies, “For they were assisted by the Scriptures, which the Lord confirmed and fulfilled, in coming such as He had been announced; but here, [in the case of the Gentiles,] there was a certain foreign erudition, and a new doctrine [to be received, namely], that the gods of the nations not only were no gods at all, but even the idols of demons,” referring to 1 Corinthians 10:19-22, “and that there is one God, who is “above all principality, and dominion, and power, and every name which is named,” referring to Ephesians 1:21, “and that His Word, invisible by nature, was made palpable and visible among men, and did descend “to death, even the death of the cross,” referring to Philippians 2:8, “also, that they who believe in Him shall be incorruptible and not subject to suffering, and shall receive the kingdom of heaven.” Irenaeus then testifies, “These things, too, were preached to the Gentiles by word, without [the aid of] the Scriptures: wherefore, also, they who preached among the Gentiles underwent greater labour.” Irenaeus then asserts, “But, on the other hand, the faith of the Gentiles is proved to be of a more noble description, since they followed the word of God without the instruction [derived] from the [sacred] writings (sine instructione literarum).”

Commentary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus testifies, “Wherefore also Paul, since he was the apostle of the Gentiles, says, “I laboured more than they all,” referring to 1 Corinthians 15 (NASB):10 But by the grace of God I am what I am, and His grace toward me did not prove vain; but I labored even more than all of them, yet not I, but the grace of God with me.

Irenaeus asserts, “For the instruction of the former, [viz., the Jews,] was an easy task, because they could allege proofs from the Scriptures, and because they, who were in the habit of hearing Moses and the prophets, did also readily receive the First-begotten of the dead, and the Prince of the life of God, —Him who, by the spreading forth of hands, did destroy Amalek,” referring to Exodus 17 (NKJV):11 And it came to pass, when Moses held up his hand, that Israel prevailed: and when he let down his hand, Amalek prevailed. 12 But Moses hands were heavy; and they took a stone, and put it under him, and he sat thereon; and Aaron and Hur stayed up his hands, the one on the one side, and the other on the other side; and his hands were steady until the going down of the sun. 13 And Joshua discomfited Amalek and his people with the edge of the sword.

Irenaeus continues, “and vivify man from the wound of the serpent, by means of faith which was [exercised] towards Him,” referring to Numbers 21 (NKJV):4 Then they journeyed from Mount Hor by the Way of the Red Sea, to go around the land of Edom; and the soul of the people became very discouraged on the way. 5 And the people spoke against God and against Moses: “Why have you brought us up out of Egypt to die in the wilderness? For there is no food and no water, and our soul loathes this worthless bread.” 6 So the LORD sent fiery serpents among the people, and they bit the people; and many of the people of Israel died. 7 Therefore the people came to Moses, and said, “We have sinned, for we have spoken against the LORD and against you; pray to the LORD that He take away the serpents from us.” So Moses prayed for the people. 8 Then the LORD said to Moses, “Make a fiery serpent, and set it on a pole; and it shall be that everyone who is bitten, when he looks at it, shall live.” 9 So Moses made a bronze serpent, and put it on a pole; and so it was, if a serpent had bitten anyone, when he looked at the bronze serpent, he lived.

And to John 3 (NASB):14 As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of Man be lifted up; 15 so that whoever believes will in Him have eternal life.

Irenaeus then testifies, “As I have pointed out in the preceding book, the apostle did, in the first place, instruct the Gentiles to depart from the superstition of idols, and to worship one God, the Creator of heaven and earth, and the Framer of the whole creation,” referring possibly to Paul’s words in Acts 17 (NASB):24 “The God who made the world and all things in it, since He is Lord of heaven and earth, does not dwell in temples made with hands;

And in Acts 17 (NASB):29 “Being then the children of God, we ought not to think that the Divine Nature is like gold or silver or stone, an image formed by the art and thought of man.

And the result of the apostle’s preaching is mentioned in 1 Thessalonians 1 (NASB):8 For the word of the Lord has sounded forth from you, not only in Macedonia and Achaia, but also in every place your faith toward God has gone forth, so that we have no need to say anything. 9 For they themselves report about us what kind of a reception we had with you, and how you turned to God from idols to serve a living and true God, 10 and to wait for His Son from heaven, whom He raised from the dead, that is Jesus, who rescues us from the wrath to come.

The apostle John also warned as in 1 John 5 (NASB):21 Little children, guard yourselves from idols.

Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “and that His Son was His Word, by whom He founded all things; and that He, in the last times, was made a man among men; that He reformed the human race, but destroyed and conquered the enemy of man, and gave to His handiwork victory against the adversary,” referring in part to Luke 10 (NASB):19 “Behold, I have given you authority to tread on serpents and scorpions, and over all the power of the enemy, and nothing will injure you.

I am wondering about the words “reformed the human race” which Irenaeus uses here. I think it would be more correct to say that He redeemed the human race. In any case, the word “reformed” is not used in the Scriptures as Irenaeus uses it here.

Irenaeus then affirms, “But although they who were of the circumcision still did not obey the words of God, for they were despisers, yet they were previously instructed not to commit adultery, nor fornication, nor theft, nor fraud; and that whatsoever things are done to our neighbours’ prejudice, were evil, and detested by God,” referring to Exodus 20 (NASB):14 “You shall not commit adultery. 15 “You shall not steal. 16 “You shall not bear false witness against your neighbor.

And to Leviticus 19 (NASB):18 ‘You shall not take vengeance, nor bear any grudge against the sons of your people, but you shall love your neighbor as yourself; I am the LORD.

And Irenaeus attests, “Wherefore also they did readily agree to abstain from these things, because they had been thus instructed.” That is, Irenaeus is saying that the Jews were familiar with the Old Testament writings.

In paragraph two, Irenaeus testifies, “But they were bound to teach the Gentiles also this very thing, that works of such a nature were wicked, prejudicial, and useless, and destructive to those who engaged in them. Wherefore he who had received the apostolate to the Gentiles, did labour more than those who preached the Son of God among them of the circumcision,” referring in context to Galatians 2 (NASB):7 But on the contrary, seeing that I had been entrusted with the gospel to the uncircumcised, just as Peter had been to the circumcised 8 (for He who effectually worked for Peter in his apostleship to the circumcised effectually worked for me also to the Gentiles), 9 and recognizing the grace that had been given to me, James and Cephas and John, who were reputed to be pillars, gave to me and Barnabas the right hand of fellowship, so that we might go to the Gentiles and they to the circumcised.

And again to 1 Corinthians 15 (NASB):10 But by the grace of God I am what I am, and His grace toward me did not prove vain; but I labored even more than all of them, yet not I, but the grace of God with me.

Irenaeus then testifies, “For they were assisted by the Scriptures, which the Lord confirmed and fulfilled, in coming such as He had been announced; but here, [in the case of the Gentiles,] there was a certain foreign erudition, and a new doctrine [to be received, namely], that the gods of the nations not only were no gods at all, but even the idols of demons,” referring to 1 Corinthians 10 (NASB):19 What do I mean then? That a thing sacrificed to idols is anything, or that an idol is anything? 20 No, but I say that the things which the Gentiles sacrifice, they sacrifice to demons and not to God; and I do not want you to become sharers in demons. 21 You cannot drink the cup of the Lord and the cup of demons; you cannot partake of the table of the Lord and the table of demons. 22 Or do we provoke the Lord to jealousy? We are not stronger than He, are we?

Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “and that there is one God, who is “above all principality, and dominion, and power, and every name which is named,” referring to Ephesians 1 (NASB):21 far above all rule and authority and power and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this age but also in the one to come.

And again Irenaeus continues and testifies, “and that His Word, invisible by nature, was made palpable and visible among men, and did descend “to death, even the death of the cross,” referring to Philippians 2 (NASB):8 Being found in appearance as a man, He humbled Himself by becoming obedient to the point of death, even death on a cross.

And Irenaeus adds, “also, that they who believe in Him shall be incorruptible and not subject to suffering, and shall receive the kingdom of heaven.” This is stated in summary in 1 Peter 1 (NASB):3 Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who according to His great mercy has caused us to be born again to a living hope through the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, 4 to obtain an inheritance which is imperishable and undefiled and will not fade away, reserved in heaven for you, 5 who are protected by the power of God through faith for a salvation ready to be revealed in the last time.

Irenaeus then testifies, “These things, too, were preached to the Gentiles by word, without [the aid of] the Scriptures: wherefore, also, they who preached among the Gentiles underwent greater labour.” Irenaeus then asserts, “But, on the other hand, the faith of the Gentiles is proved to be of a more noble description, since they followed the word of God without the instruction [derived] from the [sacred] writings (sine instructione literarum).”

It is an interesting that Irenaeus takes note of the difficulty of preaching to the Gentiles. The Gentiles had only their heathen experience to draw from when they heard the Gospel, unless they knew a Jew. Irenaeus says the Jews were previously instructed not to worship idols, “not to commit adultery, nor fornication, nor theft, nor fraud,” nor to sin against their brother. Basically, the Jews had knowledge of the law of God, and therefore knew about sin. The Gentiles did not, and started their consciousness of the true God and sin from scratch. However, conversion of the Jews was no easy task either. They had become hardened in their belief that salvation was by the works of the law, and not by faith in Christ. And, as an aside, both are responsible for bringing many traditions into the Church which we are now, thankfully, able to set aside through the study of the word of God. But keeping to the point Irenaeus makes about the Gentiles who received the Gospel without the aid of the Scriptures, I believe this is why the Church went through so much darkness in the Middle Ages. The Church was now composed of both Jews and Gentiles, and both needed time to grow and study these very Scriptures. The Gentiles needed to gain the familiarity with the Scriptures in order to be completely free of their heathen worship practices. The Jews needed to understand the Scriptures in light of the truth of the Gospel. Irenaeus helped a great deal because of his own grappling with the Scriptures in his writing. But as to his point about Paul laboring more than the rest of the apostles, I think it is not that Paul labored harder, but he labored greater. Paul did more to further the Gospel than any other apostle. As proof of this, how many writings of the other apostles do we have? And how many do we have of Paul? But it is a minor point since we have no way of measuring how important a single writing of an apostle is. They are all important!

We see in this chapter that Irenaeus trusted the Scriptures, and believed that one could “allege proofs from the Scriptures” with which to preach the Gospel and earnestly contend for the faith.

Book 4: Chapter XXVI.—The treasure hid in the Scriptures is Christ; the true exposition of the Scriptures is to be found in the Church alone.

1. If any one, therefore, reads the Scriptures with attention, he will find in them an account of Christ, and a foreshadowing of the new calling (vocationis). For Christ is the treasure which was hid in the field, 4149 Matt. xiii. 44. that is, in this world (for “the field is the world” 4150 Matt. xiii. 38.); but the treasure hid in the Scriptures is Christ, since He was pointed out by means of types and parables. Hence His human nature could not 4151 Harvey cancels “non,” and reads the sentence interrogatively. be understood, prior to the consummation of those things which had been predicted, that is, the advent of Christ. And therefore it was said to Daniel the prophet: “Shut up the words, and seal the book even to the time of consummation, until many learn, and knowledge be completed. For at that time, when the dispersion shall be accomplished, they shall know all these things.”

4152 Dan. xii. 4, 7. But Jeremiah also says, “In the last days they shall understand these things.”
4153 Jer. xxiii. 20. For every prophecy, before its fulfilment, is to men [full of] enigmas and ambiguities. But when the time has arrived, and the prediction has come to pass, then the prophecies have a clear and certain exposition. And for this reason, indeed, when at this present time the law is read to the Jews, it is like a fable; for they do not possess the explanation of all things pertaining to the advent of the Son of God, which took place in human nature; but when it is read by the Christians, it is a treasure, hid indeed in a field, but brought to light by the cross of Christ, and explained, both enriching the understanding of men, and showing forth the wisdom of God and declaring His dispensations with regard to man, and forming the kingdom of Christ beforehand, and preaching by anticipation the inheritance of the holy Jerusalem, and proclaiming beforehand that the man who loves God shall arrive at such excellency as even to see God, and hear His word, and from the hearing of His discourse be glorified to such an extent, that others cannot behold the glory of his countenance, as was said by Daniel: “Those who do understand, shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and many of the righteous” 4154 The Latin is “a multis justis,” corresponding to the Greek version of the Hebrew text. If the translation be supposed as corresponding to the Hebrew comparative, the English equivalent will be, “and above (more than) many righteous.” as the stars for ever and ever.” 4155 Dan. xii. 3. Thus, then, I have shown it to be, 4156 The text and punctuation are here in great uncertainty, and very different views of both are taken by the editors. if any one read the Scriptures. For thus it was that the Lord discoursed with the disciples after His resurrection from the dead, proving to them from the Scriptures themselves “that Christ must suffer, and enter into His glory, and that remission of sins should be preached in His name throughout all the world.” 4157 Luke xxiv. 26, 47. [The walk to Emmaus is the fountain-head of Scriptural exposition, and the forty days (Acts i. 3) is the river that came forth like that which went out of Eden. Sirach iv. 31. And the disciple will be perfected, and [rendered] like the householder, “who bringeth forth from his treasure things new and old.” 4158 Matt. xiii. 52. [I must express my delight in the great principle of exposition here unfolded. The Old Scriptures are a night-bound wilderness, till Christ rises and illuminates them, glorying alike hill and dale, and, as this author supposes, every shrub and flower, also, making the smallest leaf with its dewdrops glitter like the rainbow.]

Summary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus testifies, “If any one, therefore, reads the Scriptures with attention, he will find in them an account of Christ, and a foreshadowing of the new calling (vocationis). For Christ is the treasure which was hid in the field,” referring to Matthew 13:44, “that is, in this world (for “the field is the world),” referring to Matthew 13:38; Irenaeus continues as he interprets, “but the treasure hid in the Scriptures is Christ, since He was pointed out by means of types and parables.” Irenaeus explains, “Hence His human nature could not be understood, prior to the consummation of those things which had been predicted, that is, the advent of Christ. And therefore it was said to Daniel the prophet: “Shut up the words, and seal the book even to the time of consummation, until many learn, and knowledge be completed. For at that time, when the dispersion shall be accomplished, they shall know all these things,” referring to Daniel 12:4,9. And Irenaeus adds, “But Jeremiah also says, “In the last days they shall understand these things,” referring to Jeremiah 23:20. Irenaeus then explains further, “For every prophecy, before its fulfilment, is to men [full of] enigmas and ambiguities. But when the time has arrived, and the prediction has come to pass, then the prophecies have a clear and certain exposition.” Irenaeus then testifies, “And for this reason, indeed, when at this present time the law is read to the Jews, it is like a fable,” referring in part to 2 Corinthians 3:12-18, “for they do not possess the explanation of all things pertaining to the advent of the Son of God, which took place in human nature;” Irenaeus then continues, “but when it is read by the Christians, it is a treasure, hid indeed in a field, but brought to light by the cross of Christ, and explained, both enriching the understanding of men, and showing forth the wisdom of God and declaring His dispensations with regard to man, and forming the kingdom of Christ beforehand, and preaching by anticipation the inheritance of the holy Jerusalem, and proclaiming beforehand that the man who loves God shall arrive at such excellency as even to see God, and hear His word, and from the hearing of His discourse be glorified to such an extent, that others cannot behold the glory of his countenance, as was said by Daniel: “Those who do understand, shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and many of the righteous as the stars for ever and ever,” referring to Daniel 12:3. Irenaeus then concludes, “Thus, then, I have shown it to be, if any one read the Scriptures. For thus it was that the Lord discoursed with the disciples after His resurrection from the dead, proving to them from the Scriptures themselves “that Christ must suffer, and enter into His glory, and that remission of sins should be preached in His name throughout all the world,” referring to Luke 24:26,47. Irenaeus then testifies, “And the disciple will be perfected, and [rendered] like the householder, “who bringeth forth from his treasure things new and old,” referring to Matthew 13:52-53.

Commentary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus testifies, “If any one, therefore, reads the Scriptures with attention, he will find in them an account of Christ, and a foreshadowing of the new calling (vocationis). For Christ is the treasure which was hid in the field,” referring to Matthew 13 (NASB):44 "The kingdom of heaven is like a treasure hidden in the field, which a man found and hid again; and from joy over it he goes and sells all that he has and buys that field.

Irenaeus explains, “that is, in this world (for “the field is the world),” referring in context to Matthew 13 (NASB):36 Then He left the crowds and went into the house. And His disciples came to Him and said, "Explain to us the parable of the tares of the field." 37 And He said, "The one who sows the good seed is the Son of Man, 38 and the field is the world; and as for the good seed, these are the sons of the kingdom; and the tares are the sons of the evil one; 39 and the enemy who sowed them is the devil, and the harvest is the end of the age; and the reapers are angels.

Irenaeus continues as he interprets, “but the treasure hid in the Scriptures is Christ, since He was pointed out by means of types and parables.” Irenaeus explains, “Hence His human nature could not be understood, prior to the consummation of those things which had been predicted, that is, the advent of Christ. And therefore it was said to Daniel the prophet: “Shut up the words, and seal the book even to the time of consummation, until many learn, and knowledge be completed. For at that time, when the dispersion shall be accomplished, they shall know all these things,” referring to Daniel 12 (NASB):4 But as for you, Daniel, conceal these words and seal up the book until the end of time; many will go back and forth, and knowledge will increase.”

And to Daniel 12 (NASB):9 He said, “Go your way, Daniel, for these words are concealed and sealed up until the end time.

And Irenaeus adds, “But Jeremiah also says, “In the last days they shall understand these things,” referring to Jeremiah 23 (NASB):20 The anger of the LORD will not turn back Until He has performed and carried out the purposes of His heart; In the last days you will clearly understand it.

Irenaeus explains further, “For every prophecy, before its fulfilment, is to men [full of] enigmas and ambiguities. But when the time has arrived, and the prediction has come to pass, then the prophecies have a clear and certain exposition.” Irenaeus testifies, “And for this reason, indeed, when at this present time the law is read to the Jews, it is like a fable,” referring in part to 2 Corinthians 3 (NASB):12 Therefore having such a hope, we use great boldness in our speech, 13 and are not like Moses, who used to put a veil over his face so that the sons of Israel would not look intently at the end of what was fading away. 14 But their minds were hardened; for until this very day at the reading of the old covenant the same veil remains unlifted, because it is removed in Christ. 15 But to this day whenever Moses is read, a veil lies over their heart; 16 but whenever a person turns to the Lord, the veil is taken away. 17 Now the Lord is the Spirit, and where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty. 18 But we all, with unveiled face, beholding as in a mirror the glory of the Lord, are being transformed into the same image from glory to glory, just as from the Lord, the Spirit.

Irenaeus then continues, “for they do not possess the explanation of all things pertaining to the advent of the Son of God, which took place in human nature;” This, he says, explains the current state of the Jews in unbelief, who as a people did not then, nor do they now, understand that Christ had to become a man as stated in the Scriptures, nor do they accept Him as their Messiah.

Irenaeus then argues, “but when it is read by the Christians, it is a treasure, hid indeed in a field, but brought to light by the cross of Christ, and explained, both enriching the understanding of men, and showing forth the wisdom of God and declaring His dispensations with regard to man, and forming the kingdom of Christ beforehand, and preaching by anticipation the inheritance of the holy Jerusalem, and proclaiming beforehand that the man who loves God shall arrive at such excellency as even to see God, and hear His word, and from the hearing of His discourse be glorified to such an extent, that others cannot behold the glory of his countenance, as was said by Daniel: “Those who do understand, shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and many of the righteous as the stars for ever and ever,” referring to Daniel 12 (NASB):3 Those who have insight will shine brightly like the brightness of the expanse of heaven, and those who lead the many to righteousness, like the stars forever and ever.

Note that Jesus also spoke of this in Matthew 13 (NASB):43 Then THE RIGHTEOUS WILL SHINE FORTH AS THE SUN in the kingdom of their Father. He who has ears, let him hear.

Irenaeus then concludes, “Thus, then, I have shown it to be, if any one read the Scriptures. For thus it was that the Lord discoursed with the disciples after His resurrection from the dead, proving to them from the Scriptures themselves “that Christ must suffer, and enter into His glory, and that remission of sins should be preached in His name throughout all the world,” referring in context to Luke 24 (NASB):25 And He said to them, "O foolish men and slow of heart to believe in all that the prophets have spoken! 26 Was it not necessary for the Christ to suffer these things and to enter into His glory?" 27 Then beginning with Moses and with all the prophets, He explained to them the things concerning Himself in all the Scriptures.

And to Luke 24 (NASB):45 Then He opened their minds to understand the Scriptures, 46 and He said to them, "Thus it is written, that the Christ would suffer and rise again from the dead the third day, 47 and that repentance for forgiveness of sins would be proclaimed in His name to all the nations, beginning from Jerusalem.

Irenaeus then testifies, “And the disciple will be perfected, and [rendered] like the householder, “who bringeth forth from his treasure things new and old,” referring to Matthew 13 (NASB):52 And Jesus said to them, “Therefore every scribe who has become a disciple of the kingdom of heaven is like a head of a household, who brings out of his treasure things new and old.”

Irenaeus points out in this chapter that the Scriptures speak of Christ in both the Old and New Testaments. Thus, Irenaeus here proves the unity of the Scriptures. Irenaeus also encourages us to “read the Scriptures.”

Book 4: Chapter XXVII—The sins of the men of old time, which incurred the displeasure of God, were, by His providence, committed to writing, that we might derive instruction thereby, and not be filled with pride. We must not, therefore, infer that there was another God than He whom Christ preached; we should rather fear, lest the one and the same God who inflicted punishment on the ancients, should bring down heavier upon us.

1. As I have heard from a certain presbyter, 4174 Polycarp, Papias, Pothinus, and others, have been suggested as probably here referred to, but the point is involved in utter uncertainty. [Surely this testimony is a precious intimation of the apostle’s meaning (Rom. ii. 12–16), and the whole chapter is radiant with the purity of the Gospel.] who had heard it from those who had seen the apostles, and from those who had been their disciples, the punishment [declared] in Scripture was sufficient for the ancients in regard to what they did without the Spirit’s guidance. For as God is no respecter of persons, He inflicted a proper punishment on deeds displeasing to Him. As in the case of David, 4175 1 Sam. xviii. when he suffered persecution from Saul for righteousness’ sake, and fled from King Saul, and would not avenge himself of his enemy, he both sung the advent of Christ, and instructed the nations in wisdom, and did everything after the Spirit’s guidance, and pleased God. But when his lust prompted him to take Bathsheba, the wife of Uriah, the Scripture said concerning him, “Now, the thing (sermo) which David had done appeared wicked in the eyes of the Lord;” 4176 2 Sam. xi. 27. and Nathan the prophet is sent to him, pointing out to him his crime, in order that he, passing sentence upon and condemning himself, might obtain mercy and forgiveness from Christ: “And [Nathan] said to him, There were two men in one city; the one rich, and the other poor. The rich man had exceeding many flocks and herds; but the poor man had nothing, save one little ewe-lamb, which he possessed, and nourished up; and it had been with him and with his children together: it did eat of his own bread, and drank of his cup, and was to him as a daughter. And there came a guest unto the rich man; and he spared to take of the flock of his own ewe-lambs, and from the herds of his own oxen, to entertain the guest; but he took the ewe-lamb of the poor man, and set it before the man that had come unto him. And David's anger was greatly kindled against the man; and he said to Nathan, As the Lord liveth, the man that hath done this thing shall surely die (filius mortis est):and he shall restore the lamb fourfold, because he hath done this thing, and because he had no pity for the poor man. And Nathan said unto him, Thou art the man who hast done this." 4177 2 Sam. xii. 1, etc. And then he proceeds with the rest [of the narrative], upbraiding him, and recounting God's benefits towards him, and [showing him] how much his conduct had displeased the Lord. For [he declared] that works of this nature were not pleasing to God, but that great wrath was suspended over his house. David, however, was struck with remorse on hearing this, and exclaimed, "I have sinned against the Lord;" and he sung a penitential psalm, waiting for the coming of the Lord, who washes and makes clean the man who had been fast bound with [the chain of] sin. In like manner it was with regard to Solomon, while he continued to judge uprightly, and to declare the wisdom of God, and built the temple as the type of truth, and set forth the glories of God, and announced the peace about to come upon the nations, and prefigured the kingdom of Christ, and spake three thousand parables about the Lord's advent, and five thousand songs, singing praise to God, and expounded the wisdom of God in creation, [discoursing] as to the nature of every tree, every herb, and of all fowls, quadrupeds, and fishes; and he said, "Will God whom the heavens cannot contain, really dwell with men upon the earth?" 4178 1 Kings viii. 27. And he pleased God, and was the admiration of all; and all kings of the earth sought an interview with him (quærebant faciem ejus) that they might hear the wisdom which God had conferred upon him. 4179 1 Kings iv. 34. The queen of the south, too, came to him from the ends of the earth, to ascertain the wisdom that was in him: 4180 1 Kings x. 1. she whom the Lord also referred to as one who should rise up in the judgment with the nations of those men who do hear His words, and do not believe in Him, and should condemn them, inasmuch as she submitted herself to the wisdom announced by the servant of God, while these men despised that wisdom which proceeded directly from the Son of God. For Solomon was a servant, but Christ is indeed the Son of God, and the Lord of Solomon. While, therefore, he served God without blame, and ministered to His dispensations, then was he glorified: but when he took wives from all nations, and permitted them to set up idols in Israel, the Scripture spake thus concerning him: "And King Solomon was a lover of women, and he took to himself foreign women; and it came to pass, when Solomon was old, his heart was not perfect with the Lord his God. And the foreign women turned away his heart after strange gods. And Solomon did evil in the sight of the Lord: he did not walk after the Lord, as did David his father. And the Lord was angry with Solomon; for his heart was not perfect with the Lord, as was the heart of David his father." 4181 1 Kings xi. 1. The Scripture has thus sufficiently reproved him, as the presbyter remarked, in order that no flesh may glory in the sight of the Lord.

Summary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus testifies, "As I have heard from a certain presbyter, who had heard it from those who had seen the apostles, and from those who had been their disciples, the punishment [declared] in Scripture was sufficient for the ancients in regard to what they did without the Spirit's guidance." Irenaeus then points out, "For as God is no respecter of persons, He inflicted a proper punishment on deeds displeasing to Him. As in the case of David, when he suffered persecution from Saul for righteousness' sake, and fled from King Saul," referring to 1 Samuel 19:9-10, "and would not avenge himself of his enemy," referring to 1 Samuel 24, "he both sung the advent of Christ, and instructed the nations in wisdom, and did everything after the Spirit's guidance, and pleased God." Irenaeus then affirms, "But when his lust prompted him to take Bathsheba, the wife of Uriah, the Scripture said concerning him, "Now, the thing (sermo) which David had done appeared wicked in the eyes of the Lord," referring to 2 Samuel 11:27, "and Nathan the prophet is sent to him, pointing out to him his crime, in order that he, passing sentence upon and condemning himself, might obtain mercy and forgiveness from Christ: "And [Nathan] said to him, There were two men in one city; the one rich, and the other poor. The rich man had exceeding many flocks and herds; but the poor man had nothing, save one little ewe-lamb, which he possessed, and nourished up; and it had been with him and with his children together: it did eat of his own bread, and drank of his cup, and was to him as a daughter. And there came a guest unto the rich man; and he spared to take of the flock of his own ewe-lambs, and from the herds of his own oxen, to entertain the guest; but he took the ewe-lamb of the poor man, and set it before the man that had come unto him. And David's anger was greatly kindled against the man; and he said to Nathan, As the Lord liveth, the man that hath done this thing shall surely die (filius mortis est):and he shall restore the lamb fourfold, because he hath done this thing, and because he had no pity for the poor man. And Nathan said unto him, Thou art the man who hast done this," referring to 2 Samuel 12:1-7. Irenaeus continues his narrative of David's life as he says, "And then he proceeds with the rest [of the narrative], upbraiding him, and recounting God's benefits towards him, and [showing him] how much his conduct had displeased the Lord. For [he declared] that works of this nature were not pleasing to God, but that great wrath was suspended over his house," referring to 2 Samuel 12:9-12. Irenaeus then continues as he records, "David, however, was struck with remorse on hearing this, and exclaimed, "I have sinned against the Lord," referring to 2 Samuel 12:13, "and he sung a penitential psalm, waiting for the coming of the Lord, who washes and makes clean the man who had been fast bound with [the chain of] sin," referring to Psalm 51. Irenaeus continues as he records more, "In like manner it was with regard to Solomon, while he continued to judge uprightly, and to declare the wisdom of God, and built the temple as the type of truth, and set forth the glories of God, and announced the peace about to come upon the nations, and prefigured the kingdom of Christ, and spake three thousand parables about the Lord's advent, and five thousand songs, singing praise to God, and expounded the wisdom of God in creation, [discoursing] as to the nature of every tree, every herb, and of all fowls, quadrupeds, and fishes; and he said, "Will God whom the heavens cannot contain, really dwell with men upon the earth?," referring to 1 Kings 8:27. Irenaeus continues as he records yet more, "And he pleased God, and was the admiration of all; and all kings of the earth sought an interview with him (quærebant faciem ejus) that they might hear the wisdom which God had conferred upon him," referring to 1 Kings 4:34. Irenaeus further records that, "The queen of the south, too, came to him from the ends of the earth, to ascertain the wisdom that was in him," referring to 1 Kings 10:1, "she whom the Lord also referred to as one who should rise up in the judgment with the nations of those men who do hear His words, and do not believe in Him, and should condemn them, inasmuch as she submitted herself to the wisdom announced by the servant of God, while these men despised that wisdom which proceeded directly from the Son of God," referring to Matthew 12:42. Irenaeus then testifies, "For Solomon was a servant, but Christ is indeed the Son of God, and the Lord of Solomon." And Irenaeus again records, "While, therefore, he served God without blame, and ministered to His dispensations, then was he glorified: but when he took wives from all nations, and permitted them to set up idols in Israel, the Scripture spake thus concerning him: "And King Solomon was a lover of women, and he took to himself foreign women; and it came to pass, when Solomon was old, his heart was not perfect with the Lord his God. And the foreign women turned away his heart after strange gods. And Solomon did evil in the sight of the Lord: he did not walk after the Lord, as did David his father. And the Lord was angry with Solomon; for his heart was not perfect with the Lord, as was the heart of David his father," referring to 1 Kings 11:1-13. Irenaeus then testifies that, "The Scripture has thus sufficiently reproved him, as the presbyter remarked, in order that no flesh may glory in the sight of the Lord."

Commentary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus testifies, "As I have heard from a certain presbyter, who had heard it from those who had seen the apostles, and from those who had been their disciples, the punishment [declared] in Scripture was sufficient for the ancients in regard to what they did without the Spirit's guidance." Irenaeus then points out, "For as God is no respecter of persons, He inflicted a proper punishment on deeds displeasing to Him. As in the case of David, when he suffered persecution from Saul for righteousness' sake, and fled from King Saul," referring to 1 Samuel 19 (NASB):9 Now there was an evil spirit from the LORD on Saul as he was sitting in his house with his spear in his hand, and David was playing the harp with his hand. 10 Saul tried to pin David to the wall with the spear, but he slipped away out of Saul's presence, so that he stuck the spear into the wall. And David fled and escaped that night.

Irenaeus continues as he says, "and would not avenge himself of his enemy," referring to 1 Samuel 24 (HCSB):9 David said to Saul, "Why do you listen to the words of people who say, 'Look, David intends to harm you'? 10 You can see with your own eyes that the LORD handed you over to me today in the cave. Someone advised me to kill you, but I took pity on you and said: I won't lift my hand against my lord, since he is the LORD's anointed. 11 See, my father! Look at the corner of your robe in my hand, for I cut it off, but I didn't kill you. Look and recognize that there is no evil or rebellion in me. I haven't sinned against you even though you are hunting me down to take my life. 12 "May the LORD judge between you and me, and may the LORD take vengeance on you for me, but my hand will never be against you. 13 As the old proverb says, 'Wickedness comes from wicked people.' My hand will never be against you. 14 Who has the king of Israel come after? What are you chasing after? A dead dog? A flea? 15 May the LORD be judge and decide between you and me. May He take notice and plead my case and deliver me from you."

And Irenaeus continues, "he both sung the advent of Christ, and instructed the nations in wisdom, and did everything after the Spirit's guidance, and pleased God." Irenaeus then affirms, "But when his lust prompted him to take Bathsheba, the wife of Uriah, the Scripture said concerning him, "Now, the thing (sermo) which David had done appeared wicked in the eyes of the Lord," referring to 2 Samuel 11 (NASB):27 When the time of mourning was over, David sent and brought her to his house and she became his wife; then she bore him a son. But the thing that David had done was evil in the sight of the LORD.

Irenaeus continues further, "and Nathan the prophet is sent to him, pointing out to him his crime, in order that he, passing sentence upon and condemning himself, might obtain mercy and forgiveness from Christ: "And [Nathan] said to him, There were two men in one city; the one rich, and the other poor. The rich man had exceeding many flocks and herds; but the poor man had nothing, save one little ewe-lamb, which he possessed, and nourished up; and it had been with him and with his children together: it did eat of his own bread, and drank of his cup, and was to him as a daughter. And there came a guest unto the rich man; and he spared to take of the flock of his own ewe-lambs, and from the herds of his own oxen, to entertain the guest; but he took the ewe-lamb of the poor man, and set it before the man that had come unto him. And David's anger was greatly kindled against the man; and he said to Nathan, As the Lord liveth, the man that hath done this thing shall surely die (filius mortis est):and he shall restore the lamb fourfold, because he hath done this thing, and because he had no pity for the poor man. And Nathan said unto him, Thou art the man who hast done this," referring to 2 Samuel 12 (HCSB):1 So the LORD sent Nathan to David. When he arrived, he said to him: There were two men in a certain city, one rich and the other poor. 2 The rich man had a large number of sheep and cattle, 3 but the poor man had nothing except one small ewe lamb that he had bought. He raised it, and it grew up, living with him and his children. It shared his meager food and drank from his cup; it slept in his arms, and it was like a daughter to him. 4 Now a traveler came to the rich man, but the rich man could not bring himself to take one of his own sheep or cattle to prepare for the traveler who had come to him. Instead, he took the poor man's lamb and prepared it for his guest. 5 David was infuriated with the man and said to Nathan: "As the LORD lives, the man who did this deserves to die! 6 Because he has done this thing and shown no pity, he must pay four lambs for that lamb." 7 Nathan replied to David, "You are the man! This is what the LORD God of Israel says: 'I anointed you king over Israel, and I delivered you from the hand of Saul. 8 I gave your master's house to you and your master's wives into your arms, and I gave you the house of Israel and Judah, and if that was not enough, I would have given you even more.

Irenaeus continues his narrative of David's life as he says, "And then he proceeds with the rest [of the narrative], upbraiding him, and recounting God's benefits towards him, and [showing him] how much his conduct had displeased the Lord. For [he declared] that works of this nature were not pleasing to God, but that great wrath was suspended over his house," referring to 2 Samuel 12 (HCSB):9 Why then have you despised the command of the LORD by doing what I consider evil? You struck down Uriah the Hittite with the sword and took his wife as your own wife—you murdered him with the Ammonite's sword. 10 Now therefore, the sword will never leave your house because you despised Me and took the wife of Uriah the Hittite to be your own wife.' 11 "This is what the LORD says, 'I am going to bring disaster on you from your own family: I will take your wives and give them to another before your very eyes, and he will sleep with them publicly. 12 You acted in secret, but I will do this before all Israel and in broad daylight.'"

Irenaeus then continues as he records, "David, however, was struck with remorse on hearing this, and exclaimed, "I have sinned against the Lord," referring to 2 Samuel 12 (NASB):13 Then David said to Nathan, "I have sinned against the LORD.” And Nathan said to David, “The LORD also has taken away your sin; you shall not die.

Irenaeus continues as he says, “and he sung a penitential psalm, waiting for the coming of the Lord, who washes and makes clean the man who had been fast bound with [the chain of] sin,” referring to Psalm 51 (HCSB): FOR THE CHOIR DIRECTOR. A PSALM OF DAVID, WHEN NATHAN THE PROPHET CAME TO HIM, AFTER HE HAD GONE IN TO BATHSHEBA. 1 Be gracious to me, God, according to Your faithful love; according to Your abundant compassion, blot out my rebellion. 2 Wash away my guilt and cleanse me from my sin. 3 For I am conscious of my rebellion, and my sin is always before me. 4 Against You—You alone—I have sinned and done this evil in Your sight. So You are right when You pass sentence; You are blameless when You judge. 5 Indeed, I was guilty when I was born; I was sinful when my mother conceived me. 6 Surely You desire integrity in the inner self, and You teach me wisdom deep within. 7 Purify me with hyssop, and I will be clean; wash me, and I will be whiter than snow. 8 Let me hear joy and gladness; let the bones You have crushed rejoice. 9 Turn Your face away from my sins and blot out all my guilt. 10 God, create a clean heart for me and renew a steadfast spirit within me. 11 Do not banish me from Your presence or take Your Holy Spirit from me. 12 Restore the joy of Your salvation to me, and give me a willing spirit. 13 Then I will teach the rebellious Your ways, and sinners will return to You. 14 Save me from the guilt of bloodshed, God, the God of my salvation, and my tongue will sing of Your righteousness. 15 Lord, open my lips, and my mouth will declare Your praise. 16 You do not want a sacrifice, or I would give it; You are not pleased with a burnt offering. 17 The sacrifice pleasing to God is a broken spirit. God, You will not despise a broken and humbled heart. 18 In Your good pleasure, cause Zion to prosper; build the walls of Jerusalem. 19 Then You will delight in righteous sacrifices, whole burnt offerings; then bulls will be offered on Your altar.

Irenaeus continues as he then narrates, “In like manner it was with regard to Solomon, while he continued to judge uprightly, and to declare the wisdom of God, and built the temple as the type of truth, and set forth the glories of God, and announced the peace about to come upon the nations, and prefigured the kingdom of Christ, and spake three thousand parables about the Lord’s advent, and five thousand songs, singing praise to God, and expounded the wisdom of God in creation, [discoursing] as to the nature of every tree, every herb, and of all fowls, quadrupeds, and fishes; and he said, “Will God whom the heavens cannot contain, really dwell with men upon the earth?” referring in context to 1 Kings 8 (HCSB):22 Then Solomon stood before the altar of the LORD in front of the entire congregation of Israel and spread out his hands toward heaven. 23 He said: LORD God of Israel, there is no God like You in heaven above or on earth below, keeping the gracious covenant with Your servants who walk before You with their whole heart. 24 You have kept what You promised to Your servant, my father David. You spoke directly to him and You fulfilled Your promise by Your power as it is today. 25 Therefore, LORD God of Israel, keep what You promised to Your servant, my father David: You will never fail to have a man to sit before Me on the throne of Israel, if only your sons guard their walk before Me as you have walked before Me. 26 Now LORD God of Israel, please confirm what You promised to Your servant, my father David. 27 But will God indeed live on earth? Even heaven, the highest heaven, cannot contain You, much less this temple I have built. 28 Listen to Your servant’s prayer and his petition, LORD my God, so that You may hear the cry and the prayer that Your servant prays before You today, 29 so that Your eyes may watch over this temple night and day, toward the place where You said: My name will be there, and so that You may hear the prayer that Your servant prays toward this place.

And Irenaeus continues, “And he pleased God, and was the admiration of all; and all kings of the earth sought an interview with him (quærebant faciem ejus) that they might hear the wisdom which God had conferred upon him,” referring to 1 Kings 4 (NASB):34 Men came from all peoples to hear the wisdom of Solomon, from all the kings of the earth who had heard of his wisdom.

Irenaeus further records that, “The queen of the south, too, came to him from the ends of the earth, to ascertain the wisdom that was in him,” referring in context to 1 Kings 10 (HCSB):1 The queen of Sheba heard about Solomon’s fame connected with the name of Yahweh and came to test him with difficult questions. 2 She came to Jerusalem with a very large entourage, with camels bearing spices, gold in great abundance, and precious stones. She came to Solomon and spoke to him about everything that was on her mind. 3 So Solomon answered all her questions; nothing was too difficult for the king to explain to her. 4 When the queen of Sheba observed all of Solomon’s wisdom, the palace he had built, 5 the food at his table, his servants’ residence, his attendants' service and their attire, his cupbearers, and the burnt offerings he offered at the LORD's temple, it took her breath away. 6 She said to the king, "The report I heard in my own country about your words and about your wisdom is true. 7 But I didn't believe the reports until I came and saw with my own eyes. Indeed, I was not even told half. Your wisdom and prosperity far exceed the report I heard. 8 How happy are your men. How happy are these servants of yours, who always stand in your presence hearing your wisdom. 9 May Yahweh your God be praised! He delighted in you and put you on the throne of Israel, because of the LORD's eternal love for Israel. He has made you king to carry out justice and righteousness." 10 Then she gave the king four and a half tons of gold, a great quantity of spices, and precious stones. Never again did such a quantity of spices arrive as those the queen of Sheba gave to King Solomon.

And Irenaeus continues as he affirms, "she whom the Lord also referred to as one who should rise up in the judgment with the nations of those men who do hear His words, and do not believe in Him, and should condemn them, inasmuch as she submitted herself to the wisdom announced by the servant of God, while these men despised that wisdom which proceeded directly from the Son of God," referring to Jesus' testimony in Matthew 12 (NASB):42 "The Queen of the South will rise up with this generation at the judgment and will condemn it, because she came from the ends of the earth to hear the wisdom of Solomon; and behold, something greater than Solomon is here.

Irenaeus then testifies, "For Solomon was a servant, but Christ is indeed the Son of God, and the Lord of Solomon." And Irenaeus again records, "While, therefore, he served God without blame, and ministered to His dispensations, then was he glorified: but when he took wives from all nations, and permitted them to set up idols in Israel, the Scripture spake thus concerning him: "And King Solomon was a lover of women, and he took to himself foreign women; and it came to pass, when Solomon was old, his heart was not perfect with the Lord his God. And the foreign women turned away his heart after strange gods. And Solomon did evil in the sight of the Lord: he did not walk after the Lord, as did David his father. And the Lord was angry with Solomon; for his heart was not perfect with the Lord, as was the heart of David his father," referring to 1 Kings 11 (HCSB):1 King Solomon loved many foreign women in addition to Pharaoh's daughter: Moabite, Ammonite, Edomite, Sidonian, and Hittite women 2 from the nations that the LORD had told the Israelites about, "Do not intermarry with them, and they must not intermarry with you, because they will turn you away from Me to their gods." Solomon was deeply attached to these women and loved them. 3 He had 700 wives who were princesses and 300 concubines, and they turned his heart away from the LORD. 4 When Solomon was old, his wives seduced him to follow other gods. He was not completely devoted to Yahweh his God, as his father David had been. 5 Solomon followed Ashtoreth, the goddess of the Sidonians, and Milcom, the detestable idol of the Ammonites. 6 Solomon did what was evil in the LORD's sight, and unlike his father David, he did not completely follow Yahweh. 7 At that time, Solomon built a high place for Chemosh, the detestable idol of Moab, and for Milcom, the detestable idol of the Ammonites, on the hill across from Jerusalem. 8 He did the same for all his foreign wives, who were burning incense and offering sacrifices to their gods. 9 The LORD was angry with Solomon, because his heart had turned away from Yahweh, the God of Israel, who had appeared to him twice. 10 He had commanded him about this, so that he would not follow other gods, but Solomon did not do what the LORD had commanded. 11 Then the LORD said to Solomon, "Since you have done this and did not keep My covenant and My statutes, which I commanded you, I will tear the kingdom away from you and give it to your servant. 12 However, I will not do it during your lifetime because of your father David; I will tear it out of your son's hand. 13 Yet I will not tear the entire kingdom away from him. I will give one tribe to your son because of my servant David and because of Jerusalem that I chose."

Irenaeus then testifies that, "The Scripture has thus sufficiently reprovved him, as the presbyter remarked, in order that no flesh may glory in the sight of the Lord." This chapter tells us that Irenaeus was very familiar with the Old Testament, and that he interprets it correctly. Paul tells us that everything in the Old Testament was written for our instruction as he says in 1 Corinthians 10 (NASB):11 Now these things happened to them as an example, and they were written for our instruction, upon whom the ends of the ages have come.

And so Irenaeus tells us that "the punishment [declared] in Scripture was sufficient for the ancients in regard to what they did without the Spirit's guidance. For as God is no respecter of persons, He inflicted a proper punishment on deeds displeasing to Him."

In the life of David Irenaeus recalls the wonderful things he did in serving the Lord. Irenaeus uses instances from Scripture to illustrate David's goodness and how he pleased God. But he also quotes from the same Scriptures to show that David did not always do good. In the case of Bathsheba, David took another man's wife, namely Uriah the Hittite. Not only so but he had Uriah murdered through Joab, the commander of his armies. Irenaeus says that this "thing (sermo) which David had done appeared wicked in the eyes of the Lord." So we see that Irenaeus believed that God is pleased when we obey Him, and displeased when we do not follow "the Spirit's guidance."

Then in Solomon's life, there are many good works that the Scripture describes as his which Irenaeus mentions. Yet, the Scripture also tells of God's justice in dealing with Solomon, as Irenaeus rightly comments.

Irenaeus shows us in this chapter that God's justice is proper and right and fits the offense. God is not capricious or arbitrary when he deals with us. And so, Irenaeus says that, because He meets out punishment in this way, this does not make Him another god, as if He were only the god of the Old Testament, while another, who is loving, is the god of the New Testament. But rather, Irenaeus explains to us that God is just and does not condone wickedness on anyone be they King or pauper. He is no respecter of persons as Irenaeus notes, and Paul tells us in Romans 2 (NASB):11 For there is no partiality with God.

God judges righteously and with wisdom. To have relationship with Him one must be holy for He is holy. Just the same, God disciplines those He loves as we read in Hebrews 12 (NASB):7 It is for discipline that you endure; God deals with you as with sons; for what son is there whom his father does not discipline? 8 But if you are without discipline, of which all have become partakers, then you are illegitimate children and not sons. 9 Furthermore, we had earthly fathers to discipline us, and we respected them; shall we not much rather be subject to the Father of spirits, and live? 10 For they disciplined us for a short time as seemed best to them, but He disciplines us for our good, so that we may share His holiness. 11 All discipline for the moment seems not to be joyful, but sorrowful; yet to those who have been trained by it, afterwards it yields the peaceful fruit of righteousness.

Irenaeus quotes the scriptures extensively here and we see his reliance and his understanding of the scriptures he is quoting, for he quotes them in the right context.

Book 4: Chapter XXXII.—That one God was the author of both Testaments, is confirmed by the authority of a presbyter who had been taught by the apostles.

1. After this fashion also did a presbyter, 4242 Harvey remarks here, that this can hardly be the same presbyter mentioned before, "who was only a hearer of those who had heard the apostles. Irenæus may here mean the venerable martyr Polycarp, bishop of Smyrna." a disciple of the apostles, reason with respect to the two testaments, proving that both were truly from one and the same God. For [he maintained] that there was no other God besides Him who made and fashioned us, and that the discourse of those men has no foundation who affirm that this world of ours was made either by angels, or by any other power whatsoever, or by another God. For if a man be once moved away from the Creator of all things, and if he grant that this creation to which we belong was formed by any other or through any other [than the one God], he must of necessity fall into much inconsistency, and many contradictions of this sort; to which he will [be able to] furnish no explanations which can be regarded as either probable or true. And, for this reason, those who introduce other doctrines conceal from us the opinion which they themselves hold respecting God, because they are aware of the untenable 4243 "Quassum et futile." The text varies much in the mss. and absurd nature of their doctrine, and are afraid lest, should they be vanquished, they should have some difficulty in making good their escape. But if any one believes in [only] one God, who also made all things by the Word, as Moses likewise says, "God said, Let there be light: and there was light;" 4244 Gen. i. 3. and as we read in the Gospel, "All things were made by Him; and without Him was nothing made;" 4245 John i. 3. and the Apostle Paul [says] in like manner, "There is one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father, who is above all, and through all, and in us all" 4246 Eph. iv. 5, 6 — this man will first of all "hold the head, from which the whole body is compacted and bound together, and, through means of every joint according to the measure of the ministration of each several part, maketh increase of the body to the edification of itself in love.” 4247 Eph. iv. 16; Col. ii. 19. And then shall every word also seem consistent to him, 4248 “Constabit ei. if he for his part diligently read the Scriptures in company with those who are presbyters in the Church, among whom is the apostolic doctrine, as I have pointed out.

Summary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus testifies, “After this fashion also did a presbyter, a disciple of the apostles, reason with respect to the two testaments, proving that both were truly from one and the same God. For [he maintained] that there was no other God besides Him who made and fashioned us, and that the discourse of those men has no foundation who affirm that this world of ours was made either by angels, or by any other power whatsoever, or by another God.” Irenaeus does not here name the presbyter, but certainly his comment is according to the Scriptures. Irenaeus continues as he argues, “For if a man be once moved away from the Creator of all things, and if he grant that this creation to which we belong was formed by any other or through any other [than the one God], he must of necessity fall into much inconsistency, and many contradictions of this sort; to which he will [be able to] furnish no explanations which can be regarded as either probable or true. And, for this reason, those who introduce other doctrines conceal from us the opinion which they themselves hold respecting God, because they are aware of the untenable and absurd nature of their doctrine, and are afraid lest, should they be vanquished, they should have some difficulty in making good their escape.” Irenaeus then affirms, “But if any one believes in [only] one God, who also made all things by the Word, as Moses likewise says, “God said, Let there be light: and there was light,” referring to Genesis 1:3, “and as we read in the Gospel, “All things were made by Him; and without Him was nothing made,” referring to John 1:3, “and the Apostle Paul [says] in like manner, “There is one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father, who is above all, and through all, and in us all,” referring to Ephesians 4:5-6, “—this man will first of all “hold the head, from which the whole body is compacted and bound together, and, through means of every joint according to the measure of the ministration of each several part, maketh increase of the body to the edification of itself in love,” referring to Colossians 2:19 and Ephesians 4:16. Irenaeus then concludes as he advises, “And then shall every word also seem consistent to him, if he for his part diligently read the Scriptures in company with those who are presbyters in the Church, among whom is the apostolic doctrine, as I have pointed out.”

For [he maintained] that there was no other God besides Him who made and fashioned us, and that the discourse of those men has no foundation who affirm that this world of ours was made either by angels, or by any other power whatsoever, or by another God.” Irenaeus does not here name the presbyter, but certainly his comment is in accordance with the Scriptures. Irenaeus continues as he argues, “For if a man be once moved away from the Creator of all things, and if he grant that this creation to which we belong was formed by any other or through any other [than the one God], he must of necessity fall into much inconsistency, and many contradictions of this sort; to which he will [be able to] furnish no explanations which can be regarded as either probable or true. And, for this reason, those who introduce other doctrines conceal from us the opinion which they themselves hold respecting God, because they are aware of the untenable and absurd nature of their doctrine, and are afraid lest, should they be vanquished, they should have some difficulty in making good their escape.” Irenaeus then affirms, “But if any one believes in [only] one God, who also made all things by the Word, as Moses likewise says, “God said, Let there be light: and there was light,” referring to Genesis 1 (NASB):3 Then God said, "Let there be light"; and there was light.

Irenaeus continues as he shows the unity of Scripture and says, “and as we read in the Gospel, “All things were made by Him; and without Him was nothing made,” referring to John 1 (NASB):3 All things came into being through Him, and apart from Him nothing came into being that has come into being.

And again Irenaeus points out, “and the Apostle Paul [says] in like manner, “There is one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father, who is above all, and through all, and in us all,” referring to Ephesians

4 (NASB):4 There is one body and one Spirit, just as also you were called in one hope of your calling; 5 one Lord, one faith, one baptism, 6 one God and Father of all who is over all and through all and in all.

Speaking of the one who believes in only one God, who made all things, Irenaeus then affirms, “—this man will first of all “hold the head, from which the whole body is compacted and bound together, and, through means of every joint according to the measure of the ministration of each several part, maketh increase of the body to the edification of itself in love,” referring in context to Colossians 2 (NASB):18 Let no one keep defrauding you of your prize by delighting in self-abasement and the worship of the angels, taking his stand on visions he has seen, inflated without cause by his fleshly mind, 19 and not holding fast to the head, from whom the entire body, being supplied and held together by the joints and ligaments, grows with a growth which is from God.

And to Ephesians 4 (NASB):14 As a result, we are no longer to be children, tossed here and there by waves and carried about by every wind of doctrine, by the trickery of men, by craftiness in deceitful scheming; 15 but speaking the truth in love, we are to grow up in all aspects into Him who is the head, even Christ, 16 from whom the whole body, being fitted and held together by what every joint supplies, according to the proper working of each individual part, causes the growth of the body for the building up of itself in love.

Irenaeus then concludes as he advises, “And then shall every word also seem consistent to him, if he for his part diligently read the Scriptures in company with those who are presbyters in the Church, among whom is the apostolic doctrine, as I have pointed out.”

In summary, here again Irenaeus is defending the Church against Gnosticism. He says a presbyter, leaving him anonymous but probably someone who was well known at the time, and who was a disciple of the apostles, establishing his apostolic succession, did “reason with respect to the two testaments, proving that both were truly from one and the same God.” So we see that, not only this Presbyter but also Irenaeus himself, relied heavily on the Scriptures to support his faith. Irenaeus affirms that to believe that another God made us besides the true God, who is God of both Testaments, is to “fall into much inconsistency, and many contradictions” which you will not be able to resolve. He says that those who believe teachings like this, which have no foundation in the word of God, know that their teaching is untenable and are fearful of being found out. Irenaeus then, rapid fire, shows the unity of teaching in the two Testaments, quoting both the Old and New Testament Scriptures which assert that God is one who created heaven and the earth.

Irenaeus testifies that the word of God is consistent and does not contradict itself, nor does it state a position that is untenable. The apostolic doctrine to which Irenaeus refers is simply the teaching of the apostles, that there is one God who made all things. However, he also probably includes in the apostolic doctrine his statement of faith as in Book 1: Chapter 10, paragraph 1, in which he says “to Christ Jesus, our Lord, and God, and Saviour, and King, according to the will of the invisible Father, “every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth, and that every tongue should confess” to Him.” I have quoted this statement in its entirety in Chapter 4: Irenaeus’ Statement of Faith. Irenaeus also encourages us to avail ourselves of the teaching of our pastors, or as he says, “with those who are presbyters in the Church” who preach according to the apostolic doctrine.

Incidentally, we see that Irenaeus mentions two testaments here. This is an evidence of the canon being formed during his time, but not closed as we have seen with his mention of the passage in the Shepherd of Hermas as Scripture in Book 4: Chapter XX, paragraph 2, covered in this Chapter 5: His Reliance on the Scriptures. I believe Irenaeus did not know whether all of the apostolic writings had been collected yet. This is, I believe, what motivated him to place such emphasis on maintaining the apostolic succession of the presbyters. We will look in detail at this belief in Chapter 20: The Teaching of Apostolic Succession.

Book 5: Chapter VIII.—The gifts of the Holy Spirit which we receive prepare us for incorruption, render us spiritual, and separate us from carnal men. These two classes are signified by the clean and unclean animals in the legal dispensation.

4. Now the law has figuratively predicted all these, delineating man by the [various] animals:

4502 Lev. xi. 2; Deut. xiv. 3, etc. whatsoever of these, says [the Scripture], have a double hoof and ruminates, it proclaims as clean; but whatsoever of them do not possess one or other of these [properties], it sets aside by themselves as unclean. Who then are the clean? Those who make their way by faith steadily towards the Father and the Son; for this is denoted by the steadiness of those which divide the hoof; and they meditate day and night upon the words of God, 4503 Ps. i. 2. that they may be adorned with good works: for this is the meaning of the ruminants. The unclean, however, are those which do neither divide the hoof nor ruminates; that is, those persons who have neither faith in God, nor do meditate on His words: and such is the abomination of the Gentiles. But as to those animals which do indeed chew the cud, but have not the double hoof, and are themselves unclean, we have in them a figurative description of the Jews, who certainly have the words of God in their mouth, but who do not fix their rooted steadfastness in the Father and in the Son; wherefore they are an unstable generation. For those animals which have the hoof all in one piece easily slip; but those which have it divided are more sure-footed, their cleft hoofs succeeding each other as they advance, and the one hoof supporting the other. In like manner, too, those are unclean which have the double hoof but do not ruminates: this is plainly an indication of all heretics, and of those who do not meditate on the words of God, neither are adorned with works of righteousness; to whom also the Lord says, "Why call ye Me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say to you?" 4504 Luke vi. 46. For men of this stamp do indeed say that they believe in the Father and the Son, but they never meditate as they should upon the things of God, neither are they adorned with works of righteousness; but, as I have already observed, they have adopted the lives of swine and of dogs, giving themselves over to filthiness, to gluttony, and recklessness of all sorts. Justly, therefore, did the apostle call all such "carnal" and "animal," 4505 1 Cor. ii. 14, 1 Cor. iii. 1, etc.—[all those, namely], who through their own unbelief and luxury do not receive the Divine Spirit, and in their various phases cast out from themselves the life-giving Word, and walk stupidly after their own lusts: the prophets, too, spake of them as beasts of burden and wild beasts; custom likewise has viewed them in the light of cattle and irrational creatures; and the law has pronounced them unclean.

Summary: In paragraph four, Irenaeus affirms, "Now the law has figuratively predicted all these, delineating man by the [various] animals," referring in part to Leviticus 11:2 and Deuteronomy 14:3, "whatsoever of these, says [the Scripture], have a double hoof and ruminates, it proclaims as clean; but whatsoever of them do not possess one or other of these [properties], it sets aside by themselves as unclean." Irenaeus then asks, "Who then are the clean?" And Irenaeus then answers, "Those who make their way by faith steadily towards the Father and the Son; for this is denoted by the steadiness of those which divide the hoof; and they meditate day and night upon the words of God," referring to Psalm 1:2, "that they may be adorned with good works: for this is the meaning of the ruminants." Irenaeus continues as he says, "The unclean, however, are those which do neither divide the hoof nor ruminates; that is, those persons who have neither faith in God, nor do meditate on His words: and such is the abomination of the Gentiles." Irenaeus continues as he declares, "But as to those animals which do indeed chew the cud, but have not the double hoof, and are themselves unclean, we have in them a figurative description of the Jews, who certainly have the words of God in their mouth, but who do not fix their rooted steadfastness in the Father and in the Son; wherefore they are an unstable generation." Irenaeus then explains, "For those animals which have the hoof all in one piece easily slip; but those which have it divided are more sure-footed, their cleft hoofs succeeding each other as they advance, and the one hoof supporting the other. In like manner, too, those are unclean which have the double hoof but do not ruminates: this is plainly an indication of all heretics, and of those who do not meditate on the words of God, neither are adorned with works of righteousness; to whom also the Lord says, "Why call ye Me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say to you?," referring to Luke 6:46. Irenaeus then testifies, "For men of this stamp do indeed say that they believe in the Father and the Son, but they never meditate as they should upon the things of God, neither are they adorned with works of righteousness; but, as I have already observed, they have adopted the lives of swine and of dogs, giving themselves over to filthiness, to gluttony, and recklessness of all sorts. Justly, therefore, did the apostle call all such "carnal" and "animal," referring to 1 Corinthians 2:14, 3:1, "[all those, namely], who through their own unbelief and luxury do not receive the Divine Spirit, and in their various phases cast out from themselves the life-giving Word, and walk stupidly after their own lusts: the prophets, too, spake of them as beasts of burden and wild beasts,” referring to Psalm 49:12,20, “custom likewise has viewed them in the light of cattle and irrational creatures; and the law has pronounced them unclean.

Commentary: In paragraph four, Irenaeus affirms, “Now the law has figuratively predicted all these, delineating man by the [various] animals,” referring in context to Leviticus 11 (ESV):1 And the LORD spoke to Moses and Aaron, saying to them, 2 “Speak to the people of Israel, saying, These are the living things that you may eat among all the animals that are on the earth. 3 Whatever parts the hoof and is cloven-footed and chews the cud, among the animals, you may eat. 4 Nevertheless, among those that chew the cud or part the hoof, you shall not eat these: The camel, because it chews the cud but does not part the hoof, is unclean to you.

And to Deuteronomy 14 (ESV):1 “You are the sons of the LORD your God. You shall not cut yourselves or make any baldness on your foreheads for the dead. 2 For you are a people holy to the LORD your God, and the LORD has chosen you to be a people for his treasured possession, out of all the peoples who are on the face of the earth. 3 “You shall not eat any abomination. 4 These are the animals you may eat: the ox, the sheep, the goat, 5 the deer, the gazelle, the roebuck, the wild goat, the ibex, the antelope, and the mountain sheep. 6 Every animal that parts the hoof and has the hoof cloven in two and chews the cud, among the animals, you may eat. 7 Yet of those that chew the cud or have the hoof cloven you shall not eat these: the camel, the hare, and the rock badger, because they chew the cud but do not part the hoof, are unclean for you. 8 And the pig, because it parts the hoof but does not chew the cud, is unclean for you. Their flesh you shall not eat, and their carcasses you shall not touch.

Irenaeus then affirms, “whatsoever of these, says [the Scripture], have a double hoof and ruminates, it proclaims as clean; but whatsoever of them do not possess one or other of these [properties], it sets aside by themselves as unclean.” Irenaeus then composes an allegory as he asks, “Who then are the clean?” And Irenaeus then answers, “Those who make their way by faith steadily towards the Father and the Son; for this is denoted by the steadiness of those which divide the hoof; and they meditate day and night upon the words of God,” referring in context to Psalms 1 (ESV) 2 but his delight is in the law of the LORD, and on his law he meditates day and night.

Irenaeus then continues his allegory, “that they may be adorned with good works: for this is the meaning of the ruminants.” Irenaeus then continues by asserting, “The unclean, however, are those which do neither divide the hoof nor ruminates; that is, those persons who have neither faith in God, nor do meditate on His words: and such is the abomination of the Gentiles.” Irenaeus then declares, “But as to those animals which do indeed chew the cud, but have not the double hoof, and are themselves unclean, we have in them a figurative description of the Jews, who certainly have the words of God in their mouth, but who do not fix their rooted steadfastness in the Father and in the Son; wherefore they are an unstable generation.” Irenaeus then explains, “For those animals which have the hoof all in one piece easily slip; but those which have it divided are more sure-footed, their cleft hoofs succeeding each other as they advance, and the one hoof supporting the other. In like manner, too, those are unclean which have the double hoof but do not ruminates: this is plainly an indication of all heretics, and of those who do not meditate on the words of God, neither are adorned with works of righteousness; to whom also the Lord says, “Why call ye Me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say to you?,” referring to Luke 6 (ESV):46 “Why do you call me ‘Lord, Lord,’ and not do what I tell you?”

Irenaeus then testifies, “For men of this stamp do indeed say that they believe in the Father and the Son, but they never meditate as they should upon the things of God, neither are they adorned with works of righteousness; but, as I have already observed, they have adopted the lives of swine and of dogs, giving themselves over to filthiness, to gluttony, and recklessness of all sorts. Justly, therefore, did the apostle call all such “carnal” and “animal,” referring to 1 Corinthians 2 (NASB):14 But a natural man does not accept the things of the Spirit of God, for they are foolishness to him; and he cannot understand them, because they are spiritually appraised.

And to 1 Corinthians 3 (NASB):1 And I, brethren, could not speak to you as to spiritual men, but as to men of flesh, as to infants in Christ. 2 I gave you milk to drink, not solid food; for you were not yet able to receive it. Indeed, even now you are not yet able, 3 for you are still fleshly. For since there is jealousy and strife among you, are you not fleshly, and are you not walking like mere men? 4 For when one says, “I am of Paul,” and another, “I am of Apollos,” are you not mere men?

Irenaeus continues as he affirms, “[all those, namely], who through their own unbelief and luxury do not receive the Divine Spirit, and in their various phases cast out from themselves the life-giving Word, and walk stupidly after their own lusts: the prophets, too, spake of them as beasts of burden and wild beasts,” referring to Psalm 49 (ESV):12 Man in his pomp will not remain; he is like the beasts that perish.

And to Psalm 49 (ESV):20 Man in his pomp yet without understanding is like the beasts that perish.

Irenaeus then concludes, “custom likewise has viewed them in the light of cattle and irrational creatures; and the law has pronounced them unclean.

In this paragraph four, Irenaeus composes an allegory using the clean and unclean animals as his metaphors. I like his little parable but mostly because of the place he gives to the word of God in the believer’s life. He is to meditate on it, to stand firm on it, to produce good works by holding it steadfastly, and by doing the things it says. This is commendable, and is the rightful place of the word of God in the lives of all believers, and not just the presbytery. The word of God is for every believer, and every child of God as we read in Psalm 1 (ESV):1 Blessed is the man who walks not in the counsel of the wicked, nor stands in the way of sinners, nor sits in the seat of scoffers; 2 but his delight is in the law of the LORD, and on his law he meditates day and night. 3 He is like a tree planted by streams of water that yields its fruit in its season, and its leaf does not wither. In all that he does, he prospers.

Chapter 6: His Teaching on The Resurrection

Book 3: Chapter XII.—Doctrine of the rest of the apostles.

2. For Peter said, “Ye men of Israel, hear my words; Jesus of Nazareth, a man approved by God among you by powers, and wonders, and signs, which God did by Him in the midst of you, as ye yourselves also know: Him, being delivered by the determined counsel and foreknowledge of God, by the hands of wicked men ye have slain, affixing [to the cross]: whom God hath raised up, having loosed the pains of death; because it was not possible that he should be holden of them. For David speaketh concerning Him, 822 Psalm 15:8 I foresaw the Lord always before my face; for He is on my right hand, lest I should be moved: therefore did my heart rejoice, and my tongue was glad; moreover also, my flesh shall rest in hope: because Thou wilt not leave my soul in hell, neither wilt Thou give Thy Holy One to see corruption.” 823 Acts 2:22-27 Then he proceeds to speak confidently to them concerning the patriarch David, that he was dead and buried, and that his sepulchre is with them to this day. He said, “But since he was a prophet, and knew that God had sworn with an oath to him, that of the fruit of his body one should sit in his throne; foreseeing this, he spake of the resurrection of Christ, that He was not left in hell, neither did His flesh see corruption. This Jesus,” he said, “hath God raised up, of which we all are witnesses: who, being exalted by the right hand of God, receiving from the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost, hath shed forth this gift 824 The word δῶρον or δῶρημα is supposed by some to have existed in the earliest Greek texts, although not found in any extant now. It is thus quoted by others besides Irenæus. which ye now see and hear. For David has not ascended into the heavens; but he saith himself, The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit Thou on My right hand, until I make Thy foes Thy footstool. Therefore let all the house of Israel know assuredly, that God hath made that same Jesus, whom ye have crucified, both Lord and Christ.” 825 Acts 2:29-36 And when the multitudes exclaimed, “What shall we do then?” Peter says to them, “Repent, and be baptized everyone of you in the name of Jesus for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost.” 826 Acts 2:37-38 Thus the apostles did not preach another God, or another Fulness; nor, that the Christ who suffered and rose again was one, while he who flew off on high was another, and remained impassible; but that there was one and the same God the Father, and Christ Jesus who rose from the dead; and they preached faith in Him, to those who did not believe on the Son of God, and exhorted them out of the prophets, that the Christ whom God promised to send, He sent in Jesus, whom they crucified and God raised up.

Summary: Irenaeus testifies in paragraph two, “For Peter said, “Ye men of Israel, hear my words; Jesus of Nazareth, a man approved by God among you by powers, and wonders, and signs, which God did by Him in the midst of you, as ye yourselves also know: Him, being delivered by the determined counsel and foreknowledge of God, by the hands of wicked men ye have slain, affixing [to the cross]: whom God hath raised up, having loosed the pains of death; because it was not possible that he should be holden of them,” referring to Acts 2:22-24. Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “For David speaketh concerning Him, I foresaw the Lord always before my face; for He is on my right hand, lest I should be moved: therefore did my heart rejoice, and my tongue was glad; moreover also, my flesh shall rest in hope: because Thou wilt not leave my soul in hell, neither wilt Thou give Thy Holy One to see corruption,” referring to Acts 2:25-27. Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “Then he proceeds to speak confidently to them concerning the patriarch David, that he was dead and buried, and that his sepulchre is with them to this day. He said, “But since he was a prophet, and knew that God had sworn with an oath to him, that of the fruit of his body one should sit in his throne; foreseeing this, he spake of the resurrection of Christ, that He was not left in hell, neither did His flesh see corruption. This Jesus,” he said, “hath God raised up, of which we all are witnesses: who, being exalted by the right hand of God, receiving from the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost, hath shed forth this gift which ye now see and hear. For David has not ascended into the heavens; but he saith himself, The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit Thou on My right hand, until I make Thy foes Thy footstool. Therefore let all the house of Israel know assuredly, that God hath made that same Jesus, whom ye have crucified, both Lord and Christ,” referring to Acts 2:29-36. Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “And when the multitudes exclaimed, “What shall we do then?” Peter says to them, “Repent, and be baptized everyone of you in the name of Jesus for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost,” referring to Acts 2:37-38. Irenaeus then rebukes the Gnostics as he testifies, “Thus the apostles did not preach another God, or another Fulness; nor, that the Christ who suffered and rose again was one, while he who flew off on high was another, and remained impassible; but that there was one and the same God the Father, and Christ Jesus who rose from the dead; and they preached faith in Him, to those who did not believe on the Son of God, and exhorted them out of the prophets, that the Christ whom God promised to send, He sent in Jesus, whom they crucified and God raised up.”

Commentary:Irenaeus testifies in paragraph two, “For Peter said, “Ye men of Israel, hear my words; Jesus of Nazareth, a man approved by God among you by powers, and wonders, and signs, which God did by Him in the midst of you, as ye yourselves also know: Him, being delivered by the determined counsel and foreknowledge of God, by the hands of wicked men ye have slain, affixing [to the cross]: whom God hath raised up, having loosed the pains of death; because it was not possible that he should be holden of them,” referring to Acts 2 (ESV):22 “Men of Israel, hear these words: Jesus of Nazareth, a man attested to you by God with mighty works and wonders and signs that God did through him in your midst, as you yourselves know— 23 this Jesus, delivered up according to the definite plan and foreknowledge of God, you crucified and killed by the hands of lawless men. 24 God raised him up, loosing the pangs of death, because it was not possible for him to be held by it.

Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “For David speaketh concerning Him, I foresaw the Lord always before my face; for He is on my right hand, lest I should be moved: therefore did my heart rejoice, and my tongue was glad; moreover also, my flesh shall rest in hope: because Thou wilt not leave my soul in hell, neither wilt Thou give Thy Holy One to see corruption,” referring in context to Acts 2 (ESV):25 For David says concerning him, “I saw the Lord always before me, for he is at my right hand that I may not be shaken; 26 therefore my heart was glad, and my tongue rejoiced; my flesh also will dwell in hope. 27 For you will not abandon my soul to Hades, or let your Holy One see corruption. 28 You have made known to me the paths of life; you will make me full of gladness with your presence.’

Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “Then he proceeds to speak confidently to them concerning the patriarch David, that he was dead and buried, and that his sepulchre is with them to this day. He said, “But since he was a prophet, and knew that God had sworn with an oath to him, that of the fruit of his body one should sit in his throne; foreseeing this, he spake of the resurrection of Christ, that He was not left in hell, neither did His flesh see corruption. This Jesus,” he said, “hath God raised up, of which we all are witnesses: who, being exalted by the right hand of God, receiving from the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost, hath shed forth this gift which ye now see and hear. For David has not ascended into the heavens; but he saith himself, The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit Thou on My right hand, until I make Thy foes Thy footstool. Therefore let all the house of Israel know assuredly, that God hath made that same Jesus, whom ye have crucified, both Lord and Christ,” referring to Acts 2 (ESV):29 “Brothers, I may say to you with confidence about the patriarch David that he both died and was buried, and his tomb is with us to this day. 30 Being therefore a prophet, and knowing that God had sworn with an oath to him that he would set one of his descendants on his throne, 31 he foresaw and spoke about the resurrection of the Christ, that he was not abandoned to Hades, nor did his flesh see corruption. 32 This Jesus God raised up, and of that we all are witnesses. 33 Being therefore exalted at the right hand of God, and having received from the Father the promise of the Holy Spirit, he has poured out this that you yourselves are seeing and hearing. 34 For David did not ascend into the heavens, but he himself says, “The Lord said to my Lord, “Sit at my right hand, 35 until I make your enemies your footstool.” 36 Let all the house of Israel therefore know for certain that God has made him both Lord and Christ, this Jesus whom you crucified.”

Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “And when the multitudes exclaimed, “What shall we do then?” Peter says to them, “Repent, and be baptized everyone of you in the name of Jesus for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost,” referring to Acts 2 (ESV):37 Now when they heard this they were cut to the heart, and said to Peter and the rest of the apostles, “Brothers, what shall we do?” 38 And Peter said to them, “Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the forgiveness of your sins, and you will receive the gift of the Holy Spirit.”

Irenaeus then rebukes the Gnostics as he testifies, “Thus the apostles did not preach another God, or another Fulness; nor, that the Christ who suffered and rose again was one, while he who flew off on high was another, and remained impassible; but that there was one and the same God the Father, and Christ Jesus who rose from the dead; and they preached faith in Him, to those who did not believe on the Son of God, and exhorted them out of the prophets, that the Christ whom God promised to send, He sent in Jesus, whom they crucified and God raised up.”

Irenaeus here quotes the Scriptures in context, and leaves us in no doubt that he believed in the resurrection of Jesus Christ.

Book 5: Chapter III.—The power and glory of God shine forth in the weakness of human flesh, as He will render our body a participator of the resurrection and of immortality, although He has formed it from the dust of the earth; He will also bestow upon it the enjoyment of immortality, just as He grants it this short life in common with the soul.

1. The Apostle Paul has, moreover, in the most lucid manner, pointed out that man has been delivered over to his own infirmity, lest, being uplifted, he might fall away from the truth. Thus he says in the second [Epistle] to the Corinthians: “And lest I should be lifted up by the sublimity of the Revelation, there was given unto me a thorn in the flesh, the messenger of Satan to buffet me. And upon this I besought the Lord three times, that it might depart from me. But he said unto me, My grace is sufficient for thee; for strength is made perfect in weakness. Gladly therefore shall I rather glory in infirmities, that the power of Christ may dwell in me.” 4468 2 Cor. xii. 7–9. What, therefore? (as some may exclaim:) did the Lord wish, in that case, that His apostles should thus undergo buffeting, and that he should endure such infirmity? Even so it was; the word says it. For strength is made perfect in weakness, rendering him a better man who by means of his infirmity becomes acquainted with the power of God. For how could a man have learned that he is himself an infirm being, and mortal by nature, but that God is immortal and powerful, unless he had learned by experience what is in both? For there is nothing evil in learning one’s infirmities by endurance; yea, rather, it has even the beneficial effect of preventing him from forming an undue opinion of his own nature (non aberrare in natura sua). But the being lifted up against God, and taking His glory to one’s self, rendering man ungrateful, has brought much evil upon him. [And thus, I say, man must learn both things by experience], that he may not be destitute of truth and love either towards himself or his Creator. 4469 We have adopted here the explanation of Massuet, who considers the preceding period as merely parenthetical. Both Grabe and Harvey, however, would make conjectural emendations in the text, which seem to us to be inadmissible. But the experience of both confers upon him the true knowledge as to God and man, and increases his love towards God. Now, where there exists an increase of love, there a greater glory is wrought out by the power of God for those who love Him.

2. Those men, therefore, set aside the power of God, and do not consider what the word declares, when they dwell upon the infirmity of the flesh, but do not take into consideration the power of Him who raises it up from the dead. For if He does not vivify what is mortal, and does not bring back the corruptible to incorruption, He is not a God of power. But that He is powerful in all these respects, we ought to perceive from our origin, inasmuch as God, taking dust from the earth, formed man. And surely it is much more difficult and incredible, from non-existent bones, and nerves, and veins, and the rest of man’s organization, to bring it about that all this should be, and to make man an animated and rational creature, than to reintegrate again that which had been created and then afterwards decomposed into earth (for the reasons already mentioned), having thus passed into those [elements] from which man, who had no previous existence, was formed. For He who in the beginning caused him to have being who as yet was not, just when He pleased, shall much more reinstate again those who had a former existence, when it is His will [that they should inherit] the life granted by Him. And that flesh shall also be found fit for and capable of receiving the power of God, which at the beginning received the skilful touches of God; so that one part became the eye for seeing; another, the ear for hearing; another, the hand for feeling and working; another, the sinews stretched out everywhere, and holding the limbs together; another, arteries and veins, passages for the blood and the air; 4470 The ancients erroneously supposed that the arteries were air-vessels, from the fact that these organs, after death, appear quite empty, from all the blood stagnating in the veins when death supervenes. another, the various internal organs; another, the blood, which is the bond of union between soul and body. But why go [on in this strain]? Numbers would fail to express the multiplicity of parts in the human frame, which was made in no other way than by the great wisdom of God. But those things which partake of the skill and wisdom of God, do also partake of His power.

3. The flesh, therefore, is not destitute [of participation] in the constructive wisdom and power of God. But if the power of Him who is the bestower of life is made perfect in weakness—that is, in the flesh—let them inform us, when they maintain the incapacity of flesh to receive the life granted by God, whether they do say these things as being living men at present, and partakers of life, or acknowledge that, having no part in life whatever, they are at the present moment dead men. And if they really are dead men, how is it that they move about, and speak, and perform those other functions which are not the actions of the dead, but of the living? But if they are now alive, and if their whole body partakes of life, how can they venture the assertion that the flesh is not qualified to be a partaker of life, when they do confess that they have life at the present moment? It is just as if anybody were to take up a sponge full of water, or a torch on fire, and to declare that the sponge could not possibly partake of the water, or the torch of the fire. In this very manner do those men, by alleging that they are alive and bear life about in their members, contradict themselves afterwards, when they represent these members as not being capable of [receiving] life. But if the present temporal life, which is of such an inferior nature to eternal life, can nevertheless effect so much as to quicken our mortal members, why should not eternal life, being much more powerful than this, vivify the flesh, which has already held converse with, and been accustomed to sustain, life? For that the flesh can really partake of life, is shown from the fact of its being alive; for it lives on, as long as it is God's purpose that it should do so. It is manifest, too, that God has the power to confer life upon it, inasmuch as He grants life to us who are in existence. And, therefore, since the Lord has power to infuse life into what He has fashioned, and since the flesh is capable of being quickened, what remains to prevent its participating in incorruption, which is a blissful and never-ending life granted by God?

Summary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus testifies that, “The Apostle Paul has, moreover, in the most lucid manner, pointed out that man has been delivered over to his own infirmity, lest, being uplifted, he might fall away from the truth. Thus he says in the second [Epistle] to the Corinthians: “And lest I should be lifted up by the sublimity of the Revelation, there was given unto me a thorn in the flesh, the messenger of Satan to buffet me. And upon this I besought the Lord three times, that it might depart from me. But he said unto me, My grace is sufficient for thee; for strength is made perfect in weakness. Gladly therefore shall I rather glory in infirmities, that the power of Christ may dwell in me,” referring to 2 Corinthians 12:7-9. Irenaeus then asks, “What, therefore? (as some may exclaim:) did the Lord wish, in that case, that His apostles should thus undergo buffeting, and that he should endure such infirmity?” And Irenaeus answers, “Even so it was; the word says it. For strength is made perfect in weakness, rendering him a better man who by means of his infirmity becomes acquainted with the power of God.” Irenaeus again asks, “For how could a man have learned that he is himself an infirm being, and mortal by nature, but that God is immortal and powerful, unless he had learned by experience what is in both?” And Irenaeus points out, “For there is nothing evil in learning one's infirmities by endurance; yea, rather, it has even the beneficial effect of preventing him from forming an undue opinion of his own nature (non aberrare in natura sua)." And Irenaeus then warns, "But the being lifted up against God, and taking His glory to one's self, rendering man ungrateful, has brought much evil upon him. [And thus, I say, man must learn both things by experience], that he may not be destitute of truth and love either towards himself or his Creator." Irenaeus concludes, "But the experience of both confers upon him the true knowledge as to God and man, and increases his love towards God. Now, where there exists an increase of love, there a greater glory is wrought out by the power of God for those who love Him."

In paragraph two, Irenaeus attests, "Those men, therefore, set aside the power of God, and do not consider what the word declares, when they dwell upon the infirmity of the flesh, but do not take into consideration the power of Him who raises it up from the dead." Irenaeus then argues, "For if He does not vivify what is mortal, and does not bring back the corruptible to incorruption, He is not a God of power." Again Irenaeus attests, "But that He is powerful in all these respects, we ought to perceive from our origin, inasmuch as God, taking dust from the earth, formed man," referring to Genesis 2:7.

Irenaeus then reasons, "And surely it is much more difficult and incredible, from non-existent bones, and nerves, and veins, and the rest of man's organization, to bring it about that all this should be, and to make man an animated and rational creature, than to reintegrate again that which had been created and then afterwards decomposed into earth (for the reasons already mentioned), having thus passed into those [elements] from which man, who had no previous existence, was formed." Irenaeus then argues, "For He who in the beginning caused him to have being who as yet was not, just when He pleased, shall much more reinstate again those who had a former existence, when it is His will [that they should inherit] the life granted by Him." Irenaeus continues as he says, "And that flesh shall also be found fit for and capable of receiving the power of God, which at the beginning received the skilful touches of God; so that one part became the eye for seeing; another, the ear for hearing; another, the hand for feeling and working; another, the sinews stretched out everywhere, and holding the limbs together; another, arteries and veins, passages for the blood and the air; another, the various internal organs; another, the blood, which is the bond of union between soul and body." And Irenaeus concludes, "But why go [on in this strain]? Numbers would fail to express the multiplicity of parts in the human frame, which was made in no other way than by the great wisdom of God. But those things which partake of the skill and wisdom of God, do also partake of His power."

In paragraph three, Irenaeus attests, "The flesh, therefore, is not destitute [of participation] in the constructive wisdom and power of God." And he then argues, "But if the power of Him who is the bestower of life is made perfect in weakness—that is, in the flesh—let them inform us, when they maintain the incapacity of flesh to receive the life granted by God, whether they do say these things as being living men at present, and partakers of life, or acknowledge that, having no part in life whatever, they are at the present moment dead men." Irenaeus then argues further, "And if they really are dead men, how is it that they move about, and speak, and perform those other functions which are not the actions of the dead, but of the living? But if they are now alive, and if their whole body partakes of life, how can they venture the assertion that the flesh is not qualified to be a partaker of life, when they do confess that they have life at the present moment?" Irenaeus then forms an analogy as he says, "It is just as if anybody were to take up a sponge full of water, or a torch on fire, and to declare that the sponge could not possibly partake of the water, or the torch of the fire. In this very manner do those men, by alleging that they are alive and bear life about in their members, contradict themselves afterwards, when they represent these members as not being capable of [receiving] life." Irenaeus then asks, "But if the present temporal life, which is of such an inferior nature to eternal life, can nevertheless effect so much as to quicken our mortal members, why should not eternal life, being much more powerful than this, vivify the flesh, which has already held converse with, and been accustomed to sustain, life?" And Irenaeus then argues, "For that the flesh can really partake of life, is shown from the fact of its being alive; for it lives on, as long as it is God's purpose that it should do so. It is manifest, too, that God has the power to confer life upon it, inasmuch as He grants life to us who are in existence. And, therefore, since the Lord has power to infuse life into what He has fashioned, and since the flesh is capable of being quickened, what remains to prevent its participating in incorruption, which is a blissful and never-ending life granted by God?"

Commentary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus testifies that, "The Apostle Paul has, moreover, in the most lucid manner, pointed out that man has been delivered over to his own infirmity, lest, being uplifted, he might fall away from the truth. Thus he says in the second [Epistle] to the Corinthians: “And lest I should be lifted up by the sublimity of the Revelation, there was given unto me a thorn in the flesh, the messenger of Satan to buffet me. And upon this I besought the Lord three times, that it might depart from me. But he said unto me, My grace is sufficient for thee; for strength is made perfect in weakness. Gladly therefore shall I rather glory in infirmities, that the power of Christ may dwell in me,” referring to 2 Corinthians 12 (NASB):7 Because of the surpassing greatness of the revelations, for this reason, to keep me from exalting myself, there was given me a thorn in the flesh, a messenger of Satan to torment me—to keep me from exalting myself! 8 Concerning this I implored the Lord three times that it might leave me. 9 And He has said to me, “My grace is sufficient for you, for power is perfected in weakness.” Most gladly, therefore, I will rather boast about my weaknesses, so that the power of Christ may dwell in me.

Irenaeus then asks, “What, therefore? (as some may exclaim:) did the Lord wish, in that case, that His apostles should thus undergo buffeting, and that he should endure such infirmity?” And Irenaeus answers, “Even so it was; the word says it. For strength is made perfect in weakness, rendering him a better man who by means of his infirmity becomes acquainted with the power of God.” Irenaeus again asks, “For how could a man have learned that he is himself an infirm being, and mortal by nature, but that God is immortal and powerful, unless he had learned by experience what is in both?” And Irenaeus points out, “For there is nothing evil in learning one’s infirmities by endurance; yea, rather, it has even the beneficial effect of preventing him from forming an undue opinion of his own nature (non aberrare in natura sua).” And Irenaeus then warns, “But the being lifted up against God, and taking His glory to one’s self, rendering man ungrateful, has brought much evil upon him. [And thus, I say, man must learn both things by experience], that he may not be destitute of truth and love either towards himself or his Creator.” Irenaeus concludes, “But the experience of both confers upon him the true knowledge as to God and man, and increases his love towards God. Now, where there exists an increase of love, there a greater glory is wrought out by the power of God for those who love Him.”

Irenaeus here begins to lay the foundation for his strong assertion of the truth of the resurrection. Irenaeus is writing to those who disbelieve in the resurrection of the body. His argument begins with the infirmity or weakness of our flesh. He sees in Paul’s account of his being caught up to heaven and afterwards of receiving “a thorn in the flesh” to buffet him, that is, to keep him humble, as an elucidation for us. We must endure our own infirmity knowing that it will render us better men and women and acquaint us with God’s power. For when we realize our weakness, we realize His strength and learn that God is God, and we most certainly are not. This knowledge increases our love for God, as Irenaeus says. When we are weak, then, we should glory in our infirmity as Paul does in order that a greater glory may be “wrought out by the power of God for those who love Him.”

In paragraph two, Irenaeus attests, “Those men, therefore, set aside the power of God, and do not consider what the word declares, when they dwell upon the infirmity of the flesh, but do not take into consideration the power of Him who raises it up from the dead.” Irenaeus then argues, “For if He does not vivify what is mortal, and does not bring back the corruptible to incorruption, He is not a God of power.” Again Irenaeus attests, “But that He is powerful in all these respects, we ought to perceive from our origin, inasmuch as God, taking dust from the earth, formed man,” referring to Genesis 2 (ESV):7 Then the LORD God formed man of dust from the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living being.

Irenaeus then reasons, “And surely it is much more difficult and incredible, from non-existent bones, and nerves, and veins, and the rest of man’s organization, to bring it about that all this should be, and to make man an animated and rational creature, than to reintegrate again that which had been created and then afterwards decomposed into earth (for the reasons already mentioned), having thus passed into those [elements] from which man, who had no previous existence, was formed.” Irenaeus then argues, “For He who in the beginning caused him to have being who as yet was not, just when He pleased, shall much more reinstate again those who had a former existence, when it is His will [that they should inherit] the life granted by Him.”

Irenaeus continues as he says, “And that flesh shall also be found fit for and capable of receiving the power of God, which at the beginning received the skilful touches of God; so that one part became the eye for seeing; another, the ear for hearing; another, the hand for feeling and working; another, the sinews stretched out everywhere, and holding the limbs together; another, arteries and veins, passages for the blood and the air; another, the various internal organs; another, the blood, which is the bond of union between soul and body.”

And Irenaeus concludes, “But why go [on in this strain]? Numbers would fail to express the multiplicity of parts in the human frame, which was made in no other way than by the great wisdom of God. But those things which partake of the skill and wisdom of God, do also partake of His power.”

But all of this is really leading up to his main point, which is that God is able to raise the dead by this same power that is present in our weakness. Those who set aside the power of God are in more awe of the infirmity of the flesh rather than the power of God. The God who calls things that are not as though they were is the same God who made us out of nothing. Such a powerful beginning makes raising the dead look easy. Irenaeus shows that such a thing as raising the dead is reasonable by our very existence. As Irenaeus marvels at the handiwork of God, so should we. That we are made “in no other way than by the great wisdom of God” is evident to all who are willing to open their hearts to believe.

In paragraph three, Irenaeus attests, “The flesh, therefore, is not destitute [of participation] in the constructive wisdom and power of God.” And he then argues, “But if the power of Him who is the bestower of life is made perfect in weakness—that is, in the flesh—let them inform us, when they maintain the incapacity of flesh to receive the life granted by God, whether they do say these things as being living men at present, and partakers of life, or acknowledge that, having no part in life whatever, they are at the present moment dead men.” Irenaeus then argues further, “And if they really are dead men, how is it that they move about, and speak, and perform those other functions which are not the actions of the dead, but of the living? But if they are now alive, and if their whole body partakes of life, how can they venture the assertion that the flesh is not qualified to be a partaker of life, when they do confess that they have life at the present moment?” Irenaeus then forms an analogy as he says, “It is just as if anybody were to take up a sponge full of water, or a torch on fire, and to declare that the sponge could not possibly partake of the water, or the torch of the fire. In this very manner do those men, by alleging that they are alive and bear life about in their members, contradict themselves afterwards, when they represent these members as not being capable of [receiving] life.” Irenaeus then asks, “But if the present temporal life, which is of such an inferior nature to eternal life, can nevertheless effect so much as to quicken our mortal members, why should not eternal life, being much more powerful than this, vivify the flesh, which has already held converse with, and been accustomed to sustain, life?” And Irenaeus then argues, “For that the flesh can really partake of life, is shown from the fact of its being alive; for it lives on, as long as it is God’s purpose that it should do so. It is manifest, too, that God has the power to confer life upon it, inasmuch as He grants life to us who are in existence. And, therefore, since the Lord has power to infuse life into what He has fashioned, and since the flesh is capable of being quickened, what remains to prevent its participating in incorruption, which is a blissful and never-ending life granted by God?”

Again, Irenaeus marvels at the unbelief of those who say that the flesh is incapable of receiving the life granted by God. He asks them to believe a very simple thing, which is that they themselves are alive and “bear life about in their members.” Irenaeus’ point is well taken. If our present life is sufficient to move us about, what would eternal life do, being much more powerful, to our flesh he asks. As God grants us life at the present, He is also able to grant us never ending life as well. Bravo Irenaeus!

Book 5: Chapter V.—The prolonged life of the ancients, the translation of Elijah and of Enoch in their own bodies, as well as the preservation of Jonah, of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, in the midst of extreme peril, are clear demonstrations that God can raise up our bodies to life eternal.

1. [In order to learn] that bodies did continue in existence for a lengthened period, as long as it was God’s good pleasure that they should flourish, let [these heretics] read the Scriptures, and they will find that our predecessors advanced beyond seven hundred, eight hundred, and nine hundred years of age; and that their bodies kept pace with the protracted length of their days, and participated in life as long as God willed that they should live. But why do I refer to these men? For Enoch, when he pleased God, was translated in the same body in which he did please Him, thus pointing out by anticipation the translation of the just. Elijah, too, was caught up [when he was yet] in the substance of the [natural] form; thus exhibiting in prophecy the assumption of those who are spiritual, and that nothing stood in the way of their body being translated and caught up. For by means of the very same hands through which they were moulded at the beginning, did they receive this translation and assumption. For in Adam the hands of God had become accustomed to set in order, to rule, and to sustain His own workmanship, and to bring it and place it where they pleased. Where, then, was the first man placed? In paradise certainly, as the Scripture declares “And God planted a garden [paradisum] eastward in Eden, and there He placed the man whom He had formed.” 4471 Gen. ii. 8. And then afterwards when [man] proved disobedient, he was cast out thence into this world. Wherefore also the elders who were disciples of the apostles tell us that those who were translated were transferred to that place (for paradise has been prepared for righteous men, such as have the Spirit; in which place also Paul the apostle, when he was caught up, heard words which are unspeakable as regards us in our present condition 4472 2 Cor. xii. 4.), and that there shall they who have been translated remain until the consummation [of all things], as a prelude to immortality.

Summary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus encourages us as he affirms, “[In order to learn] that bodies did continue in existence for a lengthened period, as long as it was God’s good pleasure that they should flourish, let [these heretics] read the Scriptures, and they will find that our predecessors advanced beyond seven hundred, eight hundred, and nine hundred years of age; and that their bodies kept pace with the protracted length of their days, and participated in life as long as God willed that they should live,” referring in part to Genesis 5:3-11. Irenaeus continues as he affirms, “But why do I refer to these men? For Enoch, when he pleased God, was translated in the same body in which he did please Him, thus pointing out by anticipation the translation of the just,” referring to Genesis 5:21-24 and Hebrews 11:5-6. Again, Irenaeus continues as he affirms, “Elijah, too, was caught up [when he was yet] in the substance of the [natural] form; thus exhibiting in prophecy the assumption of those who are spiritual, and that nothing stood in the way of their body being translated and caught up,” referring to 2 Kings 2:11-14. Irenaeus then concludes, “For by means of the very same hands through which they were moulded at the beginning, did they receive this translation and assumption.” Irenaeus then explains, “For in Adam the hands of God had become accustomed to set in order, to rule, and to sustain His own workmanship, and to bring it and place it where they pleased. Where, then, was the first man placed? In paradise certainly, as the Scripture declares “And God planted a garden [paradisum] eastward in Eden, and there He placed the man whom He had formed,” referring to Genesis 2:8. Irenaeus continues as he affirms, “And then afterwards when [man] proved disobedient, he was cast out thence into this world,” referring in context to Genesis 3:21-24. Irenaeus then records, “Wherefore also the elders who were disciples of the apostles tell us that those who were translated were transferred to that place (for paradise has been prepared for righteous men, such as have the Spirit; in which place also Paul the apostle, when he was caught up, heard words which are unspeakable as regards us in our present condition,” referring to 2 Corinthians 12:4, “and that there shall they who have been translated remain until the consummation [of all things], as a prelude to immortality.”

Commentary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus encourages us as he affirms, “[In order to learn] that bodies did continue in existence for a lengthened period, as long as it was God’s good pleasure that they should flourish, let [these heretics] read the Scriptures, and they will find that our predecessors advanced beyond seven hundred, eight hundred, and nine hundred years of age; and that their bodies kept pace with the protracted length of their days, and participated in life as long as God willed that they should live,” referring in part to Genesis 5 (HCSB):3 Adam was 130 years old when he fathered a son in his likeness, according to his image, and named him Seth. 4 Adam lived 800 years after the birth of Seth, and he fathered other sons and daughters. 5 So Adam’s life lasted 930 years; then he died. 6 Seth was 105 years old when he fathered Enosh. 7 Seth lived 807 years after the birth of Enosh, and he fathered other sons and daughters. 8 So Seth’s life lasted 912 years; then he died. 9 Enosh was 90 years old when he fathered Kenan. 10 Enosh lived 815 years after the birth of Kenan, and he fathered other sons and daughters. 11 So Enosh’s life lasted 905 years; then he died.

Irenaeus continues as he affirms, “But why do I refer to these men? For Enoch, when he pleased God, was translated in the same body in which he did please Him, thus pointing out by anticipation the translation of the just,” referring to Genesis 5 (ESV):21 Enoch lived sixty-five years, and became the father of Methuselah. 22 Then Enoch walked with God three hundred years after he became the father of Methuselah, and he had other sons and daughters. 23 So all the days of Enoch were three hundred and sixty-five years. 24 Enoch walked with God; and he was not, for God took him.

And to Hebrews 11 (ESV):5 By faith Enoch was taken up so that he would not see death; AND HE WAS NOT FOUND BECAUSE GOD TOOK HIM UP; for he obtained the witness that before his being taken up he was pleasing to God. 6 And without faith it is impossible to please Him, for he who comes to God must believe that He is and that He is a rewarder of those who seek Him.

Again, Irenaeus continues as he affirms, “Elijah, too, was caught up [when he was yet] in the substance of the [natural] form; thus exhibiting in prophecy the assumption of those who are spiritual, and that nothing stood in the way of their body being translated and caught up,” referring to 2 Kings 2 (ESV):11 As they were going along and talking, behold, there appeared a chariot of fire and horses of fire which separated the two of them. And Elijah went up by a whirlwind to heaven. 12 Elisha saw it and cried out, “My father, my father, the chariots of Israel and its horsemen!” And he saw Elijah no more. Then he took hold of his own clothes and tore them in two pieces. 13 He also took up the mantle of Elijah that fell from him and returned and stood by the bank of the Jordan. 14 He took the mantle of Elijah that fell from him and struck the waters and said, “Where is the LORD, the God of Elijah?” And when he also had struck the waters, they were divided here and there; and Elisha crossed over.

Irenaeus then concludes, “For by means of the very same hands through which they were moulded at the beginning, did they receive this translation and assumption.” Irenaeus then explains, “For in Adam the hands of God had become accustomed to set in order, to rule, and to sustain His own workmanship, and to bring it and place it where they pleased. Where, then, was the first man placed? In paradise certainly, as the Scripture declares “And God planted a garden [paradisum] eastward in Eden, and there He placed the man whom He had formed,” referring to Genesis 2 (ESV):8 The LORD God planted a garden toward the east, in Eden; and there He placed the man whom He had formed. 9 Out of the ground the LORD God caused to grow every tree that is pleasing to the sight and good for food; the tree of life also in the midst of the garden, and the tree of the knowledge of good and evil. 10 Now a river flowed out of Eden to water the garden; and from there it divided and became four rivers.

Note that the Greek word Παράδεισος, pronounced paradeiso and meaning paradise, is not found in the Old Testament. But the Hebrew word gan, meaning garden and having to do with being fenced, is the word in the Hebrew that is translated “garden” in Genesis 2:8.

Irenaeus continues as he affirms, “And then afterwards when [man] proved disobedient, he was cast out thence into this world,” referring in context to Genesis 3 (ESV):21 The LORD God made garments of skin for Adam and his wife, and clothed them. 22 Then the LORD God said, “Behold, the man has become like one of Us, knowing good and evil; and now, he might stretch out his hand, and take also from the tree of life, and eat, and live forever”— 23 therefore the LORD God sent him out from the garden of Eden, to cultivate the ground from which he was taken. 24 So He drove the man out; and at the east of the garden of Eden He stationed the cherubim and the flaming sword which turned every direction to guard the way to the tree of life.

However, we need to remember here that the Garden of Eden was on earth. When Irenaeus says that Adam proved disobedient and “was cast out thence into this world,” Adam was still on earth, but did not have access to the Garden of Eden.

Irenaeus then records, “Wherefore also the elders who were disciples of the apostles tell us that those who were translated were transferred to that place (for paradise has been prepared for righteous men, such as have the Spirit; in which place also Paul the apostle, when he was caught up, heard words which are unspeakable as regards us in our present condition,” referring in context to 2 Corinthians 12 (NASB):1 I must go on boasting. Though there is nothing to be gained by it, I will go on to visions and revelations of the Lord. 2 I know a man in Christ who fourteen years ago was caught up to the third heaven—whether in the body or out of the body I do not know, God knows. 3 And I know that this man was caught up into paradise—whether in the body or out of the body I do not know, God knows— 4 and he heard things that cannot be told, which man may not utter.

And Irenaeus finishes as he asserts, “and that there shall they who have been translated remain until the consummation [of all things], as a prelude to immortality.”

Commentary Summary Book 5: Chapter V

In summary, Irenaeus' goal in this chapter is to show that there shall be a resurrection of the dead. Indeed, as Irenaeus points out, the prolonged lives of those mentioned in Genesis of up to nine hundred years and more are a testimony to God's power to give life as long as He wills. And as Irenaeus affirms, Enoch was truly translated bodily to the place that God had provided for the righteous dead according to the Scriptures as we read in Genesis 5 (ESV):24 Enoch walked with God, and he was not, for God took him.

And the writer of Hebrews also records this event in Hebrews 11 (ESV):5 By faith Enoch was taken up so that he should not see death, and he was not found, because God had taken him. Now before he was taken he was commended as having pleased God.

And also Elijah was translated bodily as we read in 2 Kings 2 (ESV):11 And as they still went on and talked, behold, chariots of fire and horses of fire separated the two of them. And Elijah went up by a whirlwind into heaven.

The word heaven in this verse probably means the first heaven of the clouds, for the way into heaven itself was not made known yet as we read in Hebrews 9 (KJV):8 The Holy Spirit was showing by this that the way into the Most Holy Place had not yet been disclosed as long as the first tabernacle was still functioning.

The writer of Hebrews explains that Christ entered heaven by His own blood in Hebrews 9 (KJV):12 Neither by the blood of goats and calves, but by his own blood he entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us.

This is further explained in Hebrews 9 (KJV):24 For Christ did not enter a sanctuary made with human hands that was only a copy of the true one; he entered heaven itself, now to appear for us in God's presence. 25 Nor did he enter heaven to offer himself again and again, the way the high priest enters the Most Holy Place every year with blood that is not his own.

It was not possible for man to enter heaven until Jesus entered by His own blood to obtain eternal redemption for man.

And this "assumption," or translation, was accomplished by the very same hands that moulded man at the beginning, as Irenaeus says. And God did place the man that He had formed in the garden of Eden, a paradise certainly, but not the heavenly paradise. The Greek word Παραδεισῶ, pronounced paradeiso and meaning paradise, is not found in the Old Testament. But the Hebrew word gan, meaning garden and having to do with being fenced, is the word used in Genesis 2 (ESV):8 And the LORD God planted a garden in Eden, in the east, and there he put the man whom he had formed. 9 And out of the ground the LORD God made to spring up every tree that is pleasant to the sight and good for food. The tree of life was in the midst of the garden, and the tree of the knowledge of good and evil. 10 A river flowed out of Eden to water the garden, and there it divided and became four rivers.

We note here that the Lord "planted" this garden, and the Lord caused to "grow out of the ground" every tree that is pleasing to the sight. And a river flowed out of Eden to water the garden. So this garden had a definite location on earth. And just before this we read in Genesis 2 (ESV):5 When no bush of the field was yet in the land and no small plant of the field had yet sprung up—for the LORD God had not caused it to rain on the land, and there was no man to work the ground, 6 and a mist was going up from the land and was watering the whole face of the ground— 7 then the LORD God formed the man of dust from the ground and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and the man became a living creature.

So the whole setting is on earth. No shrub of the field was yet in the earth and no plant had yet sprouted. The LORD God had not sent rain upon the earth. And, there was no man to cultivate the ground. Then the LORD God formed man of dust from the ground, on earth, and man was placed in the garden as we read in Genesis 2 (ESV):15 The LORD God took the man and put him in the garden of Eden to work it and keep it. 16 And the LORD God commanded the man, saying, "You may surely eat of every tree of the garden, 17 but of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil you shall not eat, for in the day that you eat of it you shall surely die."

Man was placed in this earthly garden to cultivate it for food. And then what happened? God saw that it was not good for man to be alone so he made woman as we read in Genesis 2 (ESV):22 And the rib that the LORD God had taken from the man he made into a woman and brought her to the man. 23 Then the man said, "This at last is bone of my bones and flesh of my flesh; she shall be called Woman, because she was taken out of Man." 24 Therefore a man shall leave his father and his mother and hold fast to his wife, and they shall become one flesh. 25 And the man and his wife were both naked and were not ashamed.

Marriage is for those on earth, not those in heaven. And so we see that God commanded them to multiply and fill the earth as we read in Genesis 1 (ESV):27 So God created man in his own image, in the image of God he created him; male and female he created them. 28 And God blessed them. And God said to them, "Be fruitful and multiply and fill the earth and subdue it, and have dominion over the fish of the sea and over the birds of the heavens and over every living thing that moves on the earth." 29 And God said, "Behold, I have given you every plant yielding seed that is on the face of all the earth, and every tree with seed in its fruit. You shall have them for food. 30 And to every beast of the earth and to every bird of the heavens and to everything that creeps on the earth, everything that has the breath of life, I have given every green plant for food." And it was so. 31 And God saw everything that he had made, and behold, it was very good. And there was evening and there was morning, the sixth day.

The Sadducees were very bold one day, and asked Jesus about marriage in the afterlife as we read in Matthew 22 (ESV):23 The same day Sadducees came to him, who say that there is no resurrection, and they asked him a question, 24 saying, "Teacher, Moses said, 'If a man dies having no children, his brother must marry the widow and raise up offspring for his brother.' 25 Now there were seven brothers among us. The first married and died, and having no offspring left his wife to his brother. 26 So too the second and third, down to the seventh. 27 After them all, the woman died. 28 In the resurrection, therefore, of the seven, whose wife will she be? For they all had her." 29 But Jesus answered them, "You are wrong, because you know neither the Scriptures nor the power of God. 30 For in the resurrection they neither marry nor are given in marriage, but are like angels in heaven. 31 And as for the resurrection of the dead, have you not read what was said to you by God: 32 'I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob'? He is not God of the dead, but of the living." 33 And when the crowd heard it, they were astonished at his teaching.

So it is evident that the garden of Eden, a paradise, was here on earth, and not in heaven. Now the Greek word for paradise, paradeiso, is found three times in the New Testament. It is first used in Luke 23 (ESV):43 And he said to him, "Truly, I say to you, today you will be with me in Paradise."

The word paradise used here by Jesus was the intermediate place where the righteous dead went until the time when the perfect sacrifice of Jesus' death was offered, and they could then enter heaven itself. This intermediate place was also called Abraham's bosom as Jesus related in the story of the rich man and Lazarus in Luke 16 (ESV):19 "There was a rich man who was clothed in purple and fine linen and who feasted sumptuously every day. 20 And at his gate was laid a poor man named Lazarus, covered with sores, 21 who desired to be fed with what fell from the rich man's table. Moreover, even the dogs came and licked his sores. 22 The poor man died and was carried by the angels to Abraham's side. The rich man also died and was buried, 23 and in Hades, being in torment, he lifted up his eyes and saw Abraham far off and Lazarus at his side.

The unrighteous dead are here pictured in Hades or Hell. There was a great chasm between these two as we see in Luke 16 (HCSB):24 'Father Abraham!' he called out, 'Have mercy on me and send Lazarus to dip the tip of his finger in water and cool my tongue, because I am in agony in this flame!' 25 "'Son,' Abraham said, 'remember that during your life you received your good things, just as Lazarus received bad things, but now he is comforted here, while you are in agony. 26 Besides all this, a great chasm has been fixed between us and you, so that those who want to pass over from here to you cannot; neither can those from there cross over to us.' 27 "'Father,' he said, 'then I beg you to send him to my father's house— 28 because I have five brothers—to warn them, so they won't also come to this place of torment.' 29 "But Abraham said, 'They have Moses and the prophets; they should listen to them.' 30 "'No, father Abraham,' he said. 'But if someone from the dead goes to them, they will repent.' 31 "But he told him, 'If they don't listen to Moses and the prophets, they will not be persuaded if someone rises from the dead.'"

So the instance of the word "paradise" used by Jesus in Luke 23:43 refers to the intermediate place where the righteous dead were kept until Jesus came and died on the cross, and entered heaven itself for us. After Jesus died on the cross, he went to this intermediate place and took all the righteous dead to heaven. Heaven itself is where He entered for us, being the one sacrifice that was needed to atone forever for our sins.

Having done so, the door to heaven was opened, and the righteous dead are now in heaven with the Lord. We will talk more about this later.

In the next instance where the word paradise is used, Paul talks about an experience he had as we read in 2 Corinthians 12 (ESV):1 I must go on boasting. Though there is nothing to be gained by it, I will go on to visions and revelations of the Lord. 2 I know a man in Christ who fourteen years ago was caught up to the third heaven—whether in the body or out of the body I do not know, God knows. 3 And I know that this man was caught up into paradise—whether in the body or out of the body I do not know, God knows— 4 and he heard things that cannot be told, which man may not utter. 5 On behalf of this man I will boast, but on my own behalf I will not boast, except of my weaknesses— 6 though if I should wish to boast, I would not be a fool, for I would be speaking the truth; but I refrain from it, so that no one may think more of me than he sees in me or hears from me.

In this instance of the word paradise, Paul was caught up to the third heaven, into Paradise where he heard “inexpressible words, which a man is not permitted to speak.” This also is not the Garden of Eden, the paradise spoken of in Genesis 2. This paradise is heaven itself where God dwells. The first heaven is our atmosphere. The second heaven is the stars. The third heaven is where God dwells. This agrees with Genesis 1 (ESV):1 In the beginning, God created the heavens and the earth.

Notice the word “heavens” is plural. Now in the third instance where the word paradise is used, John relates a vision he had while on the island of Patmos. He was commanded to write down what he saw in a book. In the book of Revelation, he mentions the Paradise of God as we read in Revelation 2 (ESV):7 He who has an ear, let him hear what the Spirit says to the churches. To the one who conquers I will grant to eat of the tree of life, which is in the paradise of God.’

The tree of life he mentions here is also mentioned in Revelation 22 (ESV):1 Then the angel showed me the river of the water of life, bright as crystal, flowing from the throne of God and of the Lamb 2 through the middle of the street of the city; also, on either side of the river, the tree of life with its twelve kinds of fruit, yielding its fruit each month. The leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations. 3 No longer will there be anything accursed, but the throne of God and of the Lamb will be in it, and his servants will worship him. 4 They will see his face, and his name will be on their foreheads. 5 And night will be no more. They will need no light of lamp or sun, for the Lord God will be their light, and they will reign forever and ever.

The question is then, where is this river and tree of life in the Paradise of God? The answer is in the book of Revelation. In Revelation chapter 21, John describes the New Jerusalem in Revelation 21 (ESV):1 Then I saw a new heaven and a new earth, for the first heaven and the first earth had passed away, and the sea was no more. 2 And I saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down out of heaven from God, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband. 3 And I heard a loud voice from the throne saying, “Behold, the dwelling place of God is with man. He will dwell with them, and they will be his people, and God himself will be with them as their God. 4 He will wipe away every tear from their eyes, and death shall be no more, neither shall there be mourning, nor crying, nor pain anymore, for the former things have passed away.”

John tells us that the tabernacle of God is among men, and He shall dwell among them. The holy city, Jerusalem, is seen coming out of heaven from God. Not only so, but John describes a wall around the city and references the four points of the compass in relation to each side of the wall as we read in Revelation 21 (ESV):10 And he carried me away in the Spirit to a great, high mountain, and showed me the holy city Jerusalem coming down out of heaven from God, 11 having the glory of God, its radiance like a most rare jewel, like a jasper, clear as crystal. 12 It had a great, high wall, with twelve gates, and at the gates twelve angels, and on the gates the names of the twelve tribes of the sons of Israel were inscribed— 13 on the east three gates, on the north three gates, on the south three gates, and on the west three gates. 14 And the wall of the city had twelve foundations, and on them were the twelve names of the twelve apostles of the Lamb.

This city was to be laid out as a square as we read in Revelation 21 (ESV):15 And the one who spoke with me had a measuring rod of gold to measure the city and its gates and walls. 16 The city lies foursquare, its length the same as its width. And he measured the city with his rod, 12,000 stadia. Its length and width and height are equal. 17 He also measured its wall, 144 cubits by human measurement, which is also an angel's measurement. 18 The wall was built of jasper, while the city was pure gold, like clear glass. 19 The foundations of the wall of the city were adorned with every kind of jewel. The first was jasper, the second sapphire, the third agate, the fourth emerald, 20 the fifth onyx, the sixth carnelian, the seventh chrysolite, the eighth beryl, the ninth topaz, the tenth chrysoprase, the eleventh jacinth, the twelfth amethyst. 21 And the twelve gates were twelve pearls, each of the gates made of a single pearl, and the street of the city was pure gold, like transparent glass.

There will be precious stones in the foundation of the city, and there will be gold, sapphire, emerald, and chalcedony. All of these things, the compass points and the precious stones, are things we find on earth. So the paradise of God in this instance of the word paradise is located on the new earth.

So the whole point of the garden of Eden in Genesis was to test man. Man's fall had catastrophic results, not only on man, but on all creation. This is why all creation groans as we read in Romans 8 (ESV):18 For I consider that the sufferings of this present time are not worth comparing with the glory that is to be revealed to us. 19 For the creation waits with eager longing for the revealing of the sons of God. 20 For the creation was subjected to futility, not willingly, but because of him who subjected it, in hope 21 that the creation itself will be set free from its bondage to corruption and obtain the freedom of the glory of the children of God. 22 For we know that the whole creation has been groaning together in the pains of childbirth until now. 23 And not only the creation, but we ourselves, who have the firstfruits of the Spirit, groan inwardly as we wait eagerly for adoption as sons, the redemption of our bodies. 24 For in this hope we were saved. Now hope that is seen is not hope. For who hopes for what he sees? 25 But if we hope for what we do not see, we wait for it with patience.

The whole creation will be freed from corruption in the future when Jesus returns.

Another thing to note in this chapter is Irenaeus' use of the word "assumption" as a synonym for the word translation. He says, "For by means of the very same hands through which they were moulded at the beginning, did they receive this translation and assumption." He is speaking of the body being transferred at death to paradise. We only find two occurrences of translation, or assumption, in Scripture, and both are mentioned by Irenaeus, that is, Enoch and Elijah. Translation, or assumption, is not the norm for the righteous. Otherwise there would not be a need for a resurrection. But translation will be similar to what happens when Jesus returns. Paul says we shall not all sleep, or die, but we shall all be changed in 1 Corinthians 15 (ESV):50 I tell you this, brothers: flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God, nor does the perishable inherit the imperishable. 51 Behold! I tell you a mystery. We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, 52 in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trumpet. For the trumpet will sound, and the dead will be raised imperishable, and we shall be changed. 53 For this perishable body must put on the imperishable, and this mortal body must put on immortality. 54 When the perishable puts on the imperishable, and the mortal puts on immortality, then shall come to pass the saying that is written: "Death is swallowed up in victory." 55 "O death, where is your victory? O death, where is your sting?" 56 The sting of death is sin, and the power of sin is the law. 57 But thanks be to God, who gives us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ.

This same event is spoken of in 1 Thessalonians 4 (ESV):13 But we do not want you to be uninformed, brothers, about those who are asleep, that you may not grieve as others do who have no hope. 14 For since we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so, through Jesus, God will bring with him those who have fallen asleep. 15 For this we declare to you by a word from the Lord, that we who are alive, who are left until the coming of the Lord, will not precede those who have fallen asleep. 16 For the Lord himself will descend from heaven with a cry of command, with the voice of an archangel, and with the sound of the trumpet of God. And the dead in Christ will rise first. 17 Then we who are alive, who are left, will be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air, and so we will always be with the Lord. 18 Therefore encourage one another with these words.

So we see that, according to the Scriptures, those who are alive on earth when the Lord comes will be changed and caught up to be with the Lord. This would correspond to the translations of Enoch and Elijah. But when the Lord comes with those "who have fallen asleep in Jesus," those who are alive on earth will be not be raised before them. "The dead in Christ will rise first," and "then we who are alive and remain will be caught up together with them," and "so we shall always be with the Lord." Hallelujah!

And finally, in reference to the translations of Enoch and Elijah, Irenaeus asserts that these events are an anticipation of the translation of the just. Irenaeus says, "For Enoch, when he pleased God, was translated in the same body in which he did please Him, thus pointing out by anticipation the translation of the just." This is a valid assertion. Enoch and Elijah are a type of the saints on earth who are alive when Jesus comes, and will be caught up to be with Jesus without seeing death when He comes.

However, Irenaeus also mentions the testimony of the elders, the disciples of the apostles, who “tell us that those who were translated were transferred to that place (for paradise has been prepared for righteous men, such as have the Spirit; in which place also Paul the apostle, when he was caught up, heard words which are unspeakable as regards us in our present condition).”

Irenaeus believed that the righteous dead, even after Christ died, go to an intermediate place until the time of the resurrection.

It is true that Enoch and Elijah were translated bodily to the intermediate place, that is, to paradise or Abraham’s bosom. However, they did not go to an intermediate place as Irenaeus supposes the paradise that Paul was caught up to in a vision was. Rather, they went to the lower paradise in Sheol, where the righteous dead were kept until Jesus made a way for them, and us, into heaven itself by His own blood. And since the paradise that Paul was caught up to was actually heaven itself, and not an intermediate place, Irenaeus is only right in part. The righteous dead, before Jesus died and rose from the dead and entered heaven for us, went to Abraham’s bosom, which is also called paradise by Jesus when he was dying on the cross for us. The thief on the cross was with Jesus in this paradise, that is in Abraham’s bosom, on the day that Jesus died. But after three days, Jesus entered heaven for us by His own blood, and all in Abraham’s bosom, or the lower paradise, were then removed to the heavenly paradise when our Lord took captivity captive. And it was this paradise in heaven that Paul was caught up to. We will talk more about this later.

Irenaeus’ reference to the testimony of elders is an instance where he is relying solely on tradition. What the elders told the disciples at that time is impossible for us to repeat. And even if it was possible to repeat, it is still not the testimony of Scripture. It is hearsay, and it is valuable in so much as it bears witness and supports the truth of the Scriptures. It appears that Irenaeus might have misunderstood the elders in this case, for the Scriptures teach that the righteous dead go to be with Jesus in heaven itself.

The Scripture says that to die is gain for we will be with Christ as we read in Philippians 1 (ESV):21 For to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain. 22 If I am to live in the flesh, that means fruitful labor for me. Yet which I shall choose I cannot tell. 23 I am hard pressed between the two. My desire is to depart and be with Christ, for that is far better. 24 But to remain in the flesh is more necessary on your account. 25 Convinced of this, I know that I will remain and continue with you all, for your progress and joy in the faith, 26 so that in me you may have ample cause to glory in Christ Jesus, because of my coming to you again.

This is why God will bring with Him when He returns those who have fallen asleep in Jesus, that is, those who died in Christ before His return just as 1 Thessalonians 4:14 relates. The reason He will bring them with Him is because they are already with Him in paradise, that is, in heaven itself.

To summarize again, in this chapter of his writing, Irenaeus reminds us of those saints who lived long ago, that is, “our predecessors,” who lived to an advanced age “beyond seven hundred, eight hundred, and nine hundred years of age,” and “their bodies kept pace with the protracted length of their days, and participated in life as long as God willed that they should live.” He does this to show the reasonability of the resurrection. Irenaeus also mentions the translations of Enoch and Elijah, who were taken up to heaven, or paradise as he calls it, in their bodies. This, he says, is prophetic of “the assumption of those who are spiritual.” Irenaeus recounts the fall of Adam, and his consequent banishment from the garden “into this world.” But, he says, the “disciples of the apostles tell us that those who were translated were transferred to that place (for paradise has been prepared for righteous men, such as have the Spirit; in which place also Paul the apostle, when he was caught up, heard words which are unspeakable as regards us in our present condition.” So Paul also, he says, was caught up to paradise, the same place from which Adam was banished. Irenaeus says also that all those “righteous men, such as have the Spirit,” will be translated and remain there until “the consummation [of all things], as a prelude to immortality.”

Book 5: Chapter XII.—Of the difference between life and death; of the breath of life and the vivifying Spirit: also how it is that the substance of flesh revives which once was dead.

1. For as the flesh is capable of corruption, so is it also of incorruption; and as it is of death, so is it also of life. These two do mutually give way to each other; and both cannot remain in the same place, but one is driven out by the other, and the presence of the one destroys that of the other. If, then, when death takes possession of a man, it drives life away from him, and proves him to be dead, much more does life, when it has obtained power over the man, drive out death, and restore him as living unto God. For if death brings mortality, why should not life, when it comes, vivify man? Just as Esaias the prophet says, "Death devoured when it had prevailed." 4531 Isa. xxv. 8, LXX. And again, "God has wiped away every tear from every face." Thus that former life is expelled, because it was not given by the Spirit, but by the breath.

2. For the breath of life, which also rendered man an animated being, is one thing, and the vivifying Spirit another, which also caused him to become spiritual. And for this reason Isaiah said, "Thus saith the Lord, who made heaven and established it, who founded the earth and the things therein, and gave breath to the people upon it, and Spirit to those walking upon it;" 4532 Isa. xlii. 5. thus telling us that breath is indeed given in common to all people upon earth, but that the Spirit is theirs alone who tread down earthly desires. And therefore Isaiah himself, distinguishing the things already mentioned, again exclaims, "For the Spirit shall go forth from Me, and I have made every breath." 4533 Isa. lvii. 16. Thus does he attribute the Spirit as peculiar to God which in the last times He pours forth upon the human race by the adoption of sons; but [he shows] that breath was common throughout the creation, and points it out as something created. Now what has been made is a different thing from him who makes it. The breath, then, is temporal, but the Spirit eternal. The breath, too, increases [in strength] for a short period, and continues for a certain time; after that it takes its departure, leaving its former abode destitute of breath. But when the Spirit pervades the man within and without, inasmuch as it continues there, it never leaves him. "But that is not first which is spiritual," says the apostle, speaking this as if with reference to us human beings; "but that is first which is animal, afterwards that which is spiritual," 4534 1 Cor. xv. 46. in accordance with reason. For there had been a necessity that, in the first place, a human being should be fashioned, and that what was fashioned should receive the soul; afterwards that it should thus receive the communion of the Spirit. Wherefore also "the first Adam was made" by the Lord "a living soul, the second Adam a quickening spirit." 4535 1 Cor. xv. 45. As, then, he who was made a living soul forfeited life when he turned aside to what was evil, so, on the other hand, the same individual, when he reverts to what is good, and receives the quickening Spirit, shall find life.

3. For it is not one thing which dies and another which is quickened, as neither is it one thing which is lost and another which is found, but the Lord came seeking for that same sheep which had been lost. What was it, then, which was dead? Undoubtedly it was the substance of the flesh; the same, too, which had lost the breath of life, and had become breathless and dead. This same, therefore, was what the Lord came to quicken, that as in Adam we do all die, as being of an animal nature, in Christ we may all live, as being spiritual, not laying aside God's handiwork, but the lusts of the flesh, and receiving the Holy Spirit; as the apostle says in the Epistle to the Colossians: "Mortify, therefore, your members which are upon the earth." And what these are he himself explains: "Fornication, uncleanness, inordinate affection, evil concupiscence; and covetousness, which is idolatry." 4536 Col. iii. 5. The laying aside of these is what the apostle preaches; and he declares that those who do such things, as being merely flesh and blood, cannot inherit the kingdom of heaven. For their soul, tending towards what is worse, and descending to earthly lusts, has become a partaker in the same designation which belongs to these [lusts, viz., "earthly"], which, when the apostle commands us to lay aside, he says in the same Epistle, "Cast ye off the old man with his deeds." 4537 Col. iii. 9. But when he said this, he does not remove away the ancient formation [of man]; for in that case it would be incumbent on us to rid ourselves of its company by committing suicide.

4. But the apostle himself also, being one who had been formed in a womb, and had issued thence, wrote to us, and confessed in his Epistle to the Philippians that “to live in the flesh was the fruit of [his] work;” 4538 Phil. i. 22 thus expressing himself. Now the final result of the work of the Spirit is the salvation of the flesh. 4539 Following Harvey’s explanation of a somewhat obscure passage. For what other visible fruit is there of the invisible Spirit, than the rendering of the flesh mature and capable of incorruption? If then [he says], “To live in the flesh, this is the result of labour to me,” he did not surely condemn the substance of flesh in that passage where he said, “Put ye off the old man with his works;” 4540 Col. iii. 10. but he points out that we should lay aside our former conversation, that which waxes old and becomes corrupt; and for this reason he goes on to say, “And put ye on the new man, that which is renewed in knowledge, after the image of Him who created him.” In this, therefore, that he says, “which is renewed in knowledge,” he demonstrates that he, the selfsame man who was in ignorance in times past, that is, in ignorance of God, is renewed by that knowledge which has respect to Him. For the knowledge of God renews man. And when he says, “after the image of the Creator,” he sets forth the recapitulation of the same man, who was at the beginning made after the likeness of God.

5. And that he, the apostle, was the very same person who had been born from the womb, that is, of the ancient substance of flesh, he does himself declare in the Epistle to the Galatians: “But when it pleased God, who separated me from my mother’s womb, and called me by His grace, to reveal His Son in me, that I might preach Him among the Gentiles,” 4541 Gal. i. 15, 16 it was not, as I have already observed, one person who had been born from the womb, and another who preached the Gospel of the Son of God; but that same individual who formerly was ignorant, and used to persecute the Church, when the revelation was made to him from heaven, and the Lord conferred with him, as I have pointed out in the third book, 4542 Vol. i. pp. 306, 321. preached the Gospel of Jesus Christ the Son of God, who was crucified under Pontius Pilate, his former ignorance being driven out by his subsequent knowledge: just as the blind men whom the Lord healed did certainly lose their blindness, but received the substance of their eyes perfect, and obtained the power of vision in the very same eyes with which they formerly did not see; the darkness being merely driven away by the power of vision, while the substance of the eyes was retained, in order that, by means of those eyes through which they had not seen, exercising again the visual power, they might give thanks to Him who had restored them again to sight. And thus, also, he whose withered hand was healed, and all who were healed generally, did not change those parts of their bodies which had at their birth come forth from the womb, but simply obtained these anew in a healthy condition.

6. For the Maker of all things, the Word of God, who did also from the beginning form man, when He found His handiwork impaired by wickedness, performed upon it all kinds of healing. At one time [He did so], as regards each separate member, as it is found in His own handiwork; and at another time He did once for all restore man sound and whole in all points, preparing him perfect for Himself unto the resurrection. For what was His object in healing [different] portions of the flesh, and restoring them to their original condition, if those parts which had been healed by Him were not in a position to obtain salvation? For if it was [merely] a temporary benefit which He conferred, He granted nothing of importance to those who were the subjects of His healing. Or how can they maintain that the flesh is incapable of receiving the life which flows from Him, when it received healing from Him? For life is brought about through healing, and incorruption through life. He, therefore, who confers healing, the same does also confer life; and He [who gives] life, also surrounds His own handiwork with incorruption.

Summary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus reasons, “For as the flesh is capable of corruption, so is it also of incorruption; and as it is of death, so is it also of life. These two do mutually give way to each other; and both cannot remain in the same place, but one is driven out by the other, and the presence of the one destroys that of the other.” Irenaeus continues as he concludes, “If, then, when death takes possession of a man, it drives life away from him, and proves him to be dead, much more does life, when it has obtained power over the man, drive out death, and restore him as living unto God.” Irenaeus then asks, “For if death brings mortality, why should not life, when it comes, vivify man?" And Irenaeus answers as he affirms, "Just as Esaias the prophet says, "Death devoured when it had prevailed," referring to Isaiah 25:8 in the Septuagint. Irenaeus then adds, "And again, "God has wiped away every tear from every face," also referring to Isaiah 25:8 in the Septuagint. Irenaeus then concludes, "Thus that former life is expelled, because it was not given by the Spirit, but by the breath."

In paragraph two, Irenaeus testifies, "For the breath of life, which also rendered man an animated being, is one thing, and the vivifying Spirit another, which also caused him to become spiritual. And for this reason Isaiah said, "Thus saith the Lord, who made heaven and established it, who founded the earth and the things therein, and gave breath to the people upon it, and Spirit to those walking upon it," referring to Isaiah 42:5. Irenaeus continues as he asserts, "thus telling us that breath is indeed given in common to all people upon earth, but that the Spirit is theirs alone who tread down earthly desires." Irenaeus then affirms, "And therefore Isaiah himself, distinguishing the things already mentioned, again exclaims, "For the Spirit shall go forth from Me, and I have made every breath," referring to Isaiah 57:16. And Irenaeus then testifies, "Thus does he attribute the Spirit as peculiar to God which in the last times He pours forth upon the human race by the adoption of sons; but [he shows] that breath was common throughout the creation, and points it out as something created." Irenaeus then reasons, "Now what has been made is a different thing from him who makes it. The breath, then, is temporal, but the Spirit eternal. The breath, too, increases [in strength] for a short period, and continues for a certain time; after that it takes its departure, leaving its former abode destitute of breath. But when the Spirit pervades the man within and without, inasmuch as it continues there, it never leaves him." Irenaeus then testifies, "But that is not first which is spiritual," says the apostle, speaking this as if with reference to us human beings; "but that is first which is animal, afterwards that which is spiritual," referring to 1 Corinthians 15:46, "in accordance with reason." Irenaeus then reasons, "For there had been a necessity that, in the first place, a human being should be fashioned, and that what was fashioned should receive the soul; afterwards that it should thus receive the communion of the Spirit." And Irenaeus concludes, "Wherefore also "the first Adam was made" by the Lord "a living soul, the second Adam a quickening spirit," referring to 1 Corinthians 15:45. Irenaeus then testifies, "As, then, he who was made a living soul forfeited life when he turned aside to what was evil, so, on the other hand, the same individual, when he reverts to what is good, and receives the quickening Spirit, shall find life."

In paragraph three, Irenaeus explains what he means as he says, "For it is not one thing which dies and another which is quickened, as neither is it one thing which is lost and another which is found, but the Lord came seeking for that same sheep which had been lost." Irenaeus then asks, "What was it, then, which was dead?" And Irenaeus answers as he asserts, "Undoubtedly it was the substance of the flesh; the same, too, which had lost the breath of life, and had become breathless and dead. This same, therefore, was what the Lord came to quicken, that as in Adam we do all die, as being of an animal nature, in Christ we may all live, as being spiritual, not laying aside God's handiwork, but the lusts of the flesh, and receiving the Holy Spirit;" Irenaeus then testifies, "as the apostle says in the Epistle to the Colossians: "Mortify, therefore, your members which are upon the earth," referring to Colossians 3:5. Irenaeus then explains, "And what these are he himself explains: "Fornication, uncleanness, inordinate affection, evil concupiscence; and covetousness, which is idolatry," again referring to Colossians 3:5. Irenaeus testifies that, "The laying aside of these is what the apostle preaches;" Irenaeus then asserts, "and he declares that those who do such things, as being merely flesh and blood, cannot inherit the kingdom of heaven." Irenaeus then reasons, "For their soul, tending towards what is worse, and descending to earthly lusts, has become a partaker in the same designation which belongs to these [lusts, viz., "earthly"], which, when the apostle commands us to lay aside, he says in the same Epistle, "Cast ye off the old man with his deeds," referring to Colossians 3:10. Irenaeus is then candid as he says, "But when he said this, he does not remove away the ancient formation [of man]; for in that case it would be incumbent on us to rid ourselves of its company by committing suicide."

In paragraph four, Irenaeus testifies, "But the apostle himself also, being one who had been formed in a womb, and had issued thence, wrote to us, and confessed in his Epistle to the Philippians that "to live in the flesh was the fruit of [his] work," referring to Philippians 1:22, "thus expressing himself." Irenaeus continues as he testifies, "Now the final result of the work of the Spirit is the salvation of the flesh." Irenaeus then asks, "For what other visible fruit is there of the invisible Spirit, than the rendering of the flesh mature and capable of incorruption?” Irenaeus then affirms, “If then [he says], “To live in the flesh, this is the result of labour to me,” he did not surely contemn the substance of flesh in that passage where he said, “Put ye off the old man with his works,” again referring to Colossians 3:9, “but he points out that we should lay aside our former conversation, that which waxes old and becomes corrupt,” referring to Ephesians 4:22, “and for this reason he goes on to say, “And put ye on the new man, that which is renewed in knowledge, after the image of Him who created him,” referring to Colossians 3:10. Irenaeus then explains, “In this, therefore, that he says, “which is renewed in knowledge,” he demonstrates that he, the selfsame man who was in ignorance in times past, that is, in ignorance of God, is renewed by that knowledge which has respect to Him. For the knowledge of God renews man.” Irenaeus adds, “And when he says, “after the image of the Creator,” he sets forth the recapitulation of the same man, who was at the beginning made after the likeness of God.”

In paragraph five, Irenaeus testifies, “And that he, the apostle, was the very same person who had been born from the womb, that is, of the ancient substance of flesh, he does himself declare in the Epistle to the Galatians: “But when it pleased God, who separated me from my mother’s womb, and called me by His grace, to reveal His Son in me, that I might preach Him among the Gentiles,” referring to Galatians 1:15-16, “it was not, as I have already observed, one person who had been born from the womb, and another who preached the Gospel of the Son of God; but that same individual who formerly was ignorant, and used to persecute the Church, when the revelation was made to him from heaven, and the Lord conferred with him, as I have pointed out in the third book, preached the Gospel of Jesus Christ the Son of God, who was crucified under Pontius Pilate, his former ignorance being driven out by his subsequent knowledge.” Irenaeus then adds, “just as the blind men whom the Lord healed did certainly lose their blindness, but received the substance of their eyes perfect, and obtained the power of vision in the very same eyes with which they formerly did not see; the darkness being merely driven away by the power of vision, while the substance of the eyes was retained, in order that, by means of those eyes through which they had not seen, exercising again the visual power, they might give thanks to Him who had restored them again to sight,” referring possibly to Matthew 20:29-34. Again Irenaeus testifies, “And thus, also, he whose withered hand was healed,” referring to Mark 3:3-5, “and all who were healed generally, did not change those parts of their bodies which had at their birth come forth from the womb, but simply obtained these anew in a healthy condition.”

In paragraph six, Irenaeus testifies, “For the Maker of all things, the Word of God, who did also from the beginning form man, when He found His handiwork impaired by wickedness, performed upon it all kinds of healing. At one time [He did so], as regards each separate member, as it is found in His own handiwork; and at another time He did once for all restore man sound and whole in all points, preparing him perfect for Himself unto the resurrection.” And Irenaeus points out, “For what was His object in healing [different] portions of the flesh, and restoring them to their original condition, if those parts which had been healed by Him were not in a position to obtain salvation? For if it was [merely] a temporary benefit which He conferred, He granted nothing of importance to those who were the subjects of His healing.” Irenaeus concludes as he argues, “Or how can they maintain that the flesh is incapable of receiving the life which flows from Him, when it received healing from Him? For life is brought about through healing, and incorruption through life. He, therefore, who confers healing, the same does also confer life; and He [who gives] life, also surrounds His own handiwork with incorruption.”

Commentary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus reasons, “For as the flesh is capable of corruption, so is it also of incorruption; and as it is of death, so is it also of life. These two do mutually give way to each other; and both cannot remain in the same place, but one is driven out by the other, and the presence of the one destroys that of the other.” Irenaeus continues as he concludes, “If, then, when death takes possession of a man, it drives life away from him, and proves him to be dead, much more does life, when it has obtained power over the man, drive out death, and restore him as living unto God.” Irenaeus then asks, “For if death brings mortality, why should not life, when it comes, vivify man?” And Irenaeus answers as he affirms, “Just as Esaias the prophet says, “Death devoured when it had prevailed,” referring to Isaiah 25 (Septuagint):8 Death has prevailed and swallowed men up; but again the Lord God has taken away every tear from every face. He has taken away the reproach of his people from all the earth: for the mouth of the Lord has spoken it.

Irenaeus then adds, “And again, “God has wiped away every tear from every face,” also referring to Isaiah 25:8 in the Septuagint. This verse makes more sense if we read it as it is in Isaiah 25 (NASB):8 He will swallow up death for all time, And the Lord GOD will wipe tears away from all faces, And He will remove the reproach of His people from all the earth; For the LORD has spoken.

Irenaeus then concludes, “Thus that former life is expelled, because it was not given by the Spirit, but by the breath.”

Irenaeus is quite correct when he says that in the incorruptible state the “former life is expelled, because it was not given by the Spirit, but by the breath.” The new life at the resurrection will be by Spirit and not by breath. Also, we know that death does devour when it prevails, but here the Lord is saying that He will abolish death and remove the reproach of His people, the righteous. This is a little different than the Septuagint quote Irenaeus uses.

In paragraph two, Irenaeus testifies, “For the breath of life, which also rendered man an animated being, is one thing, and the vivifying Spirit another, which also caused him to become spiritual. And for this reason Isaiah said, “Thus saith the Lord, who made heaven and established it, who founded the earth and the things therein, and gave breath to the people upon it, and Spirit to those walking upon it,” referring to Isaiah 42 (ESV):5 Thus says God, the LORD, who created the heavens and stretched them out, who spread out the earth and what comes from it, who gives breath to the people on it and spirit to those who walk in it:

Irenaeus continues as he asserts, “thus telling us that breath is indeed given in common to all people upon earth, but that the Spirit is theirs alone who tread down earthly desires.” Irenaeus then affirms, “And therefore Isaiah himself, distinguishing the things already mentioned, again exclaims, “For the Spirit shall go forth from Me, and I have made every breath,” referring in context to Isaiah 57 (Septuagint):15 Thus saith the Most High, who dwells on high for ever, Holy in the holies, is his name, the Most High resting in the holies, and giving patience to the faint-hearted, and giving life to the broken-hearted: 16 I will not take vengeance on you for ever, neither will I be always angry with you: for my Spirit shall go forth from me, and I have created all breath.

But verse 16 reads differently when translated from the Hebrew as we read in Isaiah 57 (NASB):16 “For I will not contend forever, Nor will I always be angry; For the spirit would grow faint before Me, And the breath of those whom I have made.

The words “of those whom” in the NASB are added by the translators, so the verse literally reads, “For I will not contend forever, Nor will I always be angry; For the spirit would grow faint before Me, And the breath I have made.” The Lord is equating the word, spirit, with the word, breath, which He has made.

In the Old Testament the Hebrew word for spirit is rowach, pronounced roo-akh. There are two different Hebrew words used for breath. They are neshamah, pronounced nesh-aw-maw, and rowach, the same word that is used for spirit. The first word for breath, neshamah, is used in Genesis 2 (ESV):7 then the LORD God formed the man of dust from the ground and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and the man became a living creature.

Again, the Hebrew word “rowach” is used for “spirit” in Zechariah 12 (ESV):1 The oracle of the word of the LORD concerning Israel: Thus declares the LORD, who stretched out the heavens and founded the earth and formed the spirit of man within him:

But this same Hebrew word is translated breath in Genesis 6 (ESV):17 For behold, I will bring a flood of waters upon the earth to destroy all flesh in which is the breath of life under heaven. Everything that is on the earth shall die.

So we can tell by the context how to translate this word. This is important to remember when we consider Irenaeus’ reference in Isaiah 42 (ESV):5 Thus says God, the LORD, who created the heavens and stretched them out, who spread out the earth and what comes from it, who gives breath to the people on it and spirit to those who walk in it:

Both words are used in this verse. The word for breath is neshamah in the Hebrew, and the word for spirit is rowach in the Hebrew. That God has given both breath and spirit to every man is what this passage is saying. It is not saying that He gave the Holy Spirit to every man. Irenaeus is not saying this either, but by his interpreting the word “spirit” in this verse to be Spirit, that is, the Holy Spirit, he then is able to infer that “that “the Spirit is theirs alone who tread down earthly desires.” This is not correct. The Hebrew is just saying that God gave breath and spirit to those who on this earth. Irenaeus did not allow man to have his own spirit. We will discuss his thinking in this regard more in Chapter 8: On the Nature of Man.

So the context of Isaiah 42:5 and Isaiah 57:16 indicates that our current version, the NASB, is more accurate, especially if you took out the additional words added by the translators. Also, our current version is translated from the Hebrew, instead of the Greek as the Septuagint is written in. This gives our current translations yet more weight. Nevertheless, it is now much more easy to understand Irenaeus' line of reasoning about the spirit here, which he interprets as the Holy Spirit, instead of the spirit of man. We note here that Irenaeus is working with the resources available to him at the time, and is honestly trying to interpret the Scriptures.

So Irenaeus continues in paragraph two as he then testifies, "Thus does he attribute the Spirit as peculiar to God which in the last times He pours forth upon the human race by the adoption of sons; but [he shows] that breath was common throughout the creation, and points it out as something created." The Spirit has indeed been poured out as Peter records in Acts 2 (ESV):14 But Peter, standing with the eleven, lifted up his voice and addressed them: "Men of Judea and all who dwell in Jerusalem, let this be known to you, and give ear to my words. 15 For these people are not drunk, as you suppose, since it is only the third hour of the day. 16 But this is what was uttered through the prophet Joel: 17 "'And in the last days it shall be, God declares, that I will pour out my Spirit on all flesh, and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams; 18 even on my male servants and female servants in those days I will pour out my Spirit, and they shall prophesy. 19 And I will show wonders in the heavens above and signs on the earth below, blood, and fire, and vapor of smoke; 20 the sun shall be turned to darkness and the moon to blood, before the day of the Lord comes, the great and magnificent day. 21 And it shall come to pass that everyone who calls upon the name of the Lord shall be saved.'

Irenaeus then continues as he reasons, "Now what has been made is a different thing from him who makes it. The breath, then, is temporal, but the Spirit eternal."

Indeed, the Scriptures teach that spirit is eternal. God created man with a spirit and that spirit is eternal. Man's spirit before accepting Christ is dead in trespasses and sins. Old Testament saints believed in Him who was to come and were born again in their spirit. New Testament saints believe in Him who has come and are born again in their spirit. That is, their spirits are no longer dead in sin but alive to God.

Irenaeus continues saying, "The breath, too, increases [in strength] for a short period, and continues for a certain time; after that it takes its departure, leaving its former abode destitute of breath. But when the Spirit pervades the man within and without, inasmuch as it continues there, it never leaves him." Irenaeus believed that after we had believed in the Lord Jesus, and received the Spirit of God, that we could lose the Spirit if we did not walk "in communion of the Spirit", that is, if we walked in the flesh. We will discuss this more in Chapter 7: Inheriting the Kingdom of Heaven when we looked at paragraphs 3 and 4 in Book 5: Chapter IX of Irenaeus' writing.

Irenaeus then testifies, "But that is not first which is spiritual," says the apostle, speaking this as if with reference to us human beings; "but that is first which is animal, afterwards that which is spiritual," referring to 1 Corinthians 15:46, "in accordance with reason." Irenaeus then reasons, "For there had been a necessity that, in the first place, a human being should be fashioned, and that what was fashioned should receive the soul; afterwards that it should thus receive the communion of the Spirit." And Irenaeus concludes, "Wherefore also "the first Adam was made" by the Lord "a living soul, the second Adam a quickening spirit," referring to 1 Corinthians 15:45. Irenaeus then explains, "As, then, he who was made a living soul forfeited life when he turned aside to what was evil, so, on the other hand, the same individual, when he reverts to what is good, and receives the quickening Spirit, shall find life."

To summarize, Irenaeus says it is "in accordance with reason" that man should first be "animal," or "natural" as in our English Bibles, and then to receive the "communion of the Spirit," that is "the quickening spirit" or life-giving spirit in our English Bibles, and so become spiritual, that is, find life. And so the Scripture says as much, as we read in 1 Corinthians 15 (ESV):45 Thus it is written, "The first man Adam became a living being"; the last Adam became a life-giving spirit. 46 But it is not the spiritual that is first but the natural, and then the spiritual.

The word “natural,” or “animal” as Irenaeus translated it, is a translation of the Greek word ψυχικον, (pronounced psuchikon)”. Vine’s says that this word means “belonging to the psuche, soul, (as the lower part of the immaterial in man), natural, physical, describes the man in Adam and what pertains to him (set in contrast to pneumatikos, spiritual).” Expository Dictionary of New Testament Words, W.E. Vine, Vol. III, page 102. This Greek word ψυχικον (pronounced psuchikon) is the same word that is used for natural in Romans 1 (ESV):26 For this reason God gave them up to dishonorable passions. For their women exchanged natural relations for those that are contrary to nature; 27 and the men likewise gave up natural relations with women and were consumed with passion for one another, men committing shameless acts with men and receiving in themselves the due penalty for their error.

One other note about 1 Corinthians 15:45, the words “a living soul” are ψυχην ζωσαν (pronounced psuchen dzosan) in the Greek. The Greek word for soul is psuche and the Greek word for life is dzosan. Jesus said we would be born of the Spirit in John 3 (ESV):6 That which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit. 7 Do not marvel that I said to you, ‘You must be born again.’ 8 The wind blows where it wishes, and you hear its sound, but you do not know where it comes from or where it goes. So it is with everyone who is born of the Spirit.”

This is what Paul speaks of when he says we were made alive together with Christ in Ephesians 2 (ESV):5 even when we were dead in our trespasses, made us alive together with Christ—by grace you have been saved—

And in Colossians 2 (NASB):13 And you, who were dead in your trespasses and the uncircumcision of your flesh, God made alive together with him, having forgiven us all our trespasses.

That is, we were spiritually dead as descendants of Adam, but raised to have spiritual life again in Christ.

In paragraph three, Irenaeus explains, “For it is not one thing which dies and another which is quickened, as neither is it one thing which is lost and another which is found, but the Lord came seeking for that same sheep which had been lost.” Irenaeus then asks, ”What was it, then, which was dead?” And Irenaeus answers as he asserts, “Undoubtedly it was the substance of the flesh; the same, too, which had lost the breath of life, and had become breathless and dead.” But in his epistle to the Colossians, Paul is speaking of spiritual death. Paul was speaking to real people who lived in the city of Colossae and formed the church of the Colossians, for this is how Paul addresses them in Colossians 1 (ESV):1 Paul, an apostle of Christ Jesus by the will of God, and Timothy our brother, 2 To the saints and faithful brothers in Christ at Colossae: Grace to you and peace from God our Father.

It was these same Colossians whom Paul is addressing in Colossians 2 (ESV):13 And you, who were dead in your trespasses and the uncircumcision of your flesh, God made alive together with him, having forgiven us all our trespasses.

These same Colossians were dead spiritually in trespasses and the uncircumcision of their flesh. And these same Colossians were the ones that He made alive together with Him, having forgiven them all their trespasses.

It was not the “substance of the flesh” which was dead since the Colossians were alive physically when the Gospel was preached to them. They had not lost the breath of life, but they were dead in transgressions, that is, in sins. Irenaeus continues as he says, “This same, therefore, was what the Lord came to quicken, that as in Adam we do all die, as being of an animal nature, in Christ we may all live, as being spiritual, not laying aside God’s handiwork, but the lusts of the flesh, and receiving the Holy Spirit;”

But what Christ came to quicken was our spirits as Jesus Himself testifies in John 3 (ESV):6 That which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit. 7 Do not marvel that I said to you, ‘You must be born again.’ 8 The wind blows where it wishes, and you hear its sound, but you do not know where it comes from or where it goes. So it is with everyone who is born of the Spirit.”

The Spirit gives birth to spirit, that is, the spirit of man. What is born of the Spirit is spirit as Jesus tells us in verse 6. The one who is born again in this way is now spiritually alive with Christ as Paul says in Colossians 2:13. It is true that we all died in Adam as Paul tells us in 1 Corinthians 15 (NASB):22 For as in Adam all die, so also in Christ all will be made alive.

This death in Adam applies to the spiritual death of our spirits as well as the physical death of our bodies. The reason we need to be born again is because our spirits are dead in sin. Our bodies still have the breath of life, yet our bodies are mortal and destined to die physically. The promise of the resurrection of our bodies is the hope of all who believe in and confess as Lord, the Lord Jesus Christ.

After we are born again, we still have our fleshly nature which we inherited in Adam. Paul tells us that nothing good dwells in our flesh in Romans 7 (ESV):18 For I know that nothing good dwells in me, that is, in my flesh. For I have the desire to do what is right, but not the ability to carry it out.

And again in Romans 7 (ESV):21 So I find it to be a law that when I want to do right, evil lies close at hand. 22 For I delight in the law of God, in my inner being, 23 but I see in my members another law waging war against the law of my mind and making me captive to the law of sin that dwells in my members. 24 Wretched man that I am! Who will deliver me from this body of death? 25 Thanks be to God through Jesus Christ our Lord! So then, I myself serve the law of God with my mind, but with my flesh I serve the law of sin.

The inner man Paul speaks of here is our spirit which has been born again. Because we have been born of the Spirit, we have the attributes of His nature in our spirit. This is why we joyfully concur with the law of God in the inner man. It is our flesh that causes all our problems, for it still has the sin nature of Adam in it. It is our flesh that will be changed at the resurrection, and then we will finally be free of the old Adamic nature.

Irenaeus then testifies, “as the apostle says in the Epistle to the Colossians: “Mortify, therefore, your members which are upon the earth,” referring to Colossians 3 (KJV):5 Mortify therefore your members which are upon the earth; fornication, uncleanness, inordinate affection, evil concupiscence, and covetousness, which is idolatry.

The King James Version is the most literal corresponding to the Greek, so I refer to it here. Irenaeus then explains, “And what these are he himself explains: “Fornication, uncleanness, inordinate affection, evil concupiscence; and covetousness, which is idolatry,” again referring to Colossians 3:5. The reason we must mortify, or put these things to death, is because the sin nature of Adam is still in our flesh. We would not have to mortify anything if we did not have the sin nature of Adam after we were born again.

Irenaeus testifies that, “The laying aside of these is what the apostle preaches;” Yes, after we are born again, we are then responsible to lay aside our former conversation and put on the new man as Paul tells us in Ephesians 4 (ESV):22 to put off your old self, which belongs to your former manner of life and is corrupt through deceitful desires, 23 and to be renewed in the spirit of your minds, 24 and to put on the new self, created after the likeness of God in true righteousness and holiness.

The new self is the inner man which is our spirit which has been born again of the Spirit. Notice that this new self has been “created after the likeness of God in true righteousness and holiness.” This is why we are called a new creation by Paul in 2 Corinthians 5 (ESV):17 Therefore, if anyone is in Christ, he is a new creation. The old has passed away; behold, the new has come.

Irenaeus then asserts, “and he declares that those who do such things, as being merely flesh and blood, cannot inherit the kingdom of heaven.” Irenaeus is referring to in 1 Corinthians 15 (ESV):50 I tell you this, brothers: flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God, nor does the perishable inherit the imperishable.

However, Paul does not say here that they who do such things are all without exception merely flesh and blood. In 1 Corinthians 15:50 Paul is merely stating that the flesh whose life is in the blood, cannot progress to the kingdom of God since it is mortal and possesses the old Adamic nature. The flesh must be changed Paul says in 1 Corinthians 15 (ESV):51 Behold! I tell you a mystery. We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, 52 in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trumpet. For the trumpet will sound, and the dead will be raised imperishable, and we shall be changed. 53 For this perishable body must put on the imperishable, and this mortal body must put on immortality.

Our mortal flesh must put on immortality. What Irenaeus does not understand is that believers still possess the old Adamic nature and they are responsible to put this old nature off and put on the new nature of the inner man which is in our spirit when we are born again. If we do not put off this old man, or sin nature, we are what Paul describes as carnal, or men of flesh, as we read in 1 Corinthians 3 (NASB):1 And I, brethren, could not speak to you as to spiritual men, but as to men of flesh, as to infants in Christ.

We will talk more about this thinking of Irenaeus in Chapter 7: Inheriting the Kingdom of Heaven.

Irenaeus then reasons, “For their soul, tending towards what is worse, and descending to earthly lusts, has become a partaker in the same designation which belongs to these [lusts, viz., “earthly”], which, when the apostle commands us to lay aside, he says in the same Epistle, “Cast ye off the old man with his deeds,” referring in context to Colossians 3 (ESV):9 Do not lie to one another, seeing that you have put off the old self with its practices, 10 and have put on the new self, which is being renewed in knowledge after the image of its creator.

Irenaeus is then candid as he says, “But when he said this, he does not remove away the ancient formation [of man]; for in that case it would be incumbent on us to rid ourselves of its company by committing suicide.”

In paragraph four, Irenaeus testifies, “But the apostle himself also, being one who had been formed in a womb, and had issued thence, wrote to us, and confessed in his Epistle to the Philippians that “to live in the flesh was the fruit of [his] work,” referring in context to Philippians 1 (ESV):21 For to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain. 22 If I am to live in the flesh, that means fruitful labor for me. Yet which I shall choose I cannot tell.

Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “thus expressing himself. Now the final result of the work of the Spirit is the salvation of the flesh.” Irenaeus then argues, “For what other visible fruit is there of the invisible Spirit, than the rendering of the flesh mature and capable of incorruption?” Irenaeus then affirms, “If then [he says], “To live in the flesh, this is the result of labour to me,” he did not surely condemn the substance of flesh in that passage where he said, “Put ye off the old man with his works,” again referring to Colossians 3 (ESV):9 Do not lie to one another, seeing that you have put off the old self with its practices.

Irenaeus continues, “but he points out that we should lay aside our former conversation, that which waxes old and becomes corrupt,” referring to Ephesians 4 (ESV):22 to put off your old self, which belongs to your former manner of life and is corrupt through deceitful desires,

And Irenaeus continues, “and for this reason he goes on to say, “And put ye on the new man, that which is renewed in knowledge, after the image of Him who created him,” referring to Colossians 3 (ESV):10 and have put on the new self, which is being renewed in knowledge after the image of its creator.

Irenaeus then explains, “In this, therefore, that he says, “which is renewed in knowledge,” he demonstrates that he, the selfsame man who was in ignorance in times past, that is, in ignorance of God, is renewed by that knowledge which has respect to Him. For the knowledge of God renews man.” Irenaeus then adds, “And when he says, “after the image of the Creator,” he sets forth the recapitulation of the same man, who was at the beginning made after the likeness of God.” This is a wonderful insight of Irenaeus, that the knowledge of God renews man.

In paragraph five, Irenaeus testifies, “And that he, the apostle, was the very same person who had been born from the womb, that is, of the ancient substance of flesh, he does himself declare in the Epistle to the Galatians: “But when it pleased God, who separated me from my mother’s womb, and called me by His grace, to reveal His Son in me, that I might preach Him among the Gentiles,” referring to Galatians 1 (ESV):15 But when he who had set me apart before I was born, and who called me by his grace, 16 was pleased to reveal his Son to me, in order that I might preach him among the Gentiles, I did not immediately consult with anyone; 17 nor did I go up to Jerusalem to those who were apostles before me, but I went away into Arabia, and returned again to Damascus.

Irenaeus then argues, “it was not, as I have already observed, one person who had been born from the womb, and another who preached the Gospel of the Son of God; but that same individual who formerly was ignorant, and used to persecute the Church, when the revelation was made to him from heaven, and the Lord conferred with him, as I have pointed out in the third book, preached the Gospel of Jesus Christ the Son of God, who was crucified under Pontius Pilate, his former ignorance being driven out by his subsequent knowledge.” This reminds us of Paul’s own testimony in 1 Timothy 1 (ESV):12 I thank him who has given me strength, Christ Jesus our Lord, because he judged me faithful, appointing me to his service, 13 though formerly I was a blasphemer, persecutor, and insolent opponent. But I received mercy because I had acted ignorantly in unbelief, 14 and the grace of our Lord overflowed for me with the faith and love that are in Christ Jesus. 15 The saying is trustworthy and deserving of full acceptance, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners, of whom I am the foremost. 16 But I received mercy for this reason, that in me, as the foremost, Jesus Christ might display his perfect patience as an example to those who were to believe in him for eternal life.

Irenaeus then adds, “just as the blind men whom the Lord healed did certainly lose their blindness, but received the substance of their eyes perfect, and obtained the power of vision in the very same eyes with which they formerly did not see; the darkness being merely driven away by the power of vision, while the substance of the eyes was retained, in order that, by means of those eyes through which they had not seen, exercising again the visual power, they might give thanks to Him who had restored them again to sight,” referring possibly to Matthew 20 (ESV):29 And as they went out of Jericho, a great crowd followed him. 30 And behold, there were two blind men sitting by the roadside, and when they heard that Jesus was passing by, they cried out, “Lord, have mercy on us, Son of David!” 31 The crowd rebuked them, telling them to be silent, but they cried out all the more, “Lord, have mercy on us, Son of David!” 32 And stopping, Jesus called them and said, “What do you want me to do for you?” 33 They said to him, “Lord, let our eyes be opened.” 34 And Jesus in pity touched their eyes, and immediately they recovered their sight and followed him.

Again Irenaeus testifies, “And thus, also, he whose withered hand was healed,” referring to Mark 3 (ESV):3 And he said to the man with the withered hand, “Come here.” 4 And he said to them, “Is it lawful on the Sabbath to do good or to do harm, to save life or to kill?” But they were silent. 5 And he looked around at them with anger, grieved at their hardness of heart, and said to the man, “Stretch out your hand.” He stretched it out, and his hand was restored.

And Irenaeus testifies further, “and all who were healed generally, did not change those parts of their bodies which had at their birth come forth from the womb, but simply obtained these anew in a healthy condition.”

In paragraph six, Irenaeus testifies, “For the Maker of all things, the Word of God, who did also from the beginning form man, when He found His handiwork impaired by wickedness, performed upon it all kinds of healing. At one time [He did so], as regards each separate member, as it is found in His own handiwork; and at another time He did once for all restore man sound and whole in all points, preparing him perfect for Himself unto the resurrection.” This reminds us of Matthews testimony in Matthew 8 (ESV):16 That evening they brought to him many who were oppressed by demons, and he cast out the spirits with a word and healed all who were sick. 17 This was to fulfill what was spoken by the prophet Isaiah: “He took our illnesses and bore our diseases.”

Irenaeus then points out, “For what was His object in healing [different] portions of the flesh, and restoring them to their original condition, if those parts which had been healed by Him were not in a position to obtain salvation? For if it was [merely] a temporary benefit which He conferred, He granted nothing of importance to those who were the subjects of His healing.” Irenaeus concludes as he argues, “Or how can they maintain that the flesh is incapable of receiving the life which flows from Him, when it received healing from Him? For life is brought about through healing, and incorruption through life. He, therefore, who confers healing, the same does also confer life; and He [who gives] life, also surrounds His own handiwork with incorruption.”

It is not unreasonable then that the one who confers healing and life should also raise the dead. This is Irenaeus’ point. Again, Bravo Irenaeus!

Commentary Summary Book 5: Chapter XII

Irenaeus is trying to show the reasonability of the resurrection of our bodies. But what would have helped him greatly to interpret the Scriptures is if he would have understood that man has a spirit of his own, in addition to his soul and body. In paragraph two, Irenaeus begins as follows:

“For the breath of life, which also rendered man an animated being, is one thing, and the vivifying Spirit another, which also caused him to become spiritual. And for this reason Isaiah said, “Thus saith the Lord, who made heaven and established it, who founded the earth and the things therein, and gave breath to the people upon it, and Spirit to those walking upon it,” referring to Isaiah 42:5, “thus telling us that breath is indeed given in common to all people upon earth, but that the Spirit is theirs alone who tread down earthly desires. And therefore Isaiah himself, distinguishing the things already mentioned, again exclaims, “For the Spirit shall go forth from Me, and I have made every breath,” referring to Isaiah 57:16. Thus does he attribute the Spirit as peculiar to God which in the last times He pours forth upon the human race by the adoption of sons; but [he shows] that breath was common throughout the creation, and points it out as something created.”

Just to note, if we follow Irenaeus’ line of reasoning here, it is only the New Testament saints who will be resurrected since it was they who have the Spirit poured out upon them in “the last times.” This is not what Irenaeus believes, but it is the logical conclusion of his statements.

In paragraph two, we see that Irenaeus is careful to distinguish between the breath of life and the vivifying Spirit. And in his writing in general he seems to say that a man is composed of just flesh and soul until he receives the Spirit. We see this most clearly when Irenaeus writes in Book 5: Chapter XII, paragraph 3, “For it is not one thing which dies and another which is quickened, as neither is it one thing which is lost and another which is found, but the Lord came seeking for that same sheep which had been lost. What was it, then, which was dead? Undoubtedly it was the substance of the flesh; the same, too, which had lost the breath of life, and had become breathless and dead. This same, therefore, was what the Lord came to quicken, that as in Adam we do all die, as being of an animal nature, in Christ we may all live, as being spiritual, not laying aside God’s handiwork, but the lusts of the flesh, and receiving the Holy Spirit; as the apostle says in the Epistle to the Colossians: “Mortify, therefore, your members which are upon the earth.”

In other words, man does not have a spirit of his own in Irenaeus’ thinking, but just a body and a soul. Man is just of an animal nature before Christ, Irenaeus says. But what do the Scriptures say regarding the makeup of man’s being?

The Scriptures indicate that man has three parts to his being, that is, spirit, soul, and body, as we read in 1 Thessalonians 5 (ESV):23 Now may the God of peace himself sanctify you completely, and may your whole spirit and soul and body be kept blameless at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. 24 He who calls you is faithful; he will surely do it.

That there is a division between our spirit and our soul is stated in Hebrews 4 (ESV):12 For the word of God is living and active, sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing to the division of soul and of spirit, of joints and of marrow, and discerning the thoughts and intentions of the heart.

That there is a difference between our spirit and the Holy Spirit is indicated in Romans 8 (ESV):16 The Spirit himself bears witness with our spirit that we are children of God, 17 and if children, then heirs—heirs of God and fellow heirs with Christ, provided we suffer with him in order that we may also be glorified with him.

Then again Paul speaks of his own spirit in 2 Corinthians 2 (ESV):13 my spirit was not at rest because I did not find my brother Titus there. So I took leave of them and went on to Macedonia.

And again when Jesus raised a dead girl back to life we see that her own spirit returned in Luke 8 (ESV):52 And all were weeping and mourning for her, but he said, “Do not weep, for she is not dead but sleeping.” 53 And they laughed at him, knowing that she was dead. 54 But taking her by the hand he called, saying, “Child, arise.” 55 And her spirit returned, and she got up at once. And he directed that something should be given her to eat. 56 And her parents were amazed, but he charged them to tell no one what had happened.

As we read the writings of Irenaeus, we find that he is attributing the term spirit in almost all cases in the Old Testament to the Spirit of God, the Holy Spirit. It does not seem to me he allows for a spirit in man, except for the Holy Spirit. I believe the Bible teaches that God made man with spirit, soul, and body. We will discuss this more as we go. However, we should not lose sight of Irenaeus’ main goal here, and that is to show that the Scriptures teach that man’s body will be resurrected by God.

Book 5: Chapter XXXI.—The preservation of our bodies is confirmed by the resurrection and ascension of Christ: the souls of the saints during the intermediate period are in a state of expectation of that time when they shall receive their perfect and consummated glory.

1. Since, again, some who are reckoned among the orthodox go beyond the prearranged plan for the exaltation of the just, and are ignorant of the methods by which they are disciplined beforehand for incorruption, they thus entertain heretical opinions. For the heretics, despising the handiwork of God, and not admitting the salvation of their flesh, while they also treat the promise of God contemptuously, and pass beyond God altogether in the sentiments they form, affirm that immediately upon their death they shall pass above the heavens and the Demiurge, and go to the Mother (Achamoth) or to that Father whom they have feigned. Those persons, therefore, who disallow a resurrection affecting the whole man (universam reprobant resurrectionem), and as far as in them lies remove it from the midst [of the Christian scheme], how can they be wondered at, if again they know nothing as to the plan of the resurrection? For they do not choose to understand, that if these things are as they say, the Lord Himself, in whom they profess to believe, did not rise again upon the third day; but immediately upon His expiring on the cross, undoubtedly departed on high, leaving His body to the earth. But the case was, that for three days He dwelt in the place where the dead were, as the prophet says concerning Him: "And the Lord remembered His dead saints who slept formerly in the land of sepulture; and He descended to them, to rescue and save them."

4710 See the note, book iii. xx. 4. And the Lord Himself says, "As Jonas remained three days and three nights in the whale's belly, so shall the Son of man be in the heart of the earth." 4711 Matt. xii. 40. Then also the apostle says, "But when He ascended, what is it but that He also descended into the lower parts of the earth?" 4712 Eph. iv. 9. This, too, David says when prophesying of Him, "And thou hast delivered my soul from the nethermost hell;" 4713 Ps. lxxxvi. 13. and on His rising again the third day, He said to Mary, who was the first to see and to worship Him, "Touch Me not, for I have not yet ascended to the Father; but go to the disciples, and say unto them, I ascend unto My Father, and unto your Father." 4714 John xx. 17.

2. If, then, the Lord observed the law of the dead, that He might become the first-begotten from the dead, and tarried until the third day "in the lower parts of the earth;" 4715 Eph. iv. 9. then afterwards rising in the flesh, so that He even showed the print of the nails to His disciples, 4716 John xx. 20, 27. He thus ascended to the Father;—[if all these things occurred, I say], how must these men not be put to confusion, who allege that "the lower parts" refer to this world of ours, but that their inner man, leaving the body here, ascends into the super-celestial place? For as the Lord "went away in the midst of the shadow of death," 4717 Ps. xxiii. 4. where the souls of the dead were, yet afterwards arose in the body, and after the resurrection was taken up [into heaven], it is manifest that the souls of His disciples also, upon whose account the Lord underwent these things, shall go away into the invisible place allotted to them by God, and there remain until the resurrection, awaiting that event; then receiving their bodies, and rising in their entirety, that is bodily, just as the Lord arose, they shall come thus into the presence of God. "For no disciple is above the Master, but every one that is perfect shall be as his Master." 4718 Luke vi. 40. As our Master, therefore, did not at once depart, taking flight [to heaven], but awaited the time of His resurrection prescribed by the Father, which had been also shown forth through Jonas, and rising again after three days was taken up [to heaven]; so ought we also to await the time of our resurrection prescribed by God and foretold by the prophets, and so, rising, be taken up, as many as the Lord shall account worthy of this [privilege]. 4719 The five following chapters were omitted in the earlier editions, but added by Feuarentius. Most mss., too, did not contain them. It is probable that the scribes of the middle ages rejected them on account of their inculcating millenarian notions, which had been long extinct in the Church. Quotations from these five chapters have been collected by Harvey from Syriac and Armenian mss. lately come to light.

Summary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus testifies, "Since, again, some who are reckoned among the orthodox go beyond the prearranged plan for the exaltation of the just, and are ignorant of the methods by which they are disciplined beforehand for incorruption, they thus entertain heretical opinions. For the heretics, despising the handiwork of God, and not admitting the salvation of their flesh, while they also treat the promise of God contemptuously, and pass beyond God altogether in the sentiments they form, affirm that immediately upon their death they shall pass above the heavens and the Demiurge, and go to the Mother (Achamoth) or to that Father whom they have feigned." Irenaeus continues his rebuke as he says, "Those persons, therefore, who disallow a resurrection affecting the whole man (universam reprobant resurrectionem), and as far as in them lies remove it from the midst [of the Christian scheme], how can they be wondered at, if again they know nothing as to the plan of the resurrection? For they do not choose to understand, that if these things are as they say, the Lord Himself, in whom they profess to believe, did not rise again upon the third day; but immediately upon His expiring on the cross, undoubtedly departed on high, leaving His body to the earth.” Irenaeus then testifies, “But the case was, that for three days He dwelt in the place where the dead were, as the prophet says concerning Him: “And the Lord remembered His dead saints who slept formerly in the land of sepulture; and He descended to them, to rescue and save them.”

Irenaeus continues as he affirms, “And the Lord Himself says, “As Jonas remained three days and three nights in the whale’s belly, so shall the Son of man be in the heart of the earth,” referring to Matthew 12:40. Irenaeus then testifies, “Then also the apostle says, “But when He ascended, what is it but that He also descended into the lower parts of the earth?” referring to Ephesians 4:9. Irenaeus continues as he affirms, “This, too, David says when prophesying of Him, “And thou hast delivered my soul from the nethermost hell,” referring to Psalm 86:13, “and on His rising again the third day, He said to Mary, who was the first to see and to worship Him, “Touch Me not, for I have not yet ascended to the Father; but go to the disciples, and say unto them, I ascend unto My Father, and unto your Father,” referring to John 20:16-17.

In paragraph two, Irenaeus testifies, “If, then, the Lord observed the law of the dead, that He might become the first-begotten from the dead, and tarried until the third day “in the lower parts of the earth,” again referring to Ephesians 4:9, “then afterwards rising in the flesh, so that He even showed the print of the nails to His disciples,” drawing from John 20:25-27, “He thus ascended to the Father; “Irenaeus continues as he argues, “[if all these things occurred, I say], how must these men not be put to confusion, who allege that “the lower parts” refer to this world of ours, but that their inner man, leaving the body here, ascends into the super-celestial place?” Irenaeus then argues, “For as the Lord “went away in the midst of the shadow of death,” referring to Psalm 23:4, “where the souls of the dead were, yet afterwards arose in the body, and after the resurrection was taken up [into heaven], it is manifest that the souls of His disciples also, upon whose account the Lord underwent these things, shall go away into the invisible place allotted to them by God, and there remain until the resurrection, awaiting that event; then receiving their bodies, and rising in their entirety, that is bodily, just as the Lord arose, they shall come thus into the presence of God.” Irenaeus then quotes Luke saying, “For no disciple is above the Master, but every one that is perfect shall be as his Master,” referring to Luke 6:40. Irenaeus then asserts, “As our Master, therefore, did not at once depart, taking flight [to heaven], but awaited the time of His resurrection prescribed by the Father, which had been also shown forth through Jonas, and rising again after three days was taken up [to heaven]; so ought we also to await the time of our resurrection prescribed by God and foretold by the prophets, and so, rising, be taken up, as many as the Lord shall account worthy of this [privilege].”

Commentary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus testifies, “Since, again, some who are reckoned among the orthodox go beyond the prearranged plan for the exaltation of the just, and are ignorant of the methods by which they are disciplined beforehand for incorruption, they thus entertain heretical opinions. For the heretics, despising the handiwork of God, and not admitting the salvation of their flesh, while they also treat the promise of God contemptuously, and pass beyond God altogether in the sentiments they form, affirm that immediately upon their death they shall pass above the heavens and the Demiurge, and go to the Mother (Achamoth) or to that Father whom they have feigned.” Irenaeus is speaking to Gnostic heretics who were springing up in the churches from the disciples themselves. Irenaeus is defending the “salvation of the flesh,” that is, the resurrection of the body. And he rebukes these so-called orthodox believers calling them heretics, and rightly so.

Irenaeus continues his rebuke as he says, “Those persons, therefore, who disallow a resurrection affecting the whole man (universam reprobant resurrectionem), and as far as in them lies remove it from the midst [of the Christian scheme], how can they be wondered at, if again they know nothing as to the plan of the resurrection? For they do not choose to understand, that if these things are as they say, the Lord Himself, in whom they profess to believe, did not rise again upon the third day; but immediately upon His expiring on the cross, undoubtedly departed on high, leaving His body to the earth.” These so-called believers are shown to be heretics by Irenaeus who testifies that they are even found to deny the bodily resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Irenaeus then testifies, “But the case was, that for three days He dwelt in the place where the dead were, as the prophet says concerning Him: “And the Lord remembered His dead saints who slept formerly in the land of sepulture; and He descended to them, to rescue and save them.” Irenaeus is quoting a prophet here, but he does not say who the prophet is. The note 4710 in paragraph one refers the reader back to Book III, chapter 20, where the same quote is used by Irenaeus. Note 4 of chapter 20 in Book III of Irenaeus’ writing thus states the following:

“Irenaeus quotes this as from Isaiah on the present occasion; but in book IV, 27, I, we find him referring the same passage to Jeremiah. It is somewhat remarkable that it is to be found in neither prophet, although Justin Martyr, in his dialogue with Trypho, [chap lxxii, and notes, Dial. With Trypho, in this volume,] brings it forward as an argument against him, and directly accuses the Jews of having fraudulently removed it from the sacred text. It is, however, to be found in no ancient version or Jewish Targum, which fact may be regarded as a decisive proof of its spuriousness.”

We will refer back to this note in a moment. Irenaeus continues as he affirms, “And the Lord Himself says, “As Jonas remained three days and three nights in the whale’s belly, so shall the Son of man be in the heart of the earth,” referring to Matthew 12 (ESV):40 For just as Jonah was three days and three nights in the belly of the great fish, so will the Son of Man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth.

Irenaeus then testifies, “Then also the apostle says, “But when He ascended, what is it but that He also descended into the lower parts of the earth?” referring to Ephesians 4 (ESV):9 (In saying, “He ascended,” what does it mean but that he had also descended into the lower regions, the earth?)

Irenaeus continues as he affirms, “This, too, David says when prophesying of Him, “And thou hast delivered my soul from the nethermost hell,” referring to Psalms 86 (ESV):13 For great is your steadfast love toward me; you have delivered my soul from the depths of Sheol.

And Irenaeus concludes, “and on His rising again the third day, He said to Mary, who was the first to see and to worship Him, “Touch Me not, for I have not yet ascended to the Father; but go to the disciples, and say unto them, I ascend unto My Father, and unto your Father,” referring to John 20 (ESV):16 Jesus said to her, “Mary.” She turned and said to him in Aramaic, “Rabboni!” (which means Teacher). 17 Jesus said to her, “Do not cling to me, for I have not yet ascended to the Father; but go to my brothers and say to them, ‘I am ascending to my Father and your Father, to my God and your God.’”

In paragraph two, Irenaeus testifies, “If, then, the Lord observed the law of the dead, that He might become the first-begotten from the dead, and tarried until the third day “in the lower parts of the earth,” again referring to Ephesians 4:9, “then afterwards rising in the flesh, so that He even showed the print of the nails to His disciples,” referring in context to John 20 (ESV):24 Now Thomas, one of the Twelve, called the Twin, was not with them when Jesus came. 25 So the other disciples told him, “We have seen the Lord.” But he said to them, “Unless I see in his hands the mark of the nails, and place my finger into the mark of the nails, and place my hand into his side, I will never believe.” 26 Eight days later, his disciples were inside again, and Thomas was with them. Although the doors were locked, Jesus came and stood among them and said, “Peace be with you.” 27 Then he said to Thomas, “Put your finger here, and see my hands; and put out your hand, and place it in my side. Do not disbelieve, but believe.”

Irenaeus finishes his sentence as he further testifies, “He thus ascended to the Father;“ The ascension is also spoken of in the Gospel of Mark as in Mark 16 (ESV):19 So then the Lord Jesus, after he had spoken to them, was taken up into heaven and sat down at the right hand of God.

And in the book of Acts we read as in Acts 1 (ESV):9 And when he had said these things, as they were looking on, he was lifted up, and a cloud took him out of their sight. 10 And while they were gazing into heaven as he went, behold, two men stood by them in white robes, 11 and said, “Men of Galilee, why do you stand looking into heaven? This Jesus, who was taken up from you into heaven, will come in the same way as you saw him go into heaven.”

Irenaeus continues as he argues, “[if all these things occurred, I say], how must these men not be put to confusion, who allege that “the lower parts” refer to this world of ours, but that their inner man, leaving the body here, ascends into the super-celestial place?” Irenaeus then argues, “For as the Lord “went away in the midst of the shadow of death,” referring to Psalm 23 (ESV):4 Even though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for you are with me; your rod and your staff, they comfort me.

Irenaeus continues, “where the souls of the dead were, yet afterwards arose in the body, and after the resurrection was taken up [into heaven], it is manifest that the souls of His disciples also, upon whose account the Lord underwent these things, shall go away into the invisible place allotted to them by God, and there remain until the resurrection, awaiting that event; then receiving their bodies, and rising in their entirety, that is bodily, just as the Lord arose, they shall come thus into the presence of God.” Irenaeus then asserts, “For no disciple is above the Master, but every one that is perfect shall be as his Master,” referring to Luke 6 (ESV):40 A disciple is not above his teacher, but everyone when he is fully trained will be like his teacher.

Irenaeus then asserts, “As our Master, therefore, did not at once depart, taking flight [to heaven], but awaited the time of His resurrection prescribed by the Father, which had been also shown forth through Jonas, and rising again after three days was taken up [to heaven]; so ought we also to await the time of our resurrection prescribed by God and foretold by the prophets, and so, rising, be taken up, as many as the Lord shall account worthy of this [privilege].”

That Irenaeus believed in the bodily resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ is clear from his writings. However, his doctrine of the resurrection seems to include his belief that the righteous “are disciplined beforehand for incorruption,” and that they “shall go away into the invisible place allotted to them by God, and there remain until the resurrection, awaiting that event.” Irenaeus calls this “the law of the dead” in paragraph one.

In this chapter Irenaeus has defended the bodily resurrection of the dead. Irenaeus is using the sword of truth, the word of God, to combat the heretics. Irenaeus has well said that the Lord died and spent three days and nights in the lower parts of the earth, just as He foretold when He spoke of the prophet Jonah. Jonah is a type of Christ in this regard. That is, he is a prophetic foreshadowing of Christ. Irenaeus has also testified that after this He rose from the dead, that He showed Himself in the flesh to Mary, that He showed His nail prints to His disciples, and that He ascended into heaven itself to be with the Father. Irenaeus has also stated well that His disciples will receive their bodies “in their entirety, that is bodily, just as the Lord arose,” and “shall come thus into the presence of God.”

However, in his zeal to defend the faith, or what he perceived to be the faith in his time, Irenaeus has gone beyond what the Scriptures actually say about the resurrection. Irenaeus intimates that there is a preparation time before the resurrection and after death in which the just are “disciplined beforehand for incorruption.” In paragraph one he says, “Since, again, some who are reckoned among the orthodox go beyond the prearranged plan for the exaltation of the just, and are ignorant of the methods by which they are disciplined beforehand for incorruption, they thus entertain heretical opinions.” He then says in paragraph two that “the Lord “went away in the midst of the shadow of death,” where the souls of the dead were.” He is speaking of the invisible place where the righteous dead were kept until Jesus rose from the dead and ascended into heaven. Also in paragraph two, Irenaeus says “that the souls of His disciples also, upon whose account the Lord underwent these things, shall go away into the invisible place allotted to them by God, and there remain until the resurrection, awaiting that event.” He also says that just as Jesus was three days and nights in the heart of the earth in the invisible place as he calls it, so must His disciples wait there for the disciple is not above his Master. In addition, Irenaeus quotes in the middle of paragraph one what “the prophet says concerning Him: “And the Lord remembered His dead saints who slept formerly in the land of sepulture; and He descended to them, to rescue and save them.”” This refers to a prophetic utterance, as note 4710 tells us, that is not in the Scriptures.

Irenaeus is correct in his account of our Lord’s resurrection. He is also correct in his refuting the Gnostic error that there is no resurrection of the body. And he is correct in asserting that the righteous dead, before Jesus’ death and resurrection, were not able to enter the most holy place, that is, heaven itself, but must go to an “invisible place” and wait for the Lord to make a way for them into the presence of God. However, in his assertion that this intermediate place was still the destiny of the righteous after the death of Christ, the Scriptures indicate otherwise.

There are really two issues here. The first issue is the bodily resurrection of the saints. The second issue is where the saints now go after death.

The first issue relates to what the Scriptures call glorification, which Paul speaks of in Romans 8 (ESV):29 For those whom he foreknew he also predestined to be conformed to the image of his Son, in order that he might be the firstborn among many brothers. 30 And those whom he predestined he also called, and those whom he called he also justified, and those whom he justified he also glorified.

Those who have faith in Jesus Christ have become His brethren, and will be conformed to His image. This conformity will include the resurrection of the body, which will be transformed to be like the resurrected body of the Lord Jesus as Paul tells us in Philippians 3 (ESV):20 But our citizenship is in heaven, and from it we await a Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ, 21 who will transform our lowly body to be like his glorious body, by the power that enables him even to subject all things to himself.

The body of our humble state, that is, our lowly body, is mortal as Paul says in Romans 8 (ESV):11 If the Spirit of him who raised Jesus from the dead dwells in you, he who raised Christ Jesus from the dead will also give life to your mortal bodies through his Spirit who dwells in you.

That is, it is doomed to die. But those who have faith in Jesus Christ have been made alive in their spirit as we read in Ephesians 2 (ESV):4 But God, being rich in mercy, because of the great love with which he loved us, 5 even when we were dead in our trespasses, made us alive together with Christ—by grace you have been saved— 6 and raised us up with him and seated us with him in the heavenly places in Christ Jesus, 7 so that in the coming ages he might show the immeasurable riches of his grace in kindness toward us in Christ Jesus.

Those who have faith in Jesus Christ have already gone through a spiritual resurrection by the Spirit of God in their born again experience. Christ is said to now be our life as we read in Colossians 3 (ESV):1 If then you have been raised with Christ, seek the things that are above, where Christ is, seated at the right hand of God. 2 Set your minds on things that are above, not on things that are on earth. 3 For you have died, and your life is hidden with Christ in God. 4 When Christ who is your life appears, then you also will appear with him in glory.

The Holy Spirit is the life of our spirit. Therefore, the life we now have in our spirit is eternal life, and our bodies will be glorified at the resurrection of the righteous as we see in Luke 14 (ESV):13 But when you give a feast, invite the poor, the crippled, the lame, the blind, 14 and you will be blessed, because they cannot repay you. For you will be repaid at the resurrection of the just.”

The Gnostics were denying the resurrection of the body of the righteous, and would only acknowledge the salvation of the spirit. This error was dealt with emphatically by Paul in 1 Corinthians 15 (ESV):12 Now if Christ is proclaimed as raised from the dead, how can some of you say that there is no resurrection of the dead? 13 But if there is no resurrection of the dead, then not even Christ has been raised. 14 And if Christ has not been raised, then our preaching is in vain and your faith is in vain. 15 We are even found to be misrepresenting God, because we testified about God that he raised Christ, whom he did not raise if it is true that the dead are not raised. 16 For if the dead are not raised, not even Christ has been raised. 17 And if Christ has not been raised, your faith is futile and you are still in your sins. 18 Then those also who have fallen asleep in Christ have perished. 19 If in Christ we have hope in this life only, we are of all people most to be pitied.

Paul then explains that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God. What he is saying is that flesh and blood are perishable and mortal. But at the resurrection, the dead will be raised with an imperishable body as we read in 1 Corinthians 15 (ESV):50 I tell you this, brothers: flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God, nor does the perishable inherit the imperishable. 51 Behold! I tell you a mystery. We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, 52 in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trumpet. For the trumpet will sound, and the dead will be raised imperishable, and we shall be changed. 53 For this perishable body must put on the imperishable, and this mortal body must put on immortality. 54 When the perishable puts on the imperishable, and the mortal puts on immortality, then shall come to pass the saying that is written: “Death is swallowed up in victory.” 55 “O death, where is your victory? O death, where is your sting?” 56 The sting of death is sin, and the power of sin is the law. 57 But thanks be to God, who gives us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ.

Irenaeus believed in the bodily resurrection of the saints, and was teaching against the Gnostic error that there was no resurrection of the body. Irenaeus has thus addressed the first issue with accuracy, and he is correct. The bodies of the righteous will be raised from the dead.

Now the second issue is where will the righteous go after death. To understand what the Scriptures say about this, we must understand what the Scriptures say about death. The Scriptures say that death is the result of sin, and is universal as we read in Romans 5 (ESV):12 Therefore, just as sin came into the world through one man, and death through sin, and so death spread to all men because all sinned—

And death exists in three forms. The first form is spiritual death. Before we come to Christ we are all, without exception, spiritually dead as we see in Ephesians 2 (ESV):1 And you were dead in the trespasses and sins 2 in which you once walked, following the course of this world, following the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that is now at work in the sons of disobedience— 3 among whom we all once lived in the passions of our flesh, carrying out the desires of the body and the mind, and were by nature children of wrath, like the rest of mankind.

The second form of death is physical death. After the body dies it returns to the ground as Scripture states in Genesis 3 (ESV):19 By the sweat of your face you shall eat bread, till you return to the ground, for out of it you were taken; for you are dust, and to dust you shall return.”

Now the inner spiritual man or woman is spoken of as being clothed with skin, flesh, and bones as in Job 10 (ESV):10 Did you not pour me out like milk and curdle me like cheese? 11 You clothed me with skin and flesh, and knit me together with bones and sinews.

Our soul and spirit are within us, and are the unseen parts of us. And the Scripture says that man’s spirit within him is formed by the Lord also in Zechariah 12 (ESV):1 The oracle of the word of the LORD concerning Israel: Thus declares the LORD, who stretched out the heavens and founded the earth and formed the spirit of man within him:

The body is only a part of man, and we can live without it, but we are not complete without it. The body gives us consciousness of the material things of this earth through the five senses of sight, hearing, taste, touch, and smell. We have contact with the physical world in this way. Our soul on the other hand is the seat of our intellect, and is composed of mind, will, conscience, and emotions. The senses of the soul are imagination, conscience, memory, reason, and affection, which all give us self-consciousness. But it is in our spirit where we have the senses of faith, hope, reverence, prayer, worship. These senses give us God-consciousness. In physical death, our soul and spirit are separated from the body as seen in the death of Rachel as in Genesis 35 (ESV):18 And as her soul was departing (for she was dying), she called his name Ben-oni; but his father called him Benjamin. 19 So Rachel died, and she was buried on the way to Ephrath (that is, Bethlehem).

Then also when Jesus died as in Luke 23 (ESV):46 Then Jesus, calling out with a loud voice, said, “Father, into your hands I commit my spirit!” And having said this he breathed his last.

And again in Acts 7 (ESV):59 And as they were stoning Stephen, he called out, “Lord Jesus, receive my spirit.”

The third form of death mentioned in the Scriptures is the second death. This is eternal separation of the body, soul, and spirit from God. It is called the second death because the unrighteous dead will be raised to life again, and will appear before the great white throne to be judged as we read in Revelation 20 (ESV):11 Then I saw a great white throne and him who was seated on it. From his presence earth and sky fled away, and no place was found for them. 12 And I saw the dead, great and small, standing before the throne, and books were opened. Then another book was opened, which is the book of life. And the dead were judged by what was written in the books, according to what they had done. 13 And the sea gave up the dead who were in it, Death and Hades gave up the dead who were in them, and they were judged, each one of them, according to what they had done. 14 Then Death and Hades were thrown into the lake of fire. This is the second death, the lake of fire. 15 And if anyone's name was not found written in the book of life, he was thrown into the lake of fire.

And again in Revelation 21 (ESV):8 But as for the cowardly, the faithless, the detestable, as for murderers, the sexually immoral, sorcerers, idolaters, and all liars, their portion will be in the lake that burns with fire and sulfur, which is the second death.”

Now at death, before Christ came, the righteous dead could not go into heaven itself because the way into God's presence had not been made known. The writer of Hebrews tells us that the way into the holy place, that is heaven itself, had not yet been disclosed while the first tabernacle, which was the one that Moses built, was still standing. That is, before Jesus died on the cross, the way into heaven was not made possible as we see in Hebrews 9 (ESV):8 By this the Holy Spirit indicates that the way into the holy places is not yet opened as long as the first section is still standing.

But after Jesus died on the cross, He was able by His own blood to obtain entrance into the holy place, that is, heaven itself as we read in Hebrews 9 (ESV):11 But when Christ appeared as a high priest of the good things that have come, then through the greater and more perfect tent (not made with hands, that is, not of this creation) 12 he entered once for all into the holy places, not by means of the blood of goats and calves but by means of his own blood, thus securing an eternal redemption.

So when the righteous died before Christ came, they could not go up to heaven since Christ had not yet died and made atonement for sin. Instead they went down to Sheol as we read in Genesis 42 (ESV):38 But he said, "My son shall not go down with you, for his brother is dead, and he is the only one left. If harm should happen to him on the journey that you are to make, you would bring down my gray hairs with sorrow to Sheol."

Many English translations of the Bible translate the Hebrew word Sheol as "grave" as in Genesis 42 (NIV):38 But Jacob said, "My son will not go down there with you; his brother is dead and he is the only one left. If harm comes to him on the journey you are taking, you will bring my gray head down to the grave in sorrow."

However, there is another Hebrew word for grave, or sepulture, or burying place, and that is qeber (pronounced keber). This is the word used in Genesis 50 (NASB):5 "My father made me swear, saying, "Behold, I am about to die; in my grave which I dug for myself in the land of Canaan, there you shall bury me." Now therefore, please let me go up and bury my father; then I will return."

The abode of the righteous dead before Christ came was called Sheol in the Old Testament. This was a place in the lower parts of the earth, that is, the underworld. The Scriptures speak of descending to this place as Jacob did when his sons lied to him that Joseph was dead as we see in Genesis 37 (ESV):35 All his sons and all his daughters rose up to comfort him, but he refused to be comforted and said, "No, I shall go down to Sheol to my son, mourning." Thus his father wept for him.

David also spoke of this place in Psalms 16 (ESV):10 For you will not abandon my soul to Sheol, or let your holy one see corruption.

When Saul inquired of the medium, she brought up Samuel from the dead as we read in 1 Samuel 28 (ESV):11 Then the woman said, "Whom shall I bring up for you?" He said, "Bring up Samuel for me." 12 When the woman saw Samuel, she cried out with a loud voice. And the woman said to Saul, "Why have you deceived me? You are Saul." 13 The king said to her, "Do not be afraid. What do you see?" And the woman said to Saul, "I see a god coming up out of the earth." 14 He said to her, "What is his appearance?" And she said, "An old man is coming up, and he is wrapped in a robe." And Saul knew that it was Samuel, and he bowed with his face to the ground and paid homage. 15 Then Samuel said to Saul, "Why have you disturbed me by bringing me up?" Saul answered, "I am in great distress, for the Philistines are warring against me, and God has turned away from me and answers me no more, either by prophets or by dreams. Therefore I have summoned you to tell me what I shall do."

And also in Psalms 30 (ESV):3 O LORD, you have brought up my soul from Sheol; you restored me to life from among those who go down to the pit.

And in Psalms 49 (ESV):15 But God will ransom my soul from the power of Sheol, for he will receive me. Selah.

Both the righteous dead and the unrighteous dead went down to Sheol before Christ died. The upper portion of Sheol was the abode of the righteous, and was called "paradise" by the Lord Jesus at the cross as we read in Luke 23 (ESV):43 And he said to him, "Truly, I say to you, today you will be with me in Paradise."

The Lord said to the thief on the cross beside Him that today he would be with Him in paradise. This upper portion of Sheol was also called Abraham's bosom as Jesus revealed in the story of the rich man and Lazarus in Luke 16 (ESV):19 "There was a rich man who was clothed in purple and fine linen and who feasted sumptuously every day. 20 And at his gate was laid a poor man named Lazarus, covered with sores, 21 who desired to be fed with what fell from the rich man's table. Moreover, even the dogs came and licked his sores. 22 The poor man died and was carried by the angels to Abraham's side. The rich man also died and was buried.

The unrighteous dead also go down to Sheol, but they go to the lower portion of Sheol as in Psalm 55 (ESV):15 Let death steal over them; let them go down to Sheol alive; for evil is in their dwelling place and in their heart.

They are in the lower part as in Psalm 31 (ESV):17 O LORD, let me not be put to shame, for I call upon you; let the wicked be put to shame; let them go silently to Sheol.

The lower part of Sheol is called Hades. This is also revealed by Jesus in the story of the rich man and Lazarus as we continue in Luke 16 (ESV):22 The poor man died and was carried by the angels to Abraham's side. The rich man also died and was buried, 23 and in Hades, being in torment, he lifted up his eyes and saw Abraham far off and Lazarus at his side.

Hades is a place of agony, and the wicked dead could in no wise cross over to where Abraham and the righteous were as we read in Luke 16 (ESV):24 And he called out, 'Father Abraham, have mercy on me, and send Lazarus to dip the end of his finger in water and cool my tongue, for I am in anguish in this flame.' 25 But Abraham said, 'Child, remember that you in your lifetime received your good things, and Lazarus in like manner bad things; but now he is comforted here, and you are in anguish. 26 And besides all this, between us and you a great chasm has been fixed, in order that those who would pass from here to you may not be able, and none may cross from there to us.'

It is important for us to realize that after death, there are no second chances as Jesus clearly taught in Luke 16 (ESV):27 And he said, 'Then I beg you, father, to send him to my father's house— 28 for I have five brothers—so that he may warn them, lest they also come into this place of torment.' 29 But Abraham said, 'They have Moses and the Prophets; let them hear them.' 30 And he said, 'No, father Abraham, but if someone goes to them from the dead, they will repent.' 31 He said to him, 'If they do not hear Moses and the Prophets, neither will they be convinced if someone should rise from the dead.'"

So the Scriptures reveal that Sheol was the invisible place where the souls and spirits of both the righteous and the unrighteous dead went before Jesus rose from the dead. Hades also was the lower portion of this place, and was a prison for the unrighteous dead who are kept for the resurrection when all will give account of themselves to God. But Abraham's bosom or the lower paradise is where the righteous dead went before Jesus died on the cross.

After Jesus died on the cross, He descended first into this underworld, into the lower paradise. He did this to overcome all the power of Satan who ruled in the realm of hell, death, and the grave, as we read in Hebrews 2 (ESV):14 Since therefore the children share in flesh and blood, he himself likewise partook of the same things, that through death he might destroy the one who has the power of death, that is, the devil, 15 and deliver all those who through fear of death were subject to lifelong slavery.

Had Irenaeus not been so focused on refuting the error of the Gnostics, he might have noticed the rest of verse 9 in Ephesians chapter 4. That is, when He ascended, Jesus led captive a host of captives. That is, He led them out of the invisible place as Irenaeus calls it, and took them with Him into heaven itself as we read in Ephesians 4 (NASB):8 Therefore it says, "When he ascended on high he led a host of captives, and he gave gifts to men." 9 (In saying, "He ascended," what does it mean but that he had also descended into the lower regions, the earth? 10 He who descended is the one who also ascended far above all the heavens, that he might fill all things.)

While Jesus was in the underworld, he proclaimed liberty to those captives in the lower paradise as we read in 1 Peter 3 (ESV):18 For Christ also suffered once for sins, the righteous for the unrighteous, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh but made alive in the spirit, 19 in which he went and proclaimed to the spirits in prison.

Satan held the power of death and was overcome in the underworld by Christ's death "that through death He might render powerless him who had the power of death, that is the devil" as in Hebrews 2:14 above. The word "power" suggests dominion. Satan ruled in the reign, or dominion, of death. He has now been rendered powerless. Jesus Christ returned from the underworld the complete victor over Satan, hell, death, and the grave as John testifies in Revelation 1 (ESV):17 When I saw him, I fell at his feet as though dead. But he laid his right hand on me, saying, “Fear not, I am the first and the last, 18 and the living one. I died, and behold I am alive forevermore, and I have the keys of Death and Hades.

Paul also spoke of the third heaven, “paradise,” which he was caught up to as we read in 2 Corinthians 12 (ESV):2 I know a man in Christ who fourteen years ago was caught up to the third heaven—whether in the body or out of the body I do not know, God knows. 3 And I know that this man was caught up into paradise—whether in the body or out of the body I do not know, God knows— 4 and he heard things that cannot be told, which man may not utter.

That the righteous dead are there in heaven is shown by the fact that a great cloud of witnesses are watching us as we read in Hebrews 12 (ESV):1 Therefore, since we are surrounded by so great a cloud of witnesses, let us also lay aside every weight, and sin which clings so closely, and let us run with endurance the race that is set before us, 2 looking to Jesus, the founder and perfecter of our faith, who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross, despising the shame, and is seated at the right hand of the throne of God.

Where are these witnesses? They are in heaven with the Lord as we continue to read in Hebrews 12 (ESV):22 But you have come to Mount Zion and to the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to innumerable angels in festal gathering, 23 and to the assembly of the firstborn who are enrolled in heaven, and to God, the judge of all, and to the spirits of the righteous made perfect, 24 and to Jesus, the mediator of a new covenant, and to the sprinkled blood that speaks a better word than the blood of Abel.

The righteous dead could not enter heaven until the door to heaven was opened. The writer of Hebrews explains as we read in Hebrews 9 (ESV):8 By this the Holy Spirit indicates that the way into the holy places is not yet opened as long as the first section is still standing 9 (which is symbolic for the present age). According to this arrangement, gifts and sacrifices are offered that cannot perfect the conscience of the worshiper, 10 but deal only with food and drink and various washings, regulations for the body imposed until the time of reformation. 11 But when Christ appeared as a high priest of the good things that have come, then through the greater and more perfect tent (not made with hands, that is, not of this creation) 12 he entered once for all into the holy places, not by means of the blood of goats and calves but by means of his own blood, thus securing an eternal redemption. 13 For if the blood of goats and bulls, and the sprinkling of defiled persons with the ashes of a heifer, sanctify for the purification of the flesh, 14 how much more will the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offered himself without blemish to God, purify our conscience from dead works to serve the living God. 15 Therefore he is the mediator of a new covenant, so that those who are called may receive the promised eternal inheritance, since a death has occurred that redeems them from the transgressions committed under the first covenant.

So the way into the holiest could not be cleansed by the blood of bulls and goats. This is why Jesus had to die. But after Jesus’ death, the way into heaven was now made possible for all those who had by faith believed in Him. So, He led captivity, that is, those in the lower paradise or Abraham’s bosom, captive, and took them to heaven with Him. As to the fact that the righteous dead are now in heaven, Paul himself has said that he would rather depart and be with Christ as we read in Philippians 1 (ESV):21 For to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain. 22 If I am to live in the flesh, that means fruitful labor for me. Yet which I shall choose I cannot tell. 23 I am hard pressed between the two. My desire is to depart and be with Christ, for that is far better. 24 But to remain in the flesh is more necessary on your account.

Paul also said that to be absent from the body is to be present with the Lord as in 2 Corinthians 5 (ESV):6 So we are always of good courage. We know that while we are at home in the body we are away from the Lord, 7 for we walk by faith, not by sight. 8 Yes, we are of good courage, and we would rather be away from the body and at home with the Lord.

As to Irenaeus’ assertion that the disciple is not above his Master, and therefore he must wait as his Master waited three days, the analogy loses substance since Jesus only waited three days, and then went into heaven. The reason He did so was to show that He was really dead. He also fulfilled a prophetic type in the Scripture regarding Jonah. This was to prove who He was, the Son of God. So Irenaeus would make the disciples wait until the resurrection to go into heaven. But, for what reason? We have no way of knowing except that he was probably following the tradition of his time as he thought this tradition to be a “gift of truth” handed down by the apostles through the presbytery ordained by apostles. We will study more about this in Chapter 20: The Teaching of Apostolic Succession.

Now, about Irenaeus' assertion that the righteous dead are "disciplined beforehand for incorruption," if this were true, it would mean that Jesus' death and resurrection did not pay, or atone, for all of our sin debt. But the Scriptures say that Jesus paid it all, once and for all as we read in Hebrews 7 (ESV):23 The former priests were many in number, because they were prevented by death from continuing in office, 24 but he holds his priesthood permanently, because he continues forever. 25 Consequently, he is able to save to the uttermost those who draw near to God through him, since he always lives to make intercession for them. 26 For it was indeed fitting that we should have such a high priest, holy, innocent, unstained, separated from sinners, and exalted above the heavens. 27 He has no need, like those high priests, to offer sacrifices daily, first for his own sins and then for those of the people, since he did this once for all when he offered up himself. 28 For the law appoints men in their weakness as high priests, but the word of the oath, which came later than the law, appoints a Son who has been made perfect forever.

And again in Hebrews 9 (ESV):12 he entered once for all into the holy places, not by means of the blood of goats and calves but by means of his own blood, thus securing an eternal redemption.

And again in Hebrews 9 (ESV):26 for then he would have had to suffer repeatedly since the foundation of the world. But as it is, he has appeared once for all at the end of the ages to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself.

And again in Hebrews 9 (ESV):28 so Christ, having been offered once to bear the sins of many, will appear a second time, not to deal with sin but to save those who are eagerly waiting for him.

And again in Hebrews 10 (ESV):10 And by that will we have been sanctified through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all.

God did not leave any doubt that there would only ever be one sacrifice for sin. The blood of bulls and goats or any act of man cannot take away or atone for sin. Neither can we add to or take away from the work of the cross that Jesus did for us. This is why the Scriptures tell us that a great cloud of witnesses are watching us and why, when we die, we will be absent from the body and be at home with the Lord. So there is no need for discipline of the righteous after death. This is why we go directly into God's presence when we die.

Irenaeus is still correct about the time of the resurrection of the righteous. That event must wait until Jesus comes again. But Irenaeus is incorrect about where the righteous dead go after death. As it is, Irenaeus is in heaven watching with all the rest of the saints.

To add one final note on this chapter, the note 4719 at the end of paragraph two speaks of the subsequent chapters in Book 5, that is chapters 32 through 36, which I have included in their entirety om Chapter 31: Future Events. Please refer to them there.

Fragment L.

For 4900 This extract is introduced as follows: "For Irenæus Bishop of Lyons, who was a contemporary of the disciple of the apostle, Polycarp Bishop of Smyrna, and martyr, and for this reason is held in just estimation, wrote to an Alexandrian to the effect that it is right, with respect to the feast of the Resurrection, that we should celebrate it upon the first day of the week." This shows us that the extract must have been taken from the work Against Schism addressed to Blastus then there shall in truth be a common joy consummated to all those who believe unto life, and in each individual shall be confirmed the mystery of the Resurrection, and the hope of incorruption, and the commencement of the eternal kingdom, when God shall have destroyed death and the devil. For that human nature and flesh which has risen again from the dead shall die no more; but after it had been changed to incorruption, and made like to spirit, when the heaven was opened, [our Lord] full of glory offered it (the flesh) to the Father.

Summary: In this Fragment L, Irenaeus affirms "For then there shall in truth be a common joy consummated to all those who believe unto life, and in each individual shall be confirmed the mystery of the Resurrection, and the hope of incorruption, and the commencement of the eternal kingdom, when God shall have destroyed death and the devil," referring to Revelation 20:10,14. Irenaeus then explains, "For that human nature and flesh which has risen again from the dead shall die no more; but after it had been changed to incorruption, and made like to spirit,” referring to 1 Corinthians 15:44, “when the heaven was opened, [our Lord] full of glory offered it (the flesh) to the Father.”

Commentary: Though this is but a fragment of Irenaeus’ writing, yet in it we see clearly that Irenaeus believed in the resurrection of the fleshly body as he affirms, “For then there shall in truth be a common joy consummated to all those who believe unto life, and in each individual shall be confirmed the mystery of the Resurrection, and the hope of incorruption, and the commencement of the eternal kingdom, when God shall have destroyed death and the devil,” referring to Revelation 20 (ESV):10 and the devil who had deceived them was thrown into the lake of fire and sulfur where the beast and the false prophet were, and they will be tormented day and night forever and ever.

And to Revelation 20 (ESV):14 Then Death and Hades were thrown into the lake of fire. This is the second death, the lake of fire. 15 And if anyone's name was not found written in the book of life, he was thrown into the lake of fire.

Irenaeus continues as he affirms, “For that human nature and flesh which has risen again from the dead shall die no more; but after it had been changed to incorruption, and made like to spirit,” referring to 1 Corinthians 15 (ESV):44 It is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body. If there is a natural body, there is also a spiritual body.

Jesus Himself described the resurrected body as being like the angels in heaven as we read in Matthew 22 (ESV):30 For in the resurrection they neither marry nor are given in marriage, but are like angels in heaven.

The resurrected body is however still flesh and bones as Jesus testified in Luke 24 (ESV):39 See my hands and my feet, that it is I myself. Touch me, and see. For a spirit does not have flesh and bones as you see that I have.”

Irenaeus concludes as he asserts, “when the heaven was opened, [our Lord] full of glory offered it (the flesh) to the Father.” However this statement that Jesus offered His resurrected body, that is, his flesh “made like to spirit,” to the Father has no Scriptural foundation. The Scripture says that He entered heaven in our behalf through His own blood, but not that He offered His resurrected body to the Father. Jesus offered His body as a sacrifice on the cross on earth. It was by His shed blood on the cross that He made atonement for our sins, and through His blood we are now also able to enter heaven. Jesus is not continually offering His body as a sacrifice in heaven.

Again, Irenaeus concludes as he asserts, “when the heaven was opened, [our Lord] full of glory offered it (the flesh) to the Father.”

Jesus offered one sacrifice, the sacrifice of His body and blood on the cross, which was on earth. He did this once, for all time as we read in Hebrews 9 (ESV):12 he entered once for all into the holy places, not by means of the blood of goats and calves but by means of his own blood, thus securing an eternal redemption.

And again in Hebrews 9 (ESV):26 for then he would have had to suffer repeatedly since the foundation of the world. But as it is, he has appeared once for all at the end of the ages to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself.

And again in Hebrews 9 (ESV):28 so Christ, having been offered once to bear the sins of many, will appear a second time, not to deal with sin but to save those who are eagerly waiting for him.

And again in Hebrews 10 (ESV):10 And by that will we have been sanctified through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all.

Jesus offered one sacrifice for sins for all time. It is by faith that we receive this. It is by faith that we continue in fellowship with Him. We do not need to offer another sacrifice for sins. Jesus paid it all.

Chapter 7: Inheriting the Kingdom of Heaven

Book 5: Chapter IX.—Showing how that passage of the apostle which the heretics pervert, should be understood; viz., “Flesh and blood shall not possess the kingdom of God.”

1. Among the other [truths] proclaimed by the apostle, there is also this one, “That flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God.” 4506 1 Cor. xv. 50. This is [the passage] which is adduced by all the heretics in support of their folly, with an attempt to annoy us, and to point out that the handiwork of God is not saved. They do not take this fact into consideration, that there are three things out of which, as I have shown, the complete man is composed—flesh, soul, and spirit. One of these does indeed preserve and fashion [the man]—this is the spirit; while as to another it is united and formed—that is the flesh; then [comes] that which is between these two—that is the soul, which sometimes indeed, when it follows the spirit, is raised up by it, but sometimes it sympathizes with the flesh, and falls into carnal lusts. Those then, as many as they be, who have not that which saves and forms [us] into life [eternal], shall be, and shall be called, [mere] flesh and blood; for these are they who have not the Spirit of God in themselves. Wherefore men of this stamp are spoken of by the Lord as “dead;” for, says He, “Let the dead bury their dead,” 4507 Luke ix. 60. because they have not the Spirit which quickens man.

2. On the other hand, as many as fear God and trust in His Son’s advent, and who through faith do establish the Spirit of God in their hearts,—such men as these shall be properly called both “pure,” and “spiritual,” and “those living to God,” because they possess the Spirit of the Father, who purifies man, and raises him up to the life of God. For as the Lord has testified that “the flesh is weak,” so [does He also say] that “the spirit is willing.” 4508 Matt. xxvi. 41. For this latter is capable of working out its own suggestions. If, therefore, any one admix the ready inclination of the Spirit to be, as it were, a stimulus to the infirmity of the flesh, it inevitably follows that what is strong will prevail over the weak, so that the weakness of the flesh will be absorbed by the strength of the Spirit; and that the man in whom this takes place cannot in that case be carnal, but spiritual, because of the fellowship of the Spirit. Thus it is, therefore, that the martyrs bear their witness, and despise death, not after the infirmity of the flesh, but because of the readiness of the Spirit. For when the infirmity of the flesh is absorbed, it exhibits the Spirit as powerful; and again, when the Spirit absorbs the weakness [of the flesh], it possesses the flesh as an inheritance in itself, and from both of these is formed a living man,—living, indeed, because he partakes of the Spirit, but man, because of the substance of flesh.

3. The flesh, therefore, when destitute of the Spirit of God, is dead, not having life, and cannot possess the kingdom of God: [it is as] irrational blood, like water poured out upon the ground. And therefore he says, “As is the earthy, such are they that are earthy.” 4509 1 Cor. xv. 48. But where the Spirit of the Father is, there is a living man; [there is] the rational blood preserved by God for the avenging [of those that shed it]; [there is] the flesh possessed by the Spirit, forgetful indeed of what belongs to it, and adopting the quality of the Spirit, being made conformable to the Word of God. And on this account he (the apostle) declares, “As we have borne the image of him who is of the earth, we shall also bear the image of Him who is from heaven.” 4510 1 Cor. xv. 49. What, therefore, is the earthly? That which was fashioned. And what is the heavenly? The Spirit. As therefore he says, when we were destitute of the celestial Spirit, we walked in former times in the oldness of the flesh, not obeying God; so now let us, receiving the Spirit, walk in newness of life, obeying God. Inasmuch, therefore, as without the Spirit of God we cannot be saved, the apostle exhorts us through faith and chaste conversation to preserve the Spirit of God, lest, having become non-participators of the Divine Spirit, we lose the kingdom of heaven; and he exclaims, that flesh in itself, and blood, cannot possess the kingdom of God.

4. If, however, we must speak strictly, [we would say that] the flesh does not inherit, but is inherited; as also the Lord declares, “Blessed are the meek, for they shall possess the earth by inheritance;" 4511 Matt. v. 5. as if in the [future] kingdom, the earth, from whence exists the substance of our flesh, is to be possessed by inheritance. This is the reason for His wishing the temple (i.e., the flesh) to be clean, that the Spirit of God may take delight therein, as a bridegroom with a bride. As, therefore, the bride cannot [be said] to wed, but to be wedded, when the bridegroom comes and takes her, so also the flesh cannot by itself possess the kingdom of God by inheritance; but it can be taken for an inheritance into the kingdom of God. For a living person inherits the goods of the deceased; and it is one thing to inherit, another to be inherited. The former rules, and exercises power over, and orders the things inherited at his will; but the latter things are in a state of subjection, are under order, and are ruled over by him who has obtained the inheritance. What, therefore, is it that lives? The Spirit of God, doubtless. What, again, are the possessions of the deceased? The various parts of the man, surely, which rot in the earth. But these are inherited by the Spirit when they are translated into the kingdom of heaven. For this cause, too, did Christ die, that the Gospel covenant being manifested and known to the whole world, might in the first place set free His slaves; and then afterwards, as I have already shown, might constitute them heirs of His property, when the Spirit possesses them by inheritance. For he who lives inherits, but the flesh is inherited. In order that we may not lose life by losing that Spirit which possesses us, the apostle, exhorting us to the communion of the Spirit, has said, according to reason, in those words already quoted, "That flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God." Just as if he were to say, "Do not err; for unless the Word of God dwell with, and the Spirit of the Father be in you, and if ye shall live frivolously and carelessly as if ye were this only, viz., mere flesh and blood, ye cannot inherit the kingdom of God."

Summary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus testifies that, "Among the other [truths] proclaimed by the apostle, there is also this one, "That flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God," referring to 1 Corinthians 15:50. Irenaeus then testifies that, "This is [the passage] which is adduced by all the heretics in support of their folly, with an attempt to annoy us, and to point out that the handiwork of God is not saved." Irenaeus then points out that, "They do not take this fact into consideration, that there are three things out of which, as I have shown, the complete man is composed—flesh, soul, and spirit," referring possibly to 1 Thessalonians 5:23. Irenaeus then asserts, "One of these does indeed preserve and fashion [the man]—this is the spirit;" He then affirms, "while as to another it is united and formed—that is the flesh; then [comes] that which is between these two—that is the soul, which sometimes indeed, when it follows the spirit, is raised up by it, but sometimes it sympathizes with the flesh, and falls into carnal lusts." Irenaeus then concludes as he asserts, "Those then, as many as they be, who have not that which saves and forms [us] into life [eternal], shall be, and shall be called, [mere] flesh and blood; for these are they who have not the Spirit of God in themselves." Irenaeus then testifies, "Wherefore men of this stamp are spoken of by the Lord as "dead;" for, says He, "Let the dead bury their dead," referring to Luke 9:60, "because they have not the Spirit which quickens man," referring to Romans 8:11.

In paragraph two, Irenaeus testifies, "On the other hand, as many as fear God and trust in His Son's advent, and who through faith do establish the Spirit of God in their hearts,—such men as these shall be properly called both "pure," and "spiritual," and "those living to God," because they possess the Spirit of the Father, who purifies man, and raises him up to the life of God. For as the Lord has testified that "the flesh is weak," so [does He also say] that "the spirit is willing," referring to Matthew 26:41. Irenaeus then attests, "For this latter is capable of working out its own suggestions. If, therefore, any one admix the ready inclination of the Spirit to be, as it were, a stimulus to the infirmity of the flesh, it inevitably follows that what is strong will prevail over the weak, so that the weakness of the flesh will be absorbed by the strength of the Spirit; and that the man in whom this takes place cannot in that case be carnal, but spiritual, because of the fellowship of the Spirit." And Irenaeus concludes as he again attests, "Thus it is, therefore, that the martyrs bear their witness, and despise death, not after the infirmity of the flesh, but because of the readiness of the Spirit. For when the infirmity of the flesh is absorbed, it exhibits the Spirit as powerful; and again, when the Spirit absorbs the weakness [of the flesh], it possesses the flesh as an inheritance in itself, and from both of these is formed a living man,—living, indeed, because he partakes of the Spirit, but man, because of the substance of flesh."

In paragraph three, Irenaeus asserts that, "The flesh, therefore, when destitute of the Spirit of God, is dead, not having life, and cannot possess the kingdom of God: [it is as] irrational blood, like water poured out upon the ground. And therefore he says, "As is the earthy, such are they that are earthy," referring to 1 Corinthians 15:48. Again, Irenaeus testifies, "But where the Spirit of the Father is, there is a living man;" And Irenaeus continues as he affirms, "[there is] the rational blood preserved by God for the avenging [of those that shed it]; [there is] the flesh possessed by the Spirit, forgetful indeed of what belongs to it, and adopting the quality of the Spirit, being made conformable to the Word of God." Irenaeus then testifies, "And on this account he (the apostle) declares, "As we have borne the image of him who is of the earth, we shall also bear the image of Him who is from heaven," referring to 1 Corinthians 15:49. And Irenaeus then affirms, "What, therefore, is the earthly? That which was fashioned. And what is the heavenly? The Spirit." Irenaeus then exhorts, "As therefore he says, when we were destitute of the celestial Spirit, we walked in former times in the oldness of the flesh, not obeying God; so now let us, receiving the Spirit, walk in newness of life, obeying God." Irenaeus then asserts, "Inasmuch, therefore, as without the Spirit of God we cannot be saved, the apostle exhorts us through faith and chaste conversation to preserve the Spirit of God, lest, having become non-participators of the Divine Spirit, we lose the kingdom of heaven; and he exclaims, that flesh in itself, and blood, cannot possess the kingdom of God."

In paragraph four, Irenaeus then asserts, "If, however, we must speak strictly, [we would say that] the flesh does not inherit, but is inherited; as also the Lord declares, "Blessed are the meek, for they shall possess the earth by inheritance," referring to Matthew 5:5, "as if in the [future] kingdom, the earth, from whence exists the substance of our flesh, is to be possessed by inheritance." Irenaeus then affirms, "This is the reason for His wishing the temple (i.e., the flesh) to be clean, that the Spirit of God may take delight therein, as a bridegroom with a bride." Irenaeus then argues, "As, therefore, the bride cannot [be said] to wed, but to be wedded, when the bridegroom comes and takes her, so also the flesh cannot by itself possess the kingdom of God by inheritance; but it can be taken for an inheritance into the kingdom of God. For a living person inherits the goods of the deceased; and it is one thing to inherit, another to be inherited. The former rules, and exercises power over, and orders the things inherited at his will; but the latter things are in a state of subjection, are under order, and are ruled over by him who has obtained the inheritance." Again Irenaeus affirms, "What, therefore, is it that lives? The Spirit of God, doubtless. What, again, are the possessions of the deceased? The various parts of the man, surely, which rot in the earth. But these are inherited by the Spirit when they are translated into the kingdom of heaven." Irenaeus then affirms, "For this cause, too, did Christ die, that the Gospel covenant being manifested and known to the whole world, might in the first place set free His slaves;" And Irenaeus continues as he asserts, "and then afterwards, as I have already shown, might constitute them heirs of His property, when the Spirit possesses them by inheritance." Irenaeus then asserts, "For he who lives inherits, but the flesh is inherited." And Irenaeus continues as he asserts, "In order that we may not lose life by losing that Spirit which possesses us, the apostle, exhorting us to the communion of the Spirit, has said, according to reason, in those words already quoted, "That flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God," again referring to 1 Corinthians 15:50. And Irenaeus concludes as he warns, "Just as if he were to say, "Do not err; for unless the Word of God dwell with, and the Spirit of the Father be in you, and if ye shall live frivolously and carelessly as if ye were this only, viz., mere flesh and blood, ye cannot inherit the kingdom of God," drawing most likely from Galatians 5:23.

Commentary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus testifies that, "Among the other [truths] proclaimed by the apostle, there is also this one, "That flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God," referring to 1 Corinthians 15 (ESV):50 I tell you this, brothers: flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God, nor does the perishable inherit the imperishable.

Note that Irenaeus only quotes the first part of the sentence in verse 50, but leaves out, "nor does the perishable inherit the imperishable."

Irenaeus then testifies that, "This is [the passage] which is adduced by all the heretics in support of their folly, with an attempt to annoy us, and to point out that the handiwork of God is not saved." The "handiwork of God" Irenaeus refers to is our fleshly body. Irenaeus is here arguing against the Gnostics, who did not believe in the resurrection of the body, and were using this verse as a proof text for their doctrine against the resurrection. And so Irenaeus uses this verse as his starting point to defend the teaching in the word of God that there will be a resurrection of the dead.

Irenaeus begins his argument against the Gnostics by pointing out that, “They do not take this fact into consideration, that there are three things out of which, as I have shown, the complete man is composed —flesh, soul, and spirit,” reminding us of Paul’s letter to the Thessalonians in 1 Thessalonians 5 (ESV):23 Now may the God of peace himself sanctify you completely, and may your whole spirit and soul and body be kept blameless at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ.

We note that Paul here refers to the spirit, soul, and body of each individual Thessalonian believer. Irenaeus then asserts, “One of these does indeed preserve and fashion [the man]—this is the spirit; while as to another it is united and formed—that is the flesh; then [comes] that which is between these two—that is the soul, which sometimes indeed, when it follows the spirit, is raised up by it, but sometimes it sympathizes with the flesh, and falls into carnal lusts. Those then, as many as they be, who have not that which saves and forms [us] into life [eternal], shall be, and shall be called, [mere] flesh and blood; for these are they who have not the Spirit of God in themselves. Wherefore men of this stamp are spoken of by the Lord as “dead;” for, says He, “Let the dead bury their dead,” referring to Luke 9 (ESV):60 And Jesus said to him, “Leave the dead to bury their own dead. But as for you, go and proclaim the kingdom of God.”

And Irenaeus concludes, “because they have not the Spirit which quickens man,” referring to Romans 8 (ESV):11 If the Spirit of him who raised Jesus from the dead dwells in you, he who raised Christ Jesus from the dead will also give life to your mortal bodies through his Spirit who dwells in you.

The word “quicken” means to give life to. To summarize, Irenaeus states the following in paragraph one:

- Man is composed of three parts, which are spirit, flesh, and soul.
 - 1) That which “does indeed preserve and fashion [the man]—this is the spirit”;
 - 2) And “to another it is united and formed—that is the flesh”;
 - 3) And “then [comes] that which is between these two—that is the soul, which sometimes indeed, when it follows the spirit, is raised up by it, but sometimes it sympathizes with the flesh, and falls into carnal lusts.”
- “Those then, as many as they be, who have not that which saves and forms [us] into life [eternal], shall be, and shall be called, [mere] flesh and blood; for these are they who have not the Spirit of God in themselves. Wherefore men of this stamp are spoken of by the Lord as “dead;” for, says He, “Let the dead bury their dead, because they have not the Spirit which quickens man.”

From this summary there can be no doubt that Irenaeus believed that the part of man which is spirit is the Holy Spirit, for he says that the spirit:

- preserves and fashions the man
- raises up the man out of carnality
- saves and forms the man into life eternal

From this summary, it is also clear that Irenaeus believed that before a man has faith in Christ, he has no spirit of his own, but is just flesh and blood. In such a state, Irenaeus says he is dead, not having “the Spirit which quickens man.”

It is true that man is spiritually dead apart from Christ as we read in Ephesians 2 (ESV):1 And you were dead in the trespasses and sins 2 in which you once walked, following the course of this world, following the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that is now at work in the sons of disobedience—

However, the fact that man has a spirit of his own is abundantly testified in Scripture. That our spirit is different than the Holy Spirit is evident since He is spoken of as testifying with our spirit that we are the children of God as we read in Romans 8 (ESV):16 The Spirit himself bears witness with our spirit that we are children of God.

It is the Lord who forms man’s spirit within him as we read in Zechariah 12 (ESV):1 The oracle of the word of the LORD concerning Israel: Thus declares the LORD, who stretched out the heavens and founded the earth and formed the spirit of man within him:

Our spirit is the lamp or candle of the Lord as we see in Proverbs 20 (ESV):27 The spirit of man is the lamp of the LORD, searching all his innermost parts.

And Paul says as much in 1 Corinthians 2 (ESV):11 For who knows a person's thoughts except the spirit of that person, which is in him? So also no one comprehends the thoughts of God except the Spirit of God.

Therefore the unsaved have a spirit as well, but their spirit is spiritually dead in trespasses and sins as we read again in Ephesians 2 (ESV):1 And you were dead in the trespasses and sins 2 in which you once walked, following the course of this world, following the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that is now at work in the sons of disobedience—

This is a direct result of the fall of Adam for God told Adam in the garden of Eden that he was not to eat of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil or he would die as in Genesis 2 (ESV):15 The LORD God took the man and put him in the garden of Eden to work it and keep it. 16 And the LORD God commanded the man, saying, “You may surely eat of every tree of the garden, 17 but of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil you shall not eat, for in the day that you eat of it you shall surely die.”

This sentence of death has carried forward to all men as Paul tells us in Romans 5 (ESV):12 Therefore, just as sin came into the world through one man, and death through sin, and so death spread to all men because all sinned—

This is the doctrine of man. Man was created with a spirit of his own according to the Scriptures, and because of Adam’s sin, he is spiritually dead until he comes to Christ. This is why Jesus said that one must be born again or he cannot enter the kingdom of God as we read in John 3 (ESV):5 Jesus answered, “Truly, truly, I say to you, unless one is born of water and the Spirit, he cannot enter the kingdom of God.

In paragraph two, Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “On the other hand, as many as fear God and trust in His Son’s advent, and who through faith do establish the Spirit of God in their hearts,—such men as these shall be properly called both “pure,” and “spiritual,” and “those living to God,” because they possess the Spirit of the Father, who purifies man, and raises him up to the life of God.”

Irenaeus is testifying to the born again experience of the man or woman who has faith in Jesus Christ. What he doesn’t understand is that it is the spirit of man that is born again. Jesus says as much in John 3 (KJV):6 That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit. 7 Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again. 8 The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the Spirit.

What Jesus is saying is that the Holy Spirit gives birth to spirit. That is, when we are born again, the Holy Spirit makes our spirit alive to God. God raises us to life in a spiritual resurrection as Paul tells us in Ephesians 2 (ESV):4 But God, being rich in mercy, because of the great love with which he loved us, 5 even when we were dead in our trespasses, made us alive together with Christ—by grace you have been saved— 6 and raised us up with him and seated us with him in the heavenly places in Christ Jesus,

In Irenaeus’ thinking, the Holy Spirit is birthed in us to be our spiritual life. If he could have grasped that man has a spirit of his own, he could have seen that the Holy Spirit gave spiritual life to our spirits when we believed. We were thus born of the Spirit. The Holy Spirit then became the life of our spirits, and God became our spiritual Father. We are then set free from sin in our flesh by this life principle as we read in Romans 8 (KJV):1 For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death.

Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “For as the Lord has testified that “the flesh is weak,” so [does He also say] that “the spirit is willing,” referring to Matthew 26 (ESV):41 Watch and pray that you may not enter into temptation. The spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak.”

Irenaeus then asserts, “For this latter is capable of working out its own suggestions. If, therefore, any one admix the ready inclination of the Spirit to be, as it were, a stimulus to the infirmity of the flesh, it inevitably follows that what is strong will prevail over the weak, so that the weakness of the flesh will be absorbed by the strength of the Spirit; and that the man in whom this takes place cannot in that case be carnal, but spiritual, because of the fellowship of the Spirit.”

Irenaeus is asserting that the Holy Spirit is the “spirit” who is willing in Matthew 26:41, and that He is “capable of working out its own suggestions.” Irenaeus laid the ground work for this assertion already in paragraph one when he asserted that the Holy Spirit was the spiritual part of man that preserves and fashions the man, and raises up the man out of carnality, and saves and forms the man into life eternal. The Holy Spirit does do all of these things, but not in the way Irenaeus describes. And while it is true that the Holy Spirit is willing and our flesh is weak, by spirit in Matthew 26:41, Jesus was not referring to the Holy Spirit but to the spirit of man. The apostle's spirits were willing, but their flesh was weak, is how the text reads. The fact that man has a spirit is abundantly testified in Scripture as we saw in our discussion of paragraph one.

Jesus knew what He was saying in Matthew 26:41. He knew what was in man as John tells us in John 2 (ESV):23 Now when he was in Jerusalem at the Passover Feast, many believed in his name when they saw the signs that he was doing. 24 But Jesus on his part did not entrust himself to them, because he knew all people 25 and needed no one to bear witness about man, for he himself knew what was in man.

The apostles had already confessed their faith in Jesus as Peter tells us in Matthew 16 (ESV):15 He said to them, "But who do you say that I am?" 16 Simon Peter replied, "You are the Christ, the Son of the living God." 17 And Jesus answered him, "Blessed are you, Simon Bar-Jonah! For flesh and blood has not revealed this to you, but my Father who is in heaven.

Our faith in Jesus Christ is what causes us to be born again as John tells us in John 3 (ESV):16 "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only Son, that whoever believes in him should not perish but have eternal life.

The eternal life Jesus speaks of is given to us when we are born of the Spirit of God. And Jesus then tells us that this spiritual birth happens when we believe His word in John 5 (ESV):24 Truly, truly, I say to you, whoever hears my word and believes him who sent me has eternal life. He does not come into judgment, but has passed from death to life.

When Jesus told the apostles to keep watching and praying so that they would not enter into temptation in Matthew 26:41, He knew that the apostles had been born again because of their faith in Him. That is, Jesus knew they had been born of the Spirit. He knew that their spirits were now willing because of this new birth, but He also knew that their flesh was weak. Jesus knew that the apostles were still members of the human race and as such, they were descendants of Adam. When Adam sinned, he caused the whole human race to fall into sin as we saw in Romans 5 (ESV):12 Therefore, just as sin came into the world through one man, and death through sin, and so death spread to all men because all sinned—

All die in Adam as Paul tells us in 1 Corinthians 15 (ESV):21 For as by a man came death, by a man has come also the resurrection of the dead. 22 For as in Adam all die, so also in Christ shall all be made alive.

It is not just physical death that Paul is speaking of in his letter to the Ephesians, but spiritual death. Paul tells us that before accepting Christ, we were spiritually dead in trespasses and sins, and were by nature children of wrath as we read again in Ephesians 2 (ESV):1 And you were dead in the trespasses and sins 2 in which you once walked, following the course of this world, following the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that is now at work in the sons of disobedience— 3 among whom we all once lived in the passions of our flesh, carrying out the desires of the body and the mind, and were by nature children of wrath, like the rest of mankind.

In Adam, as his descendants, we sin because it is our nature to sin. This is why our flesh is weak, and eventually will die. This is why we need to be born again. Nicodemus asked Jesus how a man could be born when he is old as we read in John 3 (ESV):4 Nicodemus said to him, "How can a man be born when he is old? Can he enter a second time into his mother's womb and be born?" 5 Jesus answered, "Truly, truly, I say to you, unless one is born of water and the Spirit, he cannot enter the kingdom of God. 6 That which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit. 7 Do not marvel that I said to you, 'You must be born again.' 8 The wind blows where it wishes, and you hear its sound, but you do not know where it comes from or where it goes. So it is with everyone who is born of the Spirit."

That which is born of the Spirit is spirit, and being then born of the Spirit, our spirit is made new, and we are said to be a new creation as we read in 2 Corinthians 5 (ESV):17 Therefore, if anyone is in Christ, he is a new creation. The old has passed away; behold, the new has come.

It is in our spirit that we have the life of the Spirit since we are born of Him. Jesus refers to this in John 6 (ESV):63 It is the Spirit who gives life; the flesh is no help at all. The words that I have spoken to you are spirit and life.

The life of the Spirit is eternal, and thus we have eternal life as the apostle John tells us in 1 John 5 (ESV):11 And this is the testimony, that God gave us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. 12 Whoever has the Son has life; whoever does not have the Son of God does not have life.

When we are born again we are made alive in Christ as stated by Paul in Ephesians 2 (ESV):4 But God, being rich in mercy, because of the great love with which he loved us, 5 even when we were dead in our trespasses, made us alive together with Christ—by grace you have been saved— 6 and raised us up with him and seated us with him in the heavenly places in Christ Jesus,

When we accept Christ, we experience a rebirth spiritually. Being born of the Spirit and made alive in Christ, we also are given a new nature as Peter tells us in 2 Peter 1 (ESV):4 by which he has granted to us his precious and very great promises, so that through them you may become partakers of the divine nature, having escaped from the corruption that is in the world because of sinful desire.

This is why Paul describes our inner being as a new man or self as in Ephesians 4 (NASB):24 and put on the new self, which in the likeness of God has been created in righteousness and holiness of the truth.

The word translated “self” in the Greek is ἄνθρωπος (pronounced anthrōpos). It literally means “man.” This new man or self, who is created in righteousness and true holiness as a result of the new birth, delights to do the will of God as Paul tells us in Romans 7 (ESV):22 For I delight in the law of God, in my inner being.

Paul also explains that we still have the sin nature in our flesh as we read in Romans 7 (ESV):23 but I see in my members another law waging war against the law of my mind and making me captive to the law of sin that dwells in my members. 24 Wretched man that I am! Who will deliver me from this body of death? 25 Thanks be to God through Jesus Christ our Lord! So then, I myself serve the law of God with my mind, but with my flesh I serve the law of sin.

Our bodies are mortal. That is why Paul calls his body “the body of this death” in verse 24 above. After we accept Christ, our bodies are still mortal as we learn in Romans 6 (ESV):12 Let not sin therefore reign in your mortal body, to make you obey its passions.

Paul explains that sin still dwells in our mortal bodies in Romans 7 (ESV):14 For we know that the law is spiritual, but I am of the flesh, sold under sin. 15 For I do not understand my own actions. For I do not do what I want, but I do the very thing I hate. 16 Now if I do what I do not want, I agree with the law, that it is good. 17 So now it is no longer I who do it, but sin that dwells within me. 18 For I know that nothing good dwells in me, that is, in my flesh. For I have the desire to do what is right, but not the ability to carry it out. 19 For I do not do the good I want, but the evil I do not want is what I keep on doing. 20 Now if I do what I do not want, it is no longer I who do it, but sin that dwells within me.

However, later Paul explains that we have been set free from this nature to sin by the law of the Spirit of life which is now the law of our inner being in Romans 8 (ESV):2 For the law of the Spirit of life has set you free in Christ Jesus from the law of sin and death.

So after I am born again, my spirit has the life of the Holy Spirit which sets me free from sin. But walking in this freedom is a choice we must make. This is why we must put off the old man or self as Paul tells us in Ephesians 4 (ESV):22 to put off your old self, which belongs to your former manner of life and is corrupt through deceitful desires.

The word translated “self” in the Greek is the same word ἄνθρωπος (pronounced anthrōpos) which occurs in verse 24 as we read again in Ephesians 4 (ESV):24 and to put on the new self, created after the likeness of God in true righteousness and holiness.

So after we are born again, we still have a sinful nature in our flesh, but in our spirit we have a new nature, and eternal life as well since we are born of the Spirit. Jesus understood this as is evident from His conversation with Peter when He was washing the disciples’ feet. Jesus explains to Peter that if He does not wash us, we have no part with Him as we read in John 13 (ESV):5 Then he poured water into a basin and began to wash the disciples’ feet and to wipe them with the towel that was wrapped around him. 6 He came to Simon Peter, who said to him, “Lord, do you wash my feet?” 7 Jesus answered him, “What I am doing you do not understand now, but afterward you will understand.” 8 Peter said to him, “You shall never wash my feet.” Jesus answered him, “If I do not wash you, you have no share with me.” 9 Simon Peter said to him, “Lord, not my feet only but also my hands and my head!” 10 Jesus said to him, “The one who has bathed does not need to wash, except for his feet, but is completely clean. And you are clean, but not every one of you.” 11 For he knew who was to betray him; that was why he said, “Not all of you are clean.”

The washing Jesus is talking about here is the cleansing from sin that happens when we are born again. We are washed when we are born again as Paul tells us in Titus 3 (ESV):5 he saved us, not because of works done by us in righteousness, but according to his own mercy, by the washing of regeneration and renewal of the Holy Spirit, 6 whom he poured out on us richly through Jesus Christ our Savior, 7 so that being justified by his grace we might become heirs according to the hope of eternal life.

The word regeneration in this verse is the Greek word παλιγγενεσία (pronounced paliggenesia). It comes from two Greek words, πάλιν (pronounced paleen) meaning again, and γένεσις (pronounced genesis), meaning genesis, birth. Vine’s says that the Greek word παλιγγενεσία (pronounced paliggenesia) means “new birth (palin, again, geneis, birth), is used of spiritual regeneration, Tit. 3:5, involving the communication of a new life, the two operating powers to produce which are “the word of truth,” Jas. 1:18; 1 Pet. 1:23, and the Holy Spirit, John 3:5,6;” Expository Dictionary of New Testament Words, W.E. Vine, Vol. III, page 267.

Regeneration or the new birth happens when we believe that God raised Jesus Christ from the dead and we confess Him as our Lord and Savior as we read in Romans 10 (ESV):8 But what does it say? “The word is near you, in your mouth and in your heart” (that is, the word of faith that we proclaim); 9 because, if you confess with your mouth that Jesus is Lord and believe in your heart that God raised him from the dead, you will be saved. 10 For with the heart one believes and is justified, and with the mouth one confesses and is saved.

This is what Paul is referring to as a past event in 1 Corinthians 6 (ESV):11 And such were some of you. But you were washed, you were sanctified, you were justified in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ and by the Spirit of our God.

Jesus is telling us here in John 13:10-11 that all the disciples but one were washed. That is, they had all been cleansed of their sin, or taken a bath, and been born again except for one. This is why Jesus said that he that has bathed needs only to wash his feet and is completely clean. When we come to faith in Jesus Christ, it is as if we receive a bath, and our sins are washed away. We do not need to have a bath all over again for sin, but only to wash our feet and we are completely clean. We become His children when we are born again, but we stay in fellowship with our Father as we wash our feet.

So in Matthew 26:36-46 when Jesus was in the garden of Gethsemane praying, and he told the three apostles when He found them sleeping to watch and pray, He was saying in effect, “I know your spirit is willing because you are mine and you have been born again, and the new spirit in you bears my nature and is created in righteousness and true holiness and delights to do the will of God. But I also know that your flesh is weak because it is descended from Adam, and still has sin and is destined to die. Therefore I warn you to keep watching and praying that you may not enter into temptation.”

Therefore, Irenaeus’ assertion in paragraph two that, “If, therefore, any one admix the ready inclination of the Spirit to be, as it were, a stimulus to the infirmity of the flesh, it inevitably follows that what is strong will prevail over the weak, so that the weakness of the flesh will be absorbed by the strength of the Spirit; and that the man in whom this takes place cannot in that case be carnal, but spiritual, because of the fellowship of the Spirit,” is based on the false assumption that Jesus referred to the Holy Spirit when He said to the disciples, “the spirit is willing but the flesh is weak,” in Matthew 26:41.

Not only so, but the English word, “admix”, means “to mix in.” Nothing is said in Scripture about admixing “the ready inclination of the Spirit to be, as it were, a stimulus to the infirmity of the flesh.” Rather, we are told by Paul that nothing good dwells in our flesh as in Romans 7 (ESV):18 For I know that nothing good dwells in me, that is, in my flesh. For I have the desire to do what is right, but not the ability to carry it out.

The “willing” is in our spirit that has been born again. The flesh is irreformable and even opposed to the Spirit as Paul tells us in Galatians 5 (ESV):16 But I say, walk by the Spirit, and you will not gratify the desires of the flesh. 17 For the desires of the flesh are against the Spirit, and the desires of the Spirit are against the flesh, for these are opposed to each other, to keep you from doing the things you want to do.

Again, the willing is in our spirit because that is the part of us that has been made a partaker of the divine nature, being born of God of incorruptible seed as Peter says in 1 Peter 1 (ESV):23 since you have been born again, not of perishable seed but of imperishable, through the living and abiding word of God;

The flesh wars against the Spirit and sets its desire against the Spirit. Therefore the flesh will not be stimulated by the Spirit. Rather, the two are at enmity.

Now we can see that Irenaeus did not understand this principle of new life in the believer. Neither did he understand the sin nature which is still in the flesh of the one who has faith in Jesus. Irenaeus thought of man as merely flesh and blood which could be mixed with the “ready inclination of the Spirit” to absorb the weakness of the flesh, and thus become spiritual. Irenaeus did not understand that the weakness of the flesh was its tendency to sin, and that the Spirit becomes the life of man’s spirit to empower man to put this sinful nature off and to put on the new man created in righteousness and true holiness.

The way we become spiritual is revealed in Colossians 3 (NASB):1 If then you have been raised with Christ, seek the things that are above, where Christ is, seated at the right hand of God. 2 Set your minds on things that are above, not on things that are on earth. 3 For you have died, and your life is hidden with Christ in God. 4 When Christ who is your life appears, then you also will appear with him in glory.

Christ is our life if we have believed in Him and been born again. We have been set free from sin by this life as we read again in Romans 8 (ESV):2 For the law of the Spirit of life has set you free in Christ Jesus from the law of sin and death.

We are wretched men and women without Christ as Paul reveals in Romans 7 (ESV):24 Wretched man that I am! Who will deliver me from this body of death? 25 Thanks be to God through Jesus Christ our Lord! So then, I myself serve the law of God with my mind, but with my flesh I serve the law of sin.

So in the inner man, our spirit, we are serving the law of God with our mind, but with our flesh the law of sin. This is why we must discipline our flesh as Paul says in 1 Corinthians 9 (ESV):26 So I do not run aimlessly; I do not box as one beating the air. 27 But I discipline my body and keep it under control, lest after preaching to others I myself should be disqualified.

Irenaeus concludes paragraph two as he again attests, “Thus it is, therefore, that the martyrs bear their witness, and despise death, not after the infirmity of the flesh, but because of the readiness of the Spirit. For when the infirmity of the flesh is absorbed, it exhibits the Spirit as powerful; and again, when the Spirit absorbs the weakness [of the flesh], it possesses the flesh as an inheritance in itself, and from both of these is formed a living man,—living, indeed, because he partakes of the Spirit, but man, because of the substance of flesh.”

Jesus did encourage us to yield to the Spirit as we read in Matthew 10 (ESV):17 Beware of men, for they will deliver you over to courts and flog you in their synagogues, 18 and you will be dragged before governors and kings for my sake, to bear witness before them and the Gentiles. 19 When they deliver you over, do not be anxious how you are to speak or what you are to say, for what you are to say will be given to you in that hour. 20 For it is not you who speak, but the Spirit of your Father speaking through you.

Jesus also tells us that the Spirit empowers us to witness as in Acts 1 (ESV):6 So when they had come together, they asked him, “Lord, will you at this time restore the kingdom to Israel?” 7 He said to them, “It is not for you to know times or seasons that the Father has fixed by his own authority. 8 But you will receive power when the Holy Spirit has come upon you, and you will be my witnesses in Jerusalem and in all Judea and Samaria, and to the end of the earth.”

And when man partakes of the Spirit, he is indeed alive unto God, and no longer dead in trespasses and sins. Man who partakes of the Spirit is born of the Spirit, that is, he is born again. But man apart from the Spirit is still said to be a living being though he is not born of the Spirit as we read in Genesis 2 (ESV):7 then the LORD God formed the man of dust from the ground and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and the man became a living creature.

In paragraph three, Irenaeus asserts that, “The flesh, therefore, when destitute of the Spirit of God, is dead, not having life, and cannot possess the kingdom of God: [it is as] irrational blood, like water poured out upon the ground. And therefore he says, “As is the earthy, such are they that are earthy,” referring to 1 Corinthians 15 (ESV):48 As was the man of dust, so also are those who are of the dust, and as is the man of heaven, so also are those who are of heaven.

Again we note that Irenaeus did not quote the second half of the verse above, which reads, “and as is the heavenly, so also are those who are heavenly.”

Irenaeus then testifies, “But where the Spirit of the Father is, there is a living man;” And Irenaeus continues as he affirms, “[there is] the rational blood preserved by God for the avenging [of those that shed it]; [there is] the flesh possessed by the Spirit, forgetful indeed of what belongs to it, and adopting the quality of the Spirit, being made conformable to the Word of God.”

We can see here that Irenaeus would only allow irrational blood to those without the Spirit of the Father, that is, the unsaved.

Irenaeus then testifies, “And on this account he (the apostle) declares, “As we have borne the image of him who is of the earth, we shall also bear the image of Him who is from heaven,” referring to 1 Corinthians 15 (ESV):49 Just as we have borne the image of the man of dust, we shall also bear the image of the man of heaven.

And Irenaeus then asks rhetorically, “What, therefore, is the earthly? That which was fashioned. And what is the heavenly? The Spirit.” However, in this verse, Paul is talking about earthly bodies and heavenly bodies as we shall see shortly.

Irenaeus then exhorts, “As therefore he says, when we were destitute of the celestial Spirit, we walked in former times in the oldness of the flesh, not obeying God; so now let us, receiving the Spirit, walk in newness of life, obeying God.” Irenaeus may be referring in part to Romans 6 (ESV):4 We were buried therefore with him by baptism into death, in order that, just as Christ was raised from the dead by the glory of the Father, we too might walk in newness of life.

Irenaeus then asserts, “Inasmuch, therefore, as without the Spirit of God we cannot be saved, the apostle exhorts us through faith and chaste conversation to preserve the Spirit of God, lest, having become non-participators of the Divine Spirit, we lose the kingdom of heaven; and he exclaims, that flesh in itself, and blood, cannot possess the kingdom of God.” Regarding becoming non-participators of the Divine Spirit, Irenaeus is probably drawing from David’s prayer in Psalms 51 (ESV):11 Cast me not away from your presence, and take not your Holy Spirit from me.

And to Saul as we read in 1 Samuel 16 (ESV):14 Now the Spirit of the LORD departed from Saul, and a harmful spirit from the LORD tormented him.

And also Romans 8 (ESV):9 You, however, are not in the flesh but in the Spirit, if in fact the Spirit of God dwells in you. Anyone who does not have the Spirit of Christ does not belong to him.

We will have more to say about this in the summary in this chapter.

In paragraph four, Irenaeus then asserts, “If, however, we must speak strictly, [we would say that] the flesh does not inherit, but is inherited; as also the Lord declares, “Blessed are the meek, for they shall possess the earth by inheritance,” referring to Matthew 5 (ESV):5 “Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth.

Irenaeus continues as he says, “as if in the [future] kingdom, the earth, from whence exists the substance of our flesh, is to be possessed by inheritance.” Irenaeus then affirms, “This is the reason for His wishing the temple (i.e., the flesh) to be clean, that the Spirit of God may take delight therein, as a bridegroom with a bride.” Irenaeus refers to the temple of our body as Paul also mentions in 1 Corinthians 6 (NASB):19 Or do you not know that your body is a temple of the Holy Spirit who is in you, whom you have from God, and that you are not your own?

And Irenaeus then argues, “As, therefore, the bride cannot [be said] to wed, but to be wedded, when the bridegroom comes and takes her, so also the flesh cannot by itself possess the kingdom of God by inheritance; but it can be taken for an inheritance into the kingdom of God. For a living person inherits the goods of the deceased; and it is one thing to inherit, another to be inherited. The former rules, and exercises power over, and orders the things inherited at his will; but the latter things are in a state of subjection, are under order, and are ruled over by him who has obtained the inheritance.”

This is indeed very logical, but his assertion is based on his assumption that man has no spirit of his own. If man has no spirit of his own, then when he dies, he will just be flesh and blood which cannot inherit the kingdom of God. Again, this is logical and agrees as far as it goes with what Paul says in 1 Corinthians 15 (ESV):50 I tell you this, brothers: flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God, nor does the perishable inherit the imperishable.

However, when we put what Paul says in 1 Corinthians 15:50 in context with the rest of what he says in chapter 15 of 1 Corinthians, we will see that Irenaeus is taking Paul out of context. In 1 Corinthians, chapter 15, Paul is talking about what kind of body will inherit the kingdom of God, and not who will enter the kingdom of God. The body of flesh and blood is earthy, and perishable, and will die. To inherit the kingdom of God, our bodies must be changed to be imperishable like Jesus' glorious body as Paul tells us in Philippians 3 (ESV):20 But our citizenship is in heaven, and from it we await a Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ, 21 who will transform our lowly body to be like his glorious body, by the power that enables him even to subject all things to himself.

This change is a future event for all believers. Again Irenaeus affirms, "What, therefore, is it that lives? The Spirit of God, doubtless. What, again, are the possessions of the deceased? The various parts of the man, surely, which rot in the earth. But these are inherited by the Spirit when they are translated into the kingdom of heaven."

Irenaeus makes the Holy Spirit to be the spirit that lives in us, and then, based on this assumption, says that the Spirit of God who lives in our bodies will eventually inherit our bodies since He is ever living and will never die. He is arguing for the resurrection of our bodies, but in so doing, he has introduced a philosophical argument that obscures the simple truth of the Scriptures. The simple truth is that the man who has faith in Christ will inherit the earth, and he will have a resurrected body.

Irenaeus' argument that the Holy Spirit inherits our bodies also seems to fly in the face of his own belief that the believers go to an intermediate place when they die in order to wait for the resurrection. Irenaeus believed in the soul of man, so he must mean that the soul of man goes to the intermediate place. But if so, what is the necessity for the Holy Spirit to inherit our bodies? Why would not our souls inherit our bodies. But since Irenaeus believes that the Holy Spirit is our spiritual life, and that man has no spirit of his own, he is forced into this nonsensical argument that the Holy Spirit inherits our flesh at the resurrection so that man can have eternal life. His argument leaves out what the life of our souls is when we go to the intermediate place.

Irenaeus then affirms, "For this cause, too, did Christ die, that the Gospel covenant being manifested and known to the whole world, might in the first place set free His slaves;" This reminds us of Jesus' words in Luke 4 (ESV):18 "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he has anointed me to proclaim good news to the poor. He has sent me to proclaim liberty to the captives and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty those who are oppressed, 19 to proclaim the year of the Lord's favor." 20 And he rolled up the scroll and gave it back to the attendant and sat down. And the eyes of all in the synagogue were fixed on him. 21 And he began to say to them, "Today this Scripture has been fulfilled in your hearing."

And Irenaeus continues as he asserts, "and then afterwards, as I have already shown, might constitute them heirs of His property, when the Spirit possesses them by inheritance." Again, this is a nonsensical argument as Irenaeus seems to argue that the Holy Spirit inherits our dead fleshly bodies, gives them life, and then makes them heirs of their own bodies.

Irenaeus then asserts, "For he who lives inherits, but the flesh is inherited." So in his thinking, the flesh is inherited by the Holy Spirit, and then we inherit His property.

Irenaeus continues as he asserts, "In order that we may not lose life by losing that Spirit which possesses us, the apostle, exhorting us to the communion of the Spirit, has said, according to reason, in those words already quoted, "That flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God," again referring to 1 Corinthians 15:50. Irenaeus asserts that a warning of losing "lose life by losing that Spirit which possesses us" is implicit in Paul's words in 1 Corinthians 15:50. We will discuss the possibility of losing the Spirit shortly.

And Irenaeus concludes as he warns, "Just as if he were to say, "Do not err; for unless the Word of God dwell with, and the Spirit of the Father be in you, and if ye shall live frivolously and carelessly as if ye were this only, viz., mere flesh and blood, ye cannot inherit the kingdom of God," drawing most likely from Galatians 5 (NASB):21 Envyings, murders, drunkenness, revellings, and such like: of the which I tell you before, as I have also told you in time past, that they which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God.

Commentary Summary Book 5: Chapter IX

To summarize Irenaeus' thinking in Book 5: Chapter IX of his writing, he is defending the resurrection of the body. He testifies that the heretics point to a single verse of Paul, "That flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God," referring to 1 Corinthians 15:50, and adduce from this that "the handiwork of God is not saved.” He then argues against the heretics that “do not take this fact into consideration, that there are three things out of which, as I have shown, the complete man is composed —flesh, soul, and spirit.” His thinking is that since man before faith in Christ is dead spiritually, he possesses only flesh and blood. He seems to say that when any have faith in Christ, “and who through faith do establish the Spirit of God in their hearts,” the Holy Spirit enters the one who believes and gives him or her spiritual life. But if the one who initially has faith does not maintain “communion of the Spirit,” but walks “frivolously and carelessly” as if he “were this only, viz., mere flesh and blood,” he could “lose life by losing that Spirit which possesses” him or her. His main point is that it is the Spirit of God that raises us from the dead. Therefore he says that “as many as they be, who have not that which saves and forms [us] into life [eternal],” that is the Holy Spirit, they “shall be, and shall be called, [mere] flesh and blood; for these are they who have not the Spirit of God in themselves.”

The heretics were the first however to take 1 Corinthians 15:50 out of context, saying that there would be no resurrection of the body. Irenaeus has done well to defend the resurrection of the dead. However his defense is weak in that he has taken Scripture out of context. Irenaeus would have done much better if he would have put verse 50 in context with the rest of chapter 15 of 1 Corinthians.

Paul begins his defense of the resurrection by stating that it is of first importance in the very Gospel he is preaching in 1 Corinthians 15 (ESV):1 Now I would remind you, brothers, of the gospel I preached to you, which you received, in which you stand, 2 and by which you are being saved, if you hold fast to the word I preached to you—unless you believed in vain. 3 For I delivered to you as of first importance what I also received: that Christ died for our sins in accordance with the Scriptures, 4 that he was buried, that he was raised on the third day in accordance with the Scriptures, 5 and that he appeared to Cephas, then to the twelve. 6 Then he appeared to more than five hundred brothers at one time, most of whom are still alive, though some have fallen asleep. 7 Then he appeared to James, then to all the apostles. 8 Last of all, as to one untimely born, he appeared also to me. 9 For I am the least of the apostles, unworthy to be called an apostle, because I persecuted the church of God. 10 But by the grace of God I am what I am, and his grace toward me was not in vain. On the contrary, I worked harder than any of them, though it was not I, but the grace of God that is with me. 11 Whether then it was I or they, so we preach and so you believed.

Paul here grounds his defense of the resurrection by testifying that there is eyewitness testimony of Jesus resurrection, and that he himself is an eyewitness. And Paul affirms that it is the belief in this truth that saves us. Paul then continues his defense of the resurrection by testifying that there were some in the Corinthian church who misunderstood the Gospel, and were saying there was no resurrection of the dead. Paul makes it absolutely clear what he is preaching as he continues in 1 Corinthians 15 (ESV):12 Now if Christ is proclaimed as raised from the dead, how can some of you say that there is no resurrection of the dead? 13 But if there is no resurrection of the dead, then not even Christ has been raised. 14 And if Christ has not been raised, then our preaching is in vain and your faith is in vain. 15 We are even found to be misrepresenting God, because we testified about God that he raised Christ, whom he did not raise if it is true that the dead are not raised. 16 For if the dead are not raised, not even Christ has been raised. 17 And if Christ has not been raised, your faith is futile and you are still in your sins. 18 Then those also who have fallen asleep in Christ have perished. 19 If in Christ we have hope in this life only, we are of all people most to be pitied.

Paul affirms that if Christ has not been raised from the dead, we are still in our sins. In other words, there is no Gospel if there is no resurrection of the dead. Our faith is thus worthless. Paul continues his defense of the resurrection as he says that death is an enemy, and it shall be totally abolished in 1 Corinthians 15 (ESV):20 But in fact Christ has been raised from the dead, the firstfruits of those who have fallen asleep. 21 For as by a man came death, by a man has come also the resurrection of the dead. 22 For as in Adam all die, so also in Christ shall all be made alive. 23 But each in his own order: Christ the firstfruits, then at his coming those who belong to Christ. 24 Then comes the end, when he delivers the kingdom to God the Father after destroying every rule and every authority and power. 25 For he must reign until he has put all his enemies under his feet. 26 The last enemy to be destroyed is death. 27 For “God has put all things in subjection under his feet.” But when it says, “all things are put in subjection,” it is plain that he is excepted who put all things in subjection under him. 28 When all things are subjected to him, then the Son himself will also be subjected to him who put all things in subjection under him, that God may be all in all.

Paul continues as he explains that our suffering on account of the Gospel message is worthless if the dead are not raised as in 1 Corinthians 15 (ESV):29 Otherwise, what do people mean by being baptized on behalf of the dead? If the dead are not raised at all, why are people baptized on their behalf? 30 Why are we in danger every hour? 31 I protest, brothers, by my pride in you, which I have in Christ Jesus our Lord, I die every day! 32 What do I gain if, humanly speaking, I fought with beasts at Ephesus? If the dead are not raised, “Let us eat and drink, for tomorrow we die.” 33 Do not be deceived: “Bad company ruins good morals.” 34 Wake up from your drunken stupor, as is right, and do not go on sinning. For some have no knowledge of God. I say this to your shame.

Paul then explains how the dead are raised and with what kind of body it will be as continue in 1 Corinthians 15 (ESV):35 But someone will ask, “How are the dead raised? With what kind of body do they come?” 36 You foolish person! What you sow does not come to life unless it dies. 37 And what you sow is not the body that is to be, but a bare kernel, perhaps of wheat or of some other grain. 38 But God gives it a body as he has chosen, and to each kind of seed its own body. 39 For not all flesh is the same, but there is one kind for humans, another for animals, another for birds, and another for fish. 40 There are heavenly bodies and earthly bodies, but the glory of the heavenly is of one kind, and the glory of the earthly is of another. 41 There is one glory of the sun, and another glory of the moon, and another glory of the stars; for star differs from star in glory.

Paul explains that there are earthly bodies and there are heavenly bodies, and that the resurrection of the dead is like the seed that is sown in the ground as dead, but comes to life with a body of its own. It is just like this in the resurrection of the dead he says as he continues in 1 Corinthians 15 (ESV):42 So is it with the resurrection of the dead. What is sown is perishable; what is raised is imperishable. 43 It is sown in dishonor; it is raised in glory. It is sown in weakness; it is raised in power. 44 It is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body. If there is a natural body, there is also a spiritual body. 45 Thus it is written, “The first man Adam became a living being”; the last Adam became a life-giving spirit. 46 But it is not the spiritual that is first but the natural, and then the spiritual. 47 The first man was from the earth, a man of dust; the second man is from heaven. 48 As was the man of dust, so also are those who are of the dust, and as is the man of heaven, so also are those who are of heaven. 49 Just as we have borne the image of the man of dust, we shall also bear the image of the man of heaven.

Irenaeus actually begins his argument from chapter 15 of 1 Corinthians here in verse 48, as he says in paragraph three, “The flesh, therefore, when destitute of the Spirit of God, is dead, not having life, and cannot possess the kingdom of God: [it is as] irrational blood, like water poured out upon the ground. And therefore he says, “As is the earthy, such are they that are earthy,” referring to 1 Corinthians 15:48. Again, Irenaeus testifies, “But where the Spirit of the Father is, there is a living man;”

However, we see that Irenaeus takes verse 48 out of context for Paul is not talking about who will go into heaven, but about what kind of body they will have when they get there. The “earthy” refers to what is of the earth. Our bodies, being made of dust, are of the earth and therefore are earthy. But the resurrection shall make them heavenly. That is, the life of the body will no longer be in the blood but of the Spirit which is eternal. Paul then explains that our earthy body, which is perishable, will be changed to be a heavenly and imperishable body when it is raised from the dead as he continues in 1 Corinthians 15 (ESV):50 I tell you this, brothers: flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God, nor does the perishable inherit the imperishable. 51 Behold! I tell you a mystery. We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, 52 in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trumpet. For the trumpet will sound, and the dead will be raised imperishable, and we shall be changed. 53 For this perishable body must put on the imperishable, and this mortal body must put on immortality. 54 When the perishable puts on the imperishable, and the mortal puts on immortality, then shall come to pass the saying that is written: “Death is swallowed up in victory.” 55 “O death, where is your victory? O death, where is your sting?” 56 The sting of death is sin, and the power of sin is the law. 57 But thanks be to God, who gives us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ. 58 Therefore, my beloved brothers, be steadfast, immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, knowing that in the Lord your labor is not in vain.

Irenaeus defends the resurrection of the dead, but he does not correct the error of the heretics who took the verse in 1 Corinthians 15:50 out of context, and said there was no resurrection of the dead. Again the verse read as in 1 Corinthians 15 (ESV):50 I tell you this, brothers: flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God, nor does the perishable inherit the imperishable.

Just reading the rest of the sentence in verse 50 proves the fact that Paul is not talking about who will inherit the kingdom of God, but about what kind of body will inherit the kingdom of God. Irenaeus' defense has introduced a method of interpretation that does not rightly divide the word of God. He is confusing 1 Corinthians 15:50 with Paul's words in 1 Corinthians 6 (ESV):8 But you yourselves wrong and defraud—even your own brothers! 9 Or do you not know that the unrighteous will not inherit the kingdom of God? Do not be deceived: neither the sexually immoral, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor men who practice homosexuality, 10 nor thieves, nor the greedy, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor swindlers will inherit the kingdom of God. 11 And such were some of you. But you were washed, you were sanctified, you were justified in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ and by the Spirit of our God.

In this verse, Paul is talking about who will inherit the kingdom of God, not what kind of body they will have when they get there. The unrighteous, Paul simply says, will not inherit the kingdom of God. We must be washed, sanctified, and justified in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ by the Spirit of God to become righteous, or we will not inherit the kingdom of God. This all happened for the Corinthians when they believed that God raised Jesus Christ from the dead, and they confessed Him as Lord of their lives.

There are five main points of concern in this chapter of Irenaeus' writing:

- 1) His method of interpretation of Scripture.
- 2) His teaching on the composition of man.
- 3) His teaching on the inheritance of the Holy Spirit.
- 4) His teaching on losing the Spirit.
- 5) His teaching on losing life by losing the Spirit.

In regards to point 1, his method of interpretation of Scripture, we saw in our discussion above that Irenaeus did not correct the error of the heretics by showing that their error was taking the verse out of context with the rest of chapter 15. Instead, he began his argument with the false assumption that verse 50 of 1 Corinthians, chapter 15, was talking about who will go in the resurrection, and not about what kind of body will be raised in the resurrection. And so he proceeded to form his argument around his assumption that man was composed of only flesh and blood, and that only when man had the Holy Spirit did he have life, and would thus be resurrected. While it is true that we need the Holy Spirit to give us spiritual life, Irenaeus is vague as to where this life is in the one who has faith in Christ. The Scriptures plainly teach that man has a spirit of his own, and that we are made alive to God in our spirit when we are regenerated, or born again. It is when we are born again, or regenerated, that the Holy Spirit gives us life, and becomes the life of our spirit. This makes us new creations on the inside, that is, the inner person. This brings us to point 2 above.

In regards to point 2, Irenaeus' teaching on the composition of man, the Scriptures clearly teach that man is composed of three parts, body, soul, and spirit. The Scriptures do not teach that man is composed of just flesh and blood before he has faith, and after he believes, that he has body, soul, and Holy Spirit, as Irenaeus intimates. To clarify what the Scriptures teach about man's composition, we restate what Paul has said in 1 Thessalonians 5 (NASB):23 Now may the God of peace Himself sanctify you entirely; and may your spirit and soul and body be preserved complete, without blame at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ.

That man has a spirit of his own is clear from Romans 8 (NASB):16 The Spirit Himself testifies with our spirit that we are children of God.

The spirit of man before he comes to faith in Christ is dead in trespasses and sins, and this is the reason we must be born again. The new birth takes place in our spirit as we are born of the Spirit. We are thus given new life, and the life of the Spirit is in our spirit as stated in Proverbs 20 (NASB):27 The spirit of man is the lamp of the LORD, Searching all the innermost parts of his being.

A man or woman becomes a light of the Lord when they have faith in Jesus Christ, and the Spirit of God gives them new life in their spirit.

Now Irenaeus has described the soul of man as “that which is between these two—that is the soul, which sometimes indeed, when it follows the spirit, is raised up by it, but sometimes it sympathizes with the flesh, and falls into carnal lusts.”

The soul does indeed come in between the spirit of man and the flesh or body of man. The Scriptures teach that the soul of man is composed of four parts. We see this in the following Scriptures:

The mind:

Psalms 139 (NASB):14 I will give thanks to You, for I am fearfully and wonderfully made; Wonderful are Your works, And my soul knows it very well.

Proverbs 19 (NASB):2 Also it is not good for a person to be without knowledge, And he who hurries his footsteps errs.

The word translated person in this verse is the Hebrew word nephesh (pronounced neh'-fesh), and is the same word translated as soul in Psalm 139:14.

The emotions:

Matthew 26 (NASB):38 Then He said to them, "My soul is deeply grieved, to the point of death; remain here and keep watch with Me."

Psalms 19 (NASB):8 The precepts of the LORD are right, rejoicing the heart; The commandment of the LORD is pure, enlightening the eyes.

Psalms 44 (NASB):21 Would not God find this out? For He knows the secrets of the heart.

The heart is the center of our emotions. The Hebrew word is leb (pronounced lāv), and means inner part, midst.

The will:

Job 6 (NASB):7 "My soul refuses to touch them; They are like loathsome food to me.

Job 7 (NASB):15 So that my soul would choose suffocation, Death rather than my pains.

1 Chronicles 22 (NASB):19 "Now set your heart and your soul to seek the LORD your God; arise, therefore, and build the sanctuary of the LORD God, so that you may bring the ark of the covenant of the LORD and the holy vessels of God into the house that is to be built for the name of the LORD."

The conscience:

Titus 1 (ESV):15 To the pure, all things are pure, but to the defiled and unbelieving, nothing is pure; but both their minds and their consciences are defiled.

It seems that Irenaeus' thinking would only allow a soul in the man who had the Spirit of God, and that he was just of an animal nature without the Spirit of God. Man in this state was just “earthy,” and “irrational blood, like water poured out upon the ground.” However, when God breathed into man the breath of life, man became a living soul as Paul says in 1 Corinthians 15 (NASB):45 So also it is written, “The first MAN, Adam, BECAME A LIVING SOUL.”

The word for soul Paul uses is the Greek ψυχή (pronounced psuche), which means soul. Paul is referring to Genesis 2 (ESV):7 then the LORD God formed the man of dust from the ground and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and the man became a living creature.

The Hebrew word for “being” in this verse is נֶפֶשׁ (pronounced nephesh). Gesenius says that this word means “breath,” or “soul.” Gesenius' Hebrew-Chaldee Lexicon to the Old Testament, Samuel Prideaux Tregelles, LL.D., page 558-559.

Before Christ, we are living souls, with life in our blood, and our bodies are mortal because of the Adamic sin nature we inherited from Adam. After we believe in Jesus, our spirit is regenerated, or born again, and we have new life in our spirit. We still have the Adamic sin nature in our flesh, and our souls are not regenerated. This is the part of us that must be progressively sanctified. When we are born again, we are justified by God, that is, declared righteous, and sanctified, that is, set apart to God as His holy ones. However, in our soul there may still be much that is not pleasing to God. This is why we must put off and put on. We must choose to abstain from immorality as Paul encourages in 1 Thessalonians 4 (ESV):3 For this is the will of God, your sanctification: that you abstain from sexual immorality;

This putting off and putting on is a progressive work of sanctification which the Holy Spirit works in us as we see in 2 Thessalonians 2 (ESV):13 But we ought always to give thanks to God for you, brothers beloved by the Lord, because God chose you as the firstfruits to be saved, through sanctification by the Spirit and belief in the truth.

And in 1 Peter 1 (ESV):1 Peter, an apostle of Jesus Christ, To those who are elect exiles of the Dispersion in Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia, 2 according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, in the sanctification of the Spirit, for obedience to Jesus Christ and for sprinkling with his blood: May grace and peace be multiplied to you.

When we are born again, our spirit is renewed and is given a new nature, being born of the Holy Spirit. But it is God's will that we be sanctified in our character as well as in our spirit as Paul says in 1 Thessalonians 5 (ESV):23 Now may the God of peace himself sanctify you completely, and may your whole spirit and soul and body be kept blameless at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. 24 He who calls you is faithful; he will surely do it.

It is in our soul that we are progressively sanctified once we have faith in Christ as Savior. Sanctification is the work of the Holy Spirit. He cleanses us through the word of God as Jesus tells us in John 17 (ESV):17 Sanctify them in the truth; your word is truth.

Our minds, our wills, and our heart and emotions, and our consciences are cleansed as we read and hear the word of God. This is a progressive work of the Holy Spirit as we grow in grace and knowledge as Peter encourages in 2 Peter 3 (ESV):18 But grow in the grace and knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. To him be the glory both now and to the day of eternity. Amen.

Now in regards to point 3, Irenaeus' teaching on the inheritance of the Holy Spirit, the Holy Spirit is never said to inherit our bodies in the Scriptures, or to inherit anything else for that matter. Irenaeus bases his assertion that this is so on the false assumption that the Holy Spirit composes the spirit part of man. However, when we receive Christ, the Holy Spirit gives birth to our spirit so that we are born of God as we read in John 1 (ESV):12 But to all who did receive him, who believed in his name, he gave the right to become children of God, 13 who were born, not of blood nor of the will of the flesh nor of the will of man, but of God.

We can now claim that we are children of God as John says in 1 John 3 (ESV):2 Beloved, we are God's children now, and what we will be has not yet appeared; but we know that when he appears we shall be like him, because we shall see him as he is.

And if we are children, we are then heirs of God, and fellow heirs with Christ as Paul tells us in Romans 8 (ESV):16 The Spirit himself bears witness with our spirit that we are children of God, 17 and if children, then heirs—heirs of God and fellow heirs with Christ, provided we suffer with him in order that we may also be glorified with him.

When Paul spoke his farewell to the Ephesian elders, he spoke of an inheritance which they would receive through the word of God as we read in Acts 20 (ESV):32 And now I commend you to God and to the word of his grace, which is able to build you up and to give you the inheritance among all those who are sanctified.

Again, Peter mentions our inheritance reserved in heaven for us in 1 Peter 1 (ESV):3 Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ! According to his great mercy, he has caused us to be born again to a living hope through the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, 4 to an inheritance that is imperishable, undefiled, and unfading, kept in heaven for you, 5 who by God's power are being guarded through faith for a salvation ready to be revealed in the last time.

Paul also tells us that the Holy Spirit is given as a pledge of our inheritance in Ephesians 1 (ESV):9 making known to us the mystery of his will, according to his purpose, which he set forth in Christ 10 as a plan for the fullness of time, to unite all things in him, things in heaven and things on earth. 11 In him we have obtained an inheritance, having been predestined according to the purpose of him who works all things according to the counsel of his will, 12 so that we who were the first to hope in Christ might be to the praise of his glory. 13 In him you also, when you heard the word of truth, the gospel of your salvation, and believed in him, were sealed with the promised Holy Spirit, 14 who is the guarantee of our inheritance until we acquire possession of it, to the praise of his glory.

We are God's own possession and are being redeemed by Him. And to inherit means to become partaker of, to obtain. It is true that as God, the Holy Spirit possesses us. But the Scripture says that God has reserved an inheritance in heaven for us. The Holy Spirit will survive our death, but so will we in our spirit which has been born again of imperishable seed as Peter tells us in 1 Peter 1 (ESV):23 since you have been born again, not of perishable seed but of imperishable, through the living and abiding word of God; 24 for "All flesh is like grass and all its glory like the flower of grass. The grass withers, and the flower falls, 25 but the word of the Lord remains forever." And this word is the good news that was preached to you.

Man is alive apart from Christ though he is dead spiritually. We are made alive to God when we are born of the Spirit. Being born of the Spirit makes us partakers of the Spirit. We are thus spiritually alive. So we partake of His Spirit as Irenaeus says. However, this makes us the ones who inherit. We inherit eternal life because He is our life, the life of our spirit.

We next address point 4, Irenaeus' teaching on losing the Spirit. Irenaeus states at the end of paragraph three, "Inasmuch, therefore, as without the Spirit of God we cannot be saved, the apostle exhorts us through faith and chaste conversation to preserve the Spirit of God, lest, having become non-participants of the Divine Spirit, we lose the kingdom of heaven; and he exclaims, that flesh in itself, and blood, cannot possess the kingdom of God."

Irenaeus may be basing his assertion on 1 Samuel 16 (ESV):14 Now the Spirit of the LORD departed from Saul, and a harmful spirit from the LORD tormented him.

And on 2 Samuel 7 (ESV):15 but my steadfast love will not depart from him, as I took it from Saul, whom I put away from before you.

And drawing from David's prayer in Psalms 51 (ESV):11 Cast me not away from your presence, and take not your Holy Spirit from me.

In the Old Testament, it is evident that the Holy Spirit would depart from someone if they committed the sin unto death which the apostle John speaks of in 1 John 5 (ESV):16 If anyone sees his brother committing a sin not leading to death, he shall ask, and God will give him life—to those who commit sins that do not lead to death. There is sin that leads to death; I do not say that one should pray for that. 17 All wrongdoing is sin, but there is sin that does not lead to death.

It is clear that this was Saul's sin in 1 Chronicles 10 (NASB):13 So Saul died for his trespass which he committed against the LORD, because of the word of the LORD which he did not keep; and also because he asked counsel of a medium, making inquiry of it, 14 and did not inquire of the LORD. Therefore He killed him and turned the kingdom to David the son of Jesse.

Committing the sin unto death does not mean we lose our salvation, for when Saul was making inquiry through the medium, Samuel spoke as in 1 Samuel 28 (ESV):15 Then Samuel said to Saul, "Why have you disturbed me by bringing me up?" Saul answered, "I am in great distress, for the Philistines are warring against me, and God has turned away from me and answers me no more, either by prophets or by dreams. Therefore I have summoned you to tell me what I shall do." 16 And Samuel said, "Why then do you ask me, since the LORD has turned from you and become your enemy? 17 The LORD has done to you as he spoke by me, for the LORD has torn the kingdom out of your hand and given it to your neighbor, David. 18 Because you did not obey the voice of the LORD and did not carry out his fierce wrath against Amalek, therefore the LORD has done this thing to you this day. 19 Moreover, the LORD will give Israel also with you into the hand of the Philistines, and tomorrow you and your sons shall be with me. The LORD will give the army of Israel also into the hand of the Philistines."

Note that Samuel was allowed by God to come up from the grave and speak to Saul, and Samuel told Saul in verse 19 that he and his sons would tomorrow be with him in the lower Paradise part of Sheol where the righteous were kept before Jesus died on the cross and rose from the dead and entered heaven by His own blood to make a way for us.

As background, we note that Saul had been born again. This is recorded in 1 Samuel 10 (ESV):5 After that you shall come to Gibeath-elohim, where there is a garrison of the Philistines. And there, as soon as you come to the city, you will meet a group of prophets coming down from the high place with harp, tambourine, flute, and lyre before them, prophesying. 6 Then the Spirit of the LORD will rush upon you, and you will prophesy with them and be turned into another man. 7 Now when these signs meet you, do what your hand finds to do, for God is with you. 8 Then go down before me to Gilgal. And behold, I am coming down to you to offer burnt offerings and to sacrifice peace offerings. Seven days you shall wait, until I come to you and show you what you shall do.”

And continuing in 1 Samuel 10 (ESV):9 When he turned his back to leave Samuel, God gave him another heart. And all these signs came to pass that day. 10 When they came to Gibeah, behold, a group of prophets met him, and the Spirit of God rushed upon him, and he prophesied among them. 11 And when all who knew him previously saw how he prophesied with the prophets, the people said to one another, “What has come over the son of Kish? Is Saul also among the prophets?” 12 And a man of the place answered, “And who is their father?” Therefore it became a proverb, “Is Saul also among the prophets?” 13 When he had finished prophesying, he came to the high place.

It is evident that Saul was born again, but was disciplined of the Lord and was taken home earlier than he might have had he been obedient to the Lord. And in the New Testament, we note that this same discipline occurred in Corinth to those who ate the Lord’s supper in an unworthy manner as we read in 1 Corinthians 11 (ESV):27 Whoever, therefore, eats the bread or drinks the cup of the Lord in an unworthy manner will be guilty concerning the body and blood of the Lord. 28 Let a person examine himself, then, and so eat of the bread and drink of the cup. 29 For anyone who eats and drinks without discerning the body eats and drinks judgment on himself. 30 That is why many of you are weak and ill, and some have died. 31 But if we judged ourselves truly, we would not be judged. 32 But when we are judged by the Lord, we are disciplined so that we may not be condemned along with the world.

This discipline also occurred in the lives of Ananias and Sapphira in Acts, chapter 5, as well as we read in Acts 5 (HCSB):1 But a man named Ananias, with his wife Sapphira, sold a piece of property. 2 However, he kept back part of the proceeds with his wife’s knowledge, and brought a portion of it and laid it at the apostles’ feet. 3 Then Peter said, “Ananias, why has Satan filled your heart to lie to the Holy Spirit and keep back part of the proceeds from the field? 4 Wasn’t it yours while you possessed it? And after it was sold, wasn’t it at your disposal? Why is it that you planned this thing in your heart? You have not lied to men but to God!” 5 When he heard these words, Ananias dropped dead, and a great fear came on all who heard. 6 The young men got up, wrapped his body, carried him out, and buried him.

And continuing in Acts 5 (ESV):7 After an interval of about three hours his wife came in, not knowing what had happened. 8 And Peter said to her, “Tell me whether you sold the land for so much.” And she said, “Yes, for so much.” 9 But Peter said to her, “How is it that you have agreed together to test the Spirit of the Lord? Behold, the feet of those who have buried your husband are at the door, and they will carry you out.” 10 Immediately she fell down at his feet and breathed her last. When the young men came in they found her dead, and they carried her out and buried her beside her husband. 11 And great fear came upon the whole church and upon all who heard of these things.

However, under the New Covenant we see that Jesus promised to send the Holy Spirit and He would abide with us forever as we read in John 14 (ESV):16 And I will ask the Father, and he will give you another Helper, to be with you forever, 17 even the Spirit of truth, whom the world cannot receive, because it neither sees him nor knows him. You know him, for he dwells with you and will be in you.

This promise was fulfilled at Pentecost when the 120 in the upper room were all filled with the Holy Spirit and spoke with tongues in Acts 2 (ESV):1 When the day of Pentecost arrived, they were all together in one place. 2 And suddenly there came from heaven a sound like a mighty rushing wind, and it filled the entire house where they were sitting. 3 And divided tongues as of fire appeared to them and rested on each one of them. 4 And they were all filled with the Holy Spirit and began to speak in other tongues as the Spirit gave them utterance.

Peter explains to those who overheard, and were questioning what this means as we read in Acts 2 (ESV):14 But Peter, standing with the eleven, lifted up his voice and addressed them: “Men of Judea and all who dwell in Jerusalem, let this be known to you, and give ear to my words. 15 For these people are not drunk, as you suppose, since it is only the third hour of the day. 16 But this is what was uttered through the prophet Joel: 17 ““And in the last days it shall be, God declares, that I will pour out my Spirit on all flesh, and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams; 18 even on my male servants and female servants in those days I will pour out my Spirit, and they shall prophesy.

The promise of the Holy Spirit is for all believers as Peter tells us in Acts 2 (ESV):38 And Peter said to them, “Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the forgiveness of your sins, and you will receive the gift of the Holy Spirit. 39 For the promise is for you and for your children and for all who are far off, everyone whom the Lord our God calls to himself.”

And last, in point 5, concerning Irenaeus’ teaching on losing life by losing the Spirit, Irenaeus says at the end of paragraph four, “In order that we may not lose life by losing that Spirit which possesses us, the apostle, exhorting us to the communion of the Spirit, has said, according to reason, in those words already quoted, “That flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God,” referring again to 1 Corinthians 15:50. And “Just as if he were to say, “Do not err; for unless the Word of God dwell with, and the Spirit of the Father be in you, and if ye shall live frivolously and carelessly as if ye were this only, viz., mere flesh and blood, ye cannot inherit the kingdom of God,” drawing most likely from Galatians 5:23.

In Irenaeus’ thinking, he seems to have believed that the born again experience was a birth of the Holy Spirit in the believer. The presence of the Holy Spirit gave the one who had faith life. He does not see the born again experience as a change in the person themselves. The Holy Spirit merely takes up residence in the hearts of those who have believed, and resides there as long as the believer does not live “frivolously and carelessly.” His thinking is based on his assumption that man does not have a spirit of his own. Since man has no spirit of his own and is merely flesh and blood without the Holy Spirit, he is only spiritually alive when the Holy Spirit is present in him, according to Irenaeus.

However, the new birth is simply not described by the Scriptures in this way. That man has a spirit is plainly stated by the Scriptures. That this new birth takes place in man’s spirit is made plain by the fact that man is described as being dead in sin before the new birth, and that he is made alive by being born again. Saying that the new birth is the Holy Spirit taking up residence in our hearts is not describing the new birth as Jesus described it in John, chapter 3. Jesus says that that which is born of the flesh is flesh and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit as we read in John 3 (ESV):6 That which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit.

This new birth then takes place in our spirit. It is our spirit that is born again, or regenerated. Being thus reborn, we delight to do the will of God in our inner man, or spirit. Being thus reborn, we are a new creation, created in righteousness and true holiness, and made partakers of the divine nature. The law of the Spirit of life is the law of our inner self, our spirit. Our spirit now has eternal life. Being thus born again, we are children of God. This is the doctrine of Regeneration. Now as we yield ourselves a living sacrifice, the Holy Spirit will fill our hearts.

And we are His sons and daughters being redeemed by His blood. As such, we are not our own as we read in 1 Corinthians 6 (ESV):19 Or do you not know that your body is a temple of the Holy Spirit within you, whom you have from God? You are not your own, 20 for you were bought with a price. So glorify God in your body.

Irenaeus’ argument in this chapter is for the resurrection and that is good. However, in his argument he twists the Scriptures with logical arguments. The Scriptures do nowhere state that the Spirit of God inherits anything. The Lord says that the whole world is His as in Psalms 50 (ESV):12 “If I were hungry, I would not tell you, for the world and its fullness are mine.

God doesn’t inherit things. Everything is already His. The Scriptures do not teach that flesh and blood will inherit or be inherited, but that it will be changed to be fit for eternity. Also, Irenaeus clearly misunderstands the Scriptures in regards to man’s makeup. The Scriptures clearly teach that man is composed of body, soul, and a spirit of his own. Man’s spirit is spiritually dead in sin before he comes to Christ. When a man or woman repents and believes in Jesus Christ, he or she is born again and receives new life in his or her spirit. Christ is then said to dwell in the believer by faith. The believing one is saved at this point and in possession of eternal life. The life of their spirit is the Holy Spirit, and so the believer is said to have the Holy Spirit as a pledge at this point as we read in Ephesians 1 (KJV):13 In whom ye also trusted, after that ye heard the word of truth, the gospel of your salvation: in whom also after that ye believed, ye were sealed with that holy Spirit of promise, 14 Which is the earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession, unto the praise of his glory.

As far as the resurrection of our bodies is concerned, our earthly body will not be changed until the resurrection. The resurrection will not occur until Jesus returns. When our bodies are resurrected, they will at that point bear the image of the heavenly. Until then we bear the image of the earthy on the outside in our flesh, but we are already changed on the inside where we have this new life in our spirit. So we who have believed in Jesus will not bear the image of the heavenly until we are raised from the dead at the resurrection. We bear the image of the earthy now, but when we are face to face with Jesus we shall be like Him, a heavenly man or woman.

And so Irenaeus confuses the time when the believer is resurrected with the time when he believes and receives the Holy Spirit as a pledge. What is the pledge for except eternal life? In this life on earth, when we believe we receive the Holy Spirit as a guarantee of our future home with the Lord and He will never leave us. He is the seal of the purchased possession guaranteeing our inheritance until the redemption of those who are God's possession, to the praise of his glory.

Book 5: Chapter X.—By a comparison drawn from the wild olive-tree, whose quality but not whose nature is changed by grafting, he proves more important things; he points out also that man without the Spirit is not capable of bringing forth fruit, or of inheriting the kingdom of God.

1. This truth, therefore, [he declares], in order that we may not reject the engrafting of the Spirit while pampering the flesh. "But thou, being a wild olive-tree," he says, "hast been grafted into the good olive-tree, and been made a partaker of the fatness of the olive-tree." 4512 Rom. xi. 17. As, therefore, when the wild olive has been engrafted, if it remain in its former condition, viz., a wild olive, it is "cut off, and cast into the fire;" 4513 Matt. vii. 19. but if it takes kindly to the graft, and is changed into the good olive-tree, it becomes a fruit-bearing olive, planted, as it were, in a king's park (paradiso):so likewise men, if they do truly progress by faith towards better things, and receive the Spirit of God, and bring forth the fruit thereof, shall be spiritual, as being planted in the paradise of God. But if they cast out the Spirit, and remain in their former condition, desirous of being of the flesh rather than of the Spirit, then it is very justly said with regard to men of this stamp, "That flesh and blood shall not inherit the kingdom of God;" 4514 1 Cor. xv. 50. just as if any one were to say that the wild olive is not received into the paradise of God. Admirably therefore does the apostle exhibit our nature, and God's universal appointment, in his discourse about flesh and blood and the wild olive. For as the good olive, if neglected for a certain time, if left to grow wild and to run to wood, does itself become a wild olive; or again, if the wild olive be carefully tended and grafted, it naturally reverts to its former fruit-bearing condition: so men also, when they become careless, and bring forth for fruit the lusts of the flesh like woody produce, are rendered, by their own fault, unfruitful in righteousness. For when men sleep, the enemy sows the material of tares; 4515 Matt. xiii. 25. and for this cause did the Lord command His disciples to be on the watch. 4516 Matt. xxiv. 42, Matt. xxv. 13; Mark xiii. 33. And again, those persons who are not bringing forth the fruits of righteousness, and are, as it were, covered over and lost among brambles, if they use diligence, and receive the word of God as a graft, 4517 Jas. i. 21. arrive at the pristine nature of man—that which was created after the image and likeness of God.

2. But as the engrafted wild olive does not certainly lose the substance of its wood, but changes the quality of its fruit, and receives another name, being now not a wild olive, but a fruit-bearing olive, and is called so; so also, when man is grafted in by faith and receives the Spirit of God, he certainly does not lose the substance of flesh, but changes the quality of the fruit [brought forth, i.e.,] of his works, and receives another name, 4518 Rev. ii. 17. showing that he has become changed for the better, being now not [mere] flesh and blood, but a spiritual man, and is called such. Then, again, as the wild olive, if it be not grafted in, remains useless to its lord because of its woody quality, and is cut down as a tree bearing no fruit, and cast into the fire; so also man, if he does not receive through faith the engrafting of the Spirit, remains in his old condition, and being [mere] flesh and blood, he cannot inherit the kingdom of God. Rightly therefore does the apostle declare, “Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God;” 4519 1 Cor. xv. 50. and, “Those who are in the flesh cannot please God;” 4520 Rom. viii. 8. not repudiating [by these words] the substance of flesh, but showing that into it the Spirit must be infused. 4521 The Latin has, “sed infusionem Spiritus attrahens.” And for this reason, he says, “This mortal must put on immortality, and this corruptible must put on incorruption.” 4522 1 Cor. xv. 53. And again he declares, “But ye are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you.” 4523 Rom. viii. 9. He sets this forth still more plainly, where he says, “The body indeed is dead, because of sin; but the Spirit is life, because of righteousness. But if the Spirit of Him who raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, He that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies, because of His Spirit dwelling in you.” 4524 Rom. viii. 10, etc. And again he says, in the Epistle to the Romans, “For if ye live after the flesh, ye shall die.” 4525 Rom. viii. 13. [Now by these words] he does not prohibit them from living their lives in the flesh, for he was himself in the flesh when he wrote to them; but he cuts away the lusts of the flesh, those which bring death upon a man. And for this reason he says in continuation, “But if ye through the Spirit do mortify the works of the flesh, ye shall live. For whosoever are led by the Spirit of God, these are the sons of God.”

Summary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus begins by stating, “This truth, therefore, [he declares], in order that we may not reject the engrafting of the Spirit while pampering the flesh.” He then testifies, “But thou, being a wild olive-tree,” he says, “hast been grafted into the good olive-tree, and been made a partaker of the fatness of the olive-tree,” referring to Romans 11:17. Irenaeus then affirms, “As, therefore, when the wild olive has been engrafted, if it remain in its former condition, viz., a wild olive, it is “cut off, and cast into the fire, but if it takes kindly to the graft, and is changed into the good olive-tree, it becomes a fruit-bearing olive, planted, as it were, in a king’s park (paradiso),” drawing from Romans 11:13-22 and Matthew 7:19. Irenaeus then affirms, “so likewise men, if they do truly progress by faith towards better things, and receive the Spirit of God, and bring forth the fruit thereof, shall be spiritual, as being planted in the paradise of God. But if they cast out the Spirit, and remain in their former condition, desirous of being of the flesh rather than of the Spirit, then it is very justly said with regard to men of this stamp, “That flesh and blood shall not inherit the kingdom of God,” referring again to 1 Corinthians 15:50, “just as if any one were to say that the wild olive is not received into the paradise of God.” Irenaeus then concludes, “Admirably therefore does the apostle exhibit our nature, and God’s universal appointment, in his discourse about flesh and blood and the wild olive. For as the good olive, if neglected for a certain time, if left to grow wild and to run to wood, does itself become a wild olive; or again, if the wild olive be carefully tended and grafted, it naturally reverts to its former fruit-bearing condition: so men also, when they become careless, and bring forth for fruit the lusts of the flesh like woody produce, are rendered, by their own fault, unfruitful in righteousness.” Irenaeus then testifies, “For when men sleep, the enemy sows the material of tares,” referring to Matthew 13:25, “and for this cause did the Lord command His disciples to be on the watch,” referring to Matthew 24:42. Irenaeus then testifies, “And again, those persons who are not bringing forth the fruits of righteousness, and are, as it were, covered over and lost among brambles, if they use diligence, and receive the word of God as a graft,” drawing from James 1:21, “arrive at the pristine nature of man—that which was created after the image and likeness of God.”

In paragraph two, Irenaeus explains, “But as the engrafted wild olive does not certainly lose the substance of its wood, but changes the quality of its fruit, and receives another name,” drawing from Revelations 2:17, “being now not a wild olive, but a fruit-bearing olive, and is called so; so also, when man is grafted in by faith and receives the Spirit of God, he certainly does not lose the substance of flesh, but changes the quality of the fruit [brought forth, i.e.,] of his works, and receives another name, showing that he has become changed for the better, being now not [mere] flesh and blood, but a spiritual man, and is called such.” Irenaeus then testifies, “Then, again, as the wild olive, if it be not grafted in, remains useless to its lord because of its woody quality, and is cut down as a tree bearing no fruit, and cast into the fire; so also man, if he does not receive through faith the engrafting of the Spirit, remains in his old condition, and being [mere] flesh and blood, he cannot inherit the kingdom of God. Rightly therefore does the apostle declare, “Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God,” referring again to 1 Corinthians 15:50, and, “Those who are in the flesh cannot please God,” referring to Romans 8:8, “not repudiating [by these words] the substance of flesh, but showing that into it the Spirit must be infused.” Irenaeus then asserts, “And for this reason, he says, “This mortal must put on immortality, and this corruptible must put on incorruption,” referring to 1 Corinthians 15:53. And Irenaeus then testifies, “And again he declares, “But ye are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you,” referring in part to Romans 8:9. Irenaeus continues, “He sets this forth still more plainly, where he says, “The body indeed is dead, because of sin; but the Spirit is life, because of righteousness. But if the Spirit of Him who raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, He that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies, because of His Spirit dwelling in you,” referring to Romans 8:10-11. Irenaeus testifies, “And again he says, in the Epistle to the Romans, “For if ye live after the flesh, ye shall die,” referring in part to Romans 8:13. Irenaeus then explains, “[Now by these words] he does not prohibit them from living their lives in the flesh, for he was himself in the flesh when he wrote to them; but he cuts away the lusts of the flesh, those which bring death upon a man. And for this reason he says in continuation, “But if ye through the Spirit do mortify the works of the flesh, ye shall live. For whosoever are led by the Spirit of God, these are the sons of God,” referring to Romans 8:13-14.

Commentary: In paragraph one, when Irenaeus begins with the words, “This truth, therefore, [he declares]...” He is referring to the previous section, Book 5: Chapter IX, paragraph one where he begins by saying, “Among the other [truths] proclaimed by the apostle, there is also this one, “That flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God.”” Irenaeus here in Book 5: Chapter X, paragraph one, is therefore continuing his arguments from the previous chapter against the heretics, the Gnostics, who did not believe in the resurrection, yet called themselves Christians. He is continuing on the basis of what he concluded before in the previous chapter, that is, the apostolic warning that Irenaeus says is implicit in Paul’s words, “flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God.” Irenaeus concludes in Book 5: Chapter IX, paragraph four by saying, “In order that we may not lose life by losing that Spirit which possesses us, the apostle, exhorting us to the communion of the Spirit, has said, according to reason, in those words already quoted, “That flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God.” Just as if he were to say, “Do not err; for unless the Word of God dwell with, and the Spirit of the Father be in you, and if ye shall live frivolously and carelessly as if ye were this only, viz., mere flesh and blood, ye cannot inherit the kingdom of God.”

And so here in Book 5: Chapter X, Irenaeus continues where he left off in the previous chapter as he says, “This truth, therefore, [he declares], in order that we may not reject the engrafting of the Spirit while pampering the flesh.” By his words, “reject the engrafting of the Spirit while pampering the flesh,” he means just what he said in the previous chapter that we must not live frivolously and carelessly as if we were only mere flesh and blood so that we don’t in this way lose the Holy Spirit.

Irenaeus then continues his argument as he testifies referring to Paul, “But thou, being a wild olive-tree,” he says, “hast been grafted into the good olive-tree, and been made a partaker of the fatness of the olive-tree,” referring in part to Romans 11 (ESV):17 But if some of the branches were broken off, and you, although a wild olive shoot, were grafted in among the others and now share in the nourishing root of the olive tree, The Merriam Webster online dictionary says that the word “engraft” means to join or fasten as if by grafting. A synonym would be to “implant.”

Irenaeus then affirms, “As, therefore, when the wild olive has been engrafted, if it remain in its former condition, viz., a wild olive, it is “cut off, and cast into the fire,” drawing from Romans 11 (ESV):19 Then you will say, “Branches were broken off so that I might be grafted in.”

And to Matthew 7 (ESV):19 Every tree that does not bear good fruit is cut down and thrown into the fire.

Irenaeus continues as he says, “but if it takes kindly to the graft, and is changed into the good olive-tree, it becomes a fruit-bearing olive, planted, as it were, in a king’s park (paradiso),” drawing from Romans 11 (ESV):13 Now I am speaking to you Gentiles. Inasmuch then as I am an apostle to the Gentiles, I magnify my ministry 14 in order somehow to make my fellow Jews jealous, and thus save some of them. 15 For if their rejection means the reconciliation of the world, what will their acceptance mean but life from the dead? 16 If the dough offered as firstfruits is holy, so is the whole lump, and if the root is holy, so are the branches. 17 But if some of the branches were broken off, and you, although a wild olive shoot, were grafted in among the others and now share in the nourishing root of the olive tree, 18 do not be arrogant toward the branches. If you are, remember it is not you who support the root, but the root that supports you. 19 Then you will say, “Branches were broken off so that I might be grafted in.” 20 That is true. They were broken off because of their unbelief, but you stand fast through faith. So do not become proud, but fear. 21 For if God did not spare the natural branches, neither will he spare you. 22 Note then the kindness and the severity of God: severity toward those who have fallen, but God's kindness to you, provided you continue in his kindness. Otherwise you too will be cut off.

Irenaeus is drawing an analogy from this passage in order to further explain how one might lose the Holy Spirit and thus lose life.

Irenaeus then affirms, “so likewise men, if they do truly progress by faith towards better things, and receive the Spirit of God, and bring forth the fruit thereof, shall be spiritual, as being planted in the paradise of God.” This reminds us of Jesus words in the parable of the sower in Matthew 13 (ESV):8 Other seeds fell on good soil and produced grain, some a hundredfold, some sixty, some thirty.

Irenaeus then continues, “But if they cast out the Spirit, and remain in their former condition, desirous of being of the flesh rather than of the Spirit, then it is very justly said with regard to men of this stamp, “That flesh and blood shall not inherit the kingdom of God,” referring again in context to 1 Corinthians 15 (ESV):50 I tell you this, brothers: flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God, nor does the perishable inherit the imperishable.

Irenaeus’ words again remind us of Jesus’ words in Matthew 13 (ESV):3 And he told them many things in parables, saying: “A sower went out to sow. 4 And as he sowed, some seeds fell along the path, and the birds came and devoured them. 5 Other seeds fell on rocky ground, where they did not have much soil, and immediately they sprang up, since they had no depth of soil, 6 but when the sun rose they were scorched. And since they had no root, they withered away. 7 Other seeds fell among thorns, and the thorns grew up and choked them.

Irenaeus then adds, “just as if any one were to say that the wild olive is not received into the paradise of God.” Irenaeus then concludes, “Admirably therefore does the apostle exhibit our nature, and God’s universal appointment, in his discourse about flesh and blood and the wild olive. For as the good olive, if neglected for a certain time, if left to grow wild and to run to wood, does itself become a wild olive; or again, if the wild olive be carefully tended and grafted, it naturally reverts to its former fruit-bearing condition: so men also, when they become careless, and bring forth for fruit the lusts of the flesh like woody produce, are rendered, by their own fault, unfruitful in righteousness.” Irenaeus then testifies, “For when men sleep, the enemy sows the material of tares,” referring to Matthew 13 (ESV):25 but while his men were sleeping, his enemy came and sowed weeds among the wheat and went away.

Irenaeus continues, “and for this cause did the Lord command His disciples to be on the watch,” referring to Matthew 24 (ESV):42 Therefore, stay awake, for you do not know on what day your Lord is coming.

Irenaeus then testifies, “And again, those persons who are not bringing forth the fruits of righteousness, and are, as it were, covered over and lost among brambles, if they use diligence, and receive the word of God as a graft,” drawing from James 1 (ESV):21 Therefore put away all filthiness and rampant wickedness and receive with meekness the implanted word, which is able to save your souls.

Irenaeus then concludes that these, “arrive at the pristine nature of man—that which was created after the image and likeness of God.”

Irenaeus sees in Romans 11:13-22, which speaks of the wild olive and the good olive trees, an analogy of our walk by faith as he says in paragraph one, “so likewise men, if they do truly progress by faith towards better things, and receive the Spirit of God, and bring forth the fruit thereof, shall be spiritual, as being planted in the paradise of God.” We note however that the phrase, “paradise of God,” is not referred to by Paul in Romans, chapter 11, but in Revelation 2 (ESV):7 He who has an ear, let him hear what the Spirit says to the churches. To the one who conquers I will grant to eat of the tree of life, which is in the paradise of God.’

Irenaeus goes a little beyond the Scripture here when he pictures the one who walks by faith and becomes spiritual as being “planted, as it were, in a king’s park,” and “in the paradise of God.” He gets a little ahead of himself. The Scriptures say that after the resurrection there will be a new heaven and a new earth, and the paradise of God. This phrase, “paradise of God,” relates to the new heaven and the new earth where the tree of life is again pictured as we read in Revelation 21 (ESV):1 Then I saw a new heaven and a new earth, for the first heaven and the first earth had passed away, and the sea was no more.

The tree of life is mentioned in this context in Revelation 22 (ESV):1 Then the angel showed me the river of the water of life, bright as crystal, flowing from the throne of God and of the Lamb 2 through the middle of the street of the city; also, on either side of the river, the tree of life with its twelve kinds of fruit, yielding its fruit each month. The leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations.

This is a promised future event, and not attainable in this life. The phrase, “paradise of God,” is used in Scripture to refer to a specific place, and it relates to the new heaven and earth that are future. Though it fits his analogy, Irenaeus is taking the phrase out of context with the Scriptures. Irenaeus is exhibiting what might be called “free-style” interpretation of the Scriptures.

Also, Irenaeus again refers to Paul’s statement in 1 Corinthians 15:50 that “flesh and blood shall not inherit the kingdom of God” as if it referred to men who “remain in their former condition” desiring to be “of the flesh rather than of the Spirit,” and are what Paul refers to as “in the flesh” and they that “have not the Spirit.” The word flesh in 1 Corinthians 15:50 relates to our physical body. It is our physical body that will be resurrected and changed to be like His glorious body. The phrase “flesh and blood” in 1 Corinthians 15:50 relates to the type of body that will be resurrected, and not the works or fruit of the body, or the flesh. Irenaeus is here connecting a phrase in 1 Corinthians 15:50 with a passage in Romans, chapter 11. These passages have absolutely nothing to do with each other contextually as we shall see in a moment, though Irenaeus has some words of encouragement in his argument. He is fighting for the resurrection of the dead, and he is fighting for holiness in the Church. These are good things. But his method of interpretation is setting precedents that will have unwanted consequences in the Church following his lifetime.

Irenaeus does seem to be following the analogy of Paul in Romans, chapter 11, when he says that, once the branches are cut off, God is able to graft them in again as we read in Romans 11 (ESV):23 And even they, if they do not continue in their unbelief, will be grafted in, for God has the power to graft them in again.

Now as we move on to paragraph two, Irenaeus says that, “But as the engrafted wild olive does not certainly lose the substance of its wood, but changes the quality of its fruit, and receives another name,” drawing from Revelations 2 (ESV):17 He who has an ear, let him hear what the Spirit says to the churches. To the one who conquers I will give some of the hidden manna, and I will give him a white stone, with a new name written on the stone that no one knows except the one who receives it.’

Irenaeus continues as he affirms, “being now not a wild olive, but a fruit-bearing olive, and is called so; so also, when man is grafted in by faith and receives the Spirit of God, he certainly does not lose the substance of flesh, but changes the quality of the fruit [brought forth, i.e.,] of his works, and receives another name, showing that he has become changed for the better, being now not [mere] flesh and blood, but a spiritual man, and is called such.” Irenaeus here recognizes the difference between the fleshly body of man and the works that the body of flesh produces. The one who is “grafted in by faith and receives the Spirit of God” will now be able to produce righteous fruit since he will have been born again by the Spirit of God. However, the one who is just born again is not yet called spiritual, but a babe in Christ as Paul says in 1 Corinthians 3 (NASB):1 And I, brethren, could not speak to you as to spiritual men, but as to men of flesh, as to infants in Christ. 2 I gave you milk to drink, not solid food; for you were not yet able to receive it. Indeed, even now you are not yet able, 3 for you are still fleshly. For since there is jealousy and strife among you, are you not fleshly, and are you not walking like mere men? 4 For when one says, “I am of Paul,” and another, “I am of Apollos,” are you not mere men?

To grow we must be nurtured by the pure milk of the word as we read in 1 Peter 2 (ESV):1 So put away all malice and all deceit and hypocrisy and envy and all slander. 2 Like newborn infants, long for the pure spiritual milk, that by it you may grow up into salvation.

We do not become spiritual over night as Irenaeus seems to suggest. We do have the Spirit in us but the fruit of the Spirit is called fruit because it grows in us. As we hear the word and become doers of the word, the fruit will grow as we read in Galatians 5 (ESV):22 But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, patience, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, 23 gentleness, self-control; against such things there is no law.

But to Irenaeus' point, we could say that the one who has faith in Christ, and has received the Spirit, is a new man and a new creature producing a new kind of fruit. In that sense he is spiritual. But the Scriptures speak of the one who is spiritual as one who has matured by the discipline of his flesh.

Irenaeus continues as he says, "Then, again, as the wild olive, if it be not grafted in, remains useless to its lord because of its woody quality, and is cut down as a tree bearing no fruit, and cast into the fire; so also man, if he does not receive through faith the engrafting of the Spirit, remains in his old condition, and being [mere] flesh and blood, he cannot inherit the kingdom of God." All that Irenaeus says here is true. And it is true that the man who does not receive the Spirit of God will not inherit the kingdom of God.

Irenaeus then concludes that "Rightly therefore does the apostle declare, "Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God," referring again to 1 Corinthians 15:50, and, "Those who are in the flesh cannot please God," referring to Romans 8 (NASB):8 and those who are in the flesh cannot please God.

Irenaeus then adds, "not repudiating [by these words] the substance of flesh, but showing that into it the Spirit must be infused." It is true that we must have the Spirit to be saved, but again, that is not why the apostle said that "flesh and blood will not inherit the kingdom of God."

Again Irenaeus adds, "And for this reason, he says, "This mortal must put on immortality, and this corruptible must put on incorruption," referring to 1 Corinthians 15 (ESV):53 For this perishable body must put on the imperishable, and this mortal body must put on immortality.

Again, this statement by Paul in 1 Corinthians 15: 53 is not referring to our receiving the Spirit of God here on earth when we are born again, but to our future resurrection body which will be changed to be immortal and incorruptible if we have faith in Jesus Christ in our lifetime, having truly been born again.

Irenaeus then testifies, "And again he declares, "But ye are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you," referring in part to Romans 8 (NASB):9 However, you are not in the flesh but in the Spirit, if indeed the Spirit of God dwells in you. But if anyone does not have the Spirit of Christ, he does not belong to Him.

Irenaeus continues, "He sets this forth still more plainly, where he says, "The body indeed is dead, because of sin; but the Spirit is life, because of righteousness. But if the Spirit of Him who raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, He that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies, because of His Spirit dwelling in you," referring to Romans 8:10-11. Irenaeus testifies, "And again he says, in the Epistle to the Romans, "For if ye live after the flesh, ye shall die," referring in part to Romans 8:13.

Irenaeus is quoting from Romans, chapter 8 as we see in Romans 8 (ESV):9 You, however, are not in the flesh but in the Spirit, if in fact the Spirit of God dwells in you. Anyone who does not have the Spirit of Christ does not belong to him. 10 But if Christ is in you, although the body is dead because of sin, the Spirit is life because of righteousness. 11 If the Spirit of him who raised Jesus from the dead dwells in you, he who raised Christ Jesus from the dead will also give life to your mortal bodies through his Spirit who dwells in you. 12 So then, brothers, we are debtors, not to the flesh, to live according to the flesh. 13 For if you live according to the flesh you will die, but if by the Spirit you put to death the deeds of the body, you will live.

Irenaeus quotes Romans correctly but leaves out parts of verse 9, 10, 11, and 13, and he does not quote from verse 12. This is important, especially when we consider the parts he left out. Paul explains here what he means by the phrases, "in the flesh" and "in the Spirit." To be "in the flesh" is to be living without the Spirit of God in us. In this state, we follow after whatever our flesh wants. We are without God, and we are not submitted to Him, and we have not been born again. To be "in the Spirit" on the other hand is to have received the Spirit of God by faith in Jesus Christ, having been born again. The Spirit of God now dwells in us which is to have Christ in us, as Paul says in verse 10. This is a very important point. After we are born again and receive the Spirit of God, Christ is said to be in us. What has happened is we have gone through a spiritual resurrection as we read in Colossians 2 (ESV):12 having been buried with him in baptism, in which you were also raised with him through faith in the powerful working of God, who raised him from the dead.

This spiritual resurrection was needed because we were spiritually dead in sins as we read in Colossians 2 (ESV):13 And you, who were dead in your trespasses and the uncircumcision of your flesh, God made alive together with him, having forgiven us all our trespasses.

And this spiritual resurrection occurred in our spirit as we were raised up with Him and made alive as we read in Ephesians 2 (ESV):4 But God, being rich in mercy, because of the great love with which he loved us, 5 even when we were dead in our trespasses, made us alive together with Christ—by grace you have been saved— 6 and raised us up with him and seated us with him in the heavenly places in Christ Jesus, 7 so that in the coming ages he might show the immeasurable riches of his grace in kindness toward us in Christ Jesus.

Christ is said to be in us because we have been born of the Spirit of God, and His nature is in our spirit. This is why Paul speaks of our inner man as joyfully concurring with the law of God in Romans 7 (ESV):22 For I delight in the law of God, in my inner being, 23 but I see in my members another law waging war against the law of my mind and making me captive to the law of sin that dwells in my members.

Paul also tells us not to let the flesh rule our lives, but to put on this new inner self as we read in Ephesians 4 (ESV):24 and to put on the new self, created after the likeness of God in true righteousness and holiness.

This new self has been created in righteousness and holiness of the truth when we were born again, for to be born of the Spirit is to possess His attributes of righteousness and holiness of the truth.

Now Irenaeus does seem to understand the difference between living our lives in the flesh and the works of the flesh as he says, “[Now by these words] he does not prohibit them from living their lives in the flesh, for he was himself in the flesh when he wrote to them; but he cuts away the lusts of the flesh, those which bring death upon a man. And for this reason he says in continuation, “But if ye through the Spirit do mortify the works of the flesh, ye shall live. For whosoever are led by the Spirit of God, these are the sons of God,” referring to Romans 8 (ESV):13 For if you live according to the flesh you will die, but if by the Spirit you put to death the deeds of the body, you will live. 14 For all who are led by the Spirit of God are sons of God.

Now Irenaeus says that Paul in these verses “cuts away the lusts of the flesh.” Paul does not actually use these words, but rather he says in reference to our former manner of life to lay aside the old self and put on the new as we read in Ephesians 4 (ESV):17 Now this I say and testify in the Lord, that you must no longer walk as the Gentiles do, in the futility of their minds. 18 They are darkened in their understanding, alienated from the life of God because of the ignorance that is in them, due to their hardness of heart. 19 They have become callous and have given themselves up to sensuality, greedy to practice every kind of impurity. 20 But that is not the way you learned Christ!— 21 assuming that you have heard about him and were taught in him, as the truth is in Jesus, 22 to put off your old self, which belongs to your former manner of life and is corrupt through deceitful desires, 23 and to be renewed in the spirit of your minds, 24 and to put on the new self, created after the likeness of God in true righteousness and holiness.

When we accept Christ as Lord and Savior, we are born again, and our spirit is created in righteousness and holiness of the truth. We are new creations with new life on the inside. But in our flesh dwells no good thing as we read in Romans 7 (ESV):18 For I know that nothing good dwells in me, that is, in my flesh. For I have the desire to do what is right, but not the ability to carry it out.

Our willing to do good relates to the new inner self that God raised to life when we accepted Jesus as Savior. But we who have been born again still have sin dwelling in us as Paul says in Romans 7 (ESV):19 For I do not do the good I want, but the evil I do not want is what I keep on doing. 20 Now if I do what I do not want, it is no longer I who do it, but sin that dwells within me. 21 So I find it to be a law that when I want to do right, evil lies close at hand.

Because we are descendants of Adam, we have a sin nature in our flesh. So when we are born again, we have a new spirit that wants to do the will of God, and we also have sin dwelling in us by the old Adamic nature in our flesh. We must be vigilant to put to death the deeds of this nature. It is God who gives us the victory through Jesus Christ over the sin in our members as we read in Romans 7 (ESV):22 For I delight in the law of God, in my inner being, 23 but I see in my members another law waging war against the law of my mind and making me captive to the law of sin that dwells in my members. 24 Wretched man that I am! Who will deliver me from this body of death? 25 Thanks be to God through Jesus Christ our Lord! So then, I myself serve the law of God with my mind, but with my flesh I serve the law of sin.

It is the deeds of the body that are of the woody quality. We must give diligence to lay aside these deeds and put on the new self in order that we may bear the fruit of the Spirit.

Commentary Summary Book 5: Chapter X

Irenaeus here in this chapter is continuing his argument for the resurrection of the body, but he is now encouraging us to live a holy life and not give in to the lusts of the flesh. He reiterates his main point in the middle of paragraph one as he says, “Admirably therefore does the apostle exhibit our nature, and God’s universal appointment, in his discourse about flesh and blood and the wild olive.” In this statement we see that Irenaeus is joining two main passages of Scripture in his discourse. The first passage states that “flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God” as in 1 Corinthians 15 (ESV):50 I tell you this, brothers: flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God, nor does the perishable inherit the imperishable.

And the second is the passage of the olive tree analogy as in Romans 11 (ESV):13 Now I am speaking to you Gentiles. Inasmuch then as I am an apostle to the Gentiles, I magnify my ministry 14 in order somehow to make my fellow Jews jealous, and thus save some of them. 15 For if their rejection means the reconciliation of the world, what will their acceptance mean but life from the dead? 16 If the dough offered as firstfruits is holy, so is the whole lump, and if the root is holy, so are the branches. 17 But if some of the branches were broken off, and you, although a wild olive shoot, were grafted in among the others and now share in the nourishing root of the olive tree, 18 do not be arrogant toward the branches. If you are, remember it is not you who support the root, but the root that supports you. 19 Then you will say, “Branches were broken off so that I might be grafted in.” 20 That is true. They were broken off because of their unbelief, but you stand fast through faith. So do not become proud, but fear. 21 For if God did not spare the natural branches, neither will he spare you. 22 Note then the kindness and the severity of God: severity toward those who have fallen, but God’s kindness to you, provided you continue in his kindness. Otherwise you too will be cut off.

Irenaeus’ concern in the previous chapter, Book 5: Chapter IX, is that we “may not lose life by losing the Spirit which possesses us.” That is, that if we “shall live frivolously and carelessly as if ye were this only, viz., mere flesh and blood,” we “cannot inherit the kingdom of God.”

Irenaeus’ concern in the current Book 5: Chapter X is that we “progress by faith towards better things, and receive the Spirit of God, and bring forth the fruit thereof,” so that we “shall be spiritual, as being planted in the paradise of God.” He again touches on the possibility of losing the Spirit as he says, “But if they cast out the Spirit, and remain in their former condition, desirous of being of the flesh rather than of the Spirit, then it is very justly said with regard to men of this stamp, “That flesh and blood shall not inherit the kingdom of God; just as if any one were to say that the wild olive is not received into the paradise of God.”

Irenaeus’ intent is to encourage us to live a holy life. This is good. But in his effort to argue his points from the Scriptures, he joins together two disparate themes.

The Scripture in 1 Corinthians, chapter 15, relates to the resurrection of our body, and not to the works of the flesh. When Paul refers to “flesh and blood” here he is talking about what type of body will inherit the kingdom of God, and the fact that by itself, flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God. Paul’s whole point in 1 Corinthians 15:12-58 is the resurrection. The Holy Spirit is not even mentioned in this passage except possibly in 1 Corinthians 15 (ESV):45 Thus it is written, “The first man Adam became a living being”; the last Adam became a life-giving spirit.

The Holy Spirit is mentioned in other passages in regards to the resurrection as in Romans 1 (NASB):4 who was declared the Son of God with power by the resurrection from the dead, according to the Spirit of holiness, Jesus Christ our Lord.

Also in Romans 8 (ESV):11 If the Spirit of him who raised Jesus from the dead dwells in you, he who raised Christ Jesus from the dead will also give life to your mortal bodies through his Spirit who dwells in you.

Paul gives us hope and he explains in this verse that if the same Spirit that raised Jesus from the dead dwells in us, we can be assured that He will raise us up also when the time comes. However, the term “flesh and blood” in 1 Corinthians 15:50 relates to the type of body that will inherit eternity, and does not relate to our works. The type of body that will inherit eternity will not be flesh and blood, that is a perishable body, but it will be a heavenly or imperishable body that will remain for eternity having it’s life principle as the Holy Spirit. It will thus be a spiritual body as Paul says in 1 Corinthians 15 (ESV):44 It is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body. If there is a natural body, there is also a spiritual body.

Now the Scripture in Romans, chapter 11 is Paul's analogy of the olive tree, and this analogy relates to the current status of Israel. The theme of Romans, chapter 11 relates only indirectly to the works of the flesh. Paul explains in chapter 11 of Romans that Israel is currently in a state of apostasy. He uses the analogy of the olive tree to explain the state of Israel in the Church age. Israel is like a good olive tree that has become uncultivated. The trunk is still good but the branches have become like the wild olive and are not able to bear their valuable fruit. For this reason they have been cut off from the good olive tree so that other branches might be grafted in to produce the precious fruit of the olive, that is, the oil.

Now in order to understand what Paul is talking about in Romans, chapter 11, we must understand the symbolism he uses. The olive tree was well known to Jews in Paul's time. The International Standard Bible Encyclopedia (ISBE) says on pages 2184 through 2185 that the olive tree is indigenous in the land of Palestine. The cultivation of the olive goes back to the earliest times in Canaan. When Israel entered the land they acquired olive trees which they did not plant as in Deuteronomy 6 (ESV):10 "And when the LORD your God brings you into the land that he swore to your fathers, to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob, to give you—with great and good cities that you did not build, 11 and houses full of all good things that you did not fill, and cisterns that you did not dig, and vineyards and olive trees that you did not plant—and when you eat and are full, 12 then take care lest you forget the LORD, who brought you out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of slavery.

Also in Joshua 24 (ESV):13 I gave you a land on which you had not labored and cities that you had not built, and you dwell in them. You eat the fruit of vineyards and olive orchards that you did not plant.'

"When the young trees are three years old they are grafted from a choice stock and after another three or four years they may commence to bear fruit, but they take quite a decade or more before reaching full fruition," the ISBE says on page 2184. The analogy that Paul makes about the olive tree would be immediately understood by a Jewish believer. And Paul was encouraging Gentile believers to not give up on Jews who had not accepted Christ yet. Paul himself was a Jew so he knew there would be some who would accept Christ still. And Paul says at the present time there is a remnant as we read in Romans 11 (ESV):5 So too at the present time there is a remnant, chosen by grace. 6 But if it is by grace, it is no longer on the basis of works; otherwise grace would no longer be grace.

Paul does not mention the Holy Spirit as engrafting anything in chapter 11 of his epistle to the Romans, or anywhere else in Scripture. In fact, the Holy Spirit is not mentioned at all in this chapter of Romans. Paul does say that God broke off the branches which are symbolic of Israel in unbelief. If they abide not still in unbelief God is able to graft them in again as we see in Romans 11 (ESV):23 And even they, if they do not continue in their unbelief, will be grafted in, for God has the power to graft them in again.

As for the wild olive that is grafted in, it stands for the Gentile believer who is now a member of the people of God. This believer stands by his faith, for it is by grace through faith that we are saved as we read in Ephesians 2 (ESV):8 For by grace you have been saved through faith. And this is not your own doing; it is the gift of God, 9 not a result of works, so that no one may boast. 10 For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus for good works, which God prepared beforehand, that we should walk in them.

It is through this same grace and faith that the Jewish believer is saved as we see in Romans 11 (ESV):4 But what is God's reply to him? "I have kept for myself seven thousand men who have not bowed the knee to Baal." 5 So too at the present time there is a remnant, chosen by grace. 6 But if it is by grace, it is no longer on the basis of works; otherwise grace would no longer be grace.

Also, Paul does not mention the word "flesh" or the word "fruit" in the whole chapter 11 of Romans. He is simply telling us that God's plan for Israel isn't finished yet, and when the fullness of the Gentiles has come in, all Israel will then be saved when the deliverer comes to Zion as we read in Romans 11 (NASB):25 Lest you be wise in your own sight, I do not want you to be unaware of this mystery, brothers: a partial hardening has come upon Israel, until the fullness of the Gentiles has come in. 26 And in this way all Israel will be saved, as it is written, "The Deliverer will come from Zion, he will banish ungodliness from Jacob"; 27 "and this will be my covenant with them when I take away their sins." 28 As regards the gospel, they are enemies for your sake. But as regards election, they are beloved for the sake of their forefathers. 29 For the gifts and the calling of God are irrevocable.

With this in mind, in paragraph one we see that Irenaeus is encouraging us not to be wild olives and remain in our “former condition.” If we do so, he warns, we will be “cut off, and cast into the fire.” Rather, he exhorts us to become “a fruit-bearing olive, planted as it were in a king’s park.” We are not to reject “the engrafting of the Spirit while pampering the flesh.” We are encouraged to “progress by faith towards better things, and receive the Spirit of God, and bring forth the fruit thereof.” In short, we are to become spiritual. Irenaeus sees us “planted in the paradise of God” in this state of being spiritual.

However, his next statement in paragraph one is “But if they cast out the Spirit of God and remain in their former condition, desirous of being of the flesh rather than of the Spirit,” then the justice of God will not allow them to inherit the Kingdom of God.” This reminds me again of his statement in Book 5: Chapter IX, paragraph four, where he speaks of losing life by “losing that Spirit which possesses us.” However, once we are born again and have life, we have the Spirit of God. We cannot lose the Spirit of God or cast Him out for He possesses us. We are His possession, and we are not our own as we read in 1 Corinthians 6 (ESV):19 Or do you not know that your body is a temple of the Holy Spirit within you, whom you have from God? You are not your own, 20 for you were bought with a price. So glorify God in your body.

It is true that we can grieve the Holy Spirit as the children of Israel did in Isaiah 63 (ESV):10 But they rebelled and grieved his Holy Spirit; therefore he turned to be their enemy, and himself fought against them.

Also when we as children of God, having the Holy Spirit and the power to put to death the lusts of the flesh and yet we do not put them to death, we grieve the Holy Spirit as see in Ephesians 4 (ESV):30 And do not grieve the Holy Spirit of God, by whom you were sealed for the day of redemption. 31 Let all bitterness and wrath and anger and clamor and slander be put away from you, along with all malice. 32 Be kind to one another, tenderhearted, forgiving one another, as God in Christ forgave you.

But we cannot change our nature as if we were changing back and forth from a wild olive to a good olive and then when we sin, be turn back into a wild olive again. When we become a child of God, we receive a new nature in our spirit as Peter tells us in 2 Peter 1 (KJV):4 Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises: that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust.

And so God deals with us as sons and daughters. He then disciplines every child He whom receives as we read in Hebrews 12 (ESV):4 In your struggle against sin you have not yet resisted to the point of shedding your blood. 5 And have you forgotten the exhortation that addresses you as sons? “My son, do not regard lightly the discipline of the Lord, nor be weary when reproved by him. 6 For the Lord disciplines the one he loves, and chastises every son whom he receives.” 7 It is for discipline that you have to endure. God is treating you as sons. For what son is there whom his father does not discipline? 8 If you are left without discipline, in which all have participated, then you are illegitimate children and not sons. 9 Besides this, we have had earthly fathers who disciplined us and we respected them. Shall we not much more be subject to the Father of spirits and live? 10 For they disciplined us for a short time as it seemed best to them, but he disciplines us for our good, that we may share his holiness. 11 For the moment all discipline seems painful rather than pleasant, but later it yields the peaceful fruit of righteousness to those who have been trained by it.

When we sin as His sons and daughters, we have an advocate with the Father as we read in 1 John 2 (ESV):1 My little children, I am writing these things to you so that you may not sin. But if anyone does sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous. 2 He is the propitiation for our sins, and not for ours only but also for the sins of the whole world.

And when we say we have fellowship with Him who is light, and yet we walk in darkness we are not practicing the truth as we read in 1 John 1 (ESV):5 This is the message we have heard from him and proclaim to you, that God is light, and in him is no darkness at all. 6 If we say we have fellowship with him while we walk in darkness, we lie and do not practice the truth.

As we walk in the light of God’s word and confess our sins as we become aware of them, we are cleansed from all sin by His blood as we read in 1 John 1 (ESV):7 But if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship with one another, and the blood of Jesus his Son cleanses us from all sin. 8 If we say we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us. 9 If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness. 10 If we say we have not sinned, we make him a liar, and his word is not in us.

This is why reading and studying the Word of God is so important. As we become aware of more truth, we are then responsible to walk in the light of that truth. This is how we grow up in Him and become spiritual. In one sense we are spiritual, that is in the Spirit and not in the flesh, when we are born again because we have the Holy Spirit from that point on as Irenaeus himself quotes Paul in Romans 8 (ESV):9 You, however, are not in the flesh but in the Spirit, if in fact the Spirit of God dwells in you. Anyone who does not have the Spirit of Christ does not belong to him.

And we belong to Him when we have faith in Jesus Christ, that He is God's Son, that He came in the flesh and died on the cross for our sins, and that He rose again from the dead.

But in another sense we become spiritual when we have learned to put off the old man, and the works of the flesh, and have received the pure milk of the word, and have brought forth the fruit of the Spirit. As we discipline ourselves to continue in prayer and in the word of God, this growth will happen. If we don't discipline ourselves God, being a good Father, He will discipline us. His discipline even includes sickness and death as with those who ate the Lord's Supper in an unworthy manner in Corinth as in 1 Corinthians 11 (ESV):26 For as often as you eat this bread and drink the cup, you proclaim the Lord's death until he comes. 27 Whoever, therefore, eats the bread or drinks the cup of the Lord in an unworthy manner will be guilty concerning the body and blood of the Lord. 28 Let a person examine himself, then, and so eat of the bread and drink of the cup. 29 For anyone who eats and drinks without discerning the body eats and drinks judgment on himself. 30 That is why many of you are weak and ill, and some have died.

Paul says that we are disciplined by the Lord so that we are not condemned with the world as see in 1 Corinthians 11 (ESV):31 But if we judged ourselves truly, we would not be judged. 32 But when we are judged by the Lord, we are disciplined so that we may not be condemned along with the world. 33 So then, my brothers, when you come together to eat, wait for one another— 34 if anyone is hungry, let him eat at home—so that when you come together it will not be for judgment. About the other things I will give directions when I come.

So we are not to “become careless, and bring forth for fruit the lusts of the flesh like woody produce,” as Irenaeus says. If we do so, we will be disciplined by the Lord, but we will not be cast out or lose our salvation. God deals with us as His sons and daughters from the moment we have faith in Him.

Now in paragraph two Irenaeus shows us that “those who are in the flesh cannot please God,” as we read in context in Romans 8 (ESV):8 Those who are in the flesh cannot please God. 9 You, however, are not in the flesh but in the Spirit, if in fact the Spirit of God dwells in you. Anyone who does not have the Spirit of Christ does not belong to him. 10 But if Christ is in you, although the body is dead because of sin, the Spirit is life because of righteousness. 11 If the Spirit of him who raised Jesus from the dead dwells in you, he who raised Christ Jesus from the dead will also give life to your mortal bodies through his Spirit who dwells in you. 12 So then, brothers, we are debtors, not to the flesh, to live according to the flesh. 13 For if you live according to the flesh you will die, but if by the Spirit you put to death the deeds of the body, you will live. 14 For all who are led by the Spirit of God are sons of God.

Irenaeus says we are not by the Scripture prohibited from living our lives in the flesh, but it is the lusts of the flesh we must put off for they “bring death upon a man.”

Now also in paragraph two, where Irenaeus says “And again, those persons who are not bringing forth the fruits of righteousness, and are, as it were, covered over and lost among brambles, if they use diligence, and receive the word of God as a graft, arrive at the pristine nature of man—that which was created after the image and likeness of God.,” he seems to be referring to those who at first believed but then fell into sin and the former conversation again. He allows for their repentance I can see. But I do not see that he understands the responsibility which we have as children of God of putting on the new man and putting off the old man. It is not a matter of changing our nature again or being born again, again. We have a new man, and therefore a new nature, when we are born again. But we still have the old man in our flesh, and therefore a sinful nature, as well. Our responsibility in this new life is to put on the new man, and to put off the old.

Now the analogy of the olive tree is just a method Paul uses to explain the truth about the current state of Israel. It is only an analogy. When we get to heaven we will not all line up in the shape of an olive tree. The olive tree is just a way to illustrate the truth about Israel and the Church. No one is really engrafted into an olive tree. It is just figurative language of the relationship of the believer in the Church to the believer who is of Israel. And so there is no engrafting of the Spirit into an olive tree. It is just an analogy. And so we cannot “lose the Holy Spirit which possesses us,” as if we held on to Him by our works. It is He who possesses us. And yet if we wish to find our lives, we must lose them for His sake. In this way we will live the abundant life that Jesus promises to all who believe in Him.

Book 5: Chapter XI.—Treats upon the actions of carnal and of spiritual persons; also, that the spiritual cleansing is not to be referred to the substance of our bodies, but to the manner of our former life.

1. [The apostle], foreseeing the wicked speeches of unbelievers, has particularized the works which he terms carnal; and he explains himself, lest any room for doubt be left to those who do dishonestly pervert his meaning, thus saying in the Epistle to the Galatians: “Now the works of the flesh are manifest, which are adulteries, fornications, uncleanness, luxuriousness, idolatries, witchcrafts, 4526 Or, “poisonings.” hatreds, contentions jealousies, wraths, emulations, animosities, irritable speeches, dissensions, heresies, envyings, drunkenness, carousings, and such like; of which I warn you, as also I have warned you, that they who do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God.” 4527 Gal. v. 19, etc. Thus does he point out to his hearers in a more explicit manner what it is [he means when he declares], “Flesh and blood shall not inherit the kingdom of God.” For they who do these things, since they do indeed walk after the flesh, have not the power of living unto God. And then, again, he proceeds to tell us the spiritual actions which vivify a man, that is, the engrafting of the Spirit; thus saying, “But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, goodness, benignity, faith, meekness, continence, chastity: against these there is no law.” 4528 Gal. v. 22. As, therefore, he who has gone forward to the better things, and has brought forth the fruit of the Spirit, is saved altogether because of the communion of the Spirit; so also he who has continued in the aforesaid works of the flesh, being truly reckoned as carnal, because he did not receive the Spirit of God, shall not have power to inherit the kingdom of heaven. As, again, the same apostle testifies, saying to the Corinthians, “Know ye not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God? Do not err,” he says: “neither fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor abusers of themselves with mankind, nor thieves, nor covetous, nor revilers, nor rapacious persons, shall inherit the kingdom of God. And these ye indeed have been; but ye have been washed, but ye have been sanctified, but ye have been justified in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, and in the Spirit of our God.” 4529 1 Cor. vi. 9–11. He shows in the clearest manner through what things it is that man goes to destruction, if he has continued to live after the flesh; and then, on the other hand, [he points out] through what things he is saved. Now he says that the things which save are the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the Spirit of our God.

2. Since, therefore, in that passage he recounts those works of the flesh which are without the Spirit, which bring death [upon their doers], he exclaimed at the end of his Epistle, in accordance with what he had already declared, “And as we have borne the image of him who is of the earth, we shall also bear the image of Him who is from heaven. For this I say, brethren, that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God.” 4530 1 Cor. xv. 49, etc. Now this which he says, “as we have borne the image of him who is of the earth,” is analogous to what has been declared, “And such indeed ye were; but ye have been washed, but ye have been sanctified, but ye have been justified in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, and in the Spirit of our God.” When, therefore, did we bear the image of him who is of the earth? Doubtless it was when those actions spoken of as “works of the flesh” used to be wrought in us. And then, again, when [do we bear] the image of the heavenly? Doubtless when he says, “Ye have been washed,” believing in the name of the Lord, and receiving His Spirit. Now we have washed away, not the substance of our body, nor the image of our [primary] formation, but the former vain conversation. In these members, therefore, in which we were going to destruction by working the works of corruption, in these very members are we made alive by working the works of the Spirit.

Summary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus testifies, “[The apostle], foreseeing the wicked speeches of unbelievers, has particularized the works which he terms carnal; and he explains himself, lest any room for doubt be left to those who do dishonestly pervert his meaning, thus saying in the Epistle to the Galatians: “Now the works of the flesh are manifest, which are adulteries, fornications, uncleanness, luxuriousness, idolatries, witchcrafts, hatreds, contentions jealousies, wraths, emulations, animosities, irritable speeches, dissensions, heresies, envyings, drunkenness, carousings, and such like; of which I warn you, as also I have warned you, that they who do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God,” referring to Galatians 5:19-21. Irenaeus then asserts, “Thus does he point out to his hearers in a more explicit manner what it is [he means when he declares], “Flesh and blood shall not inherit the kingdom of God.” For they who do these things, since they do indeed walk after the flesh, have not the power of living unto God.” Irenaeus then testifies, “And then, again, he proceeds to tell us the spiritual actions which vivify a man, that is, the engrafting of the Spirit; thus saying, “But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, goodness, benignity, faith, meekness, continence, chastity: against these there is no law,” referring to Galatians 5:22-23. Irenaeus then affirms, “As, therefore, he who has gone forward to the better things, and has brought forth the fruit of the Spirit, is saved altogether because of the communion of the Spirit; so also he who has continued in the aforesaid works of the flesh, being truly reckoned as carnal, because he did not receive the Spirit of God, shall not have power to inherit the kingdom of heaven.” Irenaeus then again testifies, “As, again, the same apostle testifies, saying to the Corinthians, “Know ye not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God? Do not err,” he says: “neither fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor abusers of themselves with mankind, nor thieves, nor covetous, nor revilers, nor rapacious persons, shall inherit the kingdom of God. And these ye indeed have been; but ye have been washed, but ye have been sanctified, but ye have been justified in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, and in the Spirit of our God,” referring to 1 Corinthians 6:9-11. Irenaeus then affirms, “He shows in the clearest manner through what things it is that man goes to destruction, if he has continued to live after the flesh; and then, on the other hand, [he points out] through what things he is saved. Now he says that the things which save are the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the Spirit of our God,” referring again to 1 Corinthians 6:11.

In paragraph two, Irenaeus then affirms, “Since, therefore, in that passage he recounts those works of the flesh which are without the Spirit, which bring death [upon their doers], he exclaimed at the end of his Epistle, in accordance with what he had already declared, “And as we have borne the image of him who is of the earth, we shall also bear the image of Him who is from heaven. For this I say, brethren, that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God,” referring in part to 1 Corinthians 15:49-50. Irenaeus then asserts, “Now this which he says, “as we have borne the image of him who is of the earth,” is analogous to what has been declared, “And such indeed ye were; but ye have been washed, but ye have been sanctified, but ye have been justified in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, and in the Spirit of our God,” referring again to 1 Corinthians 6:11. Irenaeus continues as he asserts, “When, therefore, did we bear the image of him who is of the earth? Doubtless it was when those actions spoken of as “works of the flesh” used to be wrought in us. And then, again, when [do we bear] the image of the heavenly? Doubtless when he says, “Ye have been washed,” believing in the name of the Lord, and receiving His Spirit.” Irenaeus then affirms, “Now we have washed away, not the substance of our body, nor the image of our [primary] formation, but the former vain conversation.” And Irenaeus concludes as he asserts, “In these members, therefore, in which we were going to destruction by working the works of corruption, in these very members are we made alive by working the works of the Spirit.”

Commentary: Irenaeus now continues in this third chapter in a row with his defense of the truth about the resurrection which he began in Book 5: Chapter IX. As he began to talk about the works of the flesh in the previous chapter, so now he continues that discussion, and enumerates them in this chapter. He also enumerates the fruits of the Spirit which he will call “spiritual actions which vivify a man, that is, the engrafting of the Spirit.”

Let us pick up Irenaeus’ argument in paragraph one, as he testifies that, “[The apostle], foreseeing the wicked speeches of unbelievers, has particularized the works which he terms carnal; and he explains himself, lest any room for doubt be left to those who do dishonestly pervert his meaning, thus saying in the Epistle to the Galatians: “Now the works of the flesh are manifest, which are adulteries, fornications, uncleanness, luxuriousness, idolatries, witchcrafts, hatreds, contentions jealousies, wraths, emulations, animosities, irritable speeches, dissensions, heresies, envyings, drunkenness, carousings, and such like; of which I warn you, as also I have warned you, that they who do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God,” referring to Galatians 5 (ESV):19 Now the works of the flesh are evident: sexual immorality, impurity, sensuality, 20 idolatry, sorcery, enmity, strife, jealousy, fits of anger, rivalries, dissensions, divisions, 21 envy, drunkenness, orgies, and things like these. I warn you, as I warned you before, that those who do such things will not inherit the kingdom of God.

Paul does say that “they who do such things will not inherit the kingdom of God” in verse 21 above, showing us the character of those who will inherit the kingdom of God. In Galatians, chapter 5, Paul is describing what type of person will be in the kingdom of God relating to their character. He is not referring to what type of body they shall have when they inherit the kingdom of God, as he describes in 1 Corinthians, chapter 15.

Yet Irenaeus then asserts, “Thus does he point out to his hearers in a more explicit manner what it is [he means when he declares], “Flesh and blood shall not inherit the kingdom of God.” For they who do these things, since they do indeed walk after the flesh, have not the power of living unto God.”

We have already dealt with the fact that Paul is speaking of the resurrection in 1 Corinthians, chapter 15, and that he is not there speaking of the works of the flesh. In 1 Corinthians, chapter 15, Paul speaks of what type of body will enter the kingdom of God. A body of flesh and blood will not enter the kingdom of God because its life principle is in the blood. The body of flesh and blood must be changed so that its life principle is the Spirit of God in order to enter the kingdom of God. In other words, our body of flesh and blood will have to be changed to be made like His glorious body as Paul says in Philippians 3 (NASB):21 who will transform our lowly body to be like his glorious body, by the power that enables him even to subject all things to himself.

Our body will then be imperishable and immortal.

Irenaeus then testifies, “And then, again, he proceeds to tell us the spiritual actions which vivify a man, that is, the engrafting of the Spirit; thus saying, “But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, goodness, benignity, faith, meekness, continence, chastity: against these there is no law,” referring to Galatians 5 (ESV):22 But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, patience, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, 23 gentleness, self-control; against such things there is no law.

However, the word fruit in verse 22 speaks of something that comes from life. A tree that is alive bears fruit. A tree that is dead bears no fruit. A tree is known by the type of fruit it produces. Jesus warned his disciples about false prophets as we read in Matthew 7 (ESV):15 “Beware of false prophets, who come to you in sheep's clothing but inwardly are ravenous wolves. 16 You will recognize them by their fruits. Are grapes gathered from thornbushes, or figs from thistles? 17 So, every healthy tree bears good fruit, but the diseased tree bears bad fruit. 18 A healthy tree cannot bear bad fruit, nor can a diseased tree bear good fruit. 19 Every tree that does not bear good fruit is cut down and thrown into the fire. 20 Thus you will recognize them by their fruits.

Jesus speaks of the outward appearance of the false prophets as sheep, yet inwardly He says they are as ravenous wolves. The fruit does not give life to the tree, but the tree grows the fruit as a result of the life inside it.

Therefore, the fruit of the Spirit is something that comes about in our lives as a result of the life of the Spirit in us. The life of the Spirit is given to us when we are born of the Spirit. We are born of the Spirit when we believe in Jesus Christ, and we receive His life in our spirit when we are born again in this way. In his argument, Irenaeus tries to make the Spirit engraft the fruit of the Spirit into our lives. He equates this engrafting of the Spirit with “the spiritual actions which vivify a man,” or gives life to a man, as if we are only becoming alive spiritually. He then equates these spiritual actions with the “going forward to the better things,” and bringing forth the fruit of the Spirit. And in paragraph two, Irenaeus will even equate the fruit of the Spirit with the works of the Spirit as he will say “In these members, therefore, in which we were going to destruction by working the works of corruption, in these very members are we made alive by working the works of the Spirit.” However, the works of the flesh are something we do as a result of the old Adamic nature in our flesh. The fruit of the Spirit is something that grows in us as we yield to the Spirit who is the life of our spirit within us. The fruits of the Spirit are not “spiritual actions,” and they are not works, or something we do that gives us life. They are evidence of the life that is in us as a result of our faith in Jesus Christ.

Now, Irenaeus continues as he affirms, “As, therefore, he who has gone forward to the better things, and has brought forth the fruit of the Spirit, is saved altogether because of the communion of the Spirit; so also he who has continued in the aforesaid works of the flesh, being truly reckoned as carnal, because he did not receive the Spirit of God, shall not have power to inherit the kingdom of heaven.” Now it is true that the one who is born again has passed from death to life as Jesus spoke in John 5 (ESV):24 Truly, truly, I say to you, whoever hears my word and believes him who sent me has eternal life. He does not come into judgment, but has passed from death to life.

It is also true that the one who does not receive the Spirit of God is guilty of an eternal sin. When the scribes said that Jesus was possessed by Beelzebul, Jesus asked them how Satan could cast out Satan. But they still did not receive Him, and so He spoke as in Mark 3 (ESV):28 “Truly, I say to you, all sins will be forgiven the children of man, and whatever blasphemies they utter, 29 but whoever blasphemes against the Holy Spirit never has forgiveness, but is guilty of an eternal sin”— 30 for they were saying, “He has an unclean spirit.”

But God is a righteous judge and no one who has truly believed in His Son, Jesus Christ, will be lost. Now, again, Irenaeus uses the word carnal here as he says, “he who has continued in the aforesaid works of the flesh, being truly reckoned as carnal, because he did not receive the Spirit of God, shall not have power to inherit the kingdom of heaven.” The word carnal means “of the flesh.”

Irenaeus then again testifies, “As, again, the same apostle testifies, saying to the Corinthians, “Know ye not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God? Do not err,” he says: “neither fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor abusers of themselves with mankind, nor thieves, nor covetous, nor revilers, nor rapacious persons, shall inherit the kingdom of God. And these ye indeed have been; but ye have been washed, but ye have been sanctified, but ye have been justified in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, and in the Spirit of our God,” referring to 1 Corinthians 6 (ESV):9 Or do you not know that the unrighteous will not inherit the kingdom of God? Do not be deceived: neither the sexually immoral, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor men who practice homosexuality, 10 nor thieves, nor the greedy, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor swindlers will inherit the kingdom of God. 11 And such were some of you. But you were washed, you were sanctified, you were justified in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ and by the Spirit of our God.

Irenaeus then affirms, “He shows in the clearest manner through what things it is that man goes to destruction, if he has continued to live after the flesh; and then, on the other hand, [he points out] through what things he is saved. Now he says that the things which save are the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the Spirit of our God.”

It is evident that Irenaeus believed that one is saved by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ and the Spirit of our God. But, in the context of his writing, he also believed that one must do the “works of the Spirit,” and he or she must not do the works of the flesh or he or she will lose the Spirit of God and not be able to inherit the Kingdom of God.

In paragraph two, Irenaeus then affirms, “Since, therefore, in that passage he recounts those works of the flesh which are without the Spirit, which bring death [upon their doers], he exclaimed at the end of his Epistle, in accordance with what he had already declared, “And as we have borne the image of him who is of the earth, we shall also bear the image of Him who is from heaven. For this I say, brethren, that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God,” referring in part to 1 Corinthians 15 (ESV):49 Just as we have borne the image of the man of dust, we shall also bear the image of the man of heaven. 50 I tell you this, brothers: flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God, nor does the perishable inherit the imperishable.

Irenaeus then asserts, “Now this which he says, “as we have borne the image of him who is of the earth,” is analogous to what has been declared, “And such indeed ye were; but ye have been washed, but ye have been sanctified, but ye have been justified in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, and in the Spirit of our God,” referring again to 1 Corinthians 6 (ESV):11 And such were some of you. But you were washed, you were sanctified, you were justified in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ and by the Spirit of our God.

Irenaeus continues as he then asserts, “When, therefore, did we bear the image of him who is of the earth? Doubtless it was when those actions spoken of as “works of the flesh” used to be wrought in us. And then, again, when [do we bear] the image of the heavenly? Doubtless when he says, “Ye have been washed,” believing in the name of the Lord, and receiving His Spirit.”

We see here that Irenaeus clearly believed that we bore “the image of him who is of the earth” when “those actions spoken of as “works of the flesh” used to be wrought in us.” And the moment we were “washed, believing in the name of the Lord, and receiving His Spirit,” we bear the image of the heavenly. However, his interpretation takes these verses completely out of context. Paul says that, “Just as we have borne the image of the earthy, we will also bear the image of the heavenly,” in verse 49 of 1 Corinthians 15. Paul includes himself when he says “we.” And he placed this event as future to himself when he said “we will also bear.” And as we have already discussed previously, his expression “flesh and blood” in verse 50 of 1 Corinthians 15 relates to the perishable which he says will not inherit the imperishable. Our flesh and blood will become imperishable when our bodies are resurrected, and made like His glorious body. It is then that we shall bear the image of the heavenly, just as Paul says.

The expectation of Irenaeus seems to be that when we believed, the “works of the flesh” would no more be wrought in us, and that we would be bearing “the image of the heavenly” as we live our lives on earth, waiting for Jesus to return. But that is not what Paul is saying. This must have been a heavy load indeed on the church which followed him.

Irenaeus then affirms, “Now we have washed away, not the substance of our body, nor the image of our [primary] formation, but the former vain conversation.” Actually, Irenaeus’ wording here conflicts somewhat with the Scriptures. Yes, it is true that we have not washed away “the substance of our body, nor the image of our [primary] formation,” but the Scriptures say that we have washed away our sins as Ananias told Paul in Acts 22 (ESV):16 And now why do you wait? Rise and be baptized and wash away your sins, calling on his name.’

And our former vain conversation is something that we must now lay aside as Paul exhorts in Ephesians 4 (NASB):22 that, in reference to your former manner of life, you lay aside the old self, which is being corrupted in accordance with the lusts of deceit, 23 and that you be renewed in the spirit of your mind, 24 and put on the new self, which in the likeness of God has been created in righteousness and holiness of the truth.

This is also translated as in Ephesians 4 (KJV):22 That ye put off concerning the former conversation the old man, which is corrupt according to the deceitful lusts;

So our former conversation, or manner of life, is not what is washed away, but our sins are washed away.

And Irenaeus concludes as he asserts, “In these members, therefore, in which we were going to destruction by working the works of corruption, in these very members are we made alive by working the works of the Spirit.” Again, the Scriptures are in conflict with Irenaeus’ statement. We are not made alive by any works of the Spirit, but when we believe in Him as Jesus said in John 5 (ESV):24 Truly, truly, I say to you, whoever hears my word and believes him who sent me has eternal life. He does not come into judgment, but has passed from death to life.

It was when we were dead in sin that He made us alive as we read in Colossians 2 (ESV):13 And you, who were dead in your trespasses and the uncircumcision of your flesh, God made alive together with him, having forgiven us all our trespasses, 14 by canceling the record of debt that stood against us with its legal demands. This he set aside, nailing it to the cross.

We do not make ourselves alive by doing anything. It is simple faith in Him that makes us alive. It is simple faith in Him that saves us. It is not by works of righteousness as Paul says in Titus 3 (NASB):5 Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost;

The washing of regeneration speaks of the cleansing from our sins that happens when we are born again. This is what Paul is speaking of when he says, 1 Corinthians 6 (KJV):11 And such were some of you: but ye are washed, but ye are sanctified, but ye are justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God.

It is at the new birth that we were washed, sanctified, and justified. And it is not in our members that we are made alive, but in our spirits that we are made alive to God when we are born again. And it is not a gradual thing as if we were gradually being born again after accumulating enough “works of the Spirit.” It is after we have believed that we are sealed with the Holy Spirit as Paul says in Ephesians 1 (ESV):13 In him you also, when you heard the word of truth, the gospel of your salvation, and believed in him, were sealed with the promised Holy Spirit, 14 who is the guarantee of our inheritance until we acquire possession of it, to the praise of his glory.

After this sealing, we are then to present our bodies as a living sacrifice as Paul exhorts in Romans 12 (ESV):1 I appeal to you therefore, brothers, by the mercies of God, to present your bodies as a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable to God, which is your spiritual worship.

And we are to present the members of our body to God as instruments of righteousness, and not let sin reign in them as Paul exhorts in Romans 5 (ESV):12 Therefore, just as sin came into the world through one man, and death through sin, and so death spread to all men because all sinned— 13 for sin indeed was in the world before the law was given, but sin is not counted where there is no law.

And after we have believed, we were baptized into one body as Paul tells us in 1 Corinthians 12 (ESV):13 For in one Spirit we were all baptized into one body—Jews or Greeks, slaves or free—and all were made to drink of one Spirit.

Having been made to drink of one Spirit, we are now to bear the fruit of the Spirit. We do this by walking by the Spirit as we read in Galatians 5 (ESV):16 But I say, walk by the Spirit, and you will not gratify the desires of the flesh. 17 For the desires of the flesh are against the Spirit, and the desires of the Spirit are against the flesh, for these are opposed to each other, to keep you from doing the things you want to do. 18 But if you are led by the Spirit, you are not under the law.

This is a choice we must make. It does not happen automatically when we are born again. We must choose to walk by the Spirit.

Again, those in Corinth after having believed, we were washed, sanctified, and justified, as we read again in 1 Corinthians 6 (ESV):11 And such were some of you. But you were washed, you were sanctified, you were justified in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ and by the Spirit of our God.

In this same state of being washed, sanctified, and justified, Paul addresses those in the church at Ephesus as saints, and calling God “our Father” as we read in Ephesians 1 (ESV):1 Paul, an apostle of Christ Jesus by the will of God, To the saints who are in Ephesus, and are faithful in Christ Jesus: 2 Grace to you and peace from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ.

The words “saints” and “sanctified” both come from the same Greek root, ἅγιος (pronounced hageos), meaning separate from common, holy. It was to the saints in Ephesus, those who had received the Spirit of God, who Paul commanded to no longer walk as they used to walk in their former manner of life before they were cleansed from their sins. Paul told them that they had a responsibility not to bear “the image of the heavenly,” but to lay aside the old self. This was something they had to do even after being sanctified as we read in Ephesians 4 (ESV):17 Now this I say and testify in the Lord, that you must no longer walk as the Gentiles do, in the futility of their minds. 18 They are darkened in their understanding, alienated from the life of God because of the ignorance that is in them, due to their hardness of heart. 19 They have become callous and have given themselves up to sensuality, greedy to practice every kind of impurity. 20 But that is not the way you learned Christ!— 21 assuming that you have heard about him and were taught in him, as the truth is in Jesus, 22 to put off your old self, which belongs to your former manner of life and is corrupt through deceitful desires, 23 and to be renewed in the spirit of your minds, 24 and to put on the new self, created after the likeness of God in true righteousness and holiness.

Paul says that we have the responsibility to lay aside falsehood and speak truth to each other as in Ephesians 4 (ESV):25 Therefore, having put away falsehood, let each one of you speak the truth with his neighbor, for we are members one of another. 26 Be angry and do not sin; do not let the sun go down on your anger, 27 and give no opportunity to the devil. 28 Let the thief no longer steal, but rather let him labor, doing honest work with his own hands, so that he may have something to share with anyone in need. 29 Let no corrupting talk come out of your mouths, but only such as is good for building up, as fits the occasion, that it may give grace to those who hear. 30 And do not grieve the Holy Spirit of God, by whom you were sealed for the day of redemption. 31 Let all bitterness and wrath and anger and clamor and slander be put away from you, along with all malice. 32 Be kind to one another, tenderhearted, forgiving one another, as God in Christ forgave you.

Again, Paul says in Galatians, chapter 5, that we have the responsibility to walk by the Spirit as he says in Galatians 5 (ESV):16 But I say, walk by the Spirit, and you will not gratify the desires of the flesh. 17 For the desires of the flesh are against the Spirit, and the desires of the Spirit are against the flesh, for these are opposed to each other, to keep you from doing the things you want to do. 18 But if you are led by the Spirit, you are not under the law.

Paul was speaking to the saints at Corinth, Ephesus, and Galatia, that is, to believers in Jesus Christ. In this life on earth we still have the flesh, that is, our body of flesh and blood. The flesh Paul is talking about in Galatians 5:17 is not our body of flesh and blood, but the sinful nature of the flesh. Paul says in verse seventeen, "For the flesh sets its desire against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh; for these are in opposition to one another, so that you may not do the things that you please." The flesh has no desire of its own. Paul is speaking of the sinful nature of the flesh. It is because of the sinful nature in our flesh that we cannot do the things that we please. Not that our flesh is bad, but it is because of sin that dwells in our flesh that we stumble. Paul explains this as he tells us in Romans 7 (ESV):18 For I know that nothing good dwells in me, that is, in my flesh. For I have the desire to do what is right, but not the ability to carry it out. 19 For I do not do the good I want, but the evil I do not want is what I keep on doing. 20 Now if I do what I do not want, it is no longer I who do it, but sin that dwells within me.

Before Christ, it was our nature to sin as Paul tells us in Ephesians 2 (ESV):3 among whom we all once lived in the passions of our flesh, carrying out the desires of the body and the mind, and were by nature children of wrath, like the rest of mankind.

Sin dwells in our flesh. But when we believe in Jesus Christ, our spirit is made alive and we are born again. The life of the Spirit is in our spirit. We know that we are the children of God by the Spirit He has given us as Paul tells us in Romans 8 (ESV):16 The Spirit himself bears witness with our spirit that we are children of God.

The apostle John also says the same as we read in 1 John 3 (ESV):23 And this is his commandment, that we believe in the name of his Son Jesus Christ and love one another, just as he has commanded us. 24 Whoever keeps his commandments abides in God, and God in him. And by this we know that he abides in us, by the Spirit whom he has given us.

Now as children of God, we have the Spirit of God dwelling in us. However, our sinful nature has not yet been eradicated. This will happen at the resurrection when our bodies are made like His glorious body, that is, imperishable. Sin is still with us in our bodies. This is why our bodies now are destined to die. And this is why Paul says that we cannot do the things that we please. As saints, we now have two natures inside of us that war against each other. God has empowered us by His Spirit to overcome our fleshly nature, and walk by the Spirit. It is up to us to lay aside our former conversation and our fleshly ways, and walk by the Spirit and put on the new man who possesses the new nature of the Spirit of God, which is ours because we have been born of the Spirit.

The Spirit is not progressively giving life to our mortal bodies, as if every time we sinned we died, and when we repented, He brought us back to life. When we repent and believe in Jesus Christ, we become His children. He now treats us as such. He is a good Father and disciplines us as a good Father would as we see in Hebrews 12 (ESV):9 Besides this, we have had earthly fathers who disciplined us and we respected them. Shall we not much more be subject to the Father of spirits and live? 10 For they disciplined us for a short time as it seemed best to them, but he disciplines us for our good, that we may share his holiness. 11 For the moment all discipline seems painful rather than pleasant, but later it yields the peaceful fruit of righteousness to those who have been trained by it.

The way we deal with sin as children of God, as Christians, is to confess it and He is then faithful to cleanse us from all unrighteousness as we read in 1 John 1 (ESV):9 If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness.

Again, after we have repented and been born again, we still have a sinful nature in our flesh. It is our responsibility not to yield to this sinful nature, but to put on the new man which we are empowered to do by the Spirit of God. If we fall, we do not die and have to be born again all over again, but God disciplines us until we confess. Our fellowship, that is, our feeling of God's presence in our lives, is dependent on our agreement with Him. As we walk in the light of His word, He points out the things we need to confess. When we then confess, He cleanses us. This is the gradual process of a progressive sanctification of our souls which will go on until Jesus comes when we will be like Him as read in 1 John 3 (ESV):2 Beloved, we are God's children now, and what we will be has not yet appeared; but we know that when he appears we shall be like him, because we shall see him as he is.

As believers, we have a standing as sons and daughters in Him as Paul says in 1 Corinthians 6 (ESV):11 And such were some of you. But you were washed, you were sanctified, you were justified in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ and by the Spirit of our God.

When we are washed, we don't have to take a bath all over again. We just need to wash our feet, and we are completely clean again.

Commentary Conclusions: Inheriting the Kingdom of Heaven

Irenaeus has here again joined disparate passages of Scripture together which are totally unrelated except for the word "inherited" and the word "flesh." The first passage in 1 Corinthians 15:49-50 speaks of the resurrection of our body of flesh and blood, and what type of body that will be after the resurrection. The second passage in Galatians 5:19-21 speaks of the works of the flesh because of sin that is in our members, that is, our flesh. The third passage in Galatians 5:22-23, mentions the fruit of the Spirit. The fourth passage in 1 Corinthians 6:9-11 uses the word "inherit," but concerns the character of the people who will be in the Kingdom of God. It does not refer to the works of the flesh, but the characteristics of the unrighteous as we read again in 1 Corinthians 6 (KJV):9 Know ye not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God? Be not deceived: neither fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor abusers of themselves with mankind, 10 Nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor extortioners, shall inherit the kingdom of God. 11 And such were some of you: but ye are washed, but ye are sanctified, but ye are justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God.

That is, sin and sinners will not be in the Kingdom of God. But those who have been washed, sanctified, and justified because of their faith in Jesus Christ will be in the Kingdom of God.

The Holy Spirit wants to transform us Christians into men and women of God who bear the qualities of character spoken of as the fruits of the Spirit such as love, joy, peace, patience, kindness, goodness and so on. We start this transformation by accepting Christ as Lord, and then, having been born again and having His life in us, we feed on the pure milk of the word of God and grow up in Him, putting off and putting on as Paul says. And as we grow in the Lord, the fruit of the Spirit will grow in us as well. And as we do the works of the Spirit, that is, preaching the Gospel to the poor, proclaiming liberty to the captives, healing the broken hearted, and praying for the sick, we ourselves will bear fruit unto eternal life as Jesus said we would in John 4 (ESV):36 Already the one who reaps is receiving wages and gathering fruit for eternal life, so that sower and reaper may rejoice together.

Now in these Chapters IX, X, and XI in Book 5 of Irenaeus' writing, he is to be commended for defending the Church against the heresy that there is no resurrection of the body. Let us not forget that he has encouraged us to walk in the Spirit, and not give in to carnal lusts. He has encouraged us to communion with the Holy Spirit, and not to be a wild olive. He has encouraged us to "walk in newness of life, obeying God" in Book 5: Chapter IX, paragraph three. Let us obey God and strive to walk in all the truth that God will guide us into by His Spirit.

Chapter 8: On the Nature of Man

Book 3: Chapter XXIII.—Arguments in opposition to Tatian, showing that it was consonant to divine justice and mercy that the first Adam should first partake in that salvation offered to all by Christ.

1. It was necessary, therefore, that the Lord, coming to the lost sheep, and making recapitulation of so comprehensive a dispensation, and seeking after His own handiwork, should save that very man who had been created after His image and likeness, that is, Adam, filling up the times of His condemnation, which had been incurred through disobedience,—[times] “which the Father had placed in His own power.” 1108 Acts i. 7. [This was necessary,] too, inasmuch as the whole economy of salvation regarding man came to pass according to the good pleasure of the Father, in order that God might not be conquered, nor His wisdom lessened, [in the estimation of His creatures.] For if man, who had been created by God that he might live, after losing life, through being injured by the serpent that had corrupted him, should not any more return to life, but should be utterly [and for ever] abandoned to death, God would [in that case] have been conquered, and the wickedness of the serpent would have prevailed over the will of God. But inasmuch as God is invincible and long-suffering, He did indeed show Himself to be long-suffering in the matter of the correction of man and the probation of all, as I have already observed; and by means of the second man did He bind the strong man, and spoiled his goods, 1109 Matt. xii. 29. and abolished death, vivifying that man who had been in a state of death. For as the first Adam became a vessel in his (Satan’s) possession, whom he did also hold under his power, that is, by bringing sin on him iniquitously, and under colour of immortality entailing death upon him. For, while promising that they should be as gods, which was in no way possible for him to be, he wrought death in them: wherefore he who had led man captive, was justly captured in his turn by God; but man, who had been led captive, was loosed from the bonds of condemnation.

2. But this is Adam, if the truth should be told, the first formed man, of whom the Scripture says that the Lord spake, “Let Us make man after Our own image and likeness;” 1110 Gen. i. 26. and we are all from him: and as we are from him, therefore have we all inherited his title. But inasmuch as man is saved, it is fitting that he who was created the original man should be saved. For it is too absurd to maintain, that he who was so deeply injured by the enemy, and was the first to suffer captivity, was not rescued by Him who conquered the enemy, but that his children were, —those whom he had begotten in the same captivity. Neither would the enemy appear to be as yet conquered, if the old spoils remained with him. To give an illustration: If a hostile force had overcome certain [enemies], had bound them, and led them away captive, and held them for a long time in servitude, so that they begat children among them; and somebody, compassionating those who had been made slaves, should overcome this same hostile force; he certainly would not act equitably, were he to liberate the children of those who had been led captive, from the sway of those who had enslaved their fathers, but should leave these latter, who had suffered the act of capture, subject to their enemies,—those, too, on whose very account he had proceeded to this retaliation,—the children succeeding to liberty through the avenging of their fathers’ cause, but not 1111 The old Latin translation is: “Sed non relictis ipsis patribus.” Grabe would cancel non, while Massuet pleads for retaining it. Harvey conjectures that the translator perhaps mistook οὐκ ἀνειλημμένων for οὐκ ἀναλελειμμένων. We have followed Massuet, though we should prefer deleting non, were it not found in all the mss. so that their fathers, who suffered the act of capture itself, should be left [in bondage]. For God is neither devoid of power nor of justice, who has afforded help to man, and restored him to His own liberty.

3. It was for this reason, too, that immediately after Adam had transgressed, as the Scripture relates, He pronounced no curse against Adam personally, but against the ground, in reference to his works, as a certain person among the ancients has observed: “God did indeed transfer the curse to the earth, that it might not remain in man.” 1112 Gen. iii. 17, etc.

But man received, as the punishment of his transgression, the toilsome task of tilling the earth, and to eat bread in the sweat of his face, and to return to the dust from whence he was taken. Similarly also did the woman [receive] toil, and labour, and groans, and the pangs of parturition, and a state of subjection, that is, that she should serve her husband; so that they should neither perish altogether when cursed by God, nor, by remaining unreprimanded, should be led to despise God. But the curse in all its fulness fell upon the serpent, which had beguiled them. “And God,” it is declared, “said to the serpent: Because thou hast done this, cursed art thou above all cattle, and above all the beasts of the earth.” 1113 Gen. iii. 14. This reading of Irenæus agrees with that of the Codex Bezae, at Cambridge. And this same thing does the Lord also say in the Gospel, to those who are found upon the left hand: “Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, which my Father hath prepared for the devil and his angels;” 1114 Matt. xxv. 41. indicating that eternal fire was not originally prepared for man, but for him who beguiled man, and caused him to offend—for him, I say, who is chief of the apostasy, and for those angels who became apostates along with him; which [fire], indeed, they too shall justly feel, who, like him, persevere in works of wickedness, without repentance, and without retracing their steps.

4. [These act] 1115 Gen. iv. 7, after LXX. version. as Cain [did, who], when he was counselled by God to keep quiet, because he had not made an equitable division of that share to which his brother was entitled, but with envy and malice thought that he could domineer over him, not only did not acquiesce, but even added sin to sin, indicating his state of mind by his action. For what he had planned, that did he also put in practice: he tyrannized over and slew him; God subjecting the just to the unjust, that the former might be proved as the just one by the things which he suffered, and the latter detected as the unjust by those which he perpetrated. And he was not softened even by this, nor did he stop short with that evil deed; but being asked where his brother was, he said, “I know not; am I my brother’s keeper?” extending and aggravating [his] wickedness by his answer. For if it is wicked to slay a brother, much worse is it thus insolently and irreverently to reply to the omniscient God as if he could battle Him. And for this he did himself bear a curse about with him, because he gratuitously brought an offering of sin, having had no reverence for God, nor being put to confusion by the act of fratricide. 1116 The old Latin reads “parricidio.” The crime of parricide was alone known to the Roman law; but it was a generic term, including the murder of all near relations. All the editors have supposed that the original word was ἀδελφοκτονία, which has here been adopted.

5. The case of Adam, however, had no analogy with this, but was altogether different. For, having been beguiled by another under the pretext of immortality, he is immediately seized with terror, and hides himself; not as if he were able to escape from God; but, in a state of confusion at having transgressed His command, he feels unworthy to appear before and to hold converse with God. Now, “the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom;” 1117 Prov. i. 7, Prov. ix. 10. the sense of sin leads to repentance, and God bestows His compassion upon those who are penitent. For [Adam] showed his repentance by his conduct, through means of the girdle [which he used], covering himself with fig-leaves, while there were many other leaves, which would have irritated his body in a less degree. He, however, adopted a dress conformable to his disobedience, being awed by the fear of God; and resisting the erring, the lustful propensity of his flesh (since he had lost his natural disposition and child-like mind, and had come to the knowledge of evil things), he girded a bridle of continence upon himself and his wife, fearing God, and waiting for His coming, and indicating, as it were, some such thing [as follows]: Inasmuch as, he says, I have by disobedience lost that robe of sanctity which I had from the Spirit, I do now also acknowledge that I am deserving of a covering of this nature, which affords no gratification, but which gnaws and frets the body. And he would no doubt have retained this clothing for ever, thus humbling himself, if God, who is merciful, had not clothed them with tunics of skins instead of fig-leaves. For this purpose, too, He interrogates them, that the blame might light upon the woman; and again, He interrogates her, that she might convey the blame to the serpent. For she related what had occurred. “The serpent,” says she, “beguiled me, and I did eat.” 1118 Gen. iii. 13. But He put no question to the serpent; for He knew that he had been the prime mover in the guilty deed; but He pronounced the curse upon him in the first instance, that it might fall upon man with a mitigated rebuke. For God detested him who had led man astray, but by degrees, and little by little, He showed compassion to him who had been beguiled.

6. Wherefore also He drove him out of Paradise, and removed him far from the tree of life, not because He envied him the tree of life, as some venture to assert, but because He pitied him, [and did not desire] that he should continue a sinner for ever, nor that the sin which surrounded him should be immortal, and evil interminable and irremediable. But He set a bound to his [state of] sin, by interposing death, and thus causing sin to cease, 1119 Rom. vi. 7. putting an end to it by the dissolution of the flesh, which should take place in the earth, so that man, ceasing at length to live to sin, and dying to it, might begin to live to God.

7. For this end did He put enmity between the serpent and the woman and her seed, they keeping it up mutually: He, the sole of whose foot should be bitten, having power also to tread upon the enemy's head; but the other biting, killing, and impeding the steps of man, until the seed did come appointed to tread down his head,—which was born of Mary, of whom the prophet speaks: "Thou shalt tread upon the asp and the basilisk; thou shalt trample down the lion and the dragon;" 1120 Ps. xci. 13.—indicating that sin, which was set up and spread out against man, and which rendered him subject to death, should be deprived of its power, along with death, which rules [over men]; and that the lion, that is, antichrist, rampant against mankind in the latter days, should be trampled down by Him; and that He should bind "the dragon, that old serpent" 1121 Rev. xx. 2. and subject him to the power of man, who had been conquered 1122 Luke x. 19. so that all his might should be trodden down. Now Adam had been conquered, all life having been taken away from him: wherefore, when the foe was conquered in his turn, Adam received new life; and the last enemy, death, is destroyed, 1123 1 Cor. xv. 26. which at the first had taken possession of man. Therefore, when man has been liberated, "what is written shall come to pass, Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting?" 1124 1 Cor. xv. 54, 55. This could not be said with justice, if that man, over whom death did first obtain dominion, were not set free. For his salvation is death's destruction. When therefore the Lord vivifies man, that is, Adam, death is at the same time destroyed.

8. All therefore speak falsely who disallow his (Adam's) salvation, shutting themselves out from life for ever, in that they do not believe that the sheep which had perished has been found. 1125 Luke xv. 4. For if it has not been found, the whole human race is still held in a state of perdition. False, therefore, is that man who first started this idea, or rather, this ignorance and blindness—Tatian. 1126 An account of Tatian will be given in a future volume with his only extant work. As I have already indicated, this man entangled himself with all the heretics. 1127 His heresy being just a mixture of the opinions of the various Gnostic sects. This dogma, however, has been invented by himself, in order that, by introducing something new, independently of the rest, and by speaking vanity, he might acquire for himself hearers void of faith, affecting to be esteemed a teacher, and endeavouring from time to time to employ sayings of this kind often [made use of] by Paul: "In Adam we all die;" 1128 1 Cor. xv. 22. ignorant, however, that "where sin abounded, grace did much more abound." 1129 Rom. v. 20. Since this, then, has been clearly shown, let all his disciples be put to shame, and let them wrangle 1130 Though unnoticed by the editors, there seems a difficulty in the different moods of the two verbs, erubescant and concertant. about Adam, as if some great gain were to accrue to them if he be not saved; when they profit nothing more [by that], even as the serpent also did not profit when persuading man [to sin], except to this effect, that he proved him a transgressor, obtaining man as the first-fruits of his own apostasy. 1131 "Initium et materiam apostasiæ suæ habens hominem:" the meaning is very obscure, and the editors throw no light upon it. But he did not know God's power. 1132 Literally, "but he did not see God." The translator is supposed to have read οἶδεν, knew, for εἶδεν, saw. Thus also do those who disallow Adam's salvation gain nothing, except this, that they render themselves heretics and apostates from the truth, and show themselves patrons of the serpent and of death.

Summary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus testifies, “It was necessary, therefore, that the Lord, coming to the lost sheep, and making recapitulation of so comprehensive a dispensation, and seeking after His own handiwork, should save that very man who had been created after His image and likeness, that is, Adam, filling up the times of His condemnation, which had been incurred through disobedience,—[times] “which the Father had placed in His own power,” referring to Acts 1:7, but certainly drawing from Matthew 1:1-17, and Luke 3:23-38. Irenaeus then reasons, “[This was necessary,] too, inasmuch as the whole economy of salvation regarding man came to pass according to the good pleasure of the Father, in order that God might not be conquered, nor His wisdom lessened, [in the estimation of His creatures.]” Irenaeus thus concludes, “For if man, who had been created by God that he might live, after losing life, through being injured by the serpent that had corrupted him, should not any more return to life, but should be utterly [and for ever] abandoned to death, God would [in that case] have been conquered, and the wickedness of the serpent would have prevailed over the will of God.” Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “But inasmuch as God is invincible and long-suffering, He did indeed show Himself to be long-suffering in the matter of the correction of man and the probation of all, as I have already observed; and by means of the second man did He bind the strong man, and spoiled his goods,” referring to Matthew 12:29, “and abolished death, vivifying that man who had been in a state of death.” Irenaeus then explains, “For as the first Adam became a vessel in his (Satan’s) possession, whom he did also hold under his power, that is, by bringing sin on him iniquitously, and under colour of immortality entailing death upon him. For, while promising that they should be as gods, which was in no way possible for him to be, he wrought death in them: wherefore he who had led man captive, was justly captured in his turn by God; but man, who had been led captive, was loosed from the bonds of condemnation.”

In paragraph two, Irenaeus affirms, “But this is Adam, if the truth should be told, the first formed man, of whom the Scripture says that the Lord spake, “Let Us make man after Our own image and likeness,” referring to Genesis 1:26, “and we are all from him: and as we are from him, therefore have we all inherited his title.” Irenaeus then reasons, “But inasmuch as man is saved, it is fitting that he who was created the original man should be saved. For it is too absurd to maintain, that he who was so deeply injured by the enemy, and was the first to suffer captivity, was not rescued by Him who conquered the enemy, but that his children were, — those whom he had begotten in the same captivity.” And Irenaeus adds, “Neither would the enemy appear to be as yet conquered, if the old spoils remained with him.” Irenaeus then explains, “To give an illustration: If a hostile force had overcome certain [enemies], had bound them, and led them away captive, and held them for a long time in servitude, so that they begat children among them; and somebody, compassionating those who had been made slaves, should overcome this same hostile force; he certainly would not act equitably, were he to liberate the children of those who had been led captive, from the sway of those who had enslaved their fathers, but should leave these latter, who had suffered the act of capture, subject to their enemies,—those, too, on whose very account he had proceeded to this retaliation,—the children succeeding to liberty through the avenging of their fathers’ cause, but not so that their fathers, who suffered the act of capture itself, should be left [in bondage].” Irenaeus then affirms, “For God is neither devoid of power nor of justice, who has afforded help to man, and restored him to His own liberty.”

In paragraph three, Irenaeus affirms, “It was for this reason, too, that immediately after Adam had transgressed, as the Scripture relates, He pronounced no curse against Adam personally, but against the ground, in reference to his works, as a certain person among the ancients has observed: “God did indeed transfer the curse to the earth, that it might not remain in man,” referring to Genesis 3:17-18. Irenaeus then affirms. “But man received, as the punishment of his transgression, the toilsome task of tilling the earth, and to eat bread in the sweat of his face, and to return to the dust from whence he was taken,” referring to Genesis 3:19. Irenaeus continues as he affirms, “Similarly also did the woman [receive] toil, and labour, and groans, and the pangs of parturition, and a state of subjection, that is, that she should serve her husband; so that they should neither perish altogether when cursed by God, nor, by remaining unrebuked, should be led to despise God,” referring to Genesis 3:16. Irenaeus continues as he affirms, “But the curse in all its fulness fell upon the serpent, which had beguiled them. “And God,” it is declared, “said to the serpent: Because thou hast done this, cursed art thou above all cattle, and above all the beasts of the earth,” referring to Genesis 3:14-15. Irenaeus then testifies, “And this same thing does the Lord also say in the Gospel, to those who are found upon the left hand: “Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, which my Father hath prepared for the devil and his angels,” referring to Matthew 25:41, “indicating that eternal fire was not originally prepared for man, but for him who beguiled man, and caused him to offend—for him, I say, who is chief of the apostasy, and for those angels who became apostates along with him; which [fire], indeed, they too shall justly feel, who, like him, persevere in works of wickedness, without repentance, and without retracing their steps.”

In paragraph four, Irenaeus affirms, “[These act] as Cain [did, who], when he was counselled by God to keep quiet, because he had not made an equitable division of that share to which his brother was entitled, but with envy and malice thought that he could domineer over him, not only did not acquiesce, but even added sin to sin, indicating his state of mind by his action,” referring to Genesis 4:7. Irenaeus continues as he affirms again, “For what he had planned, that did he also put in practice: he tyrannized over and slew him,” referring to Genesis 4:8. Irenaeus continues as he affirms, “God subjecting the just to the unjust, that the former might be proved as the just one by the things which he suffered, and the latter detected as the unjust by those which he perpetrated. And he was not softened even by this, nor did he stop short with that evil deed; but being asked where his brother was, he said, “I know not; am I my brother’s keeper?” extending and aggravating [his] wickedness by his answer,” referring to Genesis 4:9. Irenaeus continues as he reasons, “For if it is wicked to slay a brother, much worse is it thus insolently and irreverently to reply to the omniscient God as if he could battle Him.” Irenaeus then affirms, “And for this he did himself bear a curse about with him, because he gratuitously brought an offering of sin, having had no reverence for God, nor being put to confusion by the act of fratricide,” referring to Genesis 4:10-24.

In paragraph five, Irenaeus affirms, “The case of Adam, however, had no analogy with this, but was altogether different. For, having been beguiled by another under the pretext of immortality, he is immediately seized with terror, and hides himself; not as if he were able to escape from God; but, in a state of confusion at having transgressed His command, he feels unworthy to appear before and to hold converse with God,” referring to Genesis 3:8. Irenaeus continues as he affirms, “Now, “the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom,” referring to Proverbs 1:7, and Proverbs 9:10; Irenaeus continues as he affirms, “the sense of sin leads to repentance, and God bestows His compassion upon those who are penitent. For [Adam] showed his repentance by his conduct, through means of the girdle [which he used], covering himself with fig-leaves, while there were many other leaves, which would have irritated his body in a less degree. He, however, adopted a dress conformable to his disobedience, being awed by the fear of God; and resisting the erring, the lustful propensity of his flesh (since he had lost his natural disposition and child-like mind, and had come to the knowledge of evil things), he girded a bridle of continence upon himself and his wife, fearing God, and waiting for His coming, and indicating, as it were, some such thing [as follows]: Inasmuch as, he says, I have by disobedience lost that robe of sanctity which I had from the Spirit, I do now also acknowledge that I am deserving of a covering of this nature, which affords no gratification, but which gnaws and frets the body,” referring to Genesis 3:7. Irenaeus then affirms, “And he would no doubt have retained this clothing for ever, thus humbling himself, if God, who is merciful, had not clothed them with tunics of skins instead of fig-leaves,” referring to Genesis 3:21. Irenaeus continues as he affirms, “For this purpose, too, He interrogates them, that the blame might light upon the woman; and again, He interrogates her, that she might convey the blame to the serpent. For she related what had occurred. “The serpent,” says she, “beguiled me, and I did eat,” referring to Genesis 3:9-13. And Irenaeus again affirms, “But He put no question to the serpent; for He knew that he had been the prime mover in the guilty deed; but He pronounced the curse upon him in the first instance, that it might fall upon man with a mitigated rebuke. For God detested him who had led man astray, but by degrees, and little by little, He showed compassion to him who had been beguiled,” referring to Genesis 3:14-15.

In paragraph six, Irenaeus affirms, “Wherefore also He drove him out of Paradise, and removed him far from the tree of life, not because He envied him the tree of life, as some venture to assert, but because He pitied him, [and did not desire] that he should continue a sinner for ever, nor that the sin which surrounded him should be immortal, and evil interminable and irremediable,” referring to Genesis 3:22-24. Irenaeus then testifies, “But He set a bound to his [state of] sin, by interposing death, and thus causing sin to cease,” referring to Romans 6:7, “putting an end to it by the dissolution of the flesh, which should take place in the earth, so that man, ceasing at length to live to sin, and dying to it, might begin to live to God,” referring to Romans 6:11, and Galatians 2:19.

In paragraph seven, Irenaeus affirms, “For this end did He put enmity between the serpent and the woman and her seed,” referring to Genesis 3:15, “they keeping it up mutually: He, the sole of whose foot should be bitten, having power also to tread upon the enemy’s head; but the other biting, killing, and impeding the steps of man, until the seed did come appointed to tread down his head,—which was born of Mary, of whom the prophet speaks: “Thou shalt tread upon the asp and the basilisk; thou shalt trample down the lion and the dragon,” referring to Psalm 91:13, “—indicating that sin, which was set up and spread out against man, and which rendered him subject to death, should be deprived of its power, along with death, which rules [over men]; and that the lion, that is, antichrist, rampant against mankind in the latter days, should be trampled down by Him; and that He should bind “the dragon, that old serpent,” referring to Revelation 20:2, “and subject him to the power of man, who had been conquered so that all his might should be trodden down,” referring to Luke 10:19. Irenaeus then affirms, “Now Adam had been conquered, all life having been taken away from him: wherefore, when the foe was conquered in his turn, Adam received new life; and the last enemy, death, is destroyed,” referring to 1 Corinthians 15:26, “which at the first had taken possession of man.” Irenaeus then testifies, “Therefore, when man has been liberated, “what is written shall come to pass, Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting?” referring to 1 Corinthians 15:54-55. Irenaeus thus concludes as he affirms, “This could not be said with justice, if that man, over whom death did first obtain dominion, were not set free. For his salvation is death’s destruction. When therefore the Lord vivifies man, that is, Adam, death is at the same time destroyed.”

In paragraph eight, Irenaeus testifies, “All therefore speak falsely who disallow his (Adam’s) salvation, shutting themselves out from life for ever, in that they do not believe that the sheep which had perished has been found,” referring to Luke 15:3-7. Irenaeus thus reasons, “For if it has not been found, the whole human race is still held in a state of perdition.” Irenaeus then issues a rebuke as he says, “False, therefore, is that man who first started this idea, or rather, this ignorance and blindness—Tatian. As I have already indicated, this man entangled himself with all the heretics. This dogma, however, has been invented by himself, in order that, by introducing something new, independently of the rest, and by speaking vanity, he might acquire for himself hearers void of faith, affecting to be esteemed a teacher, and endeavouring from time to time to employ sayings of this kind often [made use of] by Paul: “In Adam we all die,” referring to 1 Corinthians 15:22, “ignorant, however, that “where sin abounded, grace did much more abound,” referring to Romans 5:20. Irenaeus continues his rebuke saying, “Since this, then, has been clearly shown, let all his disciples be put to shame, and let them wrangle about Adam, as if some great gain were to accrue to them if he be not saved; when they profit nothing more [by that], even as the serpent also did not profit when persuading man [to sin], except to this effect, that he proved him a transgressor, obtaining man as the first-fruits of his own apostasy. But he did not know God’s power. Thus also do those who disallow Adam’s salvation gain nothing, except this, that they render themselves heretics and apostates from the truth, and show themselves patrons of the serpent and of death.”

Commentary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus testifies, “It was necessary, therefore, that the Lord, coming to the lost sheep, and making recapitulation of so comprehensive a dispensation, and seeking after His own handiwork, should save that very man who had been created after His image and likeness, that is, Adam, filling up the times of His condemnation, which had been incurred through disobedience,—[times] “which the Father had placed in His own power,” referring to Acts 1 (ESV):7 He said to them, “It is not for you to know times or seasons that the Father has fixed by his own authority.

Irenaeus is arguing in this paragraph that Adam was saved from his sin and inherited eternal life. He is certainly drawing from Matthew 1 (ESV):1 The book of the genealogy of Jesus Christ, the son of David, the son of Abraham. 2 Abraham was the father of Isaac, and Isaac the father of Jacob, and Jacob the father of Judah and his brothers.

The Gospel of Matthew lists the genealogy of Jesus Christ back to Abraham. But he could easily have gone to Luke to prove his point, for in Luke he specifically states that Adam is a son of God as we see in Luke 3 (ESV):23 Jesus, when he began his ministry, was about thirty years of age, being the son (as was supposed) of Joseph, the son of Heli.

And in Luke 3 (ESV):34 the son of Jacob, the son of Isaac, the son of Abraham, the son of Terah, the son of Nahor.

And finally in Luke 3 (ESV):38 the son of Enos, the son of Seth, the son of Adam, the son of God.

Irenaeus then reasons, “[This was necessary,] too, inasmuch as the whole economy of salvation regarding man came to pass according to the good pleasure of the Father, in order that God might not be conquered, nor His wisdom lessened, [in the estimation of His creatures.]” Irenaeus thus concludes, “For if man, who had been created by God that he might live, after losing life, through being injured by the serpent that had corrupted him, should not any more return to life, but should be utterly [and for ever] abandoned to death, God would [in that case] have been conquered, and the wickedness of the serpent would have prevailed over the will of God.” Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “But inasmuch as God is invincible and long-suffering, He did indeed show Himself to be long-suffering in the matter of the correction of man and the probation of all, as I have already observed; and by means of the second man did He bind the strong man, and spoiled his goods,” referring to Matthew 12 (ESV):29 Or how can someone enter a strong man's house and plunder his goods, unless he first binds the strong man? Then indeed he may plunder his house.

Irenaeus is very reasonable and logical in making his case for Adam's salvation, but this is already revealed in Luke 3:38 above. And no matter how persuasive his argument, we must always remember that God's ways are not our ways as we read in Isaiah 55 (ESV):8 For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, declares the LORD. 9 For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways and my thoughts than your thoughts.

Irenaeus then finishes his thought as he says, “and abolished death, vivifying that man who had been in a state of death.” Irenaeus' statement reminds us of 1 Corinthians 15 (ESV):45 Thus it is written, “The first man Adam became a living being”; the last Adam became a life-giving spirit. 46 But it is not the spiritual that is first but the natural, and then the spiritual. 47 The first man was from the earth, a man of dust; the second man is from heaven.

And of 2 Timothy 1 (ESV):8 Therefore do not be ashamed of the testimony about our Lord, nor of me his prisoner, but share in suffering for the gospel by the power of God, 9 who saved us and called us to a holy calling, not because of our works but because of his own purpose and grace, which he gave us in Christ Jesus before the ages began, 10 and which now has been manifested through the appearing of our Savior Christ Jesus, who abolished death and brought life and immortality to light through the gospel.

When Irenaeus says that man “had been in a state of death,” he acknowledges the judgment of God upon man because of sin. Scripture describes three forms of death.

- 1) Physical death: Genesis 3 (NASB):19 By the sweat of your face You will eat bread, Till you return to the ground, Because from it you were taken; For you are dust, And to dust you shall return.”
- 2) Spiritual death: Ephesians 2 (NASB):1 And you were dead in your trespasses and sins. Colosians 2 (KJV):13 And you, being dead in your sins and the uncircumcision of your flesh, hath he quickened together with him, having forgiven you all trespasses;
- 3) The Second death: Revelation 2 (NASB):11 'He who has an ear, let him hear what the Spirit says to the churches. He who overcomes will not be hurt by the second death.' Revelation 20 (NASB):6 Blessed and holy is the one who has a part in the first resurrection; over these the second death has no power, but they will be priests of God and of Christ and will reign with Him for a thousand years. Revelation 20 (NASB):14 Then death and Hades were thrown into the lake of fire. This is the second death, the lake of fire.

Irenaeus then explains, “For as the first Adam became a vessel in his (Satan's) possession, whom he did also hold under his power, that is, by bringing sin on him iniquitously, and under colour of immortality entailing death upon him. For, while promising that they should be as gods, which was in no way possible for him to be, he wrought death in them: wherefore he who had led man captive, was justly captured in his turn by God; but man, who had been led captive, was loosed from the bonds of condemnation.” Irenaeus is referring to the serpent's lie in Genesis 3 (Septuagint):5 And the serpent said to the woman, Ye shall not surely die.6 For God knew that in whatever day ye should eat of it your eyes would be opened, and ye would be as gods, knowing good and evil.

And again we read the same verses as in Genesis 3 (ESV):4 But the serpent said to the woman, “You will not surely die. 5 For God knows that when you eat of it your eyes will be opened, and you will be like God, knowing good and evil.”

However, the Scriptures also support his statement that man was held under Satan’s power in Ephesians 2 (ESV):1 And you were dead in the trespasses and sins 2 in which you once walked, following the course of this world, following the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that is now at work in the sons of disobedience— 3 among whom we all once lived in the passions of our flesh, carrying out the desires of the body and the mind, and were by nature children of wrath, like the rest of mankind.

The reason Satan had the power was because the whole human race was under sin as we read in Romans 3 (ESV):9 What then? Are we Jews any better off? No, not at all. For we have already charged that all, both Jews and Greeks, are under sin, 10 as it is written: “None is righteous, no, not one;

And in Galatians 3 (ESV):22 But the Scripture imprisoned everything under sin, so that the promise by faith in Jesus Christ might be given to those who believe.

The Scriptures also support man’s liberation from this tyrant as we read in Hebrews 2 (ESV):14 Since therefore the children share in flesh and blood, he himself likewise partook of the same things, that through death he might destroy the one who has the power of death, that is, the devil, 15 and deliver all those who through fear of death were subject to lifelong slavery.

And the Scriptures also say that man has been loosed from the bonds of condemnation in Romans 8 (ESV):1 There is therefore now no condemnation for those who are in Christ Jesus. 2 For the law of the Spirit of life has set you free in Christ Jesus from the law of sin and death.

In paragraph two, Irenaeus affirms, “But this is Adam, if the truth should be told, the first formed man, of whom the Scripture says that the Lord spake, “Let Us make man after Our own image and likeness,” referring to Genesis 1 (ESV):26 Then God said, “Let us make man in our image, after our likeness. And let them have dominion over the fish of the sea and over the birds of the heavens and over the livestock and over all the earth and over every creeping thing that creeps on the earth.”

And Irenaeus continues as he says, “and we are all from him: and as we are from him, therefore have we all inherited his title.” Irenaeus then reasons, “But inasmuch as man is saved, it is fitting that he who was created the original man should be saved.” For it is too absurd to maintain, that he who was so deeply injured by the enemy, and was the first to suffer captivity, was not rescued by Him who conquered the enemy, but that his children were, —those whom he had begotten in the same captivity.” And Irenaeus adds, “Neither would the enemy appear to be as yet conquered, if the old spoils remained with him.” Irenaeus then explains, “To give an illustration: If a hostile force had overcome certain [enemies], had bound them, and led them away captive, and held them for a long time in servitude, so that they begat children among them; and somebody, compassionating those who had been made slaves, should overcome this same hostile force; he certainly would not act equitably, were he to liberate the children of those who had been led captive, from the sway of those who had enslaved their fathers, but should leave these latter, who had suffered the act of capture, subject to their enemies,—those, too, on whose very account he had proceeded to this retaliation,—the children succeeding to liberty through the avenging of their fathers’ cause, but not so that their fathers, who suffered the act of capture itself, should be left [in bondage].” Irenaeus then affirms, “For God is neither devoid of power nor of justice, who has afforded help to man, and restored him to His own liberty.” Irenaeus is arguing from his own reasoning here. There is just no comment in the Scripture why God saved Adam. We only know that he did from Luke 3 (ESV):38 the son of Enos, the son of Seth, the son of Adam, the son of God.

By pursuing such a long argument from his own reasoning, Irenaeus is setting a precedent for future Church leaders, who will follow this line of defense more and more, and with less and less appeal to the authority of the Scriptures.

In paragraph three, Irenaeus affirms, “It was for this reason, too, that immediately after Adam had transgressed, as the Scripture relates, He pronounced no curse against Adam personally, but against the ground, in reference to his works, as a certain person among the ancients has observed: “God did indeed transfer the curse to the earth, that it might not remain in man,” referring to Genesis 3 (ESV):17 And to Adam he said, “Because you have listened to the voice of your wife and have eaten of the tree of which I commanded you, ‘You shall not eat of it,’ cursed is the ground because of you; in pain you shall eat of it all the days of your life; 18 thorns and thistles it shall bring forth for you; and you shall eat the plants of the field.

Ireneaus then affirms. “But man received, as the punishment of his transgression, the toilsome task of tilling the earth, and to eat bread in the sweat of his face, and to return to the dust from whence he was taken,” referring to Genesis 3 (ESV):19 By the sweat of your face you shall eat bread, till you return to the ground, for out of it you were taken; for you are dust, and to dust you shall return.”

Irenaeus apparently does not see that, although the Lord did not mention it in Genesis, chapter 3, yet man also suffered the curse of sin in his flesh. In Romans, Paul explains that man was sold into bondage to sin when Adam fell, and that sin now dwells in us, that is, in our flesh, as we read in Romans 7 (ESV):14 For we know that the law is spiritual, but I am of the flesh, sold under sin. 15 For I do not understand my own actions. For I do not do what I want, but I do the very thing I hate. 16 Now if I do what I do not want, I agree with the law, that it is good. 17 So now it is no longer I who do it, but sin that dwells within me. 18 For I know that nothing good dwells in me, that is, in my flesh. For I have the desire to do what is right, but not the ability to carry it out. 19 For I do not do the good I want, but the evil I do not want is what I keep on doing. 20 Now if I do what I do not want, it is no longer I who do it, but sin that dwells within me.

If this is the case for one who was saved, much more would this be the case of the unsaved. They are totally under the control of their fleshly sin nature.

Irenaeus then continues as he affirms, “Similarly also did the woman [receive] toil, and labour, and groans, and the pangs of parturition, and a state of subjection, that is, that she should serve her husband; so that they should neither perish altogether when cursed by God, nor, by remaining unrebuked, should be led to despise God,” referring to Genesis 3 (ESV):16 To the woman he said, “I will surely multiply your pain in childbearing; in pain you shall bring forth children. Your desire shall be for your husband, and he shall rule over you.”

Irenaeus continues as he affirms, “But the curse in all its fulness fell upon the serpent, which had beguiled them. “And God,” it is declared, “said to the serpent: Because thou hast done this, cursed art thou above all cattle, and above all the beasts of the earth,” referring in context to Genesis 3 (ESV):14 The LORD God said to the serpent, “Because you have done this, cursed are you above all livestock and above all beasts of the field; on your belly you shall go, and dust you shall eat all the days of your life. 15 I will put enmity between you and the woman, and between your offspring and her offspring; he shall bruise your head, and you shall bruise his heel.”

Irenaeus correctly interprets the curse upon the serpent, who represents Satan. Irenaeus then testifies, “And this same thing does the Lord also say in the Gospel, to those who are found upon the left hand: “Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, which my Father hath prepared for the devil and his angels,” referring to Matthew 25 (ESV):41 “Then he will say to those on his left, ‘Depart from me, you cursed, into the eternal fire prepared for the devil and his angels.

Irenaeus then explains as he continues, “indicating that eternal fire was not originally prepared for man, but for him who beguiled man, and caused him to offend—for him, I say, who is chief of the apostasy, and for those angels who became apostates along with him; which [fire], indeed, they too shall justly feel, who, like him, persevere in works of wickedness, without repentance, and without retracing their steps.” The Scriptures also agree with Irenaeus that without repentance, there is no salvation as we read in Luke 13 (ESV):2 And he answered them, “Do you think that these Galileans were worse sinners than all the other Galileans, because they suffered in this way? 3 No, I tell you; but unless you repent, you will all likewise perish. 4 Or those eighteen on whom the tower in Siloam fell and killed them: do you think that they were worse offenders than all the others who lived in Jerusalem? 5 No, I tell you; but unless you repent, you will all likewise perish.”

In paragraph four, Irenaeus affirms, “[These act] as Cain [did, who], when he was counselled by God to keep quiet, because he had not made an equitable division of that share to which his brother was entitled, but with envy and malice thought that he could domineer over him, not only did not acquiesce, but even added sin to sin, indicating his state of mind by his action,” referring in context to Genesis 4 (Septuagint):1 And Adam knew Eve his wife, and she conceived and brought forth Cain and said, I have gained a man through God. 2 And she again bore his brother Abel. And Abel was a keeper of sheep, but Cain was a tiller of the ground. 3

And it was so after some time that Cain brought of the fruits of the earth a sacrifice to the Lord. 4 And Abel also brought of the first born of his sheep and of his fatlings, and God looked upon Abel and his gifts, 5 but Cain and his sacrifices he regarded not, and Cain was exceedingly sorrowful and his countenance fell. 6 And the Lord God said to Cain, Why art thou become very sorrowful and why is thy countenance fallen? 7 Hast thou not sinned if thou hast brought it rightly, but not rightly divided it? be still, to thee shall be his submission, and thou shalt rule over him.

And again we read verse seven as in Genesis 4 (ESV):7 If you do well, will you not be accepted? And if you do not do well, sin is crouching at the door. Its desire is for you, but you must rule over it.”

Irenaeus continues as he affirms again, “For what he had planned, that did he also put in practice: he tyrannized over and slew him,” referring to Genesis 4 (Septuagint):8 And Cain said to Abel his brother, Let us go out into the plain; and it came to pass that when they were in the plain Cain rose up against Abel his brother, and slew him.

Irenaeus continues as he affirms, “God subjecting the just to the unjust, that the former might be proved as the just one by the things which he suffered, and the latter detected as the unjust by those which he perpetrated. And he was not softened even by this, nor did he stop short with that evil deed; but being asked where his brother was, he said, “I know not; am I my brother’s keeper?” extending and aggravating [his] wickedness by his answer,” referring to Genesis 4 (Septuagint):9 And the Lord God said to Cain, Where is Abel thy brother? and he said, I know not, am I my brother’s keeper?

Irenaeus continues as he reasons, “For if it is wicked to slay a brother, much worse is it thus insolently and irreverently to reply to the omniscient God as if he could battle Him.” Irenaeus then affirms, “And for this he did himself bear a curse about with him, because he gratuitously brought an offering of sin, having had no reverence for God, nor being put to confusion by the act of fratricide,” referring in context to Genesis 4 (Septuagint):10 And the Lord said, What hast thou done? the voice of thy brother’s blood cries to me out of the ground. 11 And now thou art cursed from the earth which has opened her mouth to receive thy brother’s blood from thy hand. 12 When thou tillest the earth, then it shall not continue to give its strength to thee: thou shalt be groaning and trembling on the earth. 13 And Cain said to the Lord God, My crime is too great for me to be forgiven. 14 If thou castest me out this day from the face of the earth, and I shall be hidden from thy presence, and I shall be groaning and trembling upon the earth, then it will be that any one that finds me shall slay me. 15 And the Lord God said to him, Not so, any one that slays Cain shall suffer seven-fold vengeance; and the Lord God set a mark upon Cain that no one that found him might slay him. 16 So Cain went forth from the presence of God and dwelt in the land of Nod over against Edem.

In paragraph five, Irenaeus affirms, “The case of Adam, however, had no analogy with this, but was altogether different. For, having been beguiled by another under the pretext of immortality, he is immediately seized with terror, and hides himself; not as if he were able to escape from God; but, in a state of confusion at having transgressed His command, he feels unworthy to appear before and to hold converse with God,” referring in context to Genesis 3 (ESV):8 And they heard the sound of the LORD God walking in the garden in the cool of the day, and the man and his wife hid themselves from the presence of the LORD God among the trees of the garden.

Now, “the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom,” referring to Proverbs 1 (ESV):7 The fear of the LORD is the beginning of knowledge; fools despise wisdom and instruction.

And to Proverbs 9 (NASB):10 The fear of the LORD is the beginning of wisdom, And the knowledge of the Holy One is understanding.

This insight by Irenaeus is very astute. Cain had no such fear as we saw in his response to the Lord. Irenaeus continues as he affirms, “the sense of sin leads to repentance, and God bestows His compassion upon those who are penitent.” The word “penitent” means “feeling or showing sorrow and regret because you have done something wrong,” according to the Merriam-Webster online dictionary.

Irenaeus continues as he notes, “For [Adam] showed his repentance by his conduct, through means of the girdle [which he used], covering himself with fig-leaves, while there were many other leaves, which would have irritated his body in a less degree. He, however, adopted a dress conformable to his disobedience, being awed by the fear of God; and resisting the erring, the lustful propensity of his flesh (since he had lost his natural disposition and child-like mind, and had come to the knowledge of evil things), he girded a bridle of continence upon himself and his wife, fearing God, and waiting for His coming, and indicating, as it were, some such thing [as follows]: Inasmuch as, he says, I have by disobedience lost that robe of sanctity which I had from the Spirit, I do now also acknowledge that I am deserving of a covering of this nature, which affords no gratification, but which gnaws and frets the body,” referring to Genesis 3 (ESV):7 Then the eyes of both were opened, and they knew that they were naked. And they sewed fig leaves together and made themselves loincloths.

We may assume that Adam was repentant since the Scripture says he was saved in Luke 3:38. However, it is only evident from the Scripture here in Genesis 3:7 that Adam and Eve felt shame for the first time. It is more reasonable to assume that this feeling of shame was what prompted them to cover themselves with fig-leaves, than to assume they chose the fig leaves to irritate their bodies. For all we know, they chose the fig-leaves because they were the largest leaves they could find ready at hand. The Scriptures simply do not comment on this. The Scriptures also mention nothing about Adam’s adopting “a dress conformable to his disobedience,” or “being awed by the fear of God,” nor “resisting the erring, the lustful propensity of his flesh.” We know that Adam did lose “his natural disposition and child-like mind, and had come to the knowledge of evil things,” for this is implied by the Scripture in Genesis 3 (ESV):7 Then the eyes of both were opened, and they knew that they were naked. And they sewed fig leaves together and made themselves loincloths.

Irenaeus then affirms, “And he would no doubt have retained this clothing for ever, thus humbling himself, if God, who is merciful, had not clothed them with tunics of skins instead of fig-leaves,” referring in context to Genesis 3 (ESV):20 The man called his wife's name Eve, because she was the mother of all living. 21 And the LORD God made for Adam and for his wife garments of skins and clothed them.

Again, there is no mention in the Scripture that Adam was humbling himself. The Scripture seems to imply that Adam and Eve felt shame for being uncovered, as any of us would today. Irenaeus is reading into the Scripture more than is actually there. His task of defending the faith against Gnostic heresy is noble, but he is setting precedents in interpretation that the leaders in the early Church will mistake for exegesis when in fact it is eisegesis. Instead of interpreting just what the Scripture says, Irenaeus is at times making the Scripture support his assertions by reading into the text what is not there.

Irenaeus continues as he affirms, “For this purpose, too, He interrogates them, that the blame might light upon the woman; and again, He interrogates her, that she might convey the blame to the serpent. For she related what had occurred. “The serpent,” says she, “beguiled me, and I did eat,” referring to Genesis 3 (ESV):9 But the LORD God called to the man and said to him, “Where are you?” 10 And he said, “I heard the sound of you in the garden, and I was afraid, because I was naked, and I hid myself.” 11 He said, “Who told you that you were naked? Have you eaten of the tree of which I commanded you not to eat?” 12 The man said, “The woman whom you gave to be with me, she gave me fruit of the tree, and I ate.” 13 Then the LORD God said to the woman, “What is this that you have done?” The woman said, “The serpent deceived me, and I ate.”

But God did not interrogate Adam and Eve that the “blame might light upon the woman.” The reason the whole human race is held by death is because of Adam’s sin, for in Adam we all die as Irenaeus himself will tell us shortly.

And Irenaeus again affirms, “But He put no question to the serpent; for He knew that he had been the prime mover in the guilty deed; but He pronounced the curse upon him in the first instance, that it might fall upon man with a mitigated rebuke. For God detested him who had led man astray, but by degrees, and little by little, He showed compassion to him who had been beguiled,” referring again to Genesis 3:14-15.

We know that God did provide a way for man to be saved from his sin. Why God did not provide a way for Satan to be saved from his sin, we are not told.

In paragraph six, Irenaeus affirms, “Wherefore also He drove him out of Paradise, and removed him far from the tree of life, not because He envied him the tree of life, as some venture to assert, but because He pitied him, [and did not desire] that he should continue a sinner for ever, nor that the sin which surrounded him should be immortal, and evil interminable and irremediable,” referring to Genesis 3 (ESV):22 Then the LORD God said, “Behold, the man has become like one of us in knowing good and evil. Now, lest he reach out his hand and take also of the tree of life and eat, and live forever—” 23 therefore the LORD God sent him out from the garden of Eden to work the ground from which he was taken. 24 He drove out the man, and at the east of the garden of Eden he placed the cherubim and a flaming sword that turned every way to guard the way to the tree of life.

Irenaeus then testifies, “But He set a bound to his [state of] sin, by interposing death, and thus causing sin to cease,” referring to Romans 6 (ESV):7 For one who has died has been set free from sin.

Irenaeus continues as he says, “putting an end to it by the dissolution of the flesh, which should take place in the earth, so that man, ceasing at length to live to sin, and dying to it, might begin to live to God,” referring to Romans 6 (ESV):11 So you also must consider yourselves dead to sin and alive to God in Christ Jesus.

And to Galatians 2 (ESV):19 For through the law I died to the law, so that I might live to God.

In paragraph seven, Irenaeus affirms, “For this end did He put enmity between the serpent and the woman and her seed,” referring in context to Genesis 3 (ESV):15 I will put enmity between you and the woman, and between your offspring and her offspring; he shall bruise your head, and you shall bruise his heel.”

Irenaeus then continues as he says, “they keeping it up mutually: He, the sole of whose foot should be bitten, having power also to tread upon the enemy’s head; but the other biting, killing, and impeding the steps of man, until the seed did come appointed to tread down his head,—which was born of Mary, of whom the prophet speaks: “Thou shalt tread upon the asp and the basilisk; thou shalt trample down the lion and the dragon,” referring to Psalms 91 (Septuagint):13 Thou shalt tread on the asp and basilisk: and thou shalt trample on the lion and dragon.

And also as in Psalms 91 (NASB):13 You will tread upon the lion and cobra, The young lion and the serpent you will trample down.

Irenaeus’ words, “but the other biting, killing, and impeding the steps of man, until the seed did come appointed to tread down his head,” reminds us of Jesus’ words in John 10 (ESV):10 The thief comes only to steal and kill and destroy. I came that they may have life and have it abundantly.

And to Peter’s words in 1 Peter 5 (ESV):8 Be sober-minded; be watchful. Your adversary the devil prowls around like a roaring lion, seeking someone to devour.

And Irenaeus continues as he says, “—indicating that sin, which was set up and spread out against man, and which rendered him subject to death, should be deprived of its power, along with death, which rules [over men]; and that the lion, that is, antichrist, rampant against mankind in the latter days, should be trampled down by Him; and that He should bind “the dragon, that old serpent,” referring to Revelation 20 (ESV):2 And he seized the dragon, that ancient serpent, who is the devil and Satan, and bound him for a thousand years.

Irenaeus again continues saying, “and subject him to the power of man, who had been conquered so that all his might should be trodden down,” referring to Luke 10 (ESV):19 Behold, I have given you authority to tread on serpents and scorpions, and over all the power of the enemy, and nothing shall hurt you.

Irenaeus then affirms, “Now Adam had been conquered, all life having been taken away from him: wherefore, when the foe was conquered in his turn, Adam received new life; and the last enemy, death, is destroyed,” referring to 1 Corinthians 15 (ESV):26 The last enemy to be destroyed is death.

And Irenaeus finishes his thought saying, “which at the first had taken possession of man.” Irenaeus then testifies, “Therefore, when man has been liberated, “what is written shall come to pass, Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting?” referring to 1 Corinthians 15 (ESV):54 When the perishable puts on the imperishable, and the mortal puts on immortality, then shall come to pass the saying that is written: “Death is swallowed up in victory.” 55 “O death, where is your victory? O death, where is your sting?”

Irenaeus thus concludes as he affirms, “This could not be said with justice, if that man, over whom death did first obtain dominion, were not set free. For his salvation is death’s destruction. When therefore the Lord vivifies man, that is, Adam, death is at the same time destroyed.”

In paragraph eight, Irenaeus testifies, “All therefore speak falsely who disallow his (Adam’s) salvation, shutting themselves out from life for ever, in that they do not believe that the sheep which had perished has been found,” referring to Luke 15 (ESV):3 So he told them this parable: 4 “What man of you, having a hundred sheep, if he has lost one of them, does not leave the ninety-nine in the open country, and go after the one that is lost, until he finds it? 5 And when he has found it, he lays it on his shoulders, rejoicing. 6 And when he comes home, he calls together his friends and his neighbors, saying to them, ‘Rejoice with me, for I have found my sheep that was lost.’ 7 Just so, I tell you, there will be more joy in heaven over one sinner who repents than over ninety-nine righteous persons who need no repentance.

Irenaeus thus reasons, “For if it has not been found, the whole human race is still held in a state of perdition.” Irenaeus then issues a rebuke as he says, “False, therefore, is that man who first started this idea, or rather, this ignorance and blindness—Tatian. As I have already indicated, this man entangled himself with all the heretics. This dogma, however, has been invented by himself, in order that, by introducing something new, independently of the rest, and by speaking vanity, he might acquire for himself hearers void of faith, affecting to be esteemed a teacher, and endeavouring from time to time to employ sayings of this kind often [made use of] by Paul: “In Adam we all die,” referring in context to 1 Corinthians 15 (ESV):22 For as in Adam all die, so also in Christ shall all be made alive.

Irenaeus finishes saying, “ignorant, however, that “where sin abounded, grace did much more abound,” referring to Romans 5 (ESV):20 Now the law came in to increase the trespass, but where sin increased, grace abounded all the more.

Irenaeus continues his rebuke saying, “Since this, then, has been clearly shown, let all his disciples be put to shame, and let them wrangle about Adam, as if some great gain were to accrue to them if he be not saved; when they profit nothing more [by that], even as the serpent also did not profit when persuading man [to sin], except to this effect, that he proved him a transgressor, obtaining man as the first-fruits of his own apostasy. But he did not know God’s power. Thus also do those who disallow Adam’s salvation gain nothing, except this, that they render themselves heretics and apostates from the truth, and show themselves patrons of the serpent and of death.”

Irenaeus is a little harsh here, disallowing salvation to someone who did not think Adam was saved. Whether we think Adam was saved or not is not important to our own salvation. What is important is that we believe in Jesus Christ and confess Him as our Lord. If we do this we will be saved as Paul says in Romans 10 (ESV):8 But what does it say? “The word is near you, in your mouth and in your heart” (that is, the word of faith that we proclaim); 9 because, if you confess with your mouth that Jesus is Lord and believe in your heart that God raised him from the dead, you will be saved. 10 For with the heart one believes and is justified, and with the mouth one confesses and is saved.

Book 4: Chapter XXXVIII.—Why man was not made perfect from the beginning.

1. If, however, any one say, “What then? Could not God have exhibited man as perfect from beginning?” let him know that, inasmuch as God is indeed always the same and unbegotten as respects Himself, all things are possible to Him. But created things must be inferior to Him who created them, from the very fact of their later origin; for it was not possible for things recently created to have been uncreated. But inasmuch as they are not uncreated, for this very reason do they come short of the perfect. Because, as these things are of later date, so are they infantile; so are they unaccustomed to, and unexercised in, perfect discipline. For as it certainly is in the power of a mother to give strong food to her infant, [but she does not do so], as the child is not yet able to receive more substantial nourishment; so also it was possible for God Himself to have made man perfect from the first, but man could not receive this [perfection], being as yet an infant. And for this cause our Lord in these last times, when He had summed up all things into Himself, came to us, not as He might have come, but as we were capable of beholding Him. He might easily have come to us in His immortal glory, but in that case we could never have endured the greatness of the glory; and therefore it was that He, who was the perfect bread of the Father, offered Himself to us as milk, [because we were] as infants. He did this when He appeared as a man, that we, being nourished, as it were, from the breast of His flesh, and having, by such a course of milk nourishment, become accustomed to eat and drink the Word of God, may be able also to contain in ourselves the Bread of immortality, which is the Spirit of the Father.

2. And on this account does Paul declare to the Corinthians, “I have fed you with milk, not with meat, for hitherto ye were not able to bear it.” 4417 1 Cor. iii. 2. That is, ye have indeed learned the advent of our Lord as a man; nevertheless, because of your infirmity, the Spirit of the Father has not as yet rested upon you. “For when envying and strife,” he says, “and dissensions are among you, are ye not carnal, and walk as men?" 4418 1 Cor. iii. 3. That is, that the Spirit of the Father was not yet with them, on account of their imperfection and shortcomings of their walk in life. As, therefore, the apostle had the power to give them strong meat—for those upon whom the apostles laid hands received the Holy Spirit, who is the food of life [eternal] —but they were not capable of receiving it, because they had the sentient faculties of the soul still feeble and undisciplined in the practice of things pertaining to God; so, in like manner, God had power at the beginning to grant perfection to man; but as the latter was only recently created, he could not possibly have received it, or even if he had received it, could he have contained it, or containing it, could he have retained it. It was for this reason that the Son of God, although He was perfect, passed through the state of infancy in common with the rest of mankind, partaking of it thus not for His own benefit, but for that of the infantile stage of man's existence, in order that man might be able to receive Him. There was nothing, therefore, impossible to and deficient in God, [implied in the fact] that man was not an uncreated being; but this merely applied to him who was lately created, [namely] man.

3. With God there are simultaneously exhibited power, wisdom, and goodness. His power and goodness [appear] in this, that of His own will He called into being and fashioned things having no previous existence; His wisdom [is shown] in His having made created things parts of one harmonious and consistent whole; and those things which, through His super-eminent kindness, receive growth and a long period of existence, do reflect the glory of the uncreated One, of that God who bestows what is good ungrudgingly. For from the very fact of these things having been created, [it follows] that they are not uncreated; but by their continuing in being throughout a long course of ages, they shall receive a faculty of the Uncreated, through the gratuitous bestowal of eternal existence upon them by God. And thus in all things God has the preeminence, who alone is uncreated, the first of all things, and the primary cause of the existence of all, while all other things remain under God's subjection. But being in subjection to God is continuance in immortality, and immortality is the glory of the uncreated One. By this arrangement, therefore, and these harmonies, and a sequence of this nature, man, a created and organized being, is rendered after the image and likeness of the uncreated God,—the Father planning everything well and giving His commands, the Son carrying these into execution and performing the work of creating, and the Spirit nourishing and increasing [what is made], but man making progress day by day, and ascending towards the perfect, that is, approximating to the uncreated One. For the Uncreated is perfect, that is, God. Now it was necessary that man should in the first instance be created; and having been created, should receive growth; and having received growth, should be strengthened; and having been strengthened, should abound; and having abounded, should recover [from the disease of sin]; and having recovered, should be glorified; and being glorified, should see his Lord. For God is He who is yet to be seen, and the beholding of God is productive of immortality, but immortality renders one nigh unto God.

4. Irrational, therefore, in every respect, are they who await not the time of increase, but ascribe to God the infirmity of their nature. Such persons know neither God nor themselves, being insatiable and ungrateful, unwilling to be at the outset what they have also been created—men subject to passions; but go beyond the law of the human race, and before that they become men, they wish to be even now like God their Creator, and they who are more destitute of reason than dumb animals [insist] that there is no distinction between the uncreated God and man, a creature of to-day. For these, [the dumb animals], bring no charge against God for not having made them men; but each one, just as he has been created, gives thanks that he has been created. For we cast blame upon Him, because we have not been made gods from the beginning, but at first merely men, then at length gods; although God has adopted this course out of His pure benevolence, that no one may impute to Him invidiousness or grudgingness. He declares, "I have said, Ye are gods; and ye are all sons of the Highest. But since we could not sustain the power of divinity, He adds, "But ye shall die like men," setting forth both truths—the kindness of His free gift, and our weakness, and also that we were possessed of power over ourselves. For after His great kindness He graciously conferred good [upon us], and made men like to Himself, [that is] in their own power; while at the same time by His prescience He knew the infirmity of human beings, and the consequences which would flow from it; but through [His] love and [His] power, He shall overcome the substance of created nature. For it was necessary, at first, that nature should be exhibited; then, after that, that what was mortal should be conquered and swallowed up by immortality, and the corruptible by incorruptibility, and that man should be made after the image and likeness of God, having received the knowledge of good and evil.

Summary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus asks “If, however, any one say, “What then? Could not God have exhibited man as perfect from beginning?” let him know that, inasmuch as God is indeed always the same and unbegotten as respects Himself, all things are possible to Him.” Irenaeus then argues point by point:

- “But created things must be inferior to Him who created them, from the very fact of their later origin;
- for it was not possible for things recently created to have been uncreated.
- But inasmuch as they are not uncreated, for this very reason do they come short of the perfect.
- Because, as these things are of later date, so are they infantile; so are they unaccustomed to, and unexercised in, perfect discipline.
- For as it certainly is in the power of a mother to give strong food to her infant, [but she does not do so], as the child is not yet able to receive more substantial nourishment; so also it was possible for God Himself to have made man perfect from the first, but man could not receive this [perfection], being as yet an infant.
- And for this cause our Lord in these last times, when He had summed up all things into Himself, came to us, not as He might have come, but as we were capable of beholding Him.
- He might easily have come to us in His immortal glory, but in that case we could never have endured the greatness of the glory;
- and therefore it was that He, who was the perfect bread of the Father, offered Himself to us as milk, [because we were] as infants.
- He did this when He appeared as a man, that we, being nourished, as it were, from the breast of His flesh, and having, by such a course of milk nourishment, become accustomed to eat and drink the Word of God, may be able also to contain in ourselves the Bread of immortality, which is the Spirit of the Father.”

In paragraph two, Irenaeus testifies, “And on this account does Paul declare to the Corinthians, “I have fed you with milk, not with meat, for hitherto ye were not able to bear it,” referring to 1 Corinthians 3:2. Irenaeus then explains what he means as he says, “That is, ye have indeed learned the advent of our Lord as a man; nevertheless, because of your infirmity, the Spirit of the Father has not as yet rested upon you. “For when envying and strife,” he says, “and dissensions are among you, are ye not carnal, and walk as men?” referring to 1 Corinthians 3:3. Again, Irenaeus asserts, “That is, that the Spirit of the Father was not yet with them, on account of their imperfection and shortcomings of their walk in life.” Irenaeus then asserts, “As, therefore, the apostle had the power to give them strong meat—for those upon whom the apostles laid hands received the Holy Spirit, who is the food of life [eternal]—but they were not capable of receiving it, because they had the sentient faculties of the soul still feeble and undisciplined in the practice of things pertaining to God; so, in like manner, God had power at the beginning to grant perfection to man; but as the latter was only recently created, he could not possibly have received it, or even if he had received it, could he have contained it, or containing it, could he have retained it.” Irenaeus again asserts that, “It was for this reason that the Son of God, although He was perfect, passed through the state of infancy in common with the rest of mankind, partaking of it thus not for His own benefit, but for that of the infantile stage of man’s existence, in order that man might be able to receive Him.” Irenaeus then affirms, “There was nothing, therefore, impossible to and deficient in God, [implied in the fact] that man was not an uncreated being; but this merely applied to him who was lately created, [namely] man.”

In paragraph three, Irenaeus affirms, “With God there are simultaneously exhibited power, wisdom, and goodness.” Irenaeus then reasons, “His power and goodness [appear] in this, that of His own will He called into being and fashioned things having no previous existence; His wisdom [is shown] in His having made created things parts of one harmonious and consistent whole; and those things which, through His super-eminent kindness, receive growth and a long period of existence, do reflect the glory of the uncreated One, of that God who bestows what is good ungrudgingly.” Irenaeus then argues, “For from the very fact of these things having been created, [it follows] that they are not uncreated; but by their continuing in being throughout a long course of ages, they shall receive a faculty of the Uncreated, through the gratuitous bestowal of eternal existence upon them by God.” Irenaeus then affirms, “And thus in all things God has the preeminence, who alone is uncreated, the first of all things, and the primary cause of the existence of all, while all other things remain under God’s subjection.” Irenaeus then affirms, “But being in subjection to God is continuance in immortality, and immortality is the glory of the uncreated One. For the Uncreated is perfect, that is, God.” Irenaeus continues as he then reasons, “Now it was necessary that man should in the first instance be created; and having been created, should receive growth; and having received growth, should be strengthened; and having been strengthened, should abound; and having abounded, should recover [from the disease of sin]; and having recovered, should be glorified; and being glorified, should see his Lord. For God is He who is yet to be seen, and the beholding of God is productive of immortality, but immortality renders one nigh unto God.”

In paragraph four, Irenaeus chides the Gnostics as he says, “Irrational, therefore, in every respect, are they who await not the time of increase, but ascribe to God the infirmity of their nature.” Irenaeus then testifies, “Such persons know neither God nor themselves, being insatiable and ungrateful, unwilling to be at the outset what they have also been created—men subject to passions; but go beyond the law of the human race, and before that they become men, they wish to be even now like God their Creator, and they who are more destitute of reason than dumb animals [insist] that there is no distinction between the uncreated God and man, a creature of to-day.” Irenaeus then explains, “For these, [the dumb animals], bring no charge against God for not having made them men; but each one, just as he has been created, gives thanks that he has been created. For we cast blame upon Him, because we have not been made gods from the beginning, but at first merely men, then at length gods; although God has adopted this course out of His pure benevolence, that no one may impute to Him invidiousness or grudgingness.” Irenaeus then affirms, “He declares, “I have said, Ye are gods; and ye are all sons of the Highest,” referring to Psalm 82:6. Irenaeus then continues as he affirms, “But since we could not sustain the power of divinity, He adds, “But ye shall die like men,” setting forth both truths—the kindness of His free gift, and our weakness, and also that we were possessed of power over ourselves, referring to Psalm 82:6. Irenaeus continues as he then affirms, “For after His great kindness He graciously conferred good [upon us], and made men like to Himself, [that is] in their own power; while at the same time by His prescience He knew the infirmity of human beings, and the consequences which would flow from it; but through [His] love and [His] power, He shall overcome the substance of created nature.” Irenaeus then reasons, “For it was necessary, at first, that nature should be exhibited; then, after that, that what was mortal should be conquered and swallowed up by immortality, and the corruptible by incorruptibility, and that man should be made after the image and likeness of God, having received the knowledge of good and evil.”

Commentary: Before we comment on this section, we should understand that Irenaeus is continuing his explanation of why God gave man free will from the previous chapter, that is, Book 4: Chapter XXXVII. We will look at free will and chapter, Book 4: Chapter XXXVII, later in Chapter 30: Free Will. However, to understand this chapter, Book 4: Chapter XXXVIII, of Irenaeus’ writing, I will summarize the previous chapter, Book 4: Chapter XXXVII, as it relates here.

Irenaeus states in paragraph five of the previous chapter, Book 4: Chapter XXXVII, that man has free will as he says, “And not merely in works, but also in faith, has God preserved the will of man free and under his own control, saying, “According to thy faith be it unto thee;” thus showing that there is a faith specially belonging to man, since he has an opinion specially his own.” In this section however, we are focusing on the nature of man. Certainly the will is part of this nature.

Again, in paragraph six of the previous Chapter XXXVII, in Book 4, Irenaeus provides us with the foundation for this chapter, Chapter XXXVIII, as he says, “Those, again, who maintain the opposite to these [conclusions], do themselves present the Lord as destitute of power, as if, forsooth, He were unable to accomplish what He willed; or, on the other hand, as being ignorant that they were by nature “material,” as these men express it, and such as cannot receive His immortality. “But He should not,” say they, “have created angels of such a nature that they were capable of transgression, nor men who immediately proved ungrateful towards Him; for they were made rational beings, endowed with the power of examining and judging, and were not [formed] as things irrational or of a [merely] animal nature, which can do nothing of their own will, but are drawn by necessity and compulsion to what is good, in which things there is one mind and one usage, working mechanically in one groove (inflexibiles et sine iudicio), who are incapable of being anything else except just what they had been created.””

We will see that Irenaeus continues his argument for free will here in Book 4: Chapter XXXVIII by giving us some explanation of man’s state, or his nature.

In paragraph one then of this chapter, Book 4: Chapter XXXVIII, Irenaeus begins by defending the Church against the heresy of the Gnostics who were asking why God just didn’t create man perfect from the beginning. Irenaeus thus begins by asking, “If, however, any one say, “What then? Could not God have exhibited man as perfect from beginning?” let him know that, inasmuch as God is indeed always the same and unbegotten as respects Himself, all things are possible to Him.” Irenaeus then argues point by point.

Irenaeus first asserts, “But created things must be inferior to Him who created them, from the very fact of their later origin;” He then argues, “for it was not possible for things recently created to have been uncreated.” Of course, if God could create, He could uncreate. With Him all things are possible, as Irenaeus says. But to Irenaeus’ point, created things cannot uncreate themselves.

Irenaeus pursues his point as he argues, “But inasmuch as they are not uncreated, for this very reason do they come short of the perfect.” The reason is, he asserts, “Because, as these things are of later date, so are they infantile; so are they unaccustomed to, and unexercised in, perfect discipline. “Irenaeus then reasons, “For as it certainly is in the power of a mother to give strong food to her infant, [but she does not do so], as the child is not yet able to receive more substantial nourishment; so also it was possible for God Himself to have made man perfect from the first, but man could not receive this [perfection], being as yet an infant.”

Irenaeus then asserts, “And for this cause our Lord in these last times, when He had summed up all things into Himself, came to us, not as He might have come, but as we were capable of beholding Him.” Again Irenaeus argues, “He might easily have come to us in His immortal glory, but in that case we could never have endured the greatness of the glory;” And again Irenaeus reasons, “and therefore it was that He, who was the perfect bread of the Father, offered Himself to us as milk, [because we were] as infants.” Irenaeus then explains that, “He did this when He appeared as a man, that we, being nourished, as it were, from the breast of His flesh, and having, by such a course of milk nourishment, become accustomed to eat and drink the Word of God, may be able also to contain in ourselves the Bread of immortality, which is the Spirit of the Father.”

However, the Scriptures say that the reason Jesus had to come to us as a man was because He had to be a kinsmen to redeem us as we read in Leviticus 25 (NASB):47 ‘Now if the means of a stranger or of a sojourner with you becomes sufficient, and a countryman of yours becomes so poor with regard to him as to sell himself to a stranger who is sojourning with you, or to the descendants of a stranger’s family, 48 then he shall have redemption right after he has been sold. One of his brothers may redeem him, 49 or his uncle, or his uncle’s son, may redeem him, or one of his blood relatives from his family may redeem him; or if he prospers, he may redeem himself.

Also, Christ had to be made like His brethren in order to be a merciful and faithful high priest for us as stated in Hebrews 2 (KJV):14 Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same; that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil; 15 And deliver them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage. 16 For verily he took not on him the nature of angels; but he took on him the seed of Abraham. 17 Wherefore in all things it behoved him to be made like unto his brethren, that he might be a merciful and faithful high priest in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people. 18 For in that he himself hath suffered being tempted, he is able to succour them that are tempted.

Nothing is said in the Scriptures about man needing to be “nourished, as it were, from the breast of His flesh, and having, by such a course of milk nourishment, become accustomed to eat and drink the Word of God, may be able also to contain in ourselves the Bread of immortality, which is the Spirit of the Father.” This is evidently an invention of Irenaeus to combat the Gnostic heresy. However, Jesus said it is the truth that sets us free.

To summarize, Irenaeus here in his argument in paragraph one is asserting that the Lord “came to us, not as He might have come, but as we were capable of beholding Him.” That is, the Lord came as a man, in the flesh. For if the Lord came in “His immortal glory,” we “could never have endured the greatness of the glory,” Irenaeus argues. And so coming in the flesh, Irenaeus argues that Jesus “offered Himself to us as milk.” Though Jesus was “the perfect bread of the Father,” He nourished us “from the breast of His flesh” so that “by such a course of milk nourishment” we might “become accustomed to eat and drink the Word of God,” Irenaeus explains. And all of this was just so that we “may be able also to contain in ourselves the Bread of immortality, which is the Spirit of the Father.” And Irenaeus thus concludes, “for this cause our Lord in these last times, when He had summed up all things into Himself, came to us,” that He might prepare us for the strong meat, that is, the Spirit of the Father.”

However, the Spirit of the Father is not referred to in the Scriptures as “the Bread of immortality” or “strong meat,” and Jesus’ flesh is never spoken of as milk in the Scriptures. Rather, Jesus’ flesh is spoken of as the life of the world, the Bread of God. Let us look at what the apostle John actually recorded Jesus as saying as we begin reading in John 6 (KJV):33 For the bread of God is he which cometh down from heaven, and giveth life unto the world.

Jesus continues and He tells us He is the bread of life as we read in John 6 (KJV): 35 And Jesus said unto them, I am the bread of life: he that cometh to me shall never hunger; and he that believeth on me shall never thirst.

Again, Jesus explains as we read in John 6 (KJV):48 I am that bread of life. 49 Your fathers did eat manna in the wilderness, and are dead. 50 This is the bread which cometh down from heaven, that a man may eat thereof, and not die. 51 I am the living bread which came down from heaven: if any man eat of this bread, he shall live for ever: and the bread that I will give is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the world

The Spirit is spoken of as living water as we read in John 7 (NASB):38 "He who believes in Me, as the Scripture said, 'From his innermost being will flow rivers of living water.'" 39 But this He spoke of the Spirit, whom those who believed in Him were to receive; for the Spirit was not yet given, because Jesus was not yet glorified.

Irenaeus is mixing up his metaphors. At this point we might wonder what Irenaeus thought the Old Testament saints did to “become accustomed to eat and drink the Word of God,” since they did not have Jesus in the flesh to empower them in this. Yet they wrote all forty-nine books of the Old Testament! Now all that Irenaeus has said in paragraph one is preparation for what he will conclude in paragraph two.

In paragraph two, he says, “And on this account does Paul declare to the Corinthians, “I have fed you with milk, not with meat, for hitherto ye were not able to bear it,” referring to 1 Corinthians 3 (KJV):2 I have fed you with milk, and not with meat: for hitherto ye were not able to bear it, neither yet now are ye able.

Irenaeus then explains to us what he means by milk as he says, “That is, ye have indeed learned the advent of our Lord as a man;” In other words, as Irenaeus explained in paragraph one, the Corinthians had been “nourished, as it were, from the breast of His flesh, and having, by such a course of milk nourishment, become accustomed to eat and drink the Word of God.”

Irenaeus then continues in paragraph asserting, “nevertheless, because of your infirmity, the Spirit of the Father has not as yet rested upon you. “For when envying and strife,” he says, “and dissensions are among you, are ye not carnal, and walk as men?,” referring to 1 Corinthians 3 (KJV):3 For ye are yet carnal: for whereas there is among you envying, and strife, and divisions, are ye not carnal, and walk as men?

So according to Irenaeus, the Corinthians did not have the strong meat of the Spirit yet because they were yet carnal. Irenaeus is asserting here that because Paul in this verse called the Corinthians carnal, or still fleshly, that they did not have the Spirit of God resting on them. Irenaeus then continues by explaining, “That is, that the Spirit of the Father was not yet with them, on account of their imperfection and shortcomings of their walk in life.” And Irenaeus then asserts, “As, therefore, the apostle had the power to give them strong meat—for those upon whom the apostles laid hands received the Holy Spirit, who is the food of life [eternal] —but they were not capable of receiving it, because they had the sentient faculties of the soul still feeble and undisciplined in the practice of things pertaining to God; so, in like manner, God had power at the beginning to grant perfection to man; but as the latter was only recently created, he could not possibly have received it, or even if he had received it, could he have contained it, or containing it, could he have retained it.”

Irenaeus is arguing that the Corinthians were not capable of receiving the Spirit “because they had the sentient faculties of the soul still feeble and undisciplined in the practice of things pertaining to God,” and also that this was because man was but recently created, and “he could not possibly have received it, or even if he had received it, could he have contained it, or containing it, could he have retained it.”

But do the Scriptures tell us that the Corinthians had not received the Spirit of God? Do the Scriptures tell us that we have to be perfect with no “imperfection and shortcomings” of our “walk in life” in order to receive the Holy Spirit? Do the “sentient faculties” of our soul really have to be disciplined “in the practice of things pertaining to God” in order to receive the Holy Spirit, or having received Him, do we have to be perfect to contain Him and retain Him? We will answer these questions shortly.

Irenaeus then concludes paragraph two by asserting, “It was for this reason that the Son of God, although He was perfect, passed through the state of infancy in common with the rest of mankind, partaking of it thus not for His own benefit, but for that of the infantile stage of man’s existence, in order that man might be able to receive Him. There was nothing, therefore, impossible to and deficient in God, [implied in the fact] that man was not an uncreated being; but this merely applied to him who was lately created, [namely] man.”

So Irenaeus is saying that God became a man in order that man might be able to receive Him. Irenaeus is really arguing against the Gnostics who claimed that God was defective or deficient because He created man who is imperfect. They also claimed that Christ did not really come in the flesh, but only appeared to be a man. So Irenaeus then admits in his argument that man was deficient, but argues that there was nothing “impossible to and deficient in God,” because of this. Yet, in his arguing, Irenaeus seems to expect some perfection in man in order for him to receive the Holy Spirit. Again, we will deal with this shortly.

Now in paragraph three, Irenaeus calls out God’s great power saying, “With God there are simultaneously exhibited power, wisdom, and goodness. His power and goodness [appear] in this, that of His own will He called into being and fashioned things having no previous existence; His wisdom [is shown] in His having made created things parts of one harmonious and consistent whole;” All this is true of God without question. Irenaeus continues as he adds, “and those things which, through His super-eminent kindness, receive growth and a long period of existence, do reflect the glory of the uncreated One, of that God who bestows what is good ungrudgingly.” It is hard to argue with this statement as well, except that Irenaeus does not apply any condition to its fulfillment. He simply states it as a truth. He continues as he says, “For from the very fact of these things having been created, [it follows] that they are not uncreated; but by their continuing in being throughout a long course of ages, they shall receive a faculty of the Uncreated, through the gratuitous bestowal of eternal existence upon them by God.” Again, Irenaeus offers no condition for this to be so. He just makes a general statement of truth as he sees it. Irenaeus then affirms, “And thus in all things God has the preeminence, who alone is uncreated, the first of all things, and the primary cause of the existence of all, while all other things remain under God’s subjection.” It is true that God has preeminence in all things, and He alone is uncreated, and He is the first of all things, and “the primary cause of the existence of all, while all other things remain under God’s subjection.” All things do “remain under God’s subjection” of course, and Irenaeus does well to point this out. God is in control.

Irenaeus then affirms, “But being in subjection to God is continuance in immortality, and immortality is the glory of the uncreated One. For the Uncreated is perfect, that is, God.” The Scripture does say that everything exists by the permissive will of God, and God upholds all things by the word of His power in Hebrews 1 (KJV): 1 God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, 2 Hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds; 3 Who being the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person, and upholding all things by the word of his power, when he had by himself purged our sins, sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high: 4 Being made so much better than the angels, as he hath by inheritance obtained a more excellent name than they.

But Irenaeus does not refer to this. He only states a general truth as he sees it that “being in subjection to God is continuance in immortality, and immortality is the glory of the uncreated One.” Irenaeus does not tell us here how we must be subject to God. Nevertheless, Irenaeus pursues his point, as he says in context, “By this arrangement, therefore, and these harmonies, and a sequence of this nature, man, a created and organized being, is rendered after the image and likeness of the uncreated God,—the Father planning everything well and giving His commands, the Son carrying these into execution and performing the work of creating, and the Spirit nourishing and increasing [what is made], but man making progress day by day, and ascending towards the perfect, that is, approximating to the uncreated One. For the Uncreated is perfect, that is, God.”

However, man is not “rendered after the image and likeness of the uncreated God” by just “continuing in being throughout a long course of ages.” Neither is he “in subjection to God” unless he by faith accepts Jesus Christ as his Lord and Savior. Neither is man “making progress day by day, and ascending towards the perfect, that is, approximating to the uncreated One,” unless he has made this commitment to Jesus Christ as the Lord of his life. We must repent, as Irenaeus well knew, and believe in His Son Jesus Christ as Jesus Himself taught in Mark 1 (KJV):14 Now after that John was put in prison, Jesus came into Galilee, preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God, 15 And saying, The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand: repent ye, and believe the gospel.

This is the good news of the Gospel, and the starting point. Once we come to Christ by faith, we begin a walk with God as His sons and daughters, and He progressively sanctifies us in our soul, that is, our mind, our will, our emotions, and our conscience. And we are changed from glory to glory. This is a work of the Holy Spirit in the believer’s life.

Yet Irenaeus continues as he says, “Now it was necessary that man should in the first instance be created; and having been created, should receive growth; and having received growth, should be strengthened; and having been strengthened, should abound; and having abounded, should recover [from the disease of sin]; and having recovered, should be glorified; and being glorified, should see his Lord.” However, Irenaeus again does not qualify his statements. This leaves the door open for a legalistic interpretation. Did Irenaeus mean by “recover” that man would somehow through obedience to God’s commands, become sinless and and perfect and therefore merit eternal life? The Scriptures do not say that man recovers from his sin by receiving growth, and then being strengthened, abound, and “having abounded,” he recovers “[from the disease of sin], and having recovered, should be glorified; and being glorified, should see his Lord.” This is an invention of Irenaeus to combat the Gnostic heresy that God had to be deficient because He created man imperfect. There is only one way to recover from our sin, and that is through faith in Jesus Christ. For Irenaeus to leave this condition out shows us that the Church in his time had fallen into legalism. We will see more evidence of this when we look at free will in Chapter 30.

Irenaeus continues by saying, ”For God is He who is yet to be seen, and the beholding of God is productive of immortality, but immortality renders one nigh unto God.” It is true that God is yet to be seen by us who have believed and are still on earth, and John tells us that when we see Him we will be like Him in 1 John 3 (KJV):2 Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is.

But immortality, or eternal life, is not something that we receive by growing and advancing to such a state of perfection that we see God, and are then rendered immortal. Eternal life is given to all who believe in Jesus Christ. Jesus said that the one who believed in Him had passed out of death and into life as in John 5 (KJV):24 Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation; but is passed from death unto life.

The one who has not believed in Him has been judged already as John tells us in John 3 (KJV):18 He that believeth on him is not condemned: but he that believeth not is condemned already, because he hath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God.

Believing in Jesus Christ is our only hope.

Continuing in paragraph four, we see that Irenaeus rightly rebukes those who pretend to be God or godlike as he says, “Irrational, therefore, in every respect, are they who await not the time of increase, but ascribe to God the infirmity of their nature.” In other words, the Gnostics said that God was defective. Irenaeus continues as he says, “Such persons know neither God nor themselves, being insatiable and ungrateful, unwilling to be at the outset what they have also been created—men subject to passions; but go beyond the law of the human race, and before that they become men, they wish to be even now like God their Creator, and they who are more destitute of reason than dumb animals [insist] that there is no distinction between the uncreated

God and man, a creature of to-day.” Irenaeus then explains, “For these, [the dumb animals], bring no charge against God for not having made them men; but each one, just as he has been created, gives thanks that he has been created. For we cast blame upon Him, because we have not been made gods from the beginning, but at first merely men, then at length gods; although God has adopted this course out of His pure benevolence, that no one may impute to Him invidiousness or grudgingness.” Irenaeus then affirms, “He declares, “I have said, Ye are gods; and ye are all sons of the Highest,” referring to Psalms 82 (KJV):6 I have said, Ye are gods; and all of you are children of the most High. 7 But ye shall die like men, and fall like one of the princes.

Irenaeus then adds, “But since we could not sustain the power of divinity, He adds, “But ye shall die like men,” setting forth both truths—the kindness of His free gift, and our weakness, and also that we were possessed of power over ourselves.” Irenaeus then explains that God knew what He was doing all along as he says, “For after His great kindness He graciously conferred good [upon us], and made men like to Himself, [that is] in their own power; while at the same time by His prescience He knew the infirmity of human beings, and the consequences which would flow from it; but through [His] love and [His] power, He shall overcome the substance of created nature.” God’s purpose was salvation all along as Paul reveals in Romans 8 (KJV):28 And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose. 29 For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the firstborn among many brethren. 30 Moreover whom he did predestinate, them he also called: and whom he called, them he also justified: and whom he justified, them he also glorified.

Irenaeus concludes paragraph four as he reasons, “For it was necessary, at first, that nature should be exhibited; then, after that, that what was mortal should be conquered and swallowed up by immortality, and the corruptible by incorruptibility, and that man should be made after the image and likeness of God, having received the knowledge of good and evil.” However, the Scriptures do not say that it was “necessary” that nature should be exhibited first, and then that “mortality should be swallowed up by immortality.” But Irenaeus is referring in part to 1 Corinthians 15 (KJV):54 So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory.

Commentary Summary Book 4: Chapter XXXVIII

To summarize, in this chapter Irenaeus is defending the Church against the Gnostics who believed God to be deficient because man was created imperfect. Irenaeus has invented an argument to combat this heresy. His argument states that man is infantile because he is a created being. Man could not receive perfection at the first because he was infantile. Man also has power over himself since he is made in the image of God. Thus man is in his own power. In the course of his argument, he sees that Paul gave the Corinthians milk to drink which he interprets to be Paul’s teaching about the “advent of our Lord as a man.” According to Irenaeus, although Jesus was the “perfect Bread of the Father,” He “offered Himself to us as milk, [because we were] as infants.” By receiving “such a course of milk nourishment,” we “become accustomed to eat and drink the Word of God,” and are then “able also to contain in ourselves the Bread of immortality, which is the Spirit of the Father.”

Now Irenaeus sees the Spirit as “strong meat,” that is, “the food of life eternal,” which he does not believe the Corinthians have received as yet because they were carnal, and therefore not “capable of receiving it, because they had the sentient faculties of the soul still feeble and undisciplined in the practice of things pertaining to God.” The reason he believes this to be so is because he sees that “in like manner, God had power at the beginning to grant perfection to man; but as the latter was only recently created, he could not possibly have received it, or even if he had received it, could he have contained it, or containing it, could he have retained it.” This is important to understand in Irenaeus’ thinking because he then says that, “It was for this reason that the Son of God, although He was perfect, passed through the state of infancy in common with the rest of mankind, partaking of it thus not for His own benefit, but for that of the infantile stage of man’s existence, in order that man might be able to receive Him.”

Irenaeus is a worthy workman in his defense of the faith. However, in his zeal to defend the faith, he has exceeded the bounds of the Scriptures. We will now address the following issues:

- Was man created infantile?
- Had the Corinthians received the Spirit of God?
- Do we have to be perfect with no “imperfection and shortcomings” of our “walk in life” in order to receive the Holy Spirit?
- Do the “sentient faculties” of our soul really have to be disciplined “in the practice of things pertaining to God” in order to receive the Holy Spirit?
- Having received Him, can we retain Him or is it possible to lose Him?

First of all we see that Irenaeus is very logical in his thought process, and it is admirable that he wishes to defend the faith against the Gnostic heresy that believed that God was deficient when he created man because man is imperfect. They even posited another god who they say created God. However, Irenaeus would have been more effective in his defense if he would have rightly divided the Scriptures. The Scripture says that when God finished making man, He said all that He had created was very good as we read in Genesis 1 (KJV):31 And God saw every thing that he had made, and, behold, it was very good. And the evening and the morning were the sixth day.

Man was created good, and He was able to converse with God in the garden. Man gave names to all the creatures that God brought before him. We see that man was an intelligent being and not infantile in Genesis 2 (KJV):15 And the LORD God took the man, and put him into the garden of Eden to dress it and to keep it. 16 And the LORD God commanded the man, saying, Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat: 17 But of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it: for in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die. 18 And the LORD God said, It is not good that the man should be alone; I will make him an help meet for him. 19 And out of the ground the LORD God formed every beast of the field, and every fowl of the air; and brought them unto Adam to see what he would call them: and whatsoever Adam called every living creature, that was the name thereof. 20 And Adam gave names to all cattle, and to the fowl of the air, and to every beast of the field; but for Adam there was not found an help meet for him. 21 And the LORD God caused a deep sleep to fall upon Adam, and he slept: and he took one of his ribs, and closed up the flesh instead thereof; 22 And the rib, which the LORD God had taken from man, made he a woman, and brought her unto the man. 23 And Adam said, This is now bone of my bones, and flesh of my flesh: she shall be called Woman, because she was taken out of Man.

Now before man fell in disobedience to God’s command not to eat of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, he was in a state of innocence, but he was put on probation because sin was already in the universe. Dr. Albert Grimes talks about why man was put on probation in his book, Doctrines of Salvation, in The Doctrine of Man. He says the following:

“This is understandable because sin was already in the universe. A being whom God had created before Adam, who was exalted to a high position in heaven, had fallen. This being called Lucifer is referred to in Ezekiel 28:15, "Thou wast perfect in thy ways from the day that thou wast created, till iniquity was found in thee."

The iniquity spoken of was rebellion against God. He with other angels led a revolt against God. This is spoken of in Isaiah 14:12-15, "How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, son of the morning...For thou hast said in thine heart, I will ascend into heaven, I will exalt my throne above the stars of God: I will sit also upon the mount of the congregation, in the sides of the north: I will ascend above the heights of the clouds; I will be like the most High. Yet thou shalt be brought down to hell, to the sides of the pit."

The time of this sin is spoken of as in the beginning. 1 John 3:8, "He that committeth sin is of the devil; for the devil sinneth from the beginning..."

Man would no doubt sooner or later come under the influence of Satan and have to make his own choice. He must then be tested in regards to his obedience to God.” Doctrines of Salvation, The Doctrine of Man, pg. 2, by Dr. Albert Grimes.

Man was in a state of innocence until he fell in the Garden of Eden. The imperfection in man came when man sinned. The result of sin was death to all men and women as Paul tells us in in Romans 5 (KJV):12 Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned:

Not only so, but man inherited a sin nature. Paul explains that man without the Spirit of God cannot please Him in Romans 8 (KJV):5 For they that are after the flesh do mind the things of the flesh; but they that are after the Spirit the things of the Spirit. 6 For to be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace. 7 Because the carnal mind is enmity against God: for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be. 8 So then they that are in the flesh cannot please God.

Paul tells us that the mind set on the flesh is not even able to subject itself to the law of God. And Paul explains the conflict of the two natures in the Christian in Romans 7 (KJV):14 For we know that the law is spiritual: but I am carnal, sold under sin. 15 For that which I do I allow not: for what I would, that do I not; but what I hate, that do I. 16 If then I do that which I would not, I consent unto the law that it is good. 17 Now then it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me. 18 For I know that in me (that is, in my flesh,) dwelleth no good thing: for to will is present with me; but how to perform that which is good I find not. 19 For the good that I would I do not: but the evil which I would not, that I do. 20 Now if I do that I would not, it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me.

Sin dwells in us, that is, in our flesh. It is this sin in our flesh that makes us not able to please God. We need a change in our nature in order to please Him. This happens in our spirit at the new birth.

It is sin that has corrupted man's nature and rendered man as fruit that is spoiled rotten as we see in Romans 3 (KJV):12 They are all gone out of the way, they are together become unprofitable; there is none that doeth good, no, not one.

The Greek word for "unprofitable" is ἠχρεώθησαν (pronounced echrethesan) which is in the third person plural, aorist 1, indicative passive case of ἀχρειόω (pronounced achreao) meaning to be rendered useless, unprofitable, to be rendered worthless. The Analytical Greek Lexicon Revised 1978 Edition by Moulton, page 63. Paul is quoting from Psalms 14 (KJV):1 The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God. They are corrupt, they have done abominable works, there is none that doeth good. 2 The LORD looked down from heaven upon the children of men, to see if there were any that did understand, and seek God. 3 They are all gone aside, they are all together become filthy: there is none that doeth good, no, not one.

The Hebrew word for "filthy" is נִלְחָץ (pronounced naelachoo) from נָלַץ (pronounced alach), and is in the niphal form, and means "to be corrupted, to become sour, as milk." Gesenius' Hebrew-Chaldee Lexicon to the Old Testament, Samuel Prideaux Tregelles, LL.D., page 50.

In order to become pleasing to God again, man must have a new nature which is able to please Him. This new nature is given man when he is regenerated, or born again. This word "regeneration" is found in Titus 3 (KJV):5 Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost;

The Greek word is παλιγγενεσία (pronounced paliggenesia) and means "new birth (palin, again, genesis, birth), is used of spiritual regeneration, Tit. 3:5, involving the communication of a new life, the two operating powers to produce which are "the word of truth," Jas. 1:18; 1 Pet. 1:23, and the Holy Spirit, John 3:5,6." Expository Dictionary of New Testament Words, W.E. Vine, Vol. III, page 267.

When we are born of the Spirit, we are given new life in our spirit for whatever is born of the Spirit is spirit as Jesus said in John 3 (KJV):5 Jesus answered, "Truly, truly, I say to you, unless one is born of water and the Spirit he cannot enter into the kingdom of God. 6 That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit.

Our spirit is the new inner self that joyfully concurs with the law of God as Paul reveals in Romans 7 (KJV):22 For I delight in the law of God after the inward man:

And in Ephesians 4 (KJV):24 And that ye put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness.

And in Colossians 3 (KJV):9 Lie not one to another, seeing that ye have put off the old man with his deeds; 10 And have put on the new man, which is renewed in knowledge after the image of him that created him: 11 Where there is neither Greek nor Jew, circumcision nor uncircumcision, Barbarian, Scythian, bond nor free: but Christ is all, and in all.

The old self is the old Adamic nature that is still in the members of our flesh as Paul tells us in Romans 7 (KJV):23 But I see another law in my members, warring against the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity to the law of sin which is in my members.

It is our responsibility as believers to put aside this old nature in our flesh, and put on the new nature of the Spirit of God in our spirit. It is by this new nature that we have escaped the corruption in the world as Peter says in 2 Peter 1 (KJV):4 Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises: that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust.

Irenaeus does not seem to realize that man will not be perfect in this life, even when he receives the Spirit of God. Man still has a sinful nature in his flesh. This sinful nature will not be eradicated in the believer until the resurrection. It is now our responsibility as regenerated believers to put aside this old nature, and put on the new nature. This however does not make the Spirit of God imperfect or sinful. The Spirit of God is a gift, and is given to us by the grace of God. We do not have to attain a certain level of perfection or maturity to receive Him. He is given freely to those who ask as Jesus said in Luke 11 (KJV):13 If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children: how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him?

There is no waiting time or self-improvement that must be done in order to receive the Holy Spirit as God demonstrates when He baptized the believers in the house of Cornelius, the Roman centurion while Peter was still preaching the Gospel to them in Acts 10 (KJV):44 While Peter yet spake these words, the Holy Ghost fell on all them which heard the word. 45 And they of the circumcision which believed were astonished, as many as came with Peter, because that on the Gentiles also was poured out the gift of the Holy Ghost. 46 For they heard them speak with tongues, and magnify God. Then answered Peter, 47 Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized, which have received the Holy Ghost as well as we? 48 And he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord. Then prayed they him to tarry certain days.

The reason there is no waiting time or self-improvement necessary in order to receive the Holy Spirit is because when we believe, we enter God's courtroom as it were, and as soon as God sees our faith, He justifies us as Paul tells us in Romans 5 (KJV):1 Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ: 2 By whom also we have access by faith into this grace wherein we stand, and rejoice in hope of the glory of God.

The word justified in the Greek in this verse is Δικαιωθέντες (pronounce dikaiothentes) from δικαιοῶ (pronounced dikaiōō), and it is in the nominative, plural, masculine, participle, aorist 1, passive voice. The Analytical Greek Lexicon Revised 1978 Edition by Moulton, page 100. It means "primarily to deem to be right, signifies, in the N.T., (a) to show to be right or righteous; in the Passive Voice, to be justified, Matt. 11:19; Luke 7:35; Rom. 3:4; 1 Tim. 3:16; (b) to declare to be righteous, to pronounce righteous." Expository Dictionary of New Testament Words, W.E. Vine, Vol. II, page 285.

The word peace in Romans 5:1 in the Greek is εἰρήνη (pronounced eirēnē). This word comes from the verb eiro which means "to bind together that which has been separated." Word Studies in the Greek New Testament, Kenneth S. Wuest, Volume 1, Romans in the Greek New Testament, pg.77.

In other words, in Romans 5:1, Paul is saying that we have been set at one with God, and are at peace with Him after He has justified us, that is, after He has declared us righteous. And Paul tells us that our justification was part of God's plan from the beginning in Romans 8 (KJV):29 For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the firstborn among many brethren. 30 Moreover whom he did predestinate, them he also called: and whom he called, them he also justified: and whom he justified, them he also glorified.

And speaking of Abraham, Paul tells us that righteousness was imputed or credited, that is, put down to his account in Romans 4 (KJV):22 And therefore it was imputed to him for righteousness. 23 Now it was not written for his sake alone, that it was imputed to him; 24 But for us also, to whom it shall be imputed, if we believe on him that raised up Jesus our Lord from the dead; 25 Who was delivered for our offences, and was raised again for our justification.

And this is why Paul tells us that nothing in the whole universe can separate the believer from the love of God because it is God who justifies as we read in Romans 8 (KJV):31 What shall we then say to these things? If God be for us, who can be against us? 32 He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things? 33 Who shall lay any thing to the charge of God's elect? It is God that justifieth. 34 Who is he that condemneth? It is Christ that died, yea rather, that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God, who also maketh intercession for us. 35 Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword? 36 As it is written, For thy sake we are killed all the day long; we are accounted as sheep for the slaughter. 37 Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through him that loved us. 38 For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, 39 Nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord.

If we have faith in Jesus Christ as Lord, all these things are true of us, and nothing can separate us from His love. Now we must understand that the Corinthians had been washed, sanctified, and justified as we read in 1 Corinthians 6 (NASB):9 Or do you not know that the unrighteous will not inherit the kingdom of God? Do not be deceived; neither fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor homosexuals, 10 nor thieves, nor the covetous, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor swindlers, will inherit the kingdom of God. 11 Such were some of you; but you were washed, but you were sanctified, but you were justified in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ and in the Spirit of our God.

It was because the Corinthians had believed in Him who raised Jesus our Lord from the dead that they had been justified. And this is the reason that, though there were divisions among them and disputes, Paul still addresses them as brethren in 1 Corinthians 3 (KJV):1 And I, brethren, could not speak unto you as unto spiritual, but as unto carnal, even as unto babes in Christ. 2 I have fed you with milk, and not with meat: for hitherto ye were not able to bear it, neither yet now are ye able. 3 For ye are yet carnal: for whereas there is among you envying, and strife, and divisions, are ye not carnal, and walk as men? 4 For while one saith, I am of Paul; and another, I am of Apollos; are ye not carnal?

The Corinthians may have been acting like infants in their behavior, but they were infants in Christ, and Paul addressed them as such as he began his epistle in 1 Corinthians 1 (KJV):1 Paul called to be an apostle of Jesus Christ through the will of God, and Sosthenes our brother, 2 Unto the church of God which is at Corinth, to them that are sanctified in Christ Jesus, called to be saints, with all that in every place call upon the name of Jesus Christ our Lord, both their's and our's: 3 Grace be unto you, and peace, from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ. 4 I thank my God always on your behalf, for the grace of God which is given you by Jesus Christ; 5 That in everything ye are enriched by him, in all utterance, and in all knowledge; 6 Even as the testimony of Christ was confirmed in you: 7 So that ye come behind in no gift; waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ: 8 Who shall also confirm you unto the end, that ye may be blameless in the day of our Lord Jesus Christ. 9 God is faithful, by whom ye were called unto the fellowship of his Son Jesus Christ our Lord.

Paul addresses the Corinthians as the church of God in Corinth who had been sanctified in Christ Jesus, who were saints by calling, and he includes them with all who in every place call on the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, their Lord and ours. Paul thanks God for the grace of God that was given them in Christ Jesus, because they were enriched in Him, and the testimony of Christ was confirmed in them. They also were not lacking in any gift as he says in verse seven above. The word for gift in the Greek is χάρισμα (pronounced charisma) and it is the same word that is used in 1 Corinthians 12 (KJV):4 Now there are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit.

Vine's says that the word charisma means "a gift of grace, a gift involving grace" (charis) on the part of God as the donor." Expository Dictionary of New Testament Words, W.E. Vine, Vol. II, page 147. In other words we could say that a charisma is a free gift from God.

Now as to the fact that the Corinthians were in Christ, Paul also concludes in 1 Corinthians 1 (NASB):30 But by His doing you are in Christ Jesus, who became to us wisdom from God, and righteousness and sanctification, and redemption, 31 so that, just as it is written, "LET HIM WHO BOASTS, BOAST IN THE LORD."

Not only so but he calls them saints in 1 Corinthians 6 (KJV):1 Dare any of you, having a matter against another, go to law before the unjust, and not before the saints? 2 Do ye not know that the saints shall judge the world? and if the world shall be judged by you, are ye unworthy to judge the smallest matters? 3 Know ye not that we shall judge angels? how much more things that pertain to this life?

Paul includes himself with the Corinthians when he says, “we will judge angels.” Being a saint does not mean you are perfect in this life, as the Corinthians proved when they were going to law before the unrighteous, and taking each other to court. This is what Paul was correcting them for. Being a saint simply means one who has been justified, that is, one who has been declared righteous. And again, Paul says that the Corinthians were at one time unrighteous, but now they have been washed, sanctified, and justified in 1 Corinthians 6 (NASB):9 Or do you not know that the unrighteous will not inherit the kingdom of God? Do not be deceived; neither fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor homosexuals, 10 nor thieves, nor the covetous, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor swindlers, will inherit the kingdom of God. 11 Such were some of you; but you were washed, but you were sanctified, but you were justified in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ and in the Spirit of our God.

The word “washed” in verse 11 speaks of a bath, and this is what Jesus spoke of in John 13 (NIV):10 Jesus answered, “Those who have had a bath need only to wash their feet; their whole body is clean. And you are clean, though not every one of you.”

The Corinthians had already had a bath, just as the apostles, when they believed in Jesus Christ as their Lord and Savior. They now just needed to wash their feet. So without doubt, the Corinthians were in Christ. Being in Christ is where God places us when we believe in Jesus Christ, and confess Him as Lord of our lives. When we believe in Jesus Christ and repent of our sins, and confess Jesus as Lord of our lives, God sovereignly makes us members of the body of Christ by baptizing us into His body as Paul tells the Corinthians in 1 Corinthians 12 (NASB):13 For by one Spirit we were all baptized into one body, whether Jews or Greeks, whether slaves or free, and we were all made to drink of one Spirit.

The baptism spoken of here is not water baptism for this baptism is done by the Spirit. The Spirit places us into the body of Christ when we believe in Jesus Christ and accept Him as our Lord and Savior. We do not become members by joining a specific church or group of believers, but by believing in Jesus Christ which begins such an intimate relationship with Him that it is described as being in His body. And so this baptism into the body of Christ is not a gradual thing, but it is a sovereign work of God as Paul reveals in 1 Corinthians 12 (NASB):18 But now God has placed the members, each one of them, in the body, just as He desired.

The Scripture says that God places us in the body just as He desired. We don’t earn our place in the body. It is a sovereign act of God after we believe in Jesus Christ. And Paul tells the Corinthians that they are the body of Christ as we read in 1 Corinthians 12 (NASB):27 Now you are Christ's body, and individually members of it.

How is it that Irenaeus did not see that Paul was speaking to those who were in Christ as Paul tells us in 1 Corinthians 3 (KJV):1 And I, brethren, could not speak unto you as unto spiritual, but as unto carnal, [even] as unto babes in Christ.

And also as in 1 Corinthians 3 (NASB):1 And I, brethren, could not speak to you as to spiritual men, but as to men of flesh, as to infants in Christ.

The Corinthians may have been infants but they were infants “in Christ.” That is, they were infants in the body of Christ. There can be no doubt that the Corinthians were saved men and women. When we are born again, we start off as new born babes as Peter reveals in 1 Peter 2 (KJV):1 Wherefore laying aside all malice, and all guile, and hypocrisies, and envies, and all evil speakings, 2 As newborn babes, desire the sincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby:

And Peter encourages us to grow as we read in 2 Peter 3 (KJV):18 But grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. To him be glory both now and for ever. Amen.

And Paul also encourages us in Ephesians 4 (KJV):14 That we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive; 15 But speaking the truth in love, may grow up into him in all things, which is the head, even Christ:

What is not stated by Irenaeus in this chapter is that man does not have power on his own to receive anything from God. In this chapter of his writing, Irenaeus is really continuing his philosophical argument for free will which he began in the previous chapter. This has bearing on the nature of man. His argument there states that God has given man the ability to choose the good and reject the bad as he states in Book 4: Chapter XXXVII, “But since all men are of the same nature, able both to hold fast and to do what is good; and, on the other hand, having also the power to cast it from them and not to do it,—some do justly receive praise even among men who are under the control of good laws (and much more from God), and obtain deserved testimony of their choice of good in general, and of persevering therein; but the others are blamed, and receive a just condemnation, because of their rejection of what is fair and good.” Again, I will discuss free will further in Chapter 30: Free Will. However we just note here that in the context of his writing in this chapter that Irenaeus is arguing for free will, and his arguing has led him to assert that the Corinthians were in an infant state, and had received the milk of the word of God, but not the Spirit of God.

Irenaeus seems to expect man to better himself a little with the free will that he has been given, and thus prove himself a little worthy of receiving the gift of the Holy Spirit. However, the unalterable consequence of Irenaeus’ assertion that the Corinthians “were not capable of receiving it,” that is, the “strong meat” of the Holy Spirit, “because they had the sentient faculties of the soul still feeble and undisciplined in the practice of things pertaining to God,” is that the Corinthians were as yet unsaved and not Christ’s. Paul says we are none of His if we do not have the Spirit of Christ as we read in Romans 8 (KJV):9 But ye are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you. Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his.

Paul tells the Corinthians in 1 Corinthians 3:3 that they are still fleshly, or carnal, in the way they are behaving. Paul describes their behavior, but again calls them brethren in 1 Corinthians 1 (KJV):10 Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment. 11 For it hath been declared unto me of you, my brethren, by them which are of the house of Chloe, that there are contentions among you. 12 Now this I say, that every one of you saith, I am of Paul; and I of Apollos; and I of Cephas; and I of Christ. 13 Is Christ divided? was Paul crucified for you? or were ye baptized in the name of Paul?

Paul tells the Corinthians that when they act this way, they walk like they were mere men without the Spirit of God in 1 Corinthians 3 (KJV):1 And I, brethren, could not speak unto you as unto spiritual, but as unto carnal, even as unto babes in Christ. 2 I have fed you with milk, and not with meat: for hitherto ye were not able to bear it, neither yet now are ye able. 3 For ye are yet carnal: for whereas there is among you envying, and strife, and divisions, are ye not carnal, and walk as men? 4 For while one saith, I am of Paul; and another, I am of Apollos; are ye not carnal?

Irenaeus does not understand that when we come to Christ, we are born again not as mature spiritual men and women, but as babes in Christ. Being a babe is to be a newborn. A newborn has just as much life as a mature spiritual man or woman. But the newborn will grow up to be a spiritual man or woman first by receiving milk of the word, and then the solid food.

Now Peter writes in his first epistle encouraging believers to be holy as we read in 1 Peter 1 (NASB):14 As obedient children, not fashioning yourselves according to the former lusts in your ignorance: 15 But as he which hath called you is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of conversation; 16 Because it is written, Be ye holy; for I am holy. 17 And if ye call on the Father, who without respect of persons judgeth according to every man’s work, pass the time of your sojourning here in fear: 18 Forasmuch as ye know that ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, as silver and gold, from your vain conversation received by tradition from your fathers; 19 But with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot:

Those Peter was writing to were born again as we continue in 1 Peter 1 (NASB):20 Who verily was foreordained before the foundation of the world, but was manifest in these last times for you, 21 Who by him do believe in God, that raised him up from the dead, and gave him glory; that your faith and hope might be in God. 22 Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit unto unfeigned love of the brethren, see that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently: 23 Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth for ever. 24 For all flesh is as grass, and all the glory of man as the flower of grass. The grass withereth, and the flower thereof falleth away: 25 But the word of the Lord endureth for ever. And this is the word which by the gospel is preached unto you.

Peter didn't expect perfection in these believers. Rather, he encourages them to grow in respect to salvation as we read again in 1 Peter 2 (NASB):1 Therefore, putting aside all malice and all deceit and hypocrisy and envy and all slander, 2 like newborn babies, long for the pure milk of the word, so that by it you may grow in respect to salvation, 3 if you have tasted the kindness of the Lord.

What Peter is saying is that we must walk in the light of what we have already received. In this way God cleanses us from all sin, and adds more light by His word.

The apostle John also talks about this growth process in 1 John 2 (KJV):12 I write unto you, little children, because your sins are forgiven you for his name's sake. 13 I write unto you, fathers, because ye have known him that is from the beginning. I write unto you, young men, because ye have overcome the wicked one. I write unto you, little children, because ye have known the Father. 14 I have written unto you, fathers, because ye have known him that is from the beginning. I have written unto you, young men, because ye are strong, and the word of God abideth in you, and ye have overcome the wicked one.

The apostle John was not writing to little boys and girls in age, but to believers who were children in their Christian experience. When we first hear the Gospel and repent of our sins and believe in Jesus Christ, it is as if all heaven has been poured into us because of the new life of Christ in our spirit. We experience great joy in our relationship with God who is now our Father by a spiritual rebirth. We thus rejoice that our sins have been forgiven for His name's sake. As we grow in grace and knowledge of the word of God, we grow to know our authority in Christ over the evil one. We may even cast out spirits in Jesus name. This is why John says he is writing to those who are as young men in their Christian experience by the fact that they have overcome the evil one. John also writes to the fathers in their Christian experience. These are those who have grown up in Him in all things. They are not tossed to and fro by every wind of doctrine as Paul reveals in Ephesians 4 (KJV):14 That we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive; 15 But speaking the truth in love, may grow up into him in all things, which is the head, even Christ: 16 From whom the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love.

So the milk we must have to grow spiritually is the word of God. It has nothing to do with Jesus' flesh. As new converts, that is, those who have just believed in Jesus Christ and have been born again, we are babes in Christ. And babes need milk. The Corinthians still had much that was fleshly in their behavior, but this did not make them unrighteous or unbelievers. Paul tells us that there was immorality of the grossest sort, that is incest, as we see in 1 Corinthians, chapter 5, and brother was taking brother to court in 1 Corinthians, chapter 6, and they were also eating the Lord's Supper in an unworthy manner in 1 Corinthians, chapter 11. There were divisions among them, and envy and strife in 1 Corinthians, chapter 3. This is why Paul called them carnal. But they were still washed, sanctified, and justified, in the name of the Lord Jesus and by the Spirit of our God. They were still saved, and had received the Holy Spirit, but in their behavior they were acting as babes, that is, new converts.

So Paul was not telling the Corinthians that they did not have the Holy Spirit when he called them carnal, or still fleshly. And this assertion by Irenaeus that the Corinthians did not yet have the Spirit flies in the face of what Paul specifically states in 1 Corinthians 6 (KJV):19 What? know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own?

Paul was not asking them if the Holy Spirit was in them. He was telling them that He was in fact in them, and that they should know it. The reason that they had the Holy Spirit in them was because they were in Christ.

Now the Scriptures also explains what is meant by strong meat, or solid food as we read in Hebrews 5 (KJV):11 Of whom we have many things to say, and hard to be uttered, seeing ye are dull of hearing. 12 For when for the time ye ought to be teachers, ye have need that one teach you again which be the first principles of the oracles of God; and are become such as have need of milk, and not of strong meat. 13 For every one that useth milk is unskilful in the word of righteousness: for he is a babe. 14 But strong meat belongeth to them that are of full age, even those who by reason of use have their senses exercised to discern both good and evil.

We must have our senses trained to discern good and evil. We do this by walking in the light of the word of God which we have received. God does not expect us to know everything in His word right away when we first come to Him. In just reading His word, we are depositing in our spirits the milk of the word of God. And God Himself begins to teach us by His Spirit as John tells us in 1 John 2 (KJV):27 But the anointing which ye have received of him abideth in you, and ye need not that any man teach you: but as the same anointing teacheth you of all things, and is truth, and is no lie, and even as it hath taught you, ye shall abide in him.

This is why the Spirit of God is called our helper by Jesus in John 14 (NASB):16 I will ask the Father, and He will give you another Helper, that He may be with you forever; 17 that is the Spirit of truth, whom the world cannot receive, because it does not see Him or know Him, but you know Him because He abides with you and will be in you.

And again in John 14 (NASB):26 "But the Helper, the Holy Spirit, whom the Father will send in My name, He will teach you all things, and bring to your remembrance all that I said to you.

It is the Spirit of God who revealed truth to the apostles, and who illuminates our minds so that we might know the truth as well, as John reveals in John 16 (NIV):13 But when he, the Spirit of truth, comes, he will guide you into all the truth. He will not speak on his own; he will speak only what he hears, and he will tell you what is yet to come.

Now the milk of the word of God, that is, the elementary principles, are revealed in Hebrews 6 (KJV):1 Therefore leaving the elementary teaching about the Christ, let us press on to maturity, not laying again a foundation of repentance from dead works and of faith toward God, 2 of instruction about washings and laying on of hands, and the resurrection of the dead and eternal judgment. 3 And this we will do, if God permits.

The Spirit is not the strong meat. The strong meat is the deeper teachings of the word of God. The truths such as our justification by faith, our election and calling, and the second coming of Christ, are some examples of strong meat in the word of God. The strong meat is only obtained by study of the word of God, and is what makes it possible for us to stand against the strong winds of false doctrine that blow against the Church such as they were doing in Irenaeus' day. Without the Spirit's help and guidance, we would never be able to grow to understand these truths. Irenaeus has it the other way around. We don't make ready our lives so that we can receive the Spirit. We receive the Holy Spirit so that we can grow in the Spirit, producing the fruit of the Spirit, to be led by the Spirit. Being led by the Spirit, we grow in grace knowledge as Peter says in 2 Peter 3 (KJV):17 Ye therefore, beloved, seeing ye know these things before, beware lest ye also, being led away with the error of the wicked, fall from your own stedfastness. 18 But grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. To him be glory both now and for ever. Amen.

We are His workmanship created in Christ Jesus for good works that we should walk in them. The Holy Spirit is our Helper and our guide into all truth. We can do nothing spiritually without Him.

Book 4: Chapter XXXIX.—Man is endowed with the faculty of distinguishing good and evil; so that, without compulsion, he has the power, by his own will and choice, to perform God's commandments, by doing which he avoids the evils prepared for the rebellious.

1. Man has received the knowledge of good and evil. It is good to obey God, and to believe in Him, and to keep His commandment, and this is the life of man; as not to obey God is evil, and this is his death. Since God, therefore, gave [to man] such mental power (magnanimitatem) man knew both the good of obedience and the evil of disobedience, that the eye of the mind, receiving experience of both, may with judgment make choice of the better things; and that he may never become indolent or neglectful of God's command; and learning by experience that it is an evil thing which deprives him of life, that is, disobedience to God, may never attempt it at all, but that, knowing that what preserves his life, namely, obedience to God, is good, he may diligently keep it with all earnestness. Wherefore he has also had a twofold experience, possessing knowledge of both kinds, that with discipline he may make choice of the better things. But how, if he had no knowledge of the contrary, could he have had instruction in that which is good? For there is thus a surer and an undoubted comprehension of matters submitted to us than the mere surmise arising from an opinion regarding them. For just as the tongue receives experience of sweet and bitter by means of tasting, and the eye discriminates between black and white by means of vision, and the ear recognises the distinctions of sounds by hearing; so also does the mind, receiving through the experience of both the knowledge of what is good, become more tenacious of its preservation, by acting in obedience to God: in the first place, casting away, by means of repentance, disobedience, as being something disagreeable and nauseous; and afterwards coming to understand what it really is, that it is contrary to goodness and sweetness, so that the mind may never even attempt to taste disobedience to God. But if any one do shun the knowledge of both these kinds of things, and the twofold perception of knowledge, he unawares divests himself of the character of a human being.

2. How, then, shall he be a God, who has not as yet been made a man? Or how can he be perfect who was but lately created? How, again, can he be immortal, who in his mortal nature did not obey his Maker? For it must be that thou, at the outset, shouldest hold the rank of a man, and then afterwards partake of the glory of God. For thou dost not make God, but God thee. If, then, thou art God's workmanship, await the hand of thy Maker which creates everything in due time; in due time as far as thou art concerned, whose creation is being carried out. Offer to Him thy heart in a soft and tractable state, and preserve the form in which the Creator has fashioned thee, having moisture in thyself, lest, by becoming hardened, thou lose the impressions of His fingers. But by preserving the framework thou shalt ascend to that which is perfect, for the moist clay which is in thee is hidden [there] by the workmanship of God. His hand fashioned thy substance; He will cover thee over [too] within and without with pure gold and silver, and He will adorn thee to such a degree, that even "the King Himself shall have pleasure in thy beauty." But if thou, being obstinately hardened, dost reject the operation of His skill, and show thyself ungrateful towards Him, because thou wert created a [mere] man, by becoming thus ungrateful to God, thou hast at once lost both His workmanship and life. For creation is an attribute of the goodness of God but to be created is that of human nature. If then, thou shalt deliver up to Him what is thine, that is, faith towards Him and subjection, thou shalt receive His handiwork, and shall be a perfect work of God.

3. If, however, thou wilt not believe in Him, and wilt flee from His hands, the cause of imperfection shall be in thee who didst not obey, but not in Him who called [thee]. For He commissioned [messengers] to call people to the marriage, but they who did not obey Him deprived themselves of the royal supper. The skill of God, therefore, is not defective, for He has power of the stones to raise up children to Abraham; but the man who does not obtain it is the cause to himself of his own imperfection. Nor, [in like manner], does the light fail because of those who have blinded themselves; but while it remains the same as ever, those who are [thus] blinded are involved in darkness through their own fault. The light does never enslave any one by necessity; nor, again, does God exercise compulsion upon any one unwilling to accept the exercise of His skill. Those persons, therefore, who have apostatized from the light given by the Father, and transgressed the law of liberty, have done so through their own fault, since they have been created free agents, and possessed of power over themselves.

4. But God, foreknowing all things, prepared fit habitations for both, kindly conferring that light which they desire on those who seek after the light of incorruption, and resort to it; but for the despisers and mockers who avoid and turn themselves away from this light, and who do, as it were, blind themselves, He has prepared darkness suitable to persons who oppose the light, and He has inflicted an appropriate punishment upon those who try to avoid being subject to Him. Submission to God is eternal rest, so that they who shun the light have a place worthy of their flight; and those who fly from eternal rest, have a habitation in accordance with their fleeing. Now, since all good things are with God, they who by their own determination fly from God, do defraud themselves of all good things; and having been [thus] defrauded of all good things with respect to God, they shall consequently fall under the just judgment of God. For those persons who shun rest shall justly incur punishment, and those who avoid the light shall justly dwell in darkness. For as in the case of this temporal light, those who shun it do deliver themselves over to darkness, so that they do themselves become the cause to themselves that they are destitute of light, and do inhabit darkness; and, as I have already observed, the light is not the cause of such an [unhappy] condition of existence to them; so those who fly from the eternal light of God, which contains in itself all good things, are themselves the cause to themselves of their inhabiting eternal darkness, destitute of all good things, having become to themselves the cause of [their consignment to] an abode of that nature.

Summary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus affirms that “Man has received the knowledge of good and evil,” referring to Genesis 3:22. Irenaeus also affirms that, “It is good to obey God, and to believe in Him, and to keep His commandment, and this is the life of man as not to obey God is evil, and this is his death.” Irenaeus then argues that, “Since God, therefore, gave [to man] such mental power (magnanimitatem) man knew both the good of obedience and the evil of disobedience, that the eye of the mind, receiving experience of both, may with judgment make choice of the better things; and that he may never become indolent or neglectful of God’s command; and learning by experience that it is an evil thing which deprives him of life, that is, disobedience to God, may never attempt it at all, but that, knowing that what preserves his life, namely, obedience to God, is good, he may diligently keep it with all earnestness.” Irenaeus then asserts, “Wherefore he has also had a twofold experience, possessing knowledge of both kinds, that with discipline he may make choice of the better things.” Irenaeus then reasons, “But how, if he had no knowledge of the contrary, could he have had instruction in that which is good? For there is thus a surer and an undoubted comprehension of matters submitted to us than the mere surmise arising from an opinion regarding them. For just as the tongue receives experience of sweet and bitter by means of tasting, and the eye discriminates between black and white by means of vision, and the ear recognises the distinctions of sounds by hearing; so also does the mind, receiving through the experience of both the knowledge of what is good, become more tenacious of its preservation, by acting in obedience to God.” Irenaeus then concludes, “in the first place, casting away, by means of repentance, disobedience, as being something disagreeable and nauseous; and afterwards coming to understand what it really is, that it is contrary to goodness and sweetness, so that the mind may never even attempt to taste disobedience to God.” And Irenaeus summarizes, “But if any one do shun the knowledge of both these kinds of things, and the twofold perception of knowledge, he unawares divests himself of the character of a human being.”

In paragraph two, Irenaeus asks, “How, then, shall he be a God, who has not as yet been made a man? Or how can he be perfect who was but lately created? How, again, can he be immortal, who in his mortal nature did not obey his Maker?” And Irenaeus admonishes, “For it must be that thou, at the outset, shouldest hold the rank of a man, and then afterwards partake of the glory of God. For thou dost not make God, but God thee.” And Irenaeus then advises, “If, then, thou art God’s workmanship, await the hand of thy Maker which creates everything in due time; in due time as far as thou art concerned, whose creation is being carried out. Offer to Him thy heart in a soft and tractable state, and preserve the form in which the Creator has fashioned thee, having moisture in thyself, lest, by becoming hardened, thou lose the impressions of His fingers.” Irenaeus then asserts, “But by preserving the framework thou shalt ascend to that which is perfect, for the moist clay which is in thee is hidden [there] by the workmanship of God. His hand fashioned thy substance; He will cover thee over [too] within and without with pure gold and silver, and He will adorn thee to such a degree, that even “the King Himself shall have pleasure in thy beauty,” referring to Psalm 45:11.

Irenaeus then asserts, “But if thou, being obstinately hardened, dost reject the operation of His skill, and show thyself ungrateful towards Him, because thou wert created a [mere] man, by becoming thus ungrateful to God, thou hast at once lost both His workmanship and life.” Irenaeus then affirms, “For creation is an attribute of the goodness of God but to be created is that of human nature. If then, thou shalt deliver up to Him what is thine, that is, faith towards Him and subjection, thou shalt receive His handiwork, and shall be a perfect work of God.”

In paragraph three, Irenaeus then affirms, “If, however, thou wilt not believe in Him, and wilt flee from His hands, the cause of imperfection shall be in thee who didst not obey, but not in Him who called [thee]. For He commissioned [messengers] to call people to the marriage, but they who did not obey Him deprived themselves of the royal supper,” referring to Matthew 22:1-14. Irenaeus then affirms, “The skill of God, therefore, is not defective, for He has power of the stones to raise up children to Abraham,” referring to Matthew 3:9. Irenaeus then affirms, “but the man who does not obtain it is the cause to himself of his own imperfection. Nor, [in like manner], does the light fail because of those who have blinded themselves; but while it remains the same as ever, those who are [thus] blinded are involved in darkness through their own fault. The light does never enslave any one by necessity; nor, again, does God exercise compulsion upon any one unwilling to accept the exercise of His skill.” Irenaeus then concludes, “Those persons, therefore, who have apostatized from the light given by the Father, and transgressed the law of liberty, have done so through their own fault, since they have been created free agents, and possessed of power over themselves.”

In paragraph four, Irenaeus affirms, “But God, foreknowing all things, prepared fit habitations for both, kindly conferring that light which they desire on those who seek after the light of incorruption, and resort to it; but for the despisers and mockers who avoid and turn themselves away from this light, and who do, as it were, blind themselves, He has prepared darkness suitable to persons who oppose the light, and He has inflicted an appropriate punishment upon those who try to avoid being subject to Him.” Irenaeus continues and again affirms, “Submission to God is eternal rest, so that they who shun the light have a place worthy of their flight; and those who fly from eternal rest, have a habitation in accordance with their fleeing.” Irenaeus then concludes, “Now, since all good things are with God, they who by their own determination fly from God, do defraud themselves of all good things; and having been [thus] defrauded of all good things with respect to God, they shall consequently fall under the just judgment of God. For those persons who shun rest shall justly incur punishment, and those who avoid the light shall justly dwell in darkness. For as in the case of this temporal light, those who shun it do deliver themselves over to darkness, so that they do themselves become the cause to themselves that they are destitute of light, and do inhabit darkness; and, as I have already observed, the light is not the cause of such an [unhappy] condition of existence to them; so those who fly from the eternal light of God, which contains in itself all good things, are themselves the cause to themselves of their inhabiting eternal darkness, destitute of all good things, having become to themselves the cause of [their consignment to] an abode of that nature.”

Commentary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus affirms that “Man has received the knowledge of good and evil,” referring in context to Genesis 3 (KJV):22 And the LORD God said, Behold, the man is become as one of us, to know good and evil: and now, lest he put forth his hand, and take also of the tree of life, and eat, and live for ever: 23 Therefore the LORD God sent him forth from the garden of Eden, to till the ground from whence he was taken. 24 So he drove out the man; and he placed at the east of the garden of Eden Cherubims, and a flaming sword which turned every way, to keep the way of the tree of life.

We notice in these verses that man has the knowledge of good and evil, but he does not have access to the tree of life which would give him eternal life. Irenaeus continues and affirms that, “It is “good to obey God, and to believe in Him, and to keep His commandment, and this is the life of man; as not to obey God is evil, and this is his death.” Irenaeus points out that this is the lesson that man should learn from Adam’s sin.

Irenaeus then argues that, “Since God, therefore, gave [to man] such mental power (magnanimitatem) man knew both the good of obedience and the evil of disobedience, that the eye of the mind, receiving experience of both, may with judgment make choice of the better things; and that he may never become indolent or neglectful of God’s command; and learning by experience that it is an evil thing which deprives him of life, that is, disobedience to God, may never attempt it at all, but that, knowing that what preserves his life, namely, obedience to God, is good, he may diligently keep it with all earnestness.”

However, the effects of the fall were greater than Irenaeus acknowledges here. He seems to confine his thinking to the Genesis account, but even there we see that spiritual death is in view when the Lord drove the man out of the Garden of Eden in order to guard the way to the tree of life. Since man is dead in trespasses and sins, it is spiritual death that must be overcome by man before he can obey God’s commands as Paul indicates in Ephesians 2 (NASB):1 And you were dead in your trespasses and sins.

Irenaeus then asserts, “Wherefore he has also had a twofold experience, possessing knowledge of both kinds, that with discipline he may make choice of the better things.” Irenaeus fails to see here that man needs a change in his nature and not just to exercise discipline in order to please God as Paul says in Romans 8 (KJV):8 So then they that are in the flesh cannot please God.

Man in his unregenerate state is totally in the flesh and cannot please God.

Irenaeus then reasons, “But how, if he had no knowledge of the contrary, could he have had instruction in that which is good? For there is thus a surer and an undoubted comprehension of matters submitted to us than the mere surmise arising from an opinion regarding them. For just as the tongue receives experience of sweet and bitter by means of tasting, and the eye discriminates between black and white by means of vision, and the ear recognises the distinctions of sounds by hearing; so also does the mind, receiving through the experience of both the knowledge of what is good, become more tenacious of its preservation, by acting in obedience to God:”

Is Irenaeus making light of sin here? When Irenaeus asks, “But how, if he had no knowledge of the contrary, could he have had instruction in that which is good?,” is he trying to justify man’s sin? Was sin something necessary in Irenaeus’ thinking so that man could have knowledge of the contrary and thereby have instruction in that which is good?

Irenaeus then concludes, “in the first place, casting away, by means of repentance, disobedience, as being something disagreeable and nauseous; and afterwards coming to understand what it really is, that it is contrary to goodness and sweetness, so that the mind may never even attempt to taste disobedience to God.”

While man must repent, Irenaeus has given us an unrealistic expectation of man. Man inherits a sinful nature from Adam. Sin is in our flesh as Paul reveals in Romans 7 (KJV):17 Now then it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me. 18 For I know that in me (that is, in my flesh,) dwelleth no good thing: for to will is present with me; but how to perform that which is good I find not. 19 For the good that I would I do not: but the evil which I would not, that I do. 20 Now if I do that I would not, it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me.

Paul says that sin dwells in me, that is, in my flesh, even after I am born again. There is a willingness to do good, but I still seem to do the very thing I hate. There is a war going on between my sinful flesh and my born again spirit. Paul describes this as we continue in Romans 7 (KJV):21 I find then a law, that, when I would do good, evil is present with me. 22 For I delight in the law of God after the inward man: 23 But I see another law in my members, warring against the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity to the law of sin which is in my members. 24 O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death? 25 I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord. So then with the mind I myself serve the law of God; but with the flesh the law of sin.

In repentance I understand that sin is “disobedience” and “something disagreeable and nauseous,” and afterwards I come to “understand what it really is, that it is contrary to goodness and sweetness.” But to expect that “the mind may never even attempt to taste disobedience to God,” is setting the bar impossibly high. That Irenaeus would expect us to never sin again does not take into account that we have a sin nature in our flesh from which we will not be completely free until we our bodies are resurrected, and we are with Christ. When we see Him we will be like Him as John says in 1 John 3 (KJV):2 Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is.

Until the resurrection, we will have to discipline ourselves by putting off the old and putting on the new. When I am born again, my spirit is renewed to life by the Holy Spirit, and I undergo a spiritual resurrection as Paul tells us in Colossians 2 (KJV):13 And you, being dead in your sins and the uncircumcision of your flesh, hath he quickened together with him, having forgiven you all trespasses; 14 Blotting out the handwriting of ordinances that was against us, which was contrary to us, and took it out of the way, nailing it to his cross;

The word “quickened” means “made alive.” We also see this in Ephesians 2 (KJV):4 But God, who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith he loved us, 5 Even when we were dead in sins, hath quickened us together with Christ, (by grace ye are saved;) 6 And hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus: 7 That in the ages to come he might shew the exceeding riches of his grace in his kindness toward us through Christ Jesus.

Our life is now hidden with Christ in God as Paul reveals in Colossians 3 (KJV):1 If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God. 2 Set your affection on things above, not on things on the earth. 3 For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God. 4 When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory.

Christ is now our life after we believe in Him, and this life is hidden with Christ in God, Paul says. When we believe in Jesus Christ and confess Him as Lord, we are agreeing with God that sin is utterly sinful as Irenaeus also says. Without Christ we are wretched men and women indeed, but our new birth gives us power over sin in our flesh as Paul tells us in Romans 7 (KJV):24 O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death? 25 I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord. So then with the mind I myself serve the law of God; but with the flesh the law of sin.

And in Romans 8 (KJV):1 There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. 2 For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death.

The Holy Spirit is now the life of my spirit, and the law of the Spirit of life in me sets me free from sin in my flesh. I no longer have to fulfill my fleshly desires. My inner man delights to do the will of God, and it is to my inner man's desires that I must now yield in cooperation with the Holy Spirit who also indwells me. I may have to wash my feet at times, but Jesus understood this as He taught us to do this in John 13 (NASB):10 Jesus said to him, "He who has bathed needs only to wash his feet, but is completely clean; and you are clean, but not all of you."

The washing, Jesus is speaking of confession as the apostle John states in 1 John 1 (KJV):9 If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness.

We can go directly to the Father and be forgiven because we have an advocate with Him as we read in 1 John 2 (KJV):1 My little children, these things write I unto you, that ye sin not. And if any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous:

If we sin after we are saved, we don't have to be born again all over again. God has provided us with an Advocate. If we then confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness.

Irenaeus then concludes, "But if any one do shun the knowledge of both these kinds of things, and the twofold perception of knowledge, he unawares divests himself of the character of a human being." To deny that one has the knowledge of good and evil is a symptom of sin in our world. Man has the knowledge of good and evil, but he does not have the right standards by which to judge by because his conscience is defiled as we read in Titus 1 (KJV):15 Unto the pure all things are pure: but unto them that are defiled and unbelieving is nothing pure; but even their mind and conscience is defiled.

In paragraph two, Irenaeus asks, "How, then, shall he be a God, who has not as yet been made a man? Or how can he be perfect who was but lately created? How, again, can he be immortal, who in his mortal nature did not obey his Maker?" And Irenaeus admonishes, "For it must be that thou, at the outset, shouldest hold the rank of a man, and then afterwards partake of the glory of God. For thou dost not make God, but God thee." Irenaeus is speaking to the Gnostics.

And Irenaeus then advises, "If, then, thou art God's workmanship, await the hand of thy Maker which creates everything in due time; in due time as far as thou art concerned, whose creation is being carried out. Offer to Him thy heart in a soft and tractable state, and preserve the form in which the Creator has fashioned thee, having moisture in thyself, lest, by becoming hardened, thou lose the impressions of His fingers."

It is good to have a heart that is open and willing to believe and obey God's word. However, Irenaeus makes no mention of God's word here.

Irenaeus then asserts, "But by preserving the framework thou shalt ascend to that which is perfect, for the moist clay which is in thee is hidden [there] by the workmanship of God. His hand fashioned thy substance; He will cover thee over [too] within and without with pure gold and silver, and He will adorn thee to such a degree, that even "the King Himself shall have pleasure in thy beauty," referring to Psalms 45 (KJV):11 So shall the king greatly desire thy beauty: for he is thy Lord; and worship thou him.

It is true that when we surrender our hearts to Jesus Christ and confess Him as Lord of our lives that He, the King, delights in us. But Irenaeus wants us to believe that there is some good in us, and that we just need to preserve it in order to "ascend to that which is perfect." The Scriptures tell us that there is none good as we read in Romans 3 (KJV):9 What then? are we better than they? No, in no wise: for we have before proved both Jews and Gentiles, that they are all under sin; 10 As it is written, There is none righteous, no, not one: 11 There is none that understandeth, there is none that seeketh after God.

It is the realization of our wretchedness, and that we are under sin, that brings us to a place of repentance. It is not by preserving anything in us that we are saved. It is the surrendering of our hearts to the one who can save us from our sinful state that is acceptable to Him. It is our faith that saves us and even that is given to us as Paul reveals in Ephesians 2 (KJV):8 For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God: 9 Not of works, lest any man should boast. 10 For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them.

Irenaeus continues as he asserts, “But if thou, being obstinately hardened, dost reject the operation of His skill, and show thyself ungrateful towards Him, because thou wert created a [mere] man, by becoming thus ungrateful to God, thou hast at once lost both His workmanship and life.”

However, Irenaeus does not understand that man is already lost, and dead in trespasses and sins. We have nothing to lose, and everything to gain by accepting Christ as our Lord and Savior. We are not His workmanship until we have His life, and we do not have His life until we repent and accept Christ Jesus as our Lord and Savior.

Irenaeus then affirms, “For creation is an attribute of the goodness of God but to be created is that of human nature. If then, thou shalt deliver up to Him what is thine, that is, faith towards Him and subjection, thou shalt receive His handiwork, and shall be a perfect work of God.”

Irenaeus seems to here grasp the truth that it is by faith that we submit to God, but he does not seem to know that man under sin has no faith or power of his own to submit to God as Paul reveals in Romans 5 (KJV):6 For when we were yet without strength, in due time Christ died for the ungodly.

It is in our surrender to His voice that we receive power to believe. The entrance of His words give us light as we read in Psalms 119 (KJV):130 The entrance of thy words giveth light; it giveth understanding unto the simple.

It is by His word that we receive faith as Paul reveals in Romans 10 (KJV):17 So then faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God.

In paragraph three, Irenaeus then affirms, “If, however, thou wilt not believe in Him, and wilt flee from His hands, the cause of imperfection shall be in thee who didst not obey, but not in Him who called [thee]. For He commissioned [messengers] to call people to the marriage, but they who did not obey Him deprived themselves of the royal supper,” referring to Matthew 22 (NIV):1 Jesus spoke to them again in parables, saying: 2 “The kingdom of heaven is like a king who prepared a wedding banquet for his son. 3 He sent his servants to those who had been invited to the banquet to tell them to come, but they refused to come. 4 “Then he sent some more servants and said, ‘Tell those who have been invited that I have prepared my dinner: My oxen and fattened cattle have been butchered, and everything is ready. Come to the wedding banquet.’ 5 “But they paid no attention and went off—one to his field, another to his business. 6 The rest seized his servants, mistreated them and killed them. 7 The king was enraged. He sent his army and destroyed those murderers and burned their city. 8 “Then he said to his servants, ‘The wedding banquet is ready, but those I invited did not deserve to come. 9 So go to the street corners and invite to the banquet anyone you find.’ 10 So the servants went out into the streets and gathered all the people they could find, the bad as well as the good, and the wedding hall was filled with guests. 11 “But when the king came in to see the guests, he noticed a man there who was not wearing wedding clothes. 12 He asked, ‘How did you get in here without wedding clothes, friend?’ The man was speechless. 13 “Then the king told the attendants, ‘Tie him hand and foot, and throw him outside, into the darkness, where there will be weeping and gnashing of teeth.’ 14 “For many are invited, but few are chosen.”

Irenaeus then affirms, “The skill of God, therefore, is not defective, for He has power of the stones to raise up children to Abraham,” referring to Matthew 3 (NIV):9 And do not think you can say to yourselves, ‘We have Abraham as our father.’ I tell you that out of these stones God can raise up children for Abraham.

Irenaeus then affirms, “but the man who does not obtain it is the cause to himself of his own imperfection. Nor, [in like manner], does the light fail because of those who have blinded themselves; but while it remains the same as ever, those who are [thus] blinded are involved in darkness through their own fault. The light does never enslave any one by necessity; nor, again, does God exercise compulsion upon any one unwilling to accept the exercise of His skill.” Irenaeus then concludes, “Those persons, therefore, who have apostatized from the light given by the Father, and transgressed the law of liberty, have done so through their own fault, since they have been created free agents, and possessed of power over themselves.”

In Irenaeus’ thinking, there was no impact to man’s will or ability to discern good and evil as a result of the fall of Adam. Irenaeus sees only that the ground was cursed, and the serpent was cursed and his head will be crushed, and the woman will have pain during child birth. And in Irenaeus' thinking, man is still a free agent, and possessed of power over himself so that he is both able to choose the good and reject the evil, and he is able to actually do the good he has chosen.

However, in talking with the Jews, Jesus said that whoever commits sin is the slave of sin as we read in John 8 (NIV):31 To the Jews who had believed him, Jesus said, "If you hold to my teaching, you are really my disciples. 32 Then you will know the truth, and the truth will set you free." 33 They answered him, "We are Abraham's descendants and have never been slaves of anyone. How can you say that we shall be set free?" 34 Jesus replied, "Very truly I tell you, everyone who sins is a slave to sin. 35 Now a slave has no permanent place in the family, but a son belongs to it forever. 36 So if the Son sets you free, you will be free indeed.

Jesus came to set the captives free as He said in Luke 4 (NIV):16 He went to Nazareth, where he had been brought up, and on the Sabbath day he went into the synagogue, as was his custom. He stood up to read, 17 and the scroll of the prophet Isaiah was handed to him. Unrolling it, he found the place where it is written: 18 "The Spirit of the Lord is on me, because he has anointed me to proclaim good news to the poor. He has sent me to proclaim freedom for the prisoners and recovery of sight for the blind, to set the oppressed free, 19 to proclaim the year of the Lord's favor." 20 Then he rolled up the scroll, gave it back to the attendant and sat down. The eyes of everyone in the synagogue were fastened on him. 21 He began by saying to them, "Today this scripture is fulfilled in your hearing."

Paul tells us that even with Christ, there is a war being waged inside of us in Romans 7 (KJV):22 For I delight in the law of God after the inward man: 23 But I see another law in my members, warring against the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity to the law of sin which is in my members. 24 O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death? 25 I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord. So then with the mind I myself serve the law of God; but with the flesh the law of sin.

If this is the case with the Christian, then before accepting Christ we are prisoners of sin, and we are absolutely unable to do good as Paul says in Romans 3 (KJV):12 They are all gone out of the way, they are together become unprofitable; there is none that doeth good, no, not one.

As Jesus said, those who commit sin are slaves of sin. We cannot do good because everything we do is tainted by the sin which we carry as a descendant of Adam. This is why we need to be saved. We were slaves of sin, but Jesus Christ has come to set those who believe in Him free from sin. We were prisoners of sin, but now we have the victory over our sinful flesh. Being born again by faith in Jesus Christ, the law of the Spirit of life sets us free from sin as Paul tells us in Romans 8 (KJV):2 For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death.

Man was a free agent and had power over himself before he sinned. After man sinned, he became a sinner with a nature to sin. Man became a prisoner of sin in his members, and could not do good in the eyes of God because everything he did was tainted with sin. This is why man needs a savior. Without Christ, man is hopelessly lost and a slave to sin. It is the realization of this lost condition that brings a man or woman to the realization that they need to repent, and receive Jesus.

In paragraph four, Irenaeus affirms, "But God, foreknowing all things, prepared fit habitations for both, kindly conferring that light which they desire on those who seek after the light of incorruption, and resort to it; but for the despisers and mockers who avoid and turn themselves away from this light, and who do, as it were, blind themselves, He has prepared darkness suitable to persons who oppose the light, and He has inflicted an appropriate punishment upon those who try to avoid being subject to Him." Irenaeus is again referring to the parable of the wedding feast. The one who does not believe in Jesus, and who turns away from the light, is like one who goes to a wedding without proper attire as in Matthew 22 (NIV):11 "But when the king came in to see the guests, he noticed a man there who was not wearing wedding clothes. 12 He asked, 'How did you get in here without wedding clothes, friend?' The man was speechless. 13 "Then the king told the attendants, 'Tie him hand and foot, and throw him outside, into the darkness, where there will be weeping and gnashing of teeth.'

Jesus said that He is the light of the world as we read in John 8 (NIV):12 When Jesus spoke again to the people, he said, "I am the light of the world. Whoever follows me will never walk in darkness, but will have the light of life."

To reject Jesus is to walk in darkness. Irenaeus then continues and again affirms, "Submission to God is eternal rest, so that they who shun the light have a place worthy of their flight; and those who fly from eternal rest, have a habitation in accordance with their fleeing.” Irenaeus agrees with Jesus who said as much in Matthew 11 (KJV):28 Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. 29 Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls. 30 For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light.

Irenaeus then concludes, “Now, since all good things are with God, they who by their own determination fly from God, do defraud themselves of all good things; and having been [thus] defrauded of all good things with respect to God, they shall consequently fall under the just judgment of God. For those persons who shun rest shall justly incur punishment, and those who avoid the light shall justly dwell in darkness. For as in the case of this temporal light, those who shun it do deliver themselves over to darkness, so that they do themselves become the cause to themselves that they are destitute of light, and do inhabit darkness; and, as I have already observed, the light is not the cause of such an [unhappy] condition of existence to them; so those who fly from the eternal light of God, which contains in itself all good things, are themselves the cause to themselves of their inhabiting eternal darkness, destitute of all good things, having become to themselves the cause of [their consignment to] an abode of that nature.”

And in that place of eternal darkness, there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth as Jesus said.

Commentary Summary Book 4: Chapter XXXIX

To summarize again, Irenaeus points out that man has received the knowledge of good and evil. Although he acknowledges that death was the result of Adam’s sin, he seems to feel that man is not good or bad but does need discipline. Man learned in the garden that disobeying God is an evil thing and causes death. Man now has a “surer and an undoubted comprehension” of “matters submitted to him.” He has the mental power to know both the good of obedience and the evil of disobedience. Now he knows that obedience to God preserves life. Man has a “twofold experience, possessing knowledge of both kinds,” that “with discipline he may make choice of the better things.” Man must choose the good to preserve his life or suffer death for disobedience to God. God is creating in man His workmanship. Man must not “become hardened and lose the impression of His fingers.” And “by preserving the framework” man shall “ascend to that which is perfect.” If however man is ungrateful to God, he loses “at once” both “His workmanship and life.” “To be created is that of human nature,” Irenaeus says. Man must deliver up what is his, that is, “his faith towards Him and subjection,” in order to “receive His handiwork and be a perfect work of God.” God does not “exercise compulsion upon anyone unwilling to accept the exercise of His skill.” If man perishes, it is through his own fault because he rejects the “exercise of His skill,” and has “apostatized from the light given by the Father.” Those who submit to God find “eternal rest.” Those who shun the light “justly incur punishment, and cause themselves to inhabit eternal darkness, destitute of all good things.”

First of all, to see how great was the effect of the fall of man, we start at the beginning. We know that the knowledge of good and evil is first mentioned in Genesis 2 (NIV):9 The LORD God made all kinds of trees grow out of the ground—trees that were pleasing to the eye and good for food. In the middle of the garden were the tree of life and the tree of the knowledge of good and evil.

And we know that the LORD God commanded Adam not to eat of this tree as in Genesis 2 (NIV):15 The LORD God took the man and put him in the Garden of Eden to work it and take care of it. 16 And the LORD God commanded the man, “You are free to eat from any tree in the garden; 17 but you must not eat from the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, for when you eat from it you will certainly die.”

The only other time the words knowledge, good, and evil are mentioned together in the Scriptures is in Deuteronomy 1 (KJV):39 Moreover your little ones, which ye said should be a prey, and your children, which in that day had no knowledge between good and evil, they shall go in thither, and unto them will I give it, and they shall possess it.

Therefore, children under the age of accountability have no knowledge of good or evil. However, man above the age of accountability has this knowledge, but this awareness of good and evil alone cannot save him.

And God did create man innocent. Yet, when Adam and Eve sinned, they became sinners and fell short of the glory of God as stated by Paul in Romans 3 (KJV):23 For all have sinned, and come short of the glory of God;

Paul explains that through Adam, all men became helpless, ungodly, sinners, and enemies of God in Romans 5 (KJV):6 For when we were yet without strength, in due time Christ died for the ungodly. 7 For scarcely for a righteous man will one die: yet peradventure for a good man some would even dare to die. 8 But God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us. 9 Much more then, being now justified by his blood, we shall be saved from wrath through him. 10 For if, when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by his life. 11 And not only so, but we also joy in God through our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom we have now received the atonement.

Paul explains that all of this came about by one man's sin in Romans 5 (KJV):12 Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned: 13 (For until the law sin was in the world: but sin is not imputed when there is no law. 14 Nevertheless death reigned from Adam to Moses, even over them that had not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression, who is the figure of him that was to come.

Our innocence was lost when Adam sinned. Not only so, but as sinners, we are spiritually dead in our trespasses and sins, and have a sin nature, and are by this nature children of wrath as Paul tells us in Ephesians 2 (KJV):1 And you hath he quickened, who were dead in trespasses and sins; 2 Wherein in time past ye walked according to the course of this world, according to the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience: 3 Among whom also we all had our conversation in times past in the lusts of our flesh, fulfilling the desires of the flesh and of the mind; and were by nature the children of wrath, even as others.

We walked according to the course of this world, and according to the prince of the power of the air. And the death Paul refers to here is not only spiritual death, but physical death was a result of Adam's sin as well as we read in 1 Corinthians 15 (KJV):21 For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. 22 For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive.

Man without Christ is dead in trespasses and sins, and his body is mortal and death doomed. Not only so, but man in this condition is said to suppress or hold down the truth about God in unrighteousness as we read in Romans 1 (KJV):18 For the wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men, who hold the truth in unrighteousness; 19 Because that which may be known of God is manifest in them; for God hath shewed it unto them. 20 For the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead; so that they are without excuse: 21 Because that, when they knew God, they glorified him not as God, neither were thankful; but became vain in their imaginations, and their foolish heart was darkened.

Being in this condition as an unbelieving sinner, man's mind and conscience are said to be defiled as we see in Titus 1 (KJV):15 Unto the pure all things are pure: but unto them that are defiled and unbelieving is nothing pure; but even their mind and conscience is defiled.

The problem for man is that his conscience is defiled as a result of sin, and he does not have the right standards by which to judge by, having gone his own way in unbelief. This is true of all men and women without exception. Not only so, but man's heart is said to be deceitful above all things by the prophet Jeremiah as we read in Jeremiah 17 (NASB):9 "The heart is more deceitful than all else And is desperately sick; Who can understand it?"

The heart is the center of man's emotions. It is from the heart of man that God wants our worship to come from as we read in Isaiah 29 (ESV):13 Then the Lord said, "Because this people draw near with their words And honor Me with their lip service, But they remove their hearts far from Me, And their reverence for Me consists of tradition learned by rote.

And in Jeremiah 17 (KJV):10 I the LORD search the heart, I try the reins, even to give every man according to his ways, and according to the fruit of his doings.

It is what comes out of our heart that defiles us as we read in Matthew 15 (KJV):18 But those things which proceed out of the mouth come forth from the heart; and they defile the man. 19 For out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, false witness, blasphemies: 20 These are the things which defile a man: but to eat with unwashen hands defileth not a man.

When we have not repented and come to Christ, our heart remains in sin. When we are in this condition, we are said to be without excuse before God, having rejected the knowledge of God as we read in Romans 1 (KJV):28 And even as they did not like to retain God in their knowledge, God gave them over to a reprobate mind, to do those things which are not convenient; 29 Being filled with all unrighteousness, fornication, wickedness, covetousness, maliciousness; full of envy, murder, debate, deceit, malignity; whisperers, 30 Backbiters, haters of God, spiteful, proud, boasters, inventors of evil things, disobedient to parents, 31 Without understanding, covenantbreakers, without natural affection, implacable, unmerciful: 32 Who knowing the judgment of God, that they which commit such things are worthy of death, not only do the same, but have pleasure in them that do them.

Man knows the ordinance of God, that those who practice such things are worthy of death, yet still chooses to do evil. As a result of man's rejection of the knowledge of God, he is alienated from the life of God because of the ignorance in him as Paul says in Ephesians 4 (NASB):17 So this I say, and affirm together with the Lord, that you walk no longer just as the Gentiles also walk, in the futility of their mind, 18 being darkened in their understanding, excluded from the life of God because of the ignorance that is in them, because of the hardness of their heart; 19 and they, having become callous, have given themselves over to sensuality for the practice of every kind of impurity with greediness.

Man shows that the work of the law of God is written in his heart when his conscience is seen to be judging right and wrong as see in Romans 2 (KJV):14 For when the Gentiles, which have not the law, do by nature the things contained in the law, these, having not the law, are a law unto themselves: 15 Which shew the work of the law written in their hearts, their conscience also bearing witness, and their thoughts the mean while accusing or else excusing one another;) 16 In the day when God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ according to my gospel.

All men and women without exception are said to be under sin and unrighteous as we read in Romans 3 (KJV):9 What then? are we better than they? No, in no wise: for we have before proved both Jews and Gentiles, that they are all under sin; 10 As it is written, There is none righteous, no, not one:

I believe Irenaeus' whole argument in this section is summed up here when he says in paragraph one, speaking of man, "Wherefore he has also had a twofold experience, possessing knowledge of both kinds, that with discipline he may make choice of the better things."

Irenaeus believed that God created man as a free agent, and in possession of power over himself to make good choices and bad choices. According to Irenaeus, man is not good or bad but he has the power to become good or bad by the choices he makes. Man is the workmanship of God, and if he is obedient to God, and preserves His workmanship or framework or the imprint of His fingers which is within him as moist clay, he will become perfect. According to Irenaeus, if man disciplines himself to choose the good, and be obedient to God, giving God his faith and subjection, man will become immortal. But is this what the Scriptures teach us?

Does man preserve his life by obedience to God, or forfeit his life by disobedience to God? That is, does man live or die by the choices he makes? We have already shown that man is sinful, and a sinner with a sinful nature. Free will is an issue here as well as man's nature. However, we will deal with free will in Chapter 30: Free Will, and deal with man's nature here.

Now if man is neither good or bad, and has power over the choices he makes, then it would be reasonable to conclude, as Irenaeus says, that man could achieve perfection by submitting himself to God and obeying His commandments. Ultimately then man would deserve immortality based upon his good choices. But is the nature of man fully described by what Irenaeus says here? Or is there more that the Scriptures have to say about the nature of man?

When Irenaeus says that man must deliver up what is his, that is, "his faith towards Him and subjection," in order to "receive His handiwork and be a perfect work of God," does man have faith of his own to give God? Certainly another man's faith would not suffice for us, and we do need a faith of our own. But the Scriptures tell us that the faith that saves us is a gift of God as we read in Ephesians 2 (KJV):8 For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God: 9 Not of works, lest any man should boast. 10 For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them.

Paul tells us plainly that the faith that saves us is not of ourselves, but is the gift of God. Again Paul tells us that faith comes by hearing the word preached as we read in Romans 10 (NASB):17 So faith comes from hearing, and hearing by the word of Christ.

Again, Paul says that we are God's workmanship created in Christ Jesus for good works. We have to first be in Christ Jesus in order to do the good works He created us for. It is at the time when we accept Jesus Christ as Lord and Savior that we are in Christ Jesus, that is, we are placed into the body of Christ as we read again in 1 Corinthians 12 (KJV):13 For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free; and have been all made to drink into one Spirit.

It is God who places the members in the body as it pleases Him as in 1 Corinthians 12 (KJV):18 But now hath God set the members every one of them in the body, as it hath pleased him.

It is at the time when we repent and believe in Jesus Christ that we are made alive together with Christ Jesus as Paul says in Ephesians 2 (KJV):4 But God, who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith he loved us, 5 Even when we were dead in sins, hath quickened us together with Christ, (by grace ye are saved;) 6 And hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus: 7 That in the ages to come he might shew the exceeding riches of his grace in his kindness toward us through Christ Jesus.

God made us alive when we obeyed Him, and believed in His Son. Being thus born of the Spirit we are created anew in our spirit in righteousness and true holiness as Paul says in Ephesians 4 (KJV):24 And that ye put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness.

This creative act of God in our spirit resulted in a new nature of holiness and truth in our spirit. It is a finished work, and it is not something that is happening gradually as we make good choices. The "moist clay," or framework of His workmanship, or impression of His fingers is in our Spirit the moment we believe in Jesus Christ. It is in our soul that we are changed from glory to glory. Our soul is made up of our mind, will, emotions, and conscience. This is where our obedience to God's word comes in to play. It through His word that we are progressively sanctified in our mind, our will, our emotions, and in our conscience as Jesus prayed in John 17 (NIV):17 Sanctify them by the truth; your word is truth.

And in John 15 (KJV):3 Now ye are clean through the word which I have spoken unto you.

As we are obedient to the word of God, we are progressively sanctified in our souls. This is where our good choices have effect. As we put off the former conversation, the old self, and put on the new self, and walk in the light of the word of God, we are cleansed in our soul, and our character is changed to be more like Jesus as we read in 2 Corinthians 3 (KJV):18 But we all, with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord.

As we trust in God's word, our conscience is cleansed and we begin to have right standards by which to judge by. And our mind, will, and emotions are also cleansed as we hear and do the word of God. When we accept Christ, it is as though we took a bath as Jesus explained to Peter in John 13 (NIV):5 After that, he poured water into a basin and began to wash his disciples' feet, drying them with the towel that was wrapped around him. 6 He came to Simon Peter, who said to him, "Lord, are you going to wash my feet?" 7 Jesus replied, "You do not realize now what I am doing, but later you will understand." 8 "No," said Peter, "you shall never wash my feet." Jesus answered, "Unless I wash you, you have no part with me." 9 "Then, Lord," Simon Peter replied, "not just my feet but my hands and my head as well!" 10 Jesus answered, "Those who have had a bath need only to wash their feet; their whole body is clean. And you are clean, though not every one of you." 11 For he knew who was going to betray him, and that was why he said not every one was clean.

Once we have bathed by accepting Jesus Christ by faith, and we have believed that He died on the cross for our sins and rose again, and we confess Him as Lord, we are clean. To put it another way, Paul says we are saved as we read in Romans 10 (KJV):8 But what saith it? The word is nigh thee, even in thy mouth, and in thy heart: that is, the word of faith, which we preach; 9 That if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved. 10 For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness; and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation.

We do not need to take a bath all over again to be clean, or to be saved. We are saved and cleansed of all our sins the moment we accept Christ. From then on we will just need to wash our feet and we are completely clean.

There is still more to Irenaeus' thinking on the nature of man.

Book 4: Chapter XL.—One and the same God the Father inflicts punishment on the reprobate, and bestows rewards on the elect.

1. It is therefore one and the same God the Father who has prepared good things with Himself for those who desire His fellowship, and who remain in subjection to Him; and who has the eternal fire for the ringleader of the apostasy, the devil, and those who revolted with him, into which [fire] the Lord 1777 Matt. xxv. 41. has declared those men shall be sent who have been set apart by themselves on His left hand. And this is what has been spoken by the prophet, "I am a jealous God, making peace, and creating evil things;" 1778 Isa. xlv. 7. thus making peace and friendship with those who repent and turn to Him, and bringing [them to] unity, but preparing for the impenitent, those who shun the light, eternal fire and outer darkness, which are evils indeed to those persons who fall into them.

2. If, however, it were truly one Father who confers rest, and another God who has prepared the fire, their sons would have been equally different [one from the other]; one, indeed, sending [men] into the Father's kingdom, but the other into eternal fire. But inasmuch as one and the same Lord has pointed out that the whole human race shall be divided at the judgment, "as a shepherd divideth the sheep from the goats," 1779 Matt. xxv. 32. and that to some He will say, "Come, ye blessed of My Father, receive the kingdom which has been prepared for you," 1780 Matt. xxv. 34. but to others, "Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, which My Father has prepared for the devil and his angels," 1781 Matt. xxv. 41. one and the same Father is manifestly declared [in this passage], "making peace and creating evil things," preparing fit things for both; as also there is one Judge sending both into a fit place, as the Lord sets forth in the parable of the tares and the wheat, where He says, "As therefore the tares are gathered together, and burned in the fire, so shall it be at the end of the world. The Son of man shall send His angels, and they shall gather from His kingdom everything that offendeth, and those who work iniquity, and shall send them into a furnace of fire: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth. Then shall the just shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father." 1782 Matt. xiii. 40–43. The Father, therefore, who has prepared the kingdom for the righteous, into which the Son has received those worthy of it, is He who has also prepared the furnace of fire, into which these angels commissioned by the Son of man shall send those persons who deserve it, according to God's command.

3. The Lord, indeed, sowed good seed in His own field; 1783 Matt. xiii. 34. [Applicable to the origin of heresies.] and He says, "The field is the world." But while men slept, the enemy came, and "sowed tares in the midst of the wheat, and went his way." 1784 Matt. xiii. 28. Hence we learn that this was the apostate angel and the enemy, because he was envious of God's workmanship, and took in hand to render this [workmanship] an enmity with God. For this cause also God has banished from His presence him who did of his own accord stealthily sow the tares, that is, him who brought about the transgression; 1785 The old Latin translator varies from this (the Greek of which was recovered by Grabe from two ancient Catenæ Patrum), making the clause run thus, that is, the transgression which he had himself introduced, making the explanatory words to refer to the tares, and not, as in the Greek, to the sower of the tares, but He took compassion upon man, who, through want of care no doubt, but still wickedly [on the part of another], became involved in disobedience; and He turned the enmity by which [the devil] had designed to make [man] the enemy of God, against the author of it, by removing His own anger from man, turning it in another direction, and sending it instead upon the serpent. As also the Scripture tells us that God said to the serpent, "And I will place enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed. He 1786 Following the reading of the LXX. αὐτός σου τηρήσει κεφαλὴν. shall bruise thy head, and thou shall bruise his heel." 1787 Gen. iii. 15. And the Lord summed up in Himself this enmity, when He was made man from a woman, and trod upon his [the serpent's] head, as I have pointed out in the preceding book.

Summary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus affirms, "It is therefore one and the same God the Father who has prepared good things with Himself for those who desire His fellowship, and who remain in subjection to Him; and who has the eternal fire for the ringleader of the apostasy, the devil, and those who revolted with him, into which [fire] the Lord has declared those men shall be sent who have been set apart by themselves on His left hand," referring to Matthew 25:41. Irenaeus then affirms, "And this is what has been spoken by the prophet, "I am a jealous God, making peace, and creating evil things," referring to Exodus 20:5,6 and Isaiah 45:7, "thus making peace and friendship with those who repent and turn to Him, and bringing [them to] unity, but preparing for the impenitent, those who shun the light, eternal fire and outer darkness," referring in part to Matthew 25:30, "which are evils indeed to those persons who fall into them."

In paragraph two, Irenaeus affirms, "If, however, it were truly one Father who confers rest, and another God who has prepared the fire, their sons would have been equally different [one from the other]; one, indeed, sending [men] into the Father's kingdom, but the other into eternal fire. But inasmuch as one and the same Lord has pointed out that the whole human race shall be divided at the judgment, "as a shepherd divideth the sheep from the goats," referring to Matthew 25:32, "and that to some He will say, "Come, ye blessed of My Father, receive the kingdom which has been prepared for you," referring to Matthew 25:34, "but to others, "Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, which My Father has prepared for the devil and his angels," referring to Matthew 25:41, "one and the same Father is manifestly declared [in this passage], "making peace and creating evil things," preparing fit things for both;" Irenaeus continues as he testifies, "as also there is one Judge sending both into a fit place, as the Lord sets forth in the parable of the tares and the wheat, where He says, "As therefore the tares are gathered together, and burned in the fire, so shall it be at the end of the world. The Son of man shall send His angels, and they shall gather from His kingdom everything that offendeth, and those who work iniquity, and shall send them into a furnace of fire: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth. Then shall the just shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father," referring to Matthew 13:40-43. Irenaeus concludes as he affirms, "The Father, therefore, who has prepared the kingdom for the righteous, into which the Son has received those worthy of it, is He who has also prepared the furnace of fire, into which these angels commissioned by the Son of man shall send those persons who deserve it, according to God's command.

In paragraph three, Irenaeus continues as he says, "The Lord, indeed, sowed good seed in His own field." Irenaeus then testifies, "and He says, "The field is the world," referring to Matthew 13:38. Irenaeus continues as he testifies, "But while men slept, the enemy came, and "sowed tares in the midst of the wheat, and went his way," referring to Matthew 13:25. Irenaeus then explains, "Hence we learn that this was the apostate angel and the enemy, because he was envious of God's workmanship, and took in hand to render this [workmanship] an enmity with God. For this cause also God has banished from His presence him who did of his own accord stealthily sow the tares, that is, him who brought about the transgression;" And Irenaeus then affirms, "but He took compassion upon man, who, through want of care no doubt, but still wickedly [on the part of another], became involved in disobedience; and He turned the enmity by which [the devil] had designed to make [man] the enemy of God, against the author of it, by removing His own anger from man, turning it in another direction, and sending it instead upon the serpent. As also the Scripture tells us that God said to the serpent, "And I will place enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed. He shall bruise thy head, and thou shall bruise his heel," referring to Genesis 3:15. Irenaeus then concludes, "And the Lord summed up in Himself this enmity, when He was made man from a woman, and trod upon his [the serpent's] head, as I have pointed out in the preceding book."

Commentary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus affirms, "It is therefore one and the same God the Father who has prepared good things with Himself for those who desire His fellowship, and who remain in subjection to Him; and who has the eternal fire for the ringleader of the apostasy, the devil, and those who revolted with him, into which [fire] the Lord has declared those men shall be sent who have been set apart by themselves on His left hand," referring to Matthew 25 (NIV):41 "Then he will say to those on his left, 'Depart from me, you who are cursed, into the eternal fire prepared for the devil and his angels.

By his words “on His left hand,” Jesus is referring to the nations as we read in Matthew 25 (NIV):31 “When the Son of Man comes in his glory, and all the angels with him, he will sit on his glorious throne. 32 All the nations will be gathered before him, and he will separate the people one from another as a shepherd separates the sheep from the goats. 33 He will put the sheep on his right and the goats on his left.

Jesus prophesies here of a time when He will come in His glory, and all the nations will be gathered before Him. The sheep nations will be on His right and the goat nations on His left. Based on their treatment of His brethren, the Jews, during the great tribulation period, the sheep nations on His right will be blessed and enter the kingdom as we read in Matthew 25 (NIV):34 “Then the King will say to those on his right, ‘Come, you who are blessed by my Father; take your inheritance, the kingdom prepared for you since the creation of the world. 35 For I was hungry and you gave me something to eat, I was thirsty and you gave me something to drink, I was a stranger and you invited me in, 36 I needed clothes and you clothed me, I was sick and you looked after me, I was in prison and you came to visit me.’ 37 “Then the righteous will answer him, ‘Lord, when did we see you hungry and feed you, or thirsty and give you something to drink? 38 When did we see you a stranger and invite you in, or needing clothes and clothe you? 39 When did we see you sick or in prison and go to visit you?’ 40 “The King will reply, ‘Truly I tell you, whatever you did for one of the least of these brothers and sisters of mine, you did for me.’

Those nations which did not give shelter to His brethren, the Jews, during the great tribulation will be cursed and cast into eternal punishment as see in Matthew 25 (NIV):41 “Then he will say to those on his left, ‘Depart from me, you who are cursed, into the eternal fire prepared for the devil and his angels. 42 For I was hungry and you gave me nothing to eat, I was thirsty and you gave me nothing to drink, 43 I was a stranger and you did not invite me in, I needed clothes and you did not clothe me, I was sick and in prison and you did not look after me.’ 44 “They also will answer, ‘Lord, when did we see you hungry or thirsty or a stranger or needing clothes or sick or in prison, and did not help you?’ 45 “He will reply, ‘Truly I tell you, whatever you did not do for one of the least of these, you did not do for me.’ 46 “Then they will go away to eternal punishment, but the righteous to eternal life.”

Irenaeus speaks more generally of those who do not repent, but the Scripture is speaking of the judgment of the nations, and which ones will enter the Kingdom when Jesus comes in His glory at the first resurrection. Jesus is not speaking of personal judgment here.

Irenaeus then affirms, “And this is what has been spoken by the prophet, “I am a jealous God, making peace, and creating evil things,” referring in context to Exodus 20 (NIV):5 You shall not bow down to them or worship them; for I, the LORD your God, am a jealous God, punishing the children for the sin of the parents to the third and fourth generation of those who hate me, 6 but showing love to a thousand generations of those who love me and keep my commandments.

And to Isaiah 45 (Septuagint):7 I am he that prepared light, and formed darkness; who make peace, and create evil; I am the Lord God, that does all these things.

And also as in Isaiah 45 (NASB):7 I form the light, and create darkness: I make peace, and create evil: I the LORD do all these things.

And Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “thus making peace and friendship with those who repent and turn to Him, and bringing [them to] unity, but preparing for the impenitent, those who shun the light, eternal fire and outer darkness,” referring in part to Matthew 25 (NIV):29 For whoever has will be given more, and they will have an abundance. Whoever does not have, even what they have will be taken from them. 30 And throw that worthless servant outside, into the darkness, where there will be weeping and gnashing of teeth.’

Irenaeus concludes as he affirms, “which are evils indeed to those persons who fall into them.”

In paragraph two, Irenaeus continues as he argues against the Gnostics, “If, however, it were truly one Father who confers rest, and another God who has prepared the fire, their sons would have been equally different [one from the other]; one, indeed, sending [men] into the Father’s kingdom, but the other into eternal fire. But inasmuch as one and the same Lord has pointed out that the whole human race shall be divided at the judgment, “as a shepherd divideth the sheep from the goats,” referring again to Matthew 25:32 above, “and that to some He will say, “Come, ye blessed of My Father, receive the kingdom which has been prepared for you,” referring again to Matthew 25:34, “but to others, “Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, which My Father has prepared for the devil and his angels,” referring again to Matthew 25:41, “one and the same Father is manifestly declared [in this passage], “making peace and creating evil things,” preparing fit things for both;”

Irenaeus’ argument against the Gnostics is reasonable. If there were two gods, one who “confers rest,” while the other “has prepared the fire,” then “their sons would have been equally different [one from the other];” However, while it is true that the righteous will inherit the kingdom and the unrighteous will be cast into everlasting fire, the sheep and goats spoken of are all the nations, and not individual men and women as we read in Matthew 25 (NIV):31 “When the Son of Man comes in his glory, and all the angels with him, he will sit on his glorious throne. 32 All the nations will be gathered before him, and he will separate the people one from another as a shepherd separates the sheep from the goats. 33 He will put the sheep on his right and the goats on his left.

The time of this judgment is at the second coming of Christ, right before the commencement of the Kingdom age of a thousand years as is stated in Matthew 25 (NIV):31 “When the Son of Man comes in his glory, and all the angels with him, he will sit on his glorious throne.

Christ will sit on His glorious throne at this time, and the sheep nations on His right will be blessed and enter the kingdom as we read again in Matthew 25 (NIV):34 “Then the King will say to those on his right, ‘Come, you who are blessed by my Father; take your inheritance, the kingdom prepared for you since the creation of the world.

This is the commencement of the Kingdom age which will last for a thousand years as we read in Revelation 20 (KJV):1 And I saw an angel come down from heaven, having the key of the bottomless pit and a great chain in his hand. 2 And he laid hold on the dragon, that old serpent, which is the Devil, and Satan, and bound him a thousand years, 3 And cast him into the bottomless pit, and shut him up, and set a seal upon him, that he should deceive the nations no more, till the thousand years should be fulfilled: and after that he must be loosed a little season. 4 And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them: and I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshipped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands; and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. 5 But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection.

As Christ’s first coming was over a period of 33 ½ years, so Christ’s second coming will take place over a period of seven years. First, the Church will be raptured and resurrected, and then the great tribulation will begin and last for seven years. At the end of this great tribulation, the Antichrist will be destroyed with his armies, and the Kingdom age will be inaugurated. This is the time of the first resurrection, and those who are in this resurrection will reign with Christ for the thousand years as we read in Revelation 20 (KJV):6 Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years. 7 And when the thousand years are expired, Satan shall be loosed out of his prison, 8 And shall go out to deceive the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth, Gog, and Magog, to gather them together to battle: the number of whom is as the sand of the sea. 9 And they went up on the breadth of the earth, and compassed the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city: and fire came down from God out of heaven, and devoured them. 10 And the devil that deceived them was cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, where the beast and the false prophet are, and shall be tormented day and night for ever and ever.

The time of Christ’s second coming and the judgment of the nations is not the same as the time of the white throne judgment when heaven and earth have fled away as mentioned in Revelation 20 (KJV):11 And I saw a great white throne, and him that sat on it, from whose face the earth and the heaven fled away; and there was found no place for them.

The time of this white throne judgment is after the Kingdom age is over and the wicked dead are then judged as we continue in Revelation 20 (KJV):12 And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened: and another book was opened, which is the book of life: and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works. 13 And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them: and they were judged every man according to their works. 14 And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death. 15 And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire.

In Matthew, chapter 25, the nations are judged, and the judgment is before the throne of His glory. This is not the same as the white throne judgment mentioned in Revelation, chapter 20.

Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “as also there is one Judge sending both into a fit place, as the Lord sets forth in the parable of the tares and the wheat, where He says, “As therefore the tares are gathered together, and burned in the fire, so shall it be at the end of the world. The Son of man shall send His angels, and they shall gather from His kingdom everything that offendeth, and those who work iniquity, and shall send them into a furnace of fire: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth. Then shall the just shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father,” referring to Matthew 13 (NIV):40 “As the weeds are pulled up and burned in the fire, so it will be at the end of the age. 41 The Son of Man will send out his angels, and they will weed out of his kingdom everything that causes sin and all who do evil. 42 They will throw them into the blazing furnace, where there will be weeping and gnashing of teeth. 43 Then the righteous will shine like the sun in the kingdom of their Father. Whoever has ears, let them hear.

Irenaeus correctly interprets these verses. However, the time when the tares will be gathered up and burned is at the “end of the age,” and right before the new heaven and the new earth as we read in Revelation 21 (KJV):1 And I saw a new heaven and a new earth: for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more sea.

Irenaeus concludes as he affirms, “The Father, therefore, who has prepared the kingdom for the righteous, into which the Son has received those worthy of it, is He who has also prepared the furnace of fire, into which these angels commissioned by the Son of man shall send those persons who deserve it, according to God’s command.”

Irenaeus continues in paragraph three saying, “The Lord, indeed, sowed good seed in His own field; and He says, “The field is the world.” Irenaeus is interpreting the parable of the tares and the wheat. Note that the Lord did not say that the field was “His own” in the parable in Matthew 13 (NIV):24 Jesus told them another parable: “The kingdom of heaven is like a man who sowed good seed in his field. 25 But while everyone was sleeping, his enemy came and sowed weeds among the wheat, and went away. 26 When the wheat sprouted and formed heads, then the weeds also appeared. 27 “The owner’s servants came to him and said, ‘Sir, didn’t you sow good seed in your field? Where then did the weeds come from?’ 28 “‘An enemy did this,’ he replied. “The servants asked him, ‘Do you want us to go and pull them up?’ 29 “‘No,’ he answered, ‘because while you are pulling the weeds, you may uproot the wheat with them. 30 Let both grow together until the harvest. At that time I will tell the harvesters: First collect the weeds and tie them in bundles to be burned; then gather the wheat and bring it into my barn.’”

This parable is also then explained by Jesus in Matthew 13 (NIV):36 Then he left the crowd and went into the house. His disciples came to him and said, “Explain to us the parable of the weeds in the field.” 37 He answered, “The one who sowed the good seed is the Son of Man. 38 The field is the world, and the good seed stands for the people of the kingdom. The weeds are the people of the evil one, 39 and the enemy who sows them is the devil. The harvest is the end of the age, and the harvesters are angels. 40 “As the weeds are pulled up and burned in the fire, so it will be at the end of the age. 41 The Son of Man will send out his angels, and they will weed out of his kingdom everything that causes sin and all who do evil. 42 They will throw them into the blazing furnace, where there will be weeping and gnashing of teeth. 43 Then the righteous will shine like the sun in the kingdom of their Father. Whoever has ears, let them hear.

Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “But while men slept, the enemy came, and “sowed tares in the midst of the wheat, and went his way,” referring to Matthew 13 (NIV):25 But while everyone was sleeping, his enemy came and sowed weeds among the wheat, and went away.

Irenaeus then explains, “Hence we learn that this was the apostate angel and the enemy, because he was envious of God’s workmanship, and took in hand to render this [workmanship] an enmity with God.” Irenaeus is referring to Matthew 13 (NIV):38 The field is the world, and the good seed stands for the people of the kingdom. The weeds are the people of the evil one, 39 and the enemy who sows them is the devil. The harvest is the end of the age, and the harvesters are angels.

Irenaeus then asserts, “For this cause also God has banished from His presence him who did of his own accord stealthily sow the tares, that is, him who brought about the transgression; but He took compassion upon man, who, through want of care no doubt, but still wickedly [on the part of another], became involved in disobedience; and He turned the enmity by which [the devil] had designed to make [man] the enemy of God, against the author of it, by removing His own anger from man, turning it in another direction, and sending it instead upon the serpent. As also the Scripture tells us that God said to the serpent, “And I will place enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed. He shall bruise thy head, and thou shall bruise his heel,” referring to Genesis 3 (NIV):15 And I will put enmity between you and the woman, and between your offspring and hers; he will crush your head, and you will strike his heel.”

There will be no second chance for the devil, who is Satan, and his angels. The devil was the tempter in the garden, and the one who “brought about the transgression.” And so it does seem that God “took compassion on man” who “became involved in disobedience.” And it is evident that it was God’s plan all along to redeem mankind, as God promises the redeemer will bruise the head of the serpent through the seed of the woman. God also made a way for man to be out from under his anger, but His anger is not removed from man until he has faith in the redeemer, Jesus Christ as John says in John 3 (NIV):36 Whoever believes in the Son has eternal life, but whoever rejects the Son will not see life, for God’s wrath remains on them.

Irenaeus does not make this clear here.

Irenaeus then concludes, “And the Lord summed up in Himself this enmity, when He was made man from a woman, and trod upon his [the serpent’s] head, as I have pointed out in the preceding book.” This last statement reminds us of Paul’s words in Ephesians 2 (NIV):14 For he himself is our peace, who has made the two groups one and has destroyed the barrier, the dividing wall of hostility, 15 by setting aside in his flesh the law with its commands and regulations. His purpose was to create in himself one new humanity out of the two, thus making peace, 16 and in one body to reconcile both of them to God through the cross, by which he put to death their hostility.

The reconciliation Paul speaks of is between God and man, and between Jew and Gentile. Therefore the enmity that was put to death is between God and man. This enmity was not put to death until Jesus died on the cross. Irenaeus does not make this clear.

Now we see that Irenaeus in this chapter of his writing correctly identifies our mortal enemy, the apostate angel, Satan, and the devil, as the serpent in Genesis. And Irenaeus correctly connects the “seed” of the woman to be the Lord Jesus Christ, our Redeemer, and he identifies the serpent’s head as the head that the Lord Jesus Christ bruised when He died for our sins on the cross.

Commentary Summary Book 4: Chapter XL

Irenaeus does not say a lot here about the nature of man, but he is preparing us for his statements in the very next chapter. It is important to note here that Irenaeus states that God “took compassion upon man, who, through want of care no doubt, but still wickedly [on the part of another], became involved in disobedience;” Irenaeus seems to say here that man was merely “involved in disobedience,” and was not directly responsible. Irenaeus then also asserts that God “turned the enmity by which [the devil] had designed to make [man] the enemy of God, against the author of it, by removing His own anger from man, turning it in another direction, and sending it instead upon the serpent.” To substantiate his assertion, Irenaeus quotes from Genesis, chapter three, as we read in Genesis 3 (NIV):15 And I will put enmity between you and the woman, and between your offspring and hers; he will crush your head, and you will strike his heel.”

By asserting that God “turned the enmity by which [the devil] had designed to make [man] the enemy of God, against the author of it, by removing His own anger from man, turning it in another direction, and sending it instead upon the serpent,” Irenaeus is trying to answer the question why God could forgive man’s disobedience but not Satan’s. Irenaeus seems to assert that since Satan was the one who tried to make man the enemy of God, man’s disobedience was less than that of Satan’s disobedience. I believe there is some truth in that assertion. I would also suggest that it could also be that Satan disobeyed God of his own volition, and was the instigator of the other one third of the angelic disobedience as is stated in Revelation 12 (KJV):4 And his tail drew the third part of the stars of heaven, and did cast them to the earth: and the dragon stood before the woman which was ready to be delivered, for to devour her child as soon as it was born.

And in Revelation 12 (KJV):9 And the great dragon was cast out, that old serpent, called the Devil, and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world: he was cast out into the earth, and his angels were cast out with him.

In other words, Satan was not tempted by an outside source as man was. However, when Irenaeus says that God removed “His own anger from man, turning it in another direction, and sending it instead upon the serpent,” he does not qualify his statement with the rest of what God says in Genesis, chapter three. As we look in Genesis, chapter three, we note that God judged Adam and Eve as well, and not just the serpent. In other words, God did not leave Adam and Eve unpunished for their sin.

The first thing we note after Adam sinned is that they hid themselves from the presence of the Lord. In other words, they felt shame as we read in Genesis 3 (NIV):8 Then the man and his wife heard the sound of the LORD God as he was walking in the garden in the cool of the day, and they hid from the LORD God among the trees of the garden. 9 But the LORD God called to the man, “Where are you?” 10 He answered, “I heard you in the garden, and I was afraid because I was naked; so I hid.” 11 And he said, “Who told you that you were naked? Have you eaten from the tree that I commanded you not to eat from?” 12 The man said, “The woman you put here with me—she gave me some fruit from the tree, and I ate it.”

The Lord then gave judgment on the serpent as we read in Genesis 3 (NIV):13 Then the LORD God said to the woman, “What is this you have done?” The woman said, “The serpent deceived me, and I ate.” 14 So the LORD God said to the serpent, “Because you have done this, “Cursed are you above all livestock and all wild animals! You will crawl on your belly and you will eat dust all the days of your life. 15 And I will put enmity between you and the woman, and between your offspring and hers; he will crush your head, and you will strike his heel.”

The serpent’s identity is revealed in Revelation 12 (KJV):9 And the great dragon was cast out, that old serpent, called the Devil, and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world: he was cast out into the earth, and his angels were cast out with him.

The promised seed that would bruise the head of the serpent, the devil, refers to Christ, our redeemer. Possibly because man was not the instigator of his sin in the garden, but the devil was the tempter, God provided a redeemer for man whereas God held the devil responsible and irredeemable. The heel of Christ was bruised as it were on the cross, but the devil’s head was bruised by Christ on that same cross. So Genesis 3:15 is a prophetic announcement of our Savior, Jesus Christ, which Irenaeus correctly identifies.

In Genesis, chapter three we see that the Lord also turned to the woman and spoke as in Genesis 3 (KJV):16 Unto the woman he said, I will greatly multiply thy sorrow and thy conception; in sorrow thou shalt bring forth children; and thy desire shall be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee.

And the Lord also then turned to Adam and spoke as in Genesis 3 (KJV):17 And unto Adam he said, Because thou hast hearkened unto the voice of thy wife, and hast eaten of the tree, of which I commanded thee, saying, Thou shalt not eat of it: cursed is the ground for thy sake; in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life; 18 Thorns also and thistles shall it bring forth to thee; and thou shalt eat the herb of the field; 19 In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken: for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return.

Death came about because of Adam’s sin as God promised in Genesis 2 (KJV):16 And the LORD God commanded the man, saying, Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat: 17 But of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it: for in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die.

Not only was physical death a result of Adam’s sin, but spiritual death was a result as well. The necessity of a redeemer is seen in the promise itself of Genesis 3:15. God had to send His only Son to die a horrible death to save us. All who have faith in Jesus will be saved. But until we have faith, we are already judged and destined for hell to be with the devil and his angels as John tells us in John 3 (NIV):18 Whoever believes in him is not condemned, but whoever does not believe stands condemned already because they have not believed in the name of God’s one and only Son.

So the parable of the tares does not really illustrate anything about the fall of man, because man is already a “tare” until he comes to Christ. The tares in the parable are actually symbolic of the self-righteous religious ones in our churches who from all outward appearances look like the wheat, but inwardly there has been no change. It is not clear that Irenaeus understood this entirely.

Irenaeus then says “And the Lord summed up in Himself this enmity, when He was made man from a woman, and trod upon his [the serpent's] head, as I have pointed out in the preceding book.”

Irenaeus also uses the phrase, “summed up,” in Book 4: XXXVIII, paragraph one, when he says, “And for this cause our Lord in these last times, when He had summed up all things into Himself, came to us, not as He might have come, but as we were capable of beholding Him.” Without doubt, Irenaeus is speaking of our Lord's advent in the flesh, promised in Genesis 3:15. And by making reference to Genesis 3:15, Irenaeus shows some understanding of the fall of man. Again, we will summarize Irenaeus' thoughts on the nature of man at the end of this section.

Book 4: Chapter XLI.—Those persons who do not believe in God, but who are disobedient, are angels and sons of the devil, not indeed by nature, but by imitation. Close of this book, and scope of the succeeding one.

1. Inasmuch as the Lord has said that there are certain angels, [viz. those] of the devil, for whom eternal fire is prepared; and as, again, He declares with regard to the tares, “The tares are the children of the wicked one,” 4436 Matt. xiii. 38. it must be affirmed that He has ascribed all who are of the apostasy to him who is the ringleader of this transgression. But He made neither angels nor men so by nature. For we do not find that the devil created anything whatsoever, since indeed he is himself a creature of God, like the other angels. For God made all things, as also David says with regard to all things of the kind: “For He spake the word, and they were made; He commanded, and they were created.” 4437 Ps. cxlix. 5.

2. Since, therefore, all things were made by God, and since the devil has become the cause of apostasy to himself and others, justly does the Scripture always term those who remain in a state of apostasy “sons of the devil” and “angels of the wicked one” (maligni). For [the word] “son,” as one before me has observed, has a twofold meaning: one [is a son] in the order of nature, because he was born a son; the other, in that he was made so, is reputed a son, although there be a difference between being born so and being made so. For the first is indeed born from the person referred to; but the second is made so by him, whether as respects his creation or by the teaching of his doctrine. For when any person has been taught from the mouth of another, he is termed the son of him who instructs him, and the latter [is called] his father. According to nature, then—that is, according to creation, so to speak—we are all sons of God, because we have all been created by God. But with respect to obedience and doctrine we are not all the sons of God: those only are so who believe in Him and do His will. And those who do not believe, and do not obey His will, are sons and angels of the devil, because they do the works of the devil. And that such is the case He has declared in Isaiah: “I have begotten and brought up children, but they have rebelled against Me.” 4438 Isa. i. 2 And again, where He says that these children are aliens: “Strange children have lied unto Me.” 4439 Ps. xviii. 45. According to nature, then, they are [His] children, because they have been so created; but with regard to their works, they are not His children.

3. For as, among men, those sons who disobey their fathers, being disinherited, are still their sons in the course of nature, but by law are disinherited, for they do not become the heirs of their natural parents; so in the same way is it with God,—those who do not obey Him being disinherited by Him, have ceased to be His sons. Wherefore they cannot receive His inheritance: as David says, “Sinners are alienated from the womb; their anger is after the likeness of a serpent.” 4440 Ps. lviii. 3, 4. And therefore did the Lord term those whom He knew to be the offspring of men “a generation of vipers;” 4441 Matt. xxiii. 33. because after the manner of these animals they go about in subtilty, and injure others. For He said, “Beware of the leaven of the Pharisees and of the Sadducees.” 4442 Matt. xvi. 6 Speaking of Herod, too, He says, “Go ye and tell that fox,” 4443 Luke xiii. 32. aiming at his wicked cunning and deceit. Wherefore the prophet David says, “Man, being placed in honour, is made like unto cattle.” 4444 Ps. xlix. 21. And again Jeremiah says, “They are become like horses, furious about females; each one neighed after his neighbour's wife.” 4445 Jer. v. 8. And

Isaiah, when preaching in Judea, and reasoning with Israel, termed them “rulers of Sodom” and “people of Gomorrah;” 4446 Isa. i. 10. intimating that they were like the Sodomites in wickedness, and that the same description of sins was rife among them, calling them by the same name, because of the similarity of their conduct. And inasmuch as they were not by nature so created by God, but had power also to act rightly, the same person said to them, giving them good counsel, “Wash ye, make you clean; take away iniquity from your souls before mine eyes; cease from your iniquities.” 4447 Isa. i. 16. Thus, no doubt, since they had transgressed and sinned in the same manner, so did they receive the same reproof as did the Sodomites. But when they should be converted and come to repentance, and cease from evil, they should have power to become the sons of God, and to receive the inheritance of immortality which is given by Him. For this reason, therefore, He has termed those “angels of the devil,” and “children of the wicked one,” 4448 Matt. xxv. 41, Matt. xiii. 38. who give heed to the devil, and do his works. But these are, at the same time, all created by the one and the same God. When, however, they believe and are subject to God, and go on and keep His doctrine, they are the sons of God; but when they have apostatized and fallen into transgression, they are ascribed to their chief, the devil—to him who first became the cause of apostasy to himself, and afterwards to others.

Summary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus testifies, “Inasmuch as the Lord has said that there are certain angels, [viz. those] of the devil, for whom eternal fire is prepared,” referring to Matthew 25:41, “and as, again, He declares with regard to the tares, “The tares are the children of the wicked one,” referring to Matthew 13:38, “it must be affirmed that He has ascribed all who are of the apostasy to him who is the ringleader of this transgression.” Irenaeus then asserts, “But He made neither angels nor men so by nature. For we do not find that the devil created anything whatsoever, since indeed he is himself a creature of God, like the other angels. For God made all things, as also David says with regard to all things of the kind: “For He spake the word, and they were made; He commanded, and they were created,” referring to Psalm 148:5.

Then in paragraph two, Irenaeus affirms, “Since, therefore, all things were made by God, and since the devil has become the cause of apostasy to himself and others, justly does the Scripture always term those who remain in a state of apostasy “sons of the devil” and “angels of the wicked one” (maligni).” Irenaeus then argues, “For [the word] “son,” as one before me has observed, has a twofold meaning: one [is a son] in the order of nature, because he was born a son; the other, in that he was made so, is reputed a son, although there be a difference between being born so and being made so. For the first is indeed born from the person referred to; but the second is made so by him, whether as respects his creation or by the teaching of his doctrine.” Irenaeus explains, “For when any person has been taught from the mouth of another, he is termed the son of him who instructs him, and the latter [is called] his father.” Irenaeus then affirms, “According to nature, then—that is, according to creation, so to speak—we are all sons of God, because we have all been created by God.” And Irenaeus affirms further, “But with respect to obedience and doctrine we are not all the sons of God: those only are so who believe in Him and do His will. And those who do not believe, and do not obey His will, are sons and angels of the devil, because they do the works of the devil. And that such is the case He has declared in Isaiah: “I have begotten and brought up children, but they have rebelled against Me,” referring to Isaiah 1:2. Irenaeus continues as he says, “And again, where He says that these children are aliens: “Strange children have lied unto Me,” referring in context to Psalm 18:43-45. Irenaeus then concludes, “According to nature, then, they are [His] children, because they have been so created; but with regard to their works, they are not His children.”

In paragraph three, Irenaeus argues, “For as, among men, those sons who disobey their fathers, being disinherited, are still their sons in the course of nature, but by law are disinherited, for they do not become the heirs of their natural parents; so in the same way is it with God,—those who do not obey Him being disinherited by Him, have ceased to be His sons. Wherefore they cannot receive His inheritance: as David says, “Sinners are alienated from the womb; their anger is after the likeness of a serpent,” referring to Psalm 58:3-4. Irenaeus then testifies, “And therefore did the Lord term those whom He knew to be the offspring of men “a generation of vipers,” referring to Matthew 23:33, “because after the manner of these animals they go about in subtilty, and injure others.” Again Irenaeus testifies, “For He said, “Beware of the leaven of the Pharisees and of the Sadducees,” referring to Matthew 16:6. Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “Speaking of Herod, too, He says,

“Go ye and tell that fox,” referring to Luke 13:32, “aiming at his wicked cunning and deceit.” And Irenaeus adds, “Wherefore the prophet David says, “Man, being placed in honour, is made like unto cattle,” referring to Psalm 148:20. And Irenaeus then affirms, “And again Jeremiah says, “They are become like horses, furious about females; each one neighed after his neighbour’s wife,” referring to Jeremiah 5:8. Irenaeus continues as he affirms, “And Isaiah, when preaching in Judea, and reasoning with Israel, termed them “rulers of Sodom” and “people of Gomorrah,” referring to Isaiah 1:10, ”intimating that they were like the Sodomites in wickedness, and that the same description of sins was rife among them, calling them by the same name, because of the similarity of their conduct.” Irenaeus then asserts, “And inasmuch as they were not by nature so created by God, but had power also to act rightly, the same person said to them, giving them good counsel, “Wash ye, make you clean; take away iniquity from your souls before mine eyes; cease from your iniquities,” referring to Isaiah 1:16. Irenaeus then affirms, “Thus, no doubt, since they had transgressed and sinned in the same manner, so did they receive the same reproof as did the Sodomites. But when they should be converted and come to repentance, and cease from evil, they should have power to become the sons of God, and to receive the inheritance of immortality which is given by Him.” Irenaeus again testifies, “For this reason, therefore, He has termed those “angels of the devil,” and “children of the wicked one,” referring again to Matthew 25:41 and Matthew 13:38, “who give heed to the devil, and do his works.” Irenaeus thus concludes, “But these are, at the same time, all created by the one and the same God. When, however, they believe and are subject to God, and go on and keep His doctrine, they are the sons of God; but when they have apostatized and fallen into transgression, they are ascribed to their chief, the devil—to him who first became the cause of apostasy to himself, and afterwards to others.”

Commentary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus testifies, “Inasmuch as the Lord has said that there are certain angels, [viz. those] of the devil, for whom eternal fire is prepared,” referring to Matthew 25 (NIV):41 “Then he will say to those on his left, ‘Depart from me, you who are cursed, into the eternal fire prepared for the devil and his angels.

Irenaeus continues as he says, “and as, again, He declares with regard to the tares, “The tares are the children of the wicked one,” referring to Matthew 13 (NIV):38 The field is the world, and the good seed stands for the people of the kingdom. The weeds are the people of the evil one.

And Irenaeus then concludes, “it must be affirmed that He has ascribed all who are of the apostasy to him who is the ringleader of this transgression.”

We do not have much understanding yet about what Irenaeus actually means by “the apostasy,” but we will discuss it thoroughly shortly at the end of this chapter on the nature of man. Irenaeus then asserts, “But He made neither angels nor men so by nature. For we do not find that the devil created anything whatsoever, since indeed he is himself a creature of God, like the other angels. For God made all things, as also David says with regard to all things of the kind: “For He spake the word, and they were made; He commanded, and they were created,” referring to Psalm 148 (NIV):5 Let them praise the name of the LORD, for at his command they were created.

Also to Psalm 33 (NIV):9 For he spoke, and it came to be; he commanded, and it stood firm.

Then in paragraph two, Irenaeus affirms, “Since, therefore, all things were made by God, and since the devil has become the cause of apostasy to himself and others, justly does the Scripture always term those who remain in a state of apostasy “sons of the devil” and “angels of the wicked one” (maligni).”

Irenaeus is saying that “those who remain in a state of apostasy” are justly termed “sons of the devil” and “angels of the wicked one.”

Irenaeus then argues, “For [the word] “son,” as one before me has observed, has a twofold meaning: one [is a son] in the order of nature, because he was born a son; the other, in that he was made so, is reputed a son, although there be a difference between being born so and being made so. For the first is indeed born from the person referred to; but the second is made so by him, whether as respects his creation or by the teaching of his doctrine.” Irenaeus explains, “For when any person has been taught from the mouth of another, he is termed the son of him who instructs him, and the latter [is called] his father.”

Irenaeus is saying that the word son has a twofold meaning. First, a son is a son because he was born a son. Second, a son is a son who is instructed by another.

Irenaeus then affirms, “According to nature, then—that is, according to creation, so to speak— we are all sons of God, because we have all been created by God.” And Irenaeus affirms further, “But with respect to obedience and doctrine we are not all the sons of God: those only are so who believe in Him and do His will. And those who do not believe, and do not obey His will, are sons and angels of the devil, because they do the works of the devil.

Irenaeus is saying that, “according to nature, then – that is, according to creation, so to speak – we are all sons of God because we have all been created by God.” But on the other hand, “with respect to obedience and doctrine we are not all the sons of God.” Only those “who believe in Him and do His will” are truly sons of God. “Those who do not believe, and do not obey His will, are sons and angels of the devil, because they do the works of the devil,” he says.

Irenaeus then affirms, “And that such is the case He has declared in Isaiah: “I have begotten and brought up children, but they have rebelled against Me,” referring to Isaiah 1 (NIV):2 Hear me, you heavens! Listen, earth! For the LORD has spoken: “I reared children and brought them up, but they have rebelled against me.

Irenaeus then adds, “And again, where He says that these children are aliens: “Strange children have lied unto Me,” referring in context to Psalms 18 (Septuagint):43 Deliver me from the vain sayings of the people: thou shalt make me head of the Gentiles: a people whom I knew not served me, 44 at the hearing of the ear they obeyed me: the strange children lied to me. 45 The strange children waxed old, and fell away from their paths through lameness.

The same verses are again translated in the New International Version in Psalms 18 (NIV):43 You have delivered me from the attacks of the people; you have made me the head of nations. People I did not know now serve me, 44 foreigners cower before me; as soon as they hear of me, they obey me. 45 They all lose heart; they come trembling from their strongholds.

Irenaeus then concludes, “According to nature, then, they are [His] children, because they have been so created; but with regard to their works, they are not His children.”

Before commenting on this, we will go on to paragraph three.

In paragraph three, Irenaeus argues, “For as, among men, those sons who disobey their fathers, being disinherited, are still their sons in the course of nature, but by law are disinherited, for they do not become the heirs of their natural parents; so in the same way is it with God,—those who do not obey Him being disinherited by Him, have ceased to be His sons. Wherefore they cannot receive His inheritance: as David says, “Sinners are alienated from the womb; their anger is after the likeness of a serpent,” referring to Psalms 58 (NIV):3 Even from birth the wicked go astray; from the womb they are wayward, spreading lies. 4 Their venom is like the venom of a snake, like that of a cobra that has stopped its ears.

Irenaeus then testifies, “And therefore did the Lord term those whom He knew to be the offspring of men “a generation of vipers,” referring to Matthew 23 (KJV):33 Ye serpents, ye generation of vipers, how can ye escape the damnation of hell?

Irenaeus continues his thought as he reasons, “because after the manner of these animals they go about in subtilty, and injure others.” Again Irenaeus testifies, “For He said, “Beware of the leaven of the Pharisees and of the Sadducees,” referring to Matthew 16 (KJV):6 Then Jesus said unto them, Take heed and beware of the leaven of the Pharisees and of the Sadducees.

Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “Speaking of Herod, too, He says, “Go ye and tell that fox,” referring to Luke 13 (NIV):32 He replied, “Go tell that fox, ‘I will keep on driving out demons and healing people today and tomorrow, and on the third day I will reach my goal.’

Again Irenaeus finishes his thought as he explains, “aiming at his wicked cunning and deceit.” And Irenaeus adds, “Wherefore the prophet David says, “Man, being placed in honour, is made like unto cattle,” referring to Psalms 49 (KJV):20 Man that is in honour, and understandeth not, is like the beasts that perish.

And Irenaeus affirms, “And again Jeremiah says, “They are become like horses, furious about females; each one neighed after his neighbour’s wife,” referring to Jeremiah 5 (NIV):8 They are well-fed, lusty stallions, each neighing for another man’s wife.

Irenaeus continues as he affirms, “And Isaiah, when preaching in Judea, and reasoning with Israel, termed them “rulers of Sodom” and “people of Gomorrah,” referring to Isaiah 1 (NIV):10 Hear the word of the LORD, you rulers of Sodom; listen to the instruction of our God, you people of Gomorrah!

Again, Irenaeus finishes his thought as he says that Isaiah is "intimating that they were like the Sodomites in wickedness, and that the same description of sins was rife among them, calling them by the same name, because of the similarity of their conduct." Irenaeus then asserts, "And inasmuch as they were not by nature so created by God, but had power also to act rightly, the same person said to them, giving them good counsel, "Wash ye, make you clean; take away iniquity from your souls before mine eyes; cease from your iniquities," referring to Isaiah 1 (NIV):16 Wash and make yourselves clean. Take your evil deeds out of my sight; stop doing wrong.

Irenaeus then affirms, "Thus, no doubt, since they had transgressed and sinned in the same manner, so did they receive the same reproof as did the Sodomites. But when they should be converted and come to repentance, and cease from evil, they should have power to become the sons of God, and to receive the inheritance of immortality which is given by Him."

Irenaeus again testifies, "For this reason, therefore, He has termed those "angels of the devil," and "children of the wicked one," referring again to Matthew 25:41 and Matthew 13:38, "who give heed to the devil, and do his works," reminding us of Jesus words to those who did not believe Him in John 8 (NIV):44 You belong to your father, the devil, and you want to carry out your father's desires. He was a murderer from the beginning, not holding to the truth, for there is no truth in him. When he lies, he speaks his native language, for he is a liar and the father of lies.

Irenaeus thus concludes, "But these are, at the same time, all created by the one and the same God. When, however, they believe and are subject to God, and go on and keep His doctrine, they are the sons of God; but when they have apostatized and fallen into transgression, they are ascribed to their chief, the devil—to him who first became the cause of apostasy to himself, and afterwards to others."

Irenaeus' thinking here reminds us of Jesus' conversation with the Jews in John 8 (NIV):31 To the Jews who had believed him, Jesus said, "If you hold to my teaching, you are really my disciples. 32 Then you will know the truth, and the truth will set you free." 33 They answered him, "We are Abraham's descendants and have never been slaves of anyone. How can you say that we shall be set free?" 34 Jesus replied, "Very truly I tell you, everyone who sins is a slave to sin. 35 Now a slave has no permanent place in the family, but a son belongs to it forever. 36 So if the Son sets you free, you will be free indeed. 37 I know that you are Abraham's descendants. Yet you are looking for a way to kill me, because you have no room for my word. 38 I am telling you what I have seen in the Father's presence, and you are doing what you have heard from your father." 39 "Abraham is our father," they answered. "If you were Abraham's children," said Jesus, "then you would do what Abraham did. 40 As it is, you are looking for a way to kill me, a man who has told you the truth that I heard from God. Abraham did not do such things. 41 You are doing the works of your own father." "We are not illegitimate children," they protested. "The only Father we have is God himself." 42 Jesus said to them, "If God were your Father, you would love me, for I have come here from God. I have not come on my own; God sent me. 43 Why is my language not clear to you? Because you are unable to hear what I say. 44 You belong to your father, the devil, and you want to carry out your father's desires. He was a murderer from the beginning, not holding to the truth, for there is no truth in him. When he lies, he speaks his native language, for he is a liar and the father of lies. 45 Yet because I tell the truth, you do not believe me! 46 Can any of you prove me guilty of sin? If I am telling the truth, why don't you believe me? 47 Whoever belongs to God hears what God says. The reason you do not hear is that you do not belong to God."

The Jews claimed to have God as their father, and were not born of fornication, being actual descendants of Abraham. However, Jesus points out to them that if God were really their Father, they would love Him, for He proceeded forth and came from God. Jesus saw them as they truly were, as still in their sin, and without faith. They had not yet been born again. They may have been Abraham's descendants, but they did not have the faith that Abraham had, and so they were not doing the deeds of Abraham.

Commentary Summary Book 4: Chapter XLI

Now the gist of Irenaeus' argument in Book 4: Chapter L and Book 4: Chapter LI is to show that man is not a tare or a child of the wicked one by nature. He argues first that we were all created by God and that, "According to nature, then—that is, according to creation, so to speak— we are all sons of God, because we have all been created by God." And again, speaking of those who then disobey God, he says, "According to nature, then, they are [His] children, because they have been so created; but with regard to their works, they are not His children." And Irenaeus says that there are two kinds of sons. One is "born so" and another is "made so." The first kind "is indeed born from the person referred to," while the second "is made so by Him, whether as respects His creation or by the teaching of His doctrine." So Irenaeus argues that those "who believe in Him and do His will" are sons of God, and those "who do not believe, and do not obey His will are sons and angels of the devil, because they do the works of the devil." And in paragraph three, Irenaeus argues that those who disobey their fathers among men "are still their sons in the course of nature, but by law are disinherited." It is the same with God, he says. And Irenaeus argues that even those who be as sinful as the Sodomites, if they "should be converted and come to repentance, and cease from evil, they should have the power to become the sons of God, and to receive the inheritance of immortality which is given by Him."

The crux of Irenaeus thinking about the nature of man is that man was not made wicked by nature, and that man is by nature a son of God, having been created by God. Man then has the power to believe and obey God. Man has the "power also to act rightly," Irenaeus says. It is then a matter for man to "be converted, and come to repentance, and cease from evil," in order that they "should have power to become the sons of God, and to receive the inheritance of immortality which is given by Him." What he means is that we are all sons of God of the first kind of sons, having been created by God, but in order to be a son of God of the second kind of sons, and so "receive the inheritance of immortality which is given by Him," we must believe and obey, that is, believe and do the works of obedience to "the teaching of His doctrine." Again, only those "who believe in Him and do His will" are truly sons of God in the second sense according to Irenaeus.

However, I would suggest that there is a third kind of son. But before we talk about that, let us see what the Scriptures say about man's nature.

Now to Irenaeus' argument about the two kinds of sons, the Scriptures teach us plainly that God created all things, and they were all good when He created them as in Genesis 1 (NIV):31 God saw all that he had made, and it was very good. And there was evening, and there was morning—the sixth day.

However, when the devil sinned, God judged him and he became Satan, the "evil one." That is, after God's judgment, his nature was changed to evil because of his sin. Jesus tells us that the devil is a liar by nature and the father of lies in John 8 (NIV):44 You belong to your father, the devil, and you want to carry out your father's desires. He was a murderer from the beginning, not holding to the truth, for there is no truth in him. When he lies, he speaks his native language, for he is a liar and the father of lies.

The word "nature" is not used in this verse, but it is implied by the context. The devil speaks from his own. That is, it is his inherent in his character to lie. There is no truth in him. Though Satan was created by God, in no sense can we claim that he is a son of God.

Now God also gave man a command in the garden not to eat of the tree of good and evil in Genesis 2 (NIV):16 And the LORD God commanded the man, "You are free to eat from any tree in the garden; 17 but you must not eat from the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, for when you eat from it you will certainly die."

God's command, if disobeyed, would result in death on the very day of the disobedience. So on the very day that man disobeyed God, death came upon the human race as the Scripture says in Genesis 3 (NIV):19 By the sweat of your brow you will eat your food until you return to the ground, since from it you were taken; for dust you are and to dust you will return."

Not only physical death, but spiritual death also came upon the human race. Man also died spiritually as we see in Ephesians 2 (NASB):1 And you were dead in your trespasses and sin.

And in Romans 5 (KJV):12 Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned:

Man was not just "involved in disobedience," but came under the judgment of God, just as the devil came under judgment when he sinned. Being spiritually dead, man became a sinner by nature when he fell as we read in Ephesians 2 (NASB):2 in which you formerly walked according to the course of this world, according to the prince of the power of the air, of the spirit that is now working in the sons of disobedience. 3 Among them we too all formerly lived in the lusts of our flesh, indulging the desires of the flesh and of the mind, and were by nature children of wrath, even as the rest.

Paul includes himself when he says, “we too all formerly lived in the lusts of our flesh” and “were by nature children of wrath, even as the rest.” Being a child of wrath by nature excludes us also from being a child of God, even though we were created by God. Although we were created by God, when Adam sinned, he and all his descendants died spiritually and became children of wrath. This is why Adam had to be born again to have fellowship with God once more. And we also must be born again or we will in no wise enter the kingdom of God.

Now to Irenaeus point about the second kind of son, we see this in Paul’s relationship to Timothy in 1 Timothy 1 (KJV):2 Unto Timothy, my own son in the faith: Grace, mercy, and peace, from God our Father and Jesus Christ our Lord.

What Paul is saying is that he became the spiritual father of Timothy when Timothy believed the gospel message that Paul preached. Paul also explains to the Corinthians that they had this same relationship in 1 Corinthians 4 (KJV):15 For though ye have ten thousand instructors in Christ, yet have ye not many fathers: for in Christ Jesus I have begotten you through the gospel. 16 Wherefore I beseech you, be ye followers of me. 17 For this cause have I sent unto you Timotheus, who is my beloved son, and faithful in the Lord, who shall bring you into remembrance of my ways which be in Christ, as I teach every where in every church.

Now I have suggested that there is another kind of son which Irenaeus did not consider. Irenaeus seems to believe that man does not have a spirit of his own. In his thinking, the new birth happens when one repents and believes and the Holy Spirit comes and takes up residence in him or her. By doing good, one kept the Holy Spirit. By doing bad, one could lose the Holy Spirit and join the apostasy. Irenaeus did allow for repentance again from the apostasy. However, the Scriptures describe a totally different experience in man. When one receives Christ, the apostle John says they are born of God in John 1 (NIV):12 Yet to all who did receive him, to those who believed in his name, he gave the right to become children of God— 13 children born not of natural descent, nor of human decision or a husband’s will, but born of God.

John describes a time when Nicodemus met with Jesus and talked about the new birth in John 3 (NIV):3 Jesus replied, “Very truly I tell you, no one can see the kingdom of God unless they are born again.” 4 “How can someone be born when they are old?” Nicodemus asked. “Surely they cannot enter a second time into their mother’s womb to be born!” 5 Jesus answered, “Very truly I tell you, no one can enter the kingdom of God unless they are born of water and the Spirit. 6 Flesh gives birth to flesh, but the Spirit gives birth to spirit. 7 You should not be surprised at my saying, ‘You must be born again.’ 8 The wind blows wherever it pleases. You hear its sound, but you cannot tell where it comes from or where it is going. So it is with everyone born of the Spirit.”

Jesus said that which was born of the Spirit was spirit. Being born of God in this way speaks of a spiritual birth. This happens in our spirit. When we receive Christ, and this new birth happens, we receive eternal life as John explains to us in 1 John 5 (KJV):1 Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ is born of God: and every one that loveth him that begat loveth him also that is begotten of him.

And in 1 John 5 (KJV):10 He that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness in himself: he that believeth not God hath made him a liar; because he believeth not the record that God gave of his Son. 11 And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. 12 He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life.

Having eternal life is the result of being born again. Being born of the Spirit of God, we receive a new nature. To get a clear understanding of what this means, we will look at the word for “nature” in the Greek which is φύσις (pronounced phusis). Strong’s Concordance says that this word means growth (by germination or expansion). i.e. (by impl.) natural production (lineal descent); by extens. A genus or sort; fig. native disposition, constitution or usage: ([man-]) kind, nature ([-al]). Strong’s Concordance also says that the Greek word φύσις (pronounced phusis) comes from φύω (pronounced phuo) which means to “puff” or blow, i.e. to swell up; but only used in the impl. sense, to germinate or grow (sprout, produce), lit. or fig.: spring (up).

Also, Vine’s tells us that φύσις (pronounced phusis) means “to bring forth, produce, signifies (a) the nature (i.e. the natural powers or constitution of a person or thing, Eph. 2:3, James 3:7 (“kind”)); 2 Pet. 1:4; (b) origin, birth, Rom 2:27, one who by birth is a Gentile, uncircumcised, in contrast to one who, though circumcised, has become spiritually uncircumcised by his iniquity; Gal. 2:15; (c) the regular law or order of nature, Rom. 1:26, against nature (para, against);” Expository Dictionary of New Testament Words, W.E. Vine, Vol. III, page 103.

The following verses use the Greek word φύσις (pronounced phusis), which is translated as nature. The wild olive tree differs from the cultivated olive tree in that its innate properties make it different as we see in Romans 11 (NIV):24 After all, if you were cut out of an olive tree that is wild by nature, and contrary to nature were grafted into a cultivated olive tree, how much more readily will these, the natural branches, be grafted into their own olive tree!

In this next verse, nature is the sum of the forces in the universe. It is the way things are in the physical realm as in 1 Corinthians 11 (NASB):14 Does not even nature itself teach you that if a man has long hair, it is a dishonor to him,

In this next verse, nature is a kind of class that is distinguished by fundamental and essential characteristics as in Galatians 2 (KJV):15 We who are Jews by nature, and not sinners of the Gentiles.

In this next verse we see that it was we ourselves who, before we accepted Christ, indulged the desires of our flesh and of our mind as in Ephesians 2 (NASB):3 Among them we too all formerly lived in the lusts of our flesh, indulging the desires of the flesh and of the mind, and were by nature children of wrath, even as the rest.

We were children of wrath by nature. That is, we were under His wrath by our very nature as Jesus states in John 3 (NIV):36 Whoever believes in the Son has eternal life, but whoever rejects the Son will not see life, for God’s wrath remains on them.

We were all without exception under sin as Paul tells us in Romans 3 (KJV):9 What then? are we better than they? No, in no wise: for we have before proved both Jews and Gentiles, that they are all under sin;

And in Galatians 3 (KJV):22 But the scripture hath concluded all under sin, that the promise by faith of Jesus Christ might be given to them that believe.

As such we were helpless to save ourselves from this condition as Paul says in Romans 5 (KJV):6 For when we were yet without strength, in due time Christ died for the ungodly.

It was God reaching out to man, and not man reaching out to God as Paul says in Romans 5 (KJV):8 But God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us.

As sinners, Paul says we were enemies of God in Romans 5 (KJV):10 For if, when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by his life.

It is not that we were created this way by God, but that we became sinners by nature when Adam sinned. This was a direct result of the judgment of God as Jesus says in John 3 (NIV):18 Whoever believes in him is not condemned, but whoever does not believe stands condemned already because they have not believed in the name of God’s one and only Son.

Paul tells us that before Christ we are spiritually dead in Ephesians 2 (NASB):1 And you were dead in your trespasses and sins, 2 in which you formerly walked according to the course of this world, according to the prince of the power of the air, of the spirit that is now working in the sons of disobedience.

This death by sin before we accepted Christ was because of the judgment of God. This is the reason that in Adam, we all died as in 1 Corinthians 15 (KJV):22 For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive.

Paul emphatically states that all men and women are sinful by nature and fall short of the glory of God in Romans 3 (KJV):23 For all have sinned, and come short of the glory of God;

This is why we need a change in our nature in order to please God. This happens at the new birth. When I accept my condition as a helpless sinner before God, and receive His Son, Jesus Christ, believing in His resurrection from the dead, I am born again of the Spirit of God. The Spirit of God gives birth to my spirit and produces a change in my nature. Peter describes this change in our nature, or basic constitution, when we believe. We become sharers of the divine nature he says in 2 Peter 1 (KJV):4 Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises: that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust.

Now we are commanded to put on the new man as Paul says in Ephesians 4 NASB):24 and put on the new self, which in the likeness of God has been created in righteousness and holiness of the truth.

And we are commanded to put off the old man, the sinful Adamic nature in our flesh which we still have until the resurrection, and put on the new in Colossians 3 (KJV):9 Lie not one to another, seeing that ye have put off the old man with his deeds; 10 And have put on the new man, which is renewed in knowledge after the image of him that created him:

While it is true that all that God created us good, yet when Adam sinned, he polluted the human race at its source, and death passed to all men as a result of his sin as we read in Romans 5 (KJV):12 Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned: 13 (For until the law sin was in the world: but sin is not imputed when there is no law. 14 Nevertheless death reigned from Adam to Moses, even over them that had not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression, who is the figure of him that was to come.

Irenaeus believes that men and women were not created bad or good, but given the power of choice to become one or the other. By choosing the good and doing it we become good. The good we must choose is to repent and submit to God and be obedient to Him. By rejecting these things, we are choosing the bad and doing the bad, and we join the apostasy and become bad. And we can switch back and forth if we repent. Irenaeus most certainly does not believe we are bad by nature. However, the Scriptures are clear that all men and women without exception are under sin before they come by faith and accept Jesus Christ as their Lord and Savior. Paul tells us that man is in possession of a nature that is on the downgrade and from which it is impossible to free himself apart from Christ in Romans 3 (KJV):9 What then? are we better than they? No, in no wise: for we have before proved both Jews and Gentiles, that they are all under sin; 10 As it is written, There is none righteous, no, not one: 11 There is none that understandeth, there is none that seeketh after God. 12 They are all gone out of the way, they are together become unprofitable; there is none that doeth good, no, not one. 13 Their throat is an open sepulchre; with their tongues they have used deceit; the poison of asps is under their lips: 14 Whose mouth is full of cursing and bitterness: 15 Their feet are swift to shed blood: 16 Destruction and misery are in their ways: 17 And the way of peace have they not known: 18 There is no fear of God before their eyes.

Because of this sin nature that we have inherited from Adam, we do not have power to act rightly as Jeremiah says in Jeremiah 13 (NIV):23 Can an Ethiopian change his skin or a leopard its spots? Neither can you do good who are accustomed to doing evil.

This is why we need a Savior, Christ Jesus. It is only after we come to Christ that we have power to act rightly and do His will. And this is why Jesus said we needed to be born again for He knew that we needed a change in our nature so that we would be able to do good as we read in John 3 (NIV):5 Jesus answered, "Very truly I tell you, no one can enter the kingdom of God unless they are born of water and the Spirit.

When we are born again, our spirit is renewed and our nature is changed by the Spirit of God. This is why we can now be called truly children of God. We cannot trust in our works to make us born again, as if we could be good enough to attain the righteousness of God. God's righteousness reaches to the heavens as the Psalmist says in Psalms 71 (NIV):19 Your righteousness, God, reaches to the heavens, you who have done great things. Who is like you, God?

Because God is perfect in righteousness, man, being a sinner, can never attain His righteousness without God's grace, no matter how obedient he is. Neither can man boast of having kept the law, for he is already a sinner in Adam. Man must accept the free gift of God's justification by faith in order to have fellowship with God, for God has demolished all boasting by man as Paul tells us in Romans 3 (KJV):21 But now the righteousness of God without the law is manifested, being witnessed by the law and the prophets; 22 Even the righteousness of God which is by faith of Jesus Christ unto all and upon all them that believe: for there is no difference: 23 For all have sinned, and come short of the glory of God; 24 Being justified freely by his grace through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus: 25 Whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in his blood, to declare his righteousness for the remission of sins that are past, through the forbearance of God; 26 To declare, I say, at this time his righteousness: that he might be just, and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus. 27 Where is boasting then? It is excluded. By what law? of works? Nay: but by the law of faith. 28 Therefore we conclude that a man is justified by faith without the deeds of the law. 29 Is he the God of the Jews only? is he not also of the Gentiles? Yes, of the Gentiles also: 30 Seeing it is one God, which shall justify the circumcision by faith, and uncircumcision through faith. 31 Do we then make void the law through faith? God forbid: yea, we establish the law.

The righteousness which comes by faith in Jesus Christ that Paul is speaking of is the “righteousness of God through faith in Jesus Christ for all those who believe” in verse 22. In other words, it is God’s righteousness that is imputed to the one who has faith in Jesus Christ. The word impute means to put down to one’s account. The one God justifies has a standing before Him as a righteous one, with a righteousness not based on his or her own merit. The one God justifies has the righteousness of God given by the declaration of God for the one who has faith in Jesus Christ.

Book 5: Chapter I.—Christ alone is able to teach divine things, and to redeem us: He, the same, took flesh of the Virgin Mary, not merely in appearance, but actually, by the operation of the Holy Spirit, in order to renovate us. Strictures on the conceits of Valentinus and Ebion.

3. Vain also are the Ebionites, who do not receive by faith into their soul the union of God and man, but who remain in the old leaven of [the natural] birth, and who do not choose to understand that the Holy Ghost came upon Mary, and the power of the Most High did overshadow her: 4453 Luke i. 35. wherefore also what was generated is a holy thing, and the Son of the Most High God the Father of all, who effected the incarnation of this being, and showed forth a new [kind of] generation; that as by the former generation we inherited death, so by this new generation we might inherit life. Therefore do these men reject the commixture of the heavenly wine, 4454 In allusion to the mixture of water in the eucharistic cup, as practised in these primitive times. The Ebionites and others used to consecrate the element of water alone. and wish it to be water of the world only, not receiving God so as to have union with Him, but they remain in that Adam who had been conquered and was expelled from Paradise: not considering that as, at the beginning of our formation in Adam, that breath of life which proceeded from God, having been united to what had been fashioned, animated the man, and manifested him as a being endowed with reason; so also, in [the times of] the end, the Word of the Father and the Spirit of God, having become united with the ancient substance of Adam’s formation, rendered man living and perfect, receptive of the perfect Father, in order that as in the natural [Adam] we all were dead, so in the spiritual we may all be made alive. 4455 1 Cor. xv. 22. For never at any time did Adam escape the hands 4456 Viz., the Son and the Spirit. of God, to whom the Father speaking, said, “Let Us make man in Our image, after Our likeness.” And for this reason in the last times (fine), not by the will of the flesh, nor by the will of man, but by the good pleasure of the Father, 4457 John i. 13. His hands formed a living man, in order that Adam might be created [again] after the image and likeness of God.

Summary: In paragraph three, Irenaeus testifies, “Vain also are the Ebionites, who do not receive by faith into their soul the union of God and man, but who remain in the old leaven of [the natural] birth, and who do not choose to understand that the Holy Ghost came upon Mary, and the power of the Most High did overshadow her,” referring to Luke 1:35, “wherefore also what was generated is a holy thing, and the Son of the Most High God the Father of all, who effected the incarnation of this being, and showed forth a new [kind of] generation; that as by the former generation we inherited death, so by this new generation we might inherit life.” Irenaeus then affirms, “Therefore do these men reject the commixture of the heavenly wine, and wish it to be water of the world only, not receiving God so as to have union with Him, but they remain in that Adam who had been conquered and was expelled from Paradise:” referring to Genesis 3:22-24, “not considering that as, at the beginning of our formation in Adam, that breath of life which proceeded from God, having been united to what had been fashioned, animated the man, and manifested him as a being endowed with reason; so also, in [the times of] the end, the Word of the Father and the Spirit of God, having become united with the ancient substance of Adam's formation, rendered man living and perfect, receptive of the perfect Father, in order that as in the natural [Adam] we all were dead, so in the spiritual we may all be made alive," referring to 1 Corinthians 15:22. Irenaeus then affirms, "For never at any time did Adam escape the hands of God, to whom the Father speaking, said, "Let Us make man in Our image, after Our likeness," referring to Genesis 1:26. Irenaeus then concludes, "And for this reason in the last times (fine), not by the will of the flesh, nor by the will of man, but by the good pleasure of the Father," referring to John 1:13, "His hands formed a living man, in order that Adam might be created [again] after the image and likeness of God."

Commentary: Here in paragraph three, we know from Book 1: Chapter XXVI in Irenaeus' writings that Irenaeus is speaking of the Ebionites, a Jewish Christian sect which accepted only the gospel of Matthew and rejected the writings of Paul, who they thought was an apostate from the law.

Irenaeus here testifies, "Vain also are the Ebionites, who do not receive by faith into their soul the union of God and man, but who remain in the old leaven of [the natural] birth, and who do not choose to understand that the Holy Ghost came upon Mary, and the power of the Most High did overshadow her," referring to Luke 1 (NIV):35 The angel answered, "The Holy Spirit will come on you, and the power of the Most High will overshadow you. So the holy one to be born will be called the Son of God.

The Ebionites evidently denied the virgin birth of Christ. Irenaeus continues his thought as he echoes the Scripture, "wherefore also what was generated is a holy thing, and the Son of the Most High God the Father of all, who effected the incarnation of this being, and showed forth a new [kind of] generation; that as by the former generation we inherited death, so by this new generation we might inherit life," reminding us of 1 Corinthians 15 (KJV):21 For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead.

And to 1 Corinthians 15 (KJV):45 And so it is written, The first man Adam was made a living soul; the last Adam was made a quickening spirit.

And to 1 Corinthians 15 (KJV):47 The first man is of the earth, earthy; the second man is the Lord from heaven.

Irenaeus then affirms, "Therefore do these men reject the commixture of the heavenly wine, and wish it to be water of the world only, not receiving God so as to have union with Him, but they remain in that Adam who had been conquered and was expelled from Paradise," referring to Genesis 3 (NIV):22 And the LORD God said, "The man has now become like one of us, knowing good and evil. He must not be allowed to reach out his hand and take also from the tree of life and eat, and live forever." 23 So the LORD God banished him from the Garden of Eden to work the ground from which he had been taken. 24 After he drove the man out, he placed on the east side of the Garden of Eden cherubim and a flaming sword flashing back and forth to guard the way to the tree of life.

In regards to the "commixture of the heavenly wine" being "water of the world only," Irenaeus refers to the Communion meal and his belief that the bread and wine became the body and blood of the Lord Jesus. Irenaeus asserts this in part in Book 4: Chapter XVIII, paragraph five, when he says, "For as the bread, which is produced from the earth, when it receives the invocation of God, is no longer common bread, but the Eucharist, consisting of two realities, earthly and heavenly; so also our bodies, when they receive the Eucharist, are no longer corruptible, having the hope of the resurrection to eternity." Irenaeus says more about the Eucharist, but we will discuss this more thoroughly in Chapter 22: Communion.

Irenaeus continues his thought saying, "not considering that as, at the beginning of our formation in Adam, that breath of life which proceeded from God, having been united to what had been fashioned, animated the man, and manifested him as a being endowed with reason; so also, in [the times of] the end, the Word of the Father and the Spirit of God, having become united with the ancient substance of Adam's formation, rendered man living and perfect, receptive of the perfect Father, in order that as in the natural [Adam] we all were dead, so in the spiritual we may all be made alive," referring to 1 Corinthians 15 (KJV):22 For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive.

However, Paul did not say, "in the spiritual we may all be made alive," but "in Christ all will be made alive." Irenaeus is saying that "as in the natural Adam we all were dead, so in the spiritual Adam, that is Christ, "we may all be made alive." But to change the verse in this way makes it very ambiguous. Man is made alive in his spirit. Irenaeus is very free with his interpretations.

And when Irenaeus says that “the Word of the Father and the Spirit of God, having become united with the ancient substance of Adam’s formation, rendered man living and perfect, receptive of the perfect Father,” he does not qualify his statement with Scripture. It was the death of Christ on the cross that made a way for man to have fellowship with the Father, and it is by His blood that we are cleansed. When Jesus came down from heaven and became a man, He did not render man living, or perfect, or “receptive of the perfect Father” by doing so. It was His blood that was shed on the cross that made it possible for us to be clean in the Father’s eyes. When we receive Him by faith, we are justified by God and we receive a standing before Him as righteous. But our soul, that is our mind, will, emotions, and conscience, may have much that needs to be cleansed. This He does by His word. As we read His word, and receive teaching in His word, we are cleansed in our soul. Our minds are renewed, and our conscience now has the right standards by which to judge by. We are progressively sanctified in this way. We are not rendered perfect in our souls or in our bodies until we are resurrected. Now Irenaeus also implies by this that man must be perfect to receive the Father, but His words exceed the Scripturals.

Irenaeus then affirms, “For never at any time did Adam escape the hands of God, to whom the Father speaking, said, “Let Us make man in Our image, after Our likeness,” referring in context to Genesis 1 (NIV):26 Then God said, “Let us make mankind in our image, in our likeness, so that they may rule over the fish in the sea and the birds in the sky, over the livestock and all the wild animals, and over all the creatures that move along the ground.” 27 So God created mankind in his own image, in the image of God he created them; male and female he created them.

Irenaeus then concludes, “And for this reason in the last times (fine), not by the will of the flesh, nor by the will of man, but by the good pleasure of the Father, His hands formed a living man, in order that Adam might be created [again] after the image and likeness of God.”

Irenaeus is referring in part to John 1 (KJV):12 But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name: 13 Which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God.

And to 1 Corinthians 15 (KJV):45 And so it is written, The first man Adam was made a living soul; the last Adam was made a quickening spirit.

However, the Scripture in John 1:12 is talking about those who believe in His name, and not Christ Jesus. And Irenaeus seems to conveniently leave out the fact that it was these very believers who were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God. Instead, he says that man is created again after the image and likeness of God. There is no such reference in the New Testament. Also, the Scripture in 1 Corinthians 15:45 does not say that God formed a living man, but a life-giving spirit. Jesus gives life to us when we believe. It is in this way that He is a life-giving spirit.

Now we know that Irenaeus in part understood that God created man in His image, and that man’s body still possesses the image of God as he explains in Book 5: Chapter VI, “But if the Spirit be wanting to the soul, he who is such is indeed of an animal nature, and being left carnal, shall be an imperfect being, possessing indeed the image [of God] in his formation (in plasmate), but not receiving the similitude through the Spirit; and thus is this being imperfect.”

What Irenaeus means here is that man without the Spirit of God is imperfect. Thus, Irenaeus means to say that when man receives the Spirit of God, he then “might be created [again] after the image and likeness of God.”

To summarize, Irenaeus says that the Ebionites did not believe in the union of God and man, nor in the incarnation of deity through Mary by the Holy Spirit. Irenaeus makes a point to say that the Most High God the Father of all “effected the incarnation of this being,” who was a “holy thing” as Irenaeus says. Irenaeus says that Jesus has inaugurated a new generation so that “we might inherit life.” He seems to believe that in the celebration of communion, that God is received in the “commixture of the heavenly wine” so as “to have union with Him.” Not doing so means we “remain in that Adam who had been conquered and was expelled from Paradise.” He acknowledges our death in Adam as he says that “by the former generation we inherited death,” He also quotes Paul in his first epistle to the Corinthians as he says, “in the natural [Adam] we all were dead, so in the spiritual we may all be made alive.”

Irenaeus seems to know something of a spiritual birth as he says that “in the spiritual we may all be made alive.” With these words Irenaeus comes closest to the teaching in the word of God about the new birth. This is undoubtedly what he is talking about for he quotes the Gospel of John in John 1 (NASB):12 But as many as received Him, to them He gave the right to become children of God, even to those who believe in His name, 13 who were born, not of blood nor of the will of the flesh nor of the will of man, but of God.

Commentary Summary: On the Nature of Man

We saw in Book 4: Chapter XXXVIII, paragraph four, that Irenaeus believed that “we were possessed of power over ourselves,” and in Book 4: Chapter XXXIX, paragraph three, that Irenaeus believed that man has been created “free agents, and possessed of power over themselves.” In Book 4: Chapter XXXVII, which we will discuss in Chapter 30: Free Will, Irenaeus says in paragraph one, “This expression [of our Lord], “How often would I have gathered thy children together, and thou wouldest not,” set forth the ancient law of human liberty, because God made man a free [agent] from the beginning, possessing his own power, even as he does his own soul, to obey the behests (ad utendum sententia) of God voluntarily, and not by compulsion of God.”

And also in Book 4: Chapter XXXVII, paragraph two, Irenaeus says, “But since all men are of the same nature, able both to hold fast and to do what is good; and, on the other hand, having also the power to cast it from them and not to do it,—some do justly receive praise even among men who are under the control of good laws (and much more from God), and obtain deserved testimony of their choice of good in general, and of persevering therein; but the others are blamed, and receive a just condemnation, because of their rejection of what is fair and good.”

And again in Book 4: Chapter XXXVII, paragraph seven, Irenaeus says, “for God has displayed long-suffering in the case of man’s apostasy; while man has been instructed by means of it, as also the prophet says, “Thine own apostasy shall heal thee;”

We will discuss these paragraphs of Book 4: Chapter XXXVII in Chapter 30: Free Will. However, they help us here to understand more fully Irenaeus’ thinking on the nature of man. Irenaeus saw man as infantile and imperfect, but not bad or good. Man is a free agent and under his own power and able to choose good and to do it. Irenaeus points out that man has received the knowledge of good and evil. Although he acknowledges that death was the result of Adam’s sin, he seems to feel that man is not good or bad but does need to discipline himself. Man learned in the garden that disobeying God is an evil thing and causes death. Man now has a “surer and an undoubted comprehension” of “matters submitted to him.” He has the mental power to know both the good of obedience and the evil of disobedience. Now he knows that obedience to God preserves life. Man has a “twofold experience, possessing knowledge of both kinds,” that “with discipline he may make choice of the better things.” Man must choose the good to preserve his life or suffer death for disobedience to God. God is creating in man His workmanship. Man must not “become hardened and lose the impression of His fingers.” And “by preserving the framework” man shall “ascend to that which is perfect.” If however man is ungrateful to God, he loses “at once” both “His workmanship and life.” “To be created is that of human nature,” Irenaeus says. Man must deliver up what is his, that is, “his faith towards Him and subjection,” in order to “receive His handiwork and be a perfect work of God.” God does not “exercise compulsion upon anyone unwilling to accept the exercise of His skill.” If man perishes, it is through his own fault because he rejects the “exercise of His skill” and has “apostatized from the light given by the Father.” Those who submit to God find “eternal rest.” Those who shun the light “justly incur punishment, and cause themselves to inhabit eternal darkness, destitute of all good things.”

Irenaeus seems to feel that God gave man the mental power to know good and evil apparently in the Garden of Eden. Man seems to have suffered no ill effects from the fall, in Irenaeus’ mind, other than physical death. Man simply gained knowledge and experience of disobedience in the Garden of Eden so that going forward he would have the ability to “know both the good of obedience and the evil of disobedience.” Man must now “with judgment make choice of better things.” Now man knows that obedience to God preserves his life. Man also now knows by experience that disobedience “deprives him of life.” Man now must cast away “by means of repentance, disobedience, as being something disagreeable and nauseous.” If he does not but shuns the knowledge of good and evil, “he unawares divests himself of the character of a human being.”

Irenaeus mentions “the apostasy” of which the devil is the ringleader. He seems to believe that the devil began his apostasy when he tempted man in the garden of Eden, and that man was the first-fruits of his own apostasy as he says in Book 3: Chapter XXIII, paragraph eight, that “the serpent also did not profit when persuading man [to sin], except to this effect, that he proved him a transgressor, obtaining man as the first-fruits of his own apostasy.” Again Irenaeus says in Book 1: Chapter XXVII, paragraph four, speaking of the Gnostic heretics, he states that Satan is the author of the apostasy as he says, “Although they do not confess the name of their master, in order all the more to seduce others, yet they do teach his doctrines. They set forth, indeed, the name of Christ Jesus as a sort of lure, but in various ways they introduce the impieties of Simon; and thus they destroy multitudes, wickedly disseminating their own doctrines by the use of a good name, and, through means of its sweetness and beauty, extending to their hearers the bitter and malignant poison of the serpent, the great author of apostasy.”

Again Irenaeus says in Book 5: Chapter XXIV, paragraph four, that man exposed the apostasy of Satan as he says, “Just as if any one, being an apostate, and seizing in a hostile manner another man’s territory, should harass the inhabitants of it, in order that he might claim for himself the glory of a king among those ignorant of his apostasy and robbery; so likewise also the devil, being one among those angels who are placed over the spirit of the air, as the Apostle Paul has declared in his Epistle to the Ephesians, becoming envious of man, was rendered an apostate from the divine law: for envy is a thing foreign to God. And as his apostasy was exposed by man, and man became the [means of] searching out his thoughts (et examination sententiae ejus, homo factus est), he has set himself to this with greater and greater determination, in opposition to man, envying his life, and wishing to involve him in his own apostate power. The Word of God, however, the Maker of all things, conquering him by means of human nature, and showing him to be an apostate, has, on the contrary, put him under the power of man. For He says, “Behold, I confer upon you the power of treading upon serpents and scorpions, and upon all the power of the enemy,” in order that, as he obtained dominion over man by apostasy, so again his apostasy might be deprived of power by means of man turning back again to God.

Irenaeus did not believe that man is born into “the apostasy” but that man can join it even from birth as he says in Book 4: Chapter XLI, paragraph three, “For as, among men, those sons who disobey their fathers, being disinherited, are still their sons in the course of nature, but by law are disinherited, for they do not become the heirs of their natural parents; so in the same way is it with God,—those who do not obey Him being disinherited by Him, have ceased to be His sons. Wherefore they cannot receive His inheritance: as David says, “Sinners are alienated from the womb; their anger is after the likeness of a serpent.”

Again Irenaeus felt that sinners are sinners through their own fault as they set themselves apart on the left hand as he says in Book 4: Chapter XL, paragraph one, “It is therefore one and the same God the Father who has prepared good things with Himself for those who desire His fellowship, and who remain in subjection to Him; and who has the eternal fire for the ringleader of the apostasy, the devil, and those who revolted with him, into which [fire] the Lord has declared those men shall be sent who have been set apart by themselves on His left hand.”

But Irenaeus did not think that God made angels or men apostate by nature as he says in Book 4: Chapter XLI, paragraph one, “Inasmuch as the Lord has said that there are certain angels, [viz. those] of the devil, for whom eternal fire is prepared; and as, again, He declares with regard to the tares, “The tares are the children of the wicked one,” it must be affirmed that He has ascribed all who are of the apostasy to him who is the ringleader of this transgression. But He made neither angels nor men so by nature.”

In Irenaeus’ thinking, those who remain in a state of apostasy are sons of the devil as he says in Book 4: Chapter XLI, paragraph two, “Since, therefore, all things were made by God, and since the devil has become the cause of apostasy to himself and others, justly does the Scripture always term those who remain in a state of apostasy “sons of the devil” and “angels of the wicked one” (maligni).”

Again Irenaeus says in Book 4: Chapter XLI, paragraph four, “When, however, they believe and are subject to God, and go on and keep His doctrine, they are the sons of God; but when they have apostatized and fallen into transgression, they are ascribed to their chief, the devil—to him who first became the cause of apostasy to himself, and afterwards to others.”

Now Irenaeus did see that man was under the power of sin as he says in Book 3: Chapter XVIII, paragraph two, “For as it was not possible that the man who had once for all been conquered, and who had been destroyed through disobedience, could reform himself, and obtain the prize of victory; and as it was also impossible that he could attain to salvation who had fallen under the power of sin,—the Son effected both these things, being the Word of God, descending from the Father, becoming incarnate, stooping low, even to death, and consummating the arranged plan of our salvation, upon whom [Paul], exhorting us unhesitatingly to believe, again says, “Who shall ascend into heaven? that is, to bring down Christ; or who shall descend into the deep? that is, to liberate Christ again from the dead.””

Irenaeus also says that man had sin in himself in Book 3: Chapter XVIII, paragraph seven, “But the law coming, which was given by Moses, and testifying of sin that it is a sinner, did truly take away his (death’s) kingdom, showing that he was no king, but a robber; and it revealed him as a murderer. It laid, however, a weighty burden upon man, who had sin in himself, showing that he was liable to death. For as the law was spiritual, it merely made sin to stand out in relief, but did not destroy it. For sin had no dominion over the spirit, but over man. For it behoved Him who was to destroy sin, and redeem man under the power of death, that He should Himself be made that very same thing which he was, that is, man; who had been drawn by sin into bondage, but was held by death, so that sin should be destroyed by man, and man should go forth from death.”

While Irenaeus did see that man had “sin in himself,” he did not see that man had a sin nature. This is important for us to note for the Scriptures clearly state that man was sinful by nature.

Although Irenaeus did not think man was apostate by nature, he does see that man needs to be redeemed from his sin, and from captivity, and from the power of death, and from being tyrannized unjustly by the apostasy as he says in Book 5: Chapter I, paragraph one, “We—who were but lately created by the only best and good Being, by Him also who has the gift of immortality, having been formed after His likeness (predestinated, according to the prescience of the Father, that we, who had as yet no existence, might come into being), and made the first-fruits of have received, in the times known beforehand, [the blessings of salvation] according to the ministration of the Word, who is perfect in all things, as the mighty Word, and very man, who, redeeming us by His own blood in a manner consonant to reason, gave Himself as a redemption for those who had been led into captivity. And since the apostasy tyrannized over us unjustly, and, though we were by nature the property of the omnipotent God, alienated us contrary to nature, rendering us its own disciples, the Word of God, powerful in all things, and not defective with regard to His own justice, did righteously turn against that apostasy, and redeem from it His own property, not by violent means, as the [apostasy] had obtained dominion over us at the beginning, when it insatiably snatched away what was not its own, but by means of persuasion, as became a God of counsel, who does not use violent means to obtain what He desires; so that neither should justice be infringed upon, nor the ancient handiwork of God go to destruction. Since the Lord thus has redeemed us through His own blood, giving His soul for our souls, and His flesh for our flesh, and has also poured out the Spirit of the Father for the union and communion of God and man, imparting indeed God to men by means of the Spirit, and, on the other hand, attaching man to God by His own incarnation, and bestowing upon us at His coming immortality durably and truly, by means of communion with God,—all the doctrines of the heretics fall to ruin.”

The Scriptures specifically state that all men and women are, according to Ephesians 2:1-3, “dead in trespasses and sins,” “walk according to the course of this world, according to the prince of the power of the air,” are “children of disobedience,” and are “by nature children of wrath.”

Irenaeus is to be commended for what he did see. And he did see that all men and women have sinned and are under sin as Paul tells us Romans 3 (KJV):9 What then? are we better than they? No, in no wise: for we have before proved both Jews and Gentiles, that they are all under sin; 10 As it is written, There is none righteous, no, not one: 11 There is none that understandeth, there is none that seeketh after God. 12 They are all gone out of the way, they are together become unprofitable; there is none that doeth good, no, not one. 13 Their throat is an open sepulchre; with their tongues they have used deceit; the poison of asps is under their lips: 14 Whose mouth is full of cursing and bitterness: 15 Their feet are swift to shed blood: 16 Destruction and misery are in their ways: 17 And the way of peace have they not known: 18 There is no fear of God before their eyes.

Man apart from Christ is not only under sin, but dead in trespasses and sins, walking according to the course of this world, according to the prince of the power of the air, of the spirit that is now working in the sons of disobedience, living in the lusts of his flesh, indulging the desires of the flesh and of the mind, is by nature a child of wrath, helpless, ungodly, a sinner, an enemy of God, having no hope and without God in the world, walking in the futility of his mind, darkened in his understanding, excluded from the life of God because of his ignorance and hardness of heart, callous, and given over to sensuality for the practice of every kind of impurity with greediness. His mind and conscience are also defiled. Though he has the knowledge of good and evil, he has no power over his fleshly nature not to sin. In his flesh, he cannot do good or please God and is held captive by sin. Irenaeus understood some of the effects of sin upon man, but he did not understand that man has sin as a nature. It is important for us to understand this today.

Chapter 9: The Name Chreistos

Book 1: Chapter 15. —Sige relates to Marcus the generation of the twenty-four elements and of Jesus. Exposure of these absurdities.

1. ...

Moreover, that name of the Saviour which may be pronounced, viz., Jesus [Ἰησοῦς], consists of six letters, but His unutterable name comprises four-and-twenty letters. The name Christ the Son 2855 The text is here altogether uncertain, and the meaning obscure. (υἱὸς Χρῆιστός) comprises twelve letters, but that which is unpronounceable in Christ contains thirty letters. And for this reason he declares that He is Alpha and Omega, that he may indicate the dove, inasmuch as that bird has this number [in its name].

Summary: Here in an ellipsis of paragraph one, Irenaeus states that the name of the Saviour is Jesus, Christ the Son, and Alpha and Omega.

Commentary: I point out here that the historian, Tacitus (c. A.D. 55 - c. A.D. 117), quotes this name in Annals, book XV:

Consequently, to get rid of the report, Nero fastened the guilt and inflicted the most exquisite tortures on a class hated for their abominations, called Christians by the populace. Christus, from whom the name had its origin, suffered the extreme penalty during the reign of Tiberius at the hands of one of our procurators, Pontius Pilatus, and a most mischievous superstition, thus checked for the moment, again broke out not only in Judaea, the first source of the evil, but even in Rome, where all things hideous and shameful from every part of the world find their centre and become popular.

As you can see, the name Christus, in Latin, is very close to the Greek υἱὸς Χρῆιστός (pronounced huios Chreistos) used by Irenaeus, and meaning “Christ the son”. The New Testament Greek form is χριστός, or Christos. There can be no doubt they all refer to Jesus Christ.

Chapter 10: Baptismal Regeneration

Book 1: Chapter XXI.—The views of redemption entertained by these heretics.

1. It happens that their tradition respecting redemption 2921 Comp. chap. xiii. 6. is invisible and incomprehensible, as being the mother of things which are incomprehensible and invisible; and on this account, since it is fluctuating, it is impossible simply and all at once to make known its nature, for every one of them hands it down just as his own inclination prompts. Thus there are as many schemes of “redemption” as there are teachers of these mystical opinions. And when we come to refute them, we shall show in its fitting-place, that this class of men have been instigated by Satan to a denial of that baptism which is regeneration to God, and thus to a renunciation of the whole [Christian] faith.

Summary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus speaks of the Gnostic tradition of redemption and testifies that, “It happens that their tradition respecting redemption is invisible and incomprehensible, as being the mother of things which are incomprehensible and invisible; and on this account, since it is fluctuating, it is impossible simply and all at once to make known its nature, for every one of them hands it down just as his own inclination prompts. Thus there are as many schemes of “redemption” as there are teachers of these mystical opinions.” Irenaeus then records, “And when we come to refute them, we shall show in its fitting-place, that this class of men have been instigated by Satan to a denial of that baptism which is regeneration to God, and thus to a renunciation of the whole [Christian] faith.”

Irenaeus defines baptism as “regeneration to God.” To get this wrong, he says, is to renounce “the whole [Christian] faith.” And he says that the Gnostics deny this baptism.

Commentary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus speaks of the Gnostic tradition of redemption and testifies that, “It happens that their tradition respecting redemption is invisible and incomprehensible, as being the mother of things which are incomprehensible and invisible; and on this account, since it is fluctuating, it is impossible simply and all at once to make known its nature, for every one of them hands it down just as his own inclination prompts. Thus there are as many schemes of “redemption” as there are teachers of these mystical opinions.”

Irenaeus testifies that there is no agreement among the Gnostics about redemption, and that their traditions vary as their “own inclination prompts.”

Irenaeus then records, “And when we come to refute them, we shall show in its fitting-place, that this class of men have been instigated by Satan to a denial of that baptism which is regeneration to God, and thus to a renunciation of the whole [Christian] faith.”

While Irenaeus is correct in his discernment that the Gnostic doctrine is a doctrine of demons, having “been instigated by Satan,” it is not clear just by the context here if Irenaeus is talking about water baptism. However, as we will see from other segments in his writing that it is certain that he means water baptism here as well. In the history of the early church, this came to be a common belief after the time of the apostles. Here is a quote from Philip P. Schaff, the noted historian.

"This ordinance [Baptism] was regarded in the ancient church as the sacrament of the new birth or regeneration, and as the solemn rite of initiation into the Christian Church, admitting to all her benefits and committing to all her obligations....Its effect consists in the forgiveness of sins and the communication of the Holy Spirit. Justin [Martyr] calls baptism 'the water-bath for the forgiveness of sins and regeneration,' and 'the bath of conversion and the knowledge of God.' "It is often called also illumination, spiritual circumcision, anointing, sealing, gift of grace, symbol of redemption, death of sins, etc. Tertullian describes its effect thus: 'When the soul comes to faith, and becomes transformed through regeneration by water and power from above, it discovers, after the veil of the old corruption is taken away, its whole light. It is received into the fellowship of the Holy Spirit; and the soul, which unites itself to the Holy Spirit, is followed by the body.” History of the Christian Church, by Philip P. Schaff, volume 2, page 253.

Schaff also says, "From John 3:5 and Mark 16:16, Tertullian and other fathers argued the necessity of baptism to salvation." History of the Christian Church, by Philip P. Schaff, volume 2, page 253-4.

In addition, Schaff also says that the effect of baptism “was thought to extend only to sins committed before receiving it. Hence the frequent postponement of the sacrament [Procrastinatio baptismi], which Tertullian very earnestly recommends, though he censures it when accompanied with moral levity and presumption." History of the Christian Church, by Philip P. Schaff, volume 2, page 254.

Schaff speaks of the ancient church’s belief that baptism was the “sacrament of the new birth or regeneration.” There is no doubt that this belief started very early on in the Church, as we note that the writing of Justin Martyr (c. 100 – 165 A.D.) preceded Irenaeus slightly. We will talk more about what the Scripture has to say about water baptism in the following sections.

Book 3: Chapter XVII.—The apostles teach that it was neither Christ nor the Saviour, but the Holy Spirit, who did descend upon Jesus. The reason for this descent.

1. It certainly was in the power of the apostles to declare that Christ descended upon Jesus, or that the so-called superior Saviour [came down] upon the dispensational one, or he who is from the invisible places upon him from the Demiurge; but they neither knew nor said anything of the kind: for, had they known it, they would have also certainly stated it. But what really was the case, that did they record, [namely,] that the Spirit of God as a dove descended upon Him; this Spirit, of whom it was declared by Isaiah, “And the Spirit of God shall rest upon Him,” 3614 Isa. xi. 2. as I have already said. And again: “The Spirit of the Lord is upon Me, because He hath anointed Me.” 3615 Isa. lxi. 1. That is the Spirit of whom the Lord declares, “For it is not ye that speak, but the Spirit of your Father which speaketh in you.” 3616 Matt. x. 20. And again, giving to the disciples the power of regeneration into God, 3617 Harvey remarks on this: “The sacrament of baptism is therefore ἡ δύμаниц τῆς ἀναγεννήσεως εἰς Θεόν.” [Comp. book i. cap. xxi.] He said to them, “Go and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.” 3618 Matt. xxviii. 19. For [God] promised, that in the last times He would pour Him [the Spirit] upon [His] servants and handmaids, that they might prophesy; wherefore He did also descend upon the Son of God, made the Son of man, becoming accustomed in fellowship with Him to dwell in the human race, to rest with human beings, and to dwell in the workmanship of God, working the will of the Father in them, and renewing them from their old habits into the newness of Christ.

2. This Spirit did David ask for the human race, saying, “And stablish me with Thine all-governing Spirit;” 3619 Ps. li. 12. who also, as Luke says, descended at the day of Pentecost upon the disciples after the Lord’s ascension, having power to admit all nations to the entrance of life, and to the opening of the new covenant; from whence also, with one accord in all languages, they uttered praise to God, the Spirit bringing distant tribes to unity, and offering to the Father the first-fruits of all nations. Wherefore also the Lord promised to send the Comforter, 3620 John xvi. 7. who should join us to God. For as a compacted lump of dough cannot be formed of dry wheat without fluid matter, nor can a loaf possess unity, so, in like manner, neither could we, being many, be made one in Christ Jesus without the water from heaven. And as dry earth does not bring forth unless it receive moisture, in like manner we also, being originally a dry tree, could never have brought forth fruit unto life without the voluntary rain from above. For our bodies have received unity among themselves by means of that laver which leads to incorruption; but our souls, by means of the Spirit. Wherefore both are necessary, since both contribute towards the life of God, our Lord compassionating that erring Samaritan woman 3621 Irenæus refers to this woman as a type of the heathen world: for, among the Jews, Samaritan and Idolater were convertible terms.—who did not remain with one husband, but committed fornication by [contracting] many marriages—by pointing out, and promising to her living water, so that she should thirst no more, nor occupy herself in acquiring the refreshing water obtained by labour, having in herself water springing up to eternal life. The Lord, receiving this as a gift from His Father, does Himself also confer it upon those who are partakers of Himself, sending the Holy Spirit upon all the earth.

Summary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus argues against the Gnostics saying, “It certainly was in the power of the apostles to declare that Christ descended upon Jesus, or that the so-called superior Saviour [came down] upon the dispensational one, or he who is from the invisible places upon him from the Demiurge; but they neither knew nor said anything of the kind: for, had they known it, they would have also certainly stated it. But what really was the case, that did they record, [namely,] that the Spirit of God as a dove descended upon Him;” referring to Luke 3:22, “this Spirit, of whom it was declared by Isaiah, “And the Spirit of God shall rest upon Him,” referring to Isaiah 11:2, “as I have already said.” Irenaeus continues as he affirms, “And again: “The Spirit of the Lord is upon Me, because He hath anointed Me,” referring to Isaiah 61:1. Irenaeus then explains as he testifies, “That is the Spirit of whom the Lord declares, “For it is not ye that speak, but the Spirit of your Father which speaketh in you,” referring to Matthew 10:20. Irenaeus then continues, “And again, giving to the disciples the power of regeneration into God, He said to them, “Go and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost,” referring to Matthew 28:19. Irenaeus then affirms, “For [God] promised, that in the last times He would pour Him [the Spirit] upon [His] servants and handmaids, that they might prophesy;” referring to Joel 2:28-29. And Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “wherefore He did also descend upon the Son of God, made the Son of man, becoming accustomed in fellowship with Him to dwell in the human race, to rest with human beings, and to dwell in the workmanship of God, working the will of the Father in them, and renewing them from their old habits into the newness of Christ,” referring in part to Luke 3:21-22.

Irenaeus continues in paragraph two, testifying, “This Spirit did David ask for the human race, saying, “And stablish me with Thine all-governing Spirit,” referring to Psalm 51:12. Irenaeus then testifies, “who also, as Luke says, descended at the day of Pentecost upon the disciples after the Lord’s ascension, having power to admit all nations to the entrance of life, and to the opening of the new covenant; from whence also, with one accord in all languages, they uttered praise to God, the Spirit bringing distant tribes to unity, and offering to the Father the first-fruits of all nations,” referring to Acts 1 and 2. Irenaeus then testifies, “Wherefore also the Lord promised to send the Comforter,” referring to John 16:7, “who should join us to God.” Irenaeus then explains, “For as a compacted lump of dough cannot be formed of dry wheat without fluid matter, nor can a loaf possess unity, so, in like manner, neither could we, being many, be made one in Christ Jesus without the water from heaven. And as dry earth does not bring forth unless it receive moisture, in like manner we also, being originally a dry tree, could never have brought forth fruit unto life without the voluntary rain from above.” Irenaeus then testifies, “For our bodies have received unity among themselves by means of that laver which leads to incorruption; but our souls, by means of the Spirit. Wherefore both are necessary, since both contribute towards the life of God, our Lord compassionating that erring Samaritan woman who did not remain with one husband, but committed fornication by [contracting] many marriages—by pointing out, and promising to her living water, so that she should thirst no more, nor occupy herself in acquiring the refreshing water obtained by labour, having in herself water springing up to eternal life,” referring to John 4:10. Irenaeus concludes as he testifies, “The Lord, receiving this as a gift from His Father, does Himself also confer it upon those who are partakers of Himself, sending the Holy Spirit upon all the earth,” referring to Acts 2:38.

Commentary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus argues against the Gnostic doctrine saying, “It certainly was in the power of the apostles to declare that Christ descended upon Jesus, or that the so-called superior Saviour [came down] upon the dispensational one, or he who is from the invisible places upon him from the Demiurge; but they neither knew nor said anything of the kind: for, had they known it, they would have also certainly stated it. But what really was the case, that did they record, [namely,] that the Spirit of God as a dove descended upon Him,” referring to Luke 3 (KJV):22 And the Holy Ghost descended in a bodily shape like a dove upon him, and a voice came from heaven, which said, Thou art my beloved Son; in thee I am well pleased.

Irenaeus continues as he affirms, “this Spirit, of whom it was declared by Isaiah, “And the Spirit of God shall rest upon Him,” referring to Isaiah 11 (KJV):2 And the spirit of the LORD shall rest upon him, the spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and might, the spirit of knowledge and of the fear of the LORD;

Irenaeus continues and affirms, “as I have already said. And again: “The Spirit of the Lord is upon Me, because He hath anointed Me,” referring to Isaiah 61 (NIV):1 The Spirit of the Sovereign LORD is on me, because the LORD has anointed me to proclaim good news to the poor. He has sent me to bind up the brokenhearted, to proclaim freedom for the captives and release from darkness for the prisoners, 2 to proclaim the year of the LORD’s favor and the day of vengeance of our God, to comfort all who mourn.

Irenaeus then explains as he testifies, “That is the Spirit of whom the Lord declares, “For it is not ye that speak, but the Spirit of your Father which speaketh in you,” referring to Matthew 10 (NIV):20 for it will not be you speaking, but the Spirit of your Father speaking through you.

Irenaeus then continues, “And again, giving to the disciples the power of regeneration into God, He said to them, “Go and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost,” referring in context to Matthew 28 (NIV):18 Then Jesus came to them and said, “All authority in heaven and on earth has been given to me. 19 Therefore go and make disciples of all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit, 20 and teaching them to obey everything I have commanded you. And surely I am with you always, to the very end of the age.”

Irenaeus then affirms, “For [God] promised, that in the last times He would pour Him [the Spirit] upon [His] servants and handmaids, that they might prophesy;” referring to Joel 2 (NIV):28 “And afterward, I will pour out my Spirit on all people. Your sons and daughters will prophesy, your old men will dream dreams, your young men will see visions. 29 Even on my servants, both men and women, I will pour out my Spirit in those days.

And Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “wherefore He did also descend upon the Son of God, made the Son of man, becoming accustomed in fellowship with Him to dwell in the human race, to rest with human beings, and to dwell in the workmanship of God, working the will of the Father in them, and renewing them from their old habits into the newness of Christ,” referring in part to Luke 3 (NIV):21 When all the people were being baptized, Jesus was baptized too. And as he was praying, heaven was opened 22 and the Holy Spirit descended on him in bodily form like a dove. And a voice came from heaven: “You are my Son, whom I love; with you I am well pleased.”

Irenaeus continues in paragraph two, testifying that, “This Spirit did David ask for the human race, saying, “And stablish me with Thine all-governing Spirit,” referring to Psalms 51 (Septuagint):11 Cast me not away from thy presence; and remove not thy holy Spirit from me. 12 Restore to me the joy of thy salvation: establish me with thy directing Spirit.

And also as in Psalms 51 (NIV):11 Do not cast me from your presence or take your Holy Spirit from me. 12 Restore to me the joy of your salvation and grant me a willing spirit, to sustain me.

Irenaeus then testifies, “who also, as Luke says, descended at the day of Pentecost upon the disciples after the Lord’s ascension, having power to admit all nations to the entrance of life, and to the opening of the new covenant; from whence also, with one accord in all languages, they uttered praise to God, the Spirit bringing distant tribes to unity, and offering to the Father the first-fruits of all nations referring in part to Acts 1 (KJV):9 And when he had spoken these things, while they beheld, he was taken up; and a cloud received him out of their sight.

And to Acts 2 (KJV):1 And when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place. 2 And suddenly there came a sound from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting. 3 And there appeared unto them cloven tongues like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them. 4 And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance. 5 And there were dwelling at Jerusalem Jews, devout men, out of every nation under heaven. 6 Now when this was noised abroad, the multitude came together, and were confounded, because that every man heard them speak in his own language. 7 And they were all amazed and marvelled, saying one to another, Behold, are not all these which speak Galilaeans? 8 And how hear we every man in our own tongue, wherein we were born? 9 Parthians, and Medes, and Elamites, and the dwellers in Mesopotamia, and in Judaea, and Cappadocia, in Pontus, and Asia, 10 Phrygia, and Pamphylia, in Egypt, and in the parts of Libya about Cyrene, and strangers of Rome, Jews and proselytes, 11 Cretes and Arabians, we do hear them speak in our tongues the wonderful works of God.

Irenaeus then testifies, “Wherefore also the Lord promised to send the Comforter,” referring to John 16 (KJV):7 Nevertheless I tell you the truth; It is expedient for you that I go away: for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart, I will send him unto you.

And Irenaeus finishes, “who should join us to God.” Irenaeus then explains, “For as a compacted lump of dough cannot be formed of dry wheat without fluid matter, nor can a loaf possess unity, so, in like manner, neither could we, being many, be made one in Christ Jesus without the water from heaven. And as dry earth does not bring forth unless it receive moisture, in like manner we also, being originally a dry tree, could never have brought forth fruit unto life without the voluntary rain from above.” Irenaeus then testifies, “For our bodies have received unity among themselves by means of that laver which leads to incorruption; but our souls, by means of the Spirit.” By “laver which leads to incorruption,” Irenaeus undoubtedly is referring to water baptism.

Irenaeus continues as he asserts, “Wherefore both are necessary, since both contribute towards the life of God, our Lord compassionating that erring Samaritan woman who did not remain with one husband, but committed fornication by [contracting] many marriages—by pointing out, and promising to her living water, so that she should thirst no more, nor occupy herself in acquiring the refreshing water obtained by labour, having in herself water springing up to eternal life,” referring to John 4 (KJV):4 And he must needs go through Samaria. 5 Then cometh he to a city of Samaria, which is called Sychar, near to the parcel of ground that Jacob gave to his son Joseph. 6 Now Jacob's well was there. Jesus therefore, being wearied with his journey, sat thus on the well: and it was about the sixth hour. 7 There cometh a woman of Samaria to draw water: Jesus saith unto her, Give me to drink. 8 (For his disciples were gone away unto the city to buy meat.) 9 Then saith the woman of Samaria unto him, How is it that thou, being a Jew, askest drink of me, which am a woman of Samaria? for the Jews have no dealings with the Samaritans. 10 Jesus answered and said unto her, If thou knewest the gift of God, and who it is that saith to thee, Give me to drink; thou wouldest have asked of him, and he would have given thee living water. 11 The woman saith unto him, Sir, thou hast nothing to draw with, and the well is deep: from whence then hast thou that living water? 12 Art thou greater than our father Jacob, which gave us the well, and drank thereof himself, and his children, and his cattle? 13 Jesus answered and said unto her, Whosoever drinketh of this water shall thirst again: 14 But whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst; but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life. 15 The woman saith unto him, Sir, give me this water, that I thirst not, neither come hither to draw. 16 Jesus saith unto her, Go, call thy husband, and come hither. 17 The woman answered and said, I have no husband. Jesus said unto her, Thou hast well said, I have no husband: 18 For thou hast had five husbands; and he whom thou now hast is not thy husband: in that saidst thou truly. 19 The woman saith unto him, Sir, I perceive that thou art a prophet. 20 Our fathers worshipped in this mountain; and ye say, that in Jerusalem is the place where men ought to worship. 21 Jesus saith unto her, Woman, believe me, the hour cometh, when ye shall neither in this mountain, nor yet at Jerusalem, worship the Father. 22 Ye worship ye know not what: we know what we worship: for salvation is of the Jews. 23 But the hour cometh, and now is, when the true worshippers shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth: for the Father seeketh such to worship him. 24 God is a Spirit: and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth. 25 The woman saith unto him, I know that Messias cometh, which is called Christ: when he is come, he will tell us all things. 26 Jesus saith unto her, I that speak unto thee am he. 27 And upon this came his disciples, and marvelled that he talked with the woman: yet no man said, What seekest thou? or, Why talkest thou with her? 28 The woman then left her waterpot, and went her way into the city, and saith to the men, 29 Come, see a man, which told me all things that ever I did: is not this the Christ? 30 Then they went out of the city, and came unto him.

Jesus points out to the woman at the well that the one who drinks of the water of the well would be thirsty again. The water in the well only sustains the fleshly body of ours, and does not contribute anything to the life of God as Irenaeus suggests. The water that Jesus is speaking of is the Spirit of God as He tells us in John 7 (NIV):37 On the last and greatest day of the festival, Jesus stood and said in a loud voice, “Let anyone who is thirsty come to me and drink. 38 Whoever believes in me, as Scripture has said, rivers of living water will flow from within them.” 39 By this he meant the Spirit, whom those who believed in him were later to receive. Up to that time the Spirit had not been given, since Jesus had not yet been glorified.

It is the Spirit who gives life as Jesus also said in John 6 (NIV):63 The Spirit gives life; the flesh counts for nothing. The words I have spoken to you—they are full of the Spirit and life.

Irenaeus concludes as he testifies, “The Lord, receiving this as a gift from His Father, does Himself also confer it upon those who are partakers of Himself, sending the Holy Spirit upon all the earth,” referring to Acts Acts 2 (NASB):38 Peter said to them, "Repent, and each of you be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the forgiveness of your sins; and you will receive the gift of the Holy Spirit. 39 "For the promise is for you and your children and for all who are far off, as many as the Lord our God will call to Himself."

Commentary Summary Book 3: Chapter XVII

When Irenaeus says in paragraph one, “And again, giving to the disciples the power of regeneration into God He said to them, “Go and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost,” he is indicating that he believed in baptismal regeneration which is the belief that we are born again when we are baptized with water. This belief is based on Mark 16 (NIV):15 He said to them, “Go into all the world and preach the gospel to all creation. 16 Whoever believes and is baptized will be saved, but whoever does not believe will be condemned.

However this Scripture must be taken in context with the rest of Scripture. It is true that baptism is commanded by the Lord, and we, as believers, should obey that command. But we are also commanded to love one another as we read in John 13 (NIV):34 “A new command I give you: Love one another. As I have loved you, so you must love one another. 35 By this everyone will know that you are my disciples, if you love one another.”

Fulfilling the commandment to love one another does not save us, just as fulfilling the command to be baptized does not save us. Baptism itself has no saving power, just as loving one another has no saving power. Love is a fruit of the Spirit, and when we love one another, it is evidence that the Spirit is in us, and that we have been born again. Likewise, baptism itself is only an outward sign of the inward work of the Spirit raising us up to life again by the new birth of the Spirit of God. We only get baptized after we believe. We are born again when we believe the word of God, the Gospel. That is, when we believe that Jesus came in the flesh, and died for our sins, and rose again, and we confess Him as our Lord, we are saved just as we read in Romans 10 (KJV):8 But what saith it? The word is nigh thee, even in thy mouth, and in thy heart: that is, the word of faith, which we preach; 9 That if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved. 10 For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness; and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation.

As we noted before, Paul then reveals to us where this belief, that is, this saving faith, comes from when he says in Romans 10 (KJV):14 How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher? 15 And how shall they preach, except they be sent? as it is written, How beautiful are the feet of them that preach the gospel of peace, and bring glad tidings of good things! 16 But they have not all obeyed the gospel. For Esaias saith, Lord, who hath believed our report? 17 So then faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God.

Hearing comes by the word of Christ, and our faith comes from hearing that word. Paul himself did not claim any saving power in baptism. He even said that Christ did not send him to baptize but to preach the Gospel. He would never have said this if there were any saving power in baptism as we read in 1 Corinthians 1 (KJV):11 For it hath been declared unto me of you, my brethren, by them which are of the house of Chloe, that there are contentions among you. 12 Now this I say, that every one of you saith, I am of Paul; and I of Apollos; and I of Cephas; and I of Christ. 13 Is Christ divided? was Paul crucified for you? or were ye baptized in the name of Paul? 14 I thank God that I baptized none of you, but Crispus and Gaius; 15 Lest any should say that I had baptized in mine own name. 16 And I baptized also the household of Stephanas: besides, I know not whether I baptized any other. 17 For Christ sent me not to baptize, but to preach the gospel: not with wisdom of words, lest the cross of Christ should be made of none effect.

James tells us that it was by God's will that we were brought forth by the word of the truth of the Gospel as we read in James 1 (NASB):18 In the exercise of His will He brought us forth by the word of truth, so that we would be a kind of first fruits among His creatures.

And Peter tells us that the new birth was by the eternal word of God in 1 Peter 1 (KJV):22 Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit unto unfeigned love of the brethren, see that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently: 23 Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth for ever. 24 For all flesh is as grass, and all the glory of man as the flower of grass. The grass withereth, and the flower thereof falleth away: 25 But the word of the Lord endureth for ever. And this is the word which by the gospel is preached unto you.

So it was the word of God that inspired faith in us and gave us eternal life. This faith that saves us was not of ourselves or the result of works we do, but the gift of God as we read in Ephesians 2 (KJV):8 For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God: 9 Not of works, lest any man should boast. 10 For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them.

This word of God ministered to us by the Holy Spirit inspired faith by which our hearts were opened and we believed as we read in Acts 16 (NIV):14 One of those listening was a woman from the city of Thyatira named Lydia, a dealer in purple cloth. She was a worshiper of God. The Lord opened her heart to respond to Paul's message. 15 When she and the members of her household were baptized, she invited us to her home. "If you consider me a believer in the Lord," she said, "come and stay at my house." And she persuaded us.

The word "respond" in verse 14 above is the Greek word προσέχειν (pronounced prosechein). It means literally to hold the mind towards, to take heed. Lydia gave her heart to Jesus and was saved. It was only after her heart was opened that she responded to the Gospel message that Paul preached. And it was only after she had believed Paul's message that she was baptized. We must understand that there is no good work that we could do before or after we are saved that can atone for our sin. It is our faith in Jesus that saves us. This is because the only work that can atone for sin is the work of Christ on the cross, and this work has been finished as Jesus said in John 4 (NIV):34 "My food," said Jesus, "is to do the will of him who sent me and to finish his work.

And then in John 17 (NIV):4 I have brought you glory on earth by finishing the work you gave me to do.

And again in John 19 (NIV):30 When he had received the drink, Jesus said, "It is finished." With that, he bowed his head and gave up his spirit.

What was Jesus' work that He was sent by the Father to accomplish? His work was the redemption of mankind by the perfect sinless sacrifice of the cross. We cannot add to or take away from the work of the cross. For this reason He is able to save us forever as we read in Hebrews 7 (KJV):25 Wherefore he is able also to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them.

A work is something that we do, or an action that we take. There is nothing that we can do, nor any action that we can take, including being baptized, that can make us any more born again than we already are after we believe. Being baptized is a step of obedience that we take after we believe, just like loving one another as Jesus also commanded us to do.

Peter also explains that it is not the physical washing of baptism that saves us, but the answer of a good conscience before God by the resurrection of Jesus Christ as we read in 1 Peter 3 (KJV):15 But sanctify the Lord God in your hearts: and be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and fear: 16 Having a good conscience; that, whereas they speak evil of you, as of evildoers, they may be ashamed that falsely accuse your good conversation in Christ. 17 For it is better, if the will of God be so, that ye suffer for well doing, than for evil doing. 18 For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit: 19 By which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison; 20 Which sometime were disobedient, when once the longsuffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing, wherein few, that is, eight souls were saved by water. 21 The like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us (not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God,) by the resurrection of Jesus Christ: 22 Who is gone into heaven, and is on the right hand of God; angels and authorities and powers being made subject unto him.

What Peter is saying here is that we have a good conscience because of Christ's suffering for our sins, "the just for the unjust, that He might bring us to God." After Christ died, "being put to death in the flesh," Peter tells us that "He went to preach to the spirits in prison." The prison he is referring to is where the righteous dead went after they died. They could not enter heaven yet, since the way into heaven had not yet been made possible by Jesus' death on the cross. This prison is called Abraham's bosom, which we have fully explained in Chapter 6: His Teaching on The Resurrection, under the heading Book 5: Chapter V of Irenaeus' writing.

Abraham's bosom is where the righteous dead went before Jesus accomplished our salvation by dying on the cross for us. This is mentioned in a parable Jesus told us in Luke 16:19-31. To summarize, when the righteous died, they went to Abraham's bosom, also called paradise by Jesus in Luke 23:39-43. Jesus describes a great chasm fixed there which could not be crossed, and which separated the unrighteous from the righteous.

So after Christ died, He went to preach to the spirits in prison, that is, to those in Abraham's bosom or Paradise where the righteous dead were kept until the way into the holiest was made known. Noah and his family are the eight souls that were saved by water, as it were, in the days of Noah and the ark. What Jesus did was to proclaim freedom to those righteous dead who had died in faith before Jesus died on the cross. He then lead the captivity in this prison, called Abraham's bosom, captive into heaven itself as Paul reveals in Ephesians 4 (KJV):8 Wherefore he saith, When he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men. 9 (Now that he ascended, what is it but that he also descended first into the lower parts of the earth? 10 He that descended is the same also that ascended up far above all heavens, that he might fill all things.)

Now the writer of Hebrews also explains that the first tabernacle was a figure to those under the first covenant signifying that the way into the holiest, that is heaven itself, was not yet made known or manifest while the first tabernacle, made with hands was still standing as we read in Hebrews 9 (KJV):1 Then verily the first covenant had also ordinances of divine service, and a worldly sanctuary. 2 For there was a tabernacle made; the first, wherein was the candlestick, and the table, and the shewbread; which is called the sanctuary. 3 And after the second veil, the tabernacle which is called the Holiest of all; 4 Which had the golden censer, and the ark of the covenant overlaid round about with gold, wherein was the golden pot that had manna, and Aaron's rod that budded, and the tables of the covenant; 5 And over it the cherubims of glory shadowing the mercyseat; of which we cannot now speak particularly. 6 Now when these things were thus ordained, the priests went always into the first tabernacle, accomplishing the service of God. 7 But into the second went the high priest alone once every year, not without blood, which he offered for himself, and for the errors of the people: 8 The Holy Ghost thus signifying, that the way into the holiest of all was not yet made manifest, while the first tabernacle was yet standing. 9 Which was a figure for the time then present, in which were offered both gifts and sacrifices, that could not make him that did the service perfect, as pertaining to the conscience; 10 Which stood only in meats and drinks, and divers washings, and carnal ordinances, imposed on them until the time of reformation.

However, Christ has come as a high priest of a more perfect tabernacle not made with hands, speaking of heaven itself, which He has now entered by His own blood once having obtained eternal redemption for us as we read in Hebrews 9 (KJV):11 But Christ being come an high priest of good things to come, by a greater and more perfect tabernacle, not made with hands, that is to say, not of this building; 12 Neither by the blood of goats and calves, but by his own blood he entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us. 13 For if the blood of bulls and of goats, and the ashes of an heifer sprinkling the unclean, sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh: 14 How much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offered himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God? 15 And for this cause he is the mediator of the new testament, that by means of death, for the redemption of the transgressions that were under the first testament, they which are called might receive the promise of eternal inheritance.

It is the blood of Christ that cleanses our conscience from dead works to serve the living God. Now back to Peter's epistle in chapter three, the phrase, "the like figure" in the Greek is αντιτυπον (pronounced antitupon), as in 1 Peter 3 (Textus Receptus):21 ὁ καὶ ἡμᾶς ἀντίτυπον νῦν σώζει βάπτισμα οὐ σαρκὸς ἀπόθεσις ῥύπου ἀλλὰ συνειδήσεως ἀγαθῆς ἐπερώτημα εἰς θεόν δι' ἀναστάσεως Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ.

The most literal rendering of this verse is found in 1 Peter 3 (KJV):21 The like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us (not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God,) by the resurrection of Jesus Christ.

The word ἀντίτυπον (pronounced antitupon) in the Greek is translated “like figure” in this verse. Here is what Wuest’s Word Studies in the Greek New Testament has to say about this verse.

Verse twenty-one

“The words “the like figure” are in the Greek ho antitupon. The question as to whether the word “figure” refers back to the word “ark” or the word “water,” is easily settled by the Greek grammar involved in this expression, for the relative pronoun ho is neuter, the word “ark” is feminine, and the word “water” neuter. The relative pronoun agrees with its antecedent in gender. Therefore the word “figure” which is neuter and construed grammatically with the pronoun ho goes back to the word “water.” The word “figure” is the translation of antitupon which means “the counterpart of reality.” The Greek word “baptism” is in apposition with the word “figure.” Our translation so far reads, “Which (water) also (as a) counterpart now saves you, (namely) baptism.” Water baptism is clearly in the apostle’s mind, not the baptism by the Holy Spirit, for he speaks of the waters of the flood as saving the inmates of the ark, and in this verse, of baptism saving believers. But he says that it saves them only as a counterpart. That is water baptism is the counterpart of the reality, salvation. It can only save as a counterpart, not actually. The Old Testament sacrifices were counterparts of the reality, the Lord Jesus. They did not actually save the believer, only in type. It is not argued here that these sacrifices are analogous to Christian water baptism. The author is merely using them as an illustration of the use of the word “counterpart.” So water baptism only saves the believer in type. The Old Testament Jew was saved before he brought the offering. That offering was only his outward testimony that he was placing his faith in the Lamb of God of whom these sacrifices were a type. The moment he conceived in his heart that he would bring his offering to the Tabernacle, his faith leaped the centuries to the time when God would offer the Sacrifice that would pay for his sin. Our Lord said, “Abraham rejoiced to see my day; and he saw it and was glad” (John 8:56). The act of bringing the sacrifice was his outward expression and testimony of his inward faith. Water baptism is the outward testimony of the believer’s inward faith. The person is saved the moment he places his faith in the Lord Jesus. Water baptism is his visible testimony to his faith and the salvation he was given in answer to that faith.

Peter is careful to inform his readers that he is not teaching baptismal regeneration, namely, that a person who submits to baptism is thereby regenerated, for he says, “not the putting away of the filth of the flesh.” Baptism, Peter explains, does not wash away the filth of the flesh, either in a literal sense as a bath for the body, nor in a metaphorical sense as a cleansing for the soul. No ceremonies really affect the conscience. But he defines what he means by salvation, in the words “the answer of a good conscience toward God,” and he explains how this is accomplished, namely “by the resurrection of Jesus Christ” in that the believing sinner is identified with Him in that resurrection.” Word Studies in the Greek New Testament, Kenneth S. Wuest, Volume II, First Peter in the Greek New Testament, page 108-109.

So it is the “answer,” or more literally, “appeal” (Greek ἐπερώτημα pronounced eperotema), to God for a good conscience by the resurrection of Jesus Christ that saves us as we read in 1 Peter 3 (KJV):21 The like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us (not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God,) by the resurrection of Jesus Christ: 22 Who is gone into heaven, and is on the right hand of God; angels and authorities and powers being made subject unto him.

Fragment XXXIV.

“And 4854 This and the next fragment first appeared in the Benedictine edition reprinted at Venice, 1734. They were taken from a ms. Catena on the book of Kings in the Coislin Collection. dipped himself,” says [the Scripture], “seven times in Jordan.” 4855 2 Kings v. 14. It was not for nothing that Naaman of old, when suffering from leprosy, was purified upon his being baptized, but [it served] as an indication to us. For as we are lepers in sin, we are made clean, by means of the sacred water and the invocation of the Lord, from our old transgressions; being spiritually regenerated as new-born babes, even as the Lord has declared: "Except a man be born again through water and the Spirit, he shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven." 4856 John iii. 5.

Summary: In this fragment of his writing, Irenaeus affirms, "And dipped himself," says [the Scripture], "seven times in Jordan," referring to 2 Kings 5:14. Irenaeus then asserts, "It was not for nothing that Naaman of old, when suffering from leprosy, was purified upon his being baptized, but [it served] as an indication to us. For as we are lepers in sin, we are made clean, by means of the sacred water and the invocation of the Lord, from our old transgressions; being spiritually regenerated as new-born babes, even as the Lord has declared: "Except a man be born again through water and the Spirit, he shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven," referring to John 3:5.

Commentary: In this fragment, we see clearly Irenaeus' belief in baptismal regeneration. He first affirms, "And dipped himself," says [the Scripture], "seven times in Jordan," referring in context to 2 Kings 5 (KJV):1 Now Naaman, captain of the host of the king of Syria, was a great man with his master, and honourable, because by him the LORD had given deliverance unto Syria: he was also a mighty man in valour, but he was a leper.

The reason that Naaman was sick was revealed in 2 Kings 5 (KJV):2 And the Syrians had gone out by companies, and had brought away captive out of the land of Israel a little maid; and she waited on Naaman's wife. 3 And she said unto her mistress, Would God my lord were with the prophet that is in Samaria! for he would recover him of his leprosy. 4 And one went in, and told his lord, saying, Thus and thus said the maid that is of the land of Israel. 5 And the king of Syria said, Go to, go, and I will send a letter unto the king of Israel. And he departed, and took with him ten talents of silver, and six thousand pieces of gold, and ten changes of raiment. 6 And he brought the letter to the king of Israel, saying, Now when this letter is come unto thee, behold, I have therewith sent Naaman my servant to thee, that thou mayest recover him of his leprosy. 7 And it came to pass, when the king of Israel had read the letter, that he rent his clothes, and said, Am I God, to kill and to make alive, that this man doth send unto me to recover a man of his leprosy? wherefore consider, I pray you, and see how he seeketh a quarrel against me. 8 And it was so, when Elisha the man of God had heard that the king of Israel had rent his clothes, that he sent to the king, saying, Wherefore hast thou rent thy clothes? let him come now to me, and he shall know that there is a prophet in Israel.

Naaman was sick that he might know that there was a prophet in Israel. Not only so, but he was sick in order that there is no God in all the earth but in Israel as we continue to read in 2 Kings 5 (KJV):9 So Naaman came with his horses and with his chariot, and stood at the door of the house of Elisha. 10 And Elisha sent a messenger unto him, saying, Go and wash in Jordan seven times, and thy flesh shall come again to thee, and thou shalt be clean. 11 But Naaman was wroth, and went away, and said, Behold, I thought, He will surely come out to me, and stand, and call on the name of the LORD his God, and strike his hand over the place, and recover the leper. 12 Are not Abana and Pharpar, rivers of Damascus, better than all the waters of Israel? may I not wash in them, and be clean? So he turned and went away in a rage. 13 And his servants came near, and spake unto him, and said, My father, if the prophet had bid thee do some great thing, wouldest thou not have done it? how much rather then, when he saith to thee, Wash, and be clean? 14 Then went he down, and dipped himself seven times in Jordan, according to the saying of the man of God: and his flesh came again like unto the flesh of a little child, and he was clean. 15 And he returned to the man of God, he and all his company, and came, and stood before him: and he said, Behold, now I know that there is no God in all the earth, but in Israel: now therefore, I pray thee, take a blessing of thy servant.

Irenaeus then asserts, "It was not for nothing that Naaman of old, when suffering from leprosy, was purified upon his being baptized, but [it served] as an indication to us. For as we are lepers in sin, we are made clean, by means of the sacred water and the invocation of the Lord, from our old transgressions; being spiritually regenerated as new-born babes, even as the Lord has declared: "Except a man be born again through water and the Spirit, he shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven," referring to John 3:5.

Again, baptism is something we do, and is therefore a work. It is an action we take by faith in obedience to Jesus' command. It has no saving power. It doesn't merit anything just as faith doesn't merit anything, nor doing good works, or loving one another, or any other action we take. We are commanded to do these things because we are saved, not to be saved. Good works are appropriate for those who have been saved, and bought with such a precious price. Our rewards are dependent on what we do after we believe, but not our salvation as we read in 1 Corinthians 3 (KJV):10 According to the grace of God which is given unto me, as a wise masterbuilder, I have laid the foundation, and another buildeth thereon. But let every man take heed how he buildeth thereupon. 11 For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ. 12 Now if any man build upon this foundation gold, silver, precious stones, wood, hay, stubble; 13 Every man's work shall be made manifest: for the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire; and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is. 14 If any man's work abide which he hath built thereupon, he shall receive a reward. 15 If any man's work shall be burned, he shall suffer loss: but he himself shall be saved; yet so as by fire.

The foundation is Jesus Christ. That is, all that Jesus has done for us and is to us is our foundation. So what is Jesus to us? He is our wisdom, our righteousness, our sanctification, and our redemption as in 1 Corinthians 1 (NASB):30 But by His doing you are in Christ Jesus, who became to us wisdom from God, and righteousness and sanctification, and redemption, 31 so that, just as it is written, "LET HIM WHO BOASTS, BOAST IN THE LORD."

This is why we sing "He's everything to me." But did you notice in this fragment that Irenaeus used the word "invocation"? And did you notice that he used the word "sacred" in front of water as in "sacred water"? The handling of holy things and the giving of invocations is the work of a priest. We will see another occurrence of the word "invocation" when we get to Irenaeus' thoughts about Communion in Chapter 22: Communion. Could this be how the sacerdotal order came into the Church? If people are born again, not at the will of the Holy Spirit who blows like the wind, but at the invocation given at baptism, the necessity of a priest is understood, for who else would be qualified to give an invocation or handle holy things such as "the sacred water" as Irenaeus mentions above?

But speaking of water, Jesus and Nicodemus had a conversation recorded in the Gospel of John, chapter three. Jesus explains to Nicodemus that a man must be born again in order to see or enter the kingdom of God. In answer to Nicodemus question, "How can a man be born when he is old?," Jesus responds and contrasts the human birth, the birth of the flesh, with the spiritual birth, the birth of the Spirit as we read in John 3 (HCSB):1 There was a man from the Pharisees named Nicodemus, a ruler of the Jews. 2 This man came to Him at night and said, "Rabbi, we know that You have come from God as a teacher, for no one could perform these signs You do unless God were with him." 3 Jesus replied, "I assure you: Unless someone is born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." 4 "But how can anyone be born when he is old?" Nicodemus asked Him. "Can he enter his mother's womb a second time and be born?" 5 Jesus answered, "I assure you: Unless someone is born of water and the Spirit, he cannot enter the kingdom of God. 6 Whatever is born of the flesh is flesh, and whatever is born of the Spirit is spirit. 7 Do not be amazed that I told you that you must be born again. 8 The wind blows where it pleases, and you hear its sound, but you don't know where it comes from or where it is going. So it is with everyone born of the Spirit."

Jesus is saying that the Spirit gives birth to spirit, and the working of the Spirit is like the wind. We cannot tell where the wind comes from nor where it is going. So it is with "everyone who is born of the Spirit." And when Jesus was explaining to the disciples what He meant by His body being the bread of God, and that he who eats His flesh and drinks His blood has eternal life, He said that it is the Spirit who gives life as we read in John 6 (NASB):63 It is the Spirit who gives life; the flesh profits nothing; the words that I have spoken to you are spirit and are life.

It is the Spirit who gives life to our spirits when we are born again. This is why Paul says that we were made alive who were dead in trespasses and sins as we read in Colossians 2 (KJV):13 And you, being dead in your sins and the uncircumcision of your flesh, hath he quickened together with him, having forgiven you all trespasses; 14 Blotting out the handwriting of ordinances that was against us, which was contrary to us, and took it out of the way, nailing it to his cross;

Our physical bodies were not made alive, for they were already alive. It is our spirit that was dead in trespasses and sins. And it is in our spirit, after having believed in Jesus, that we are made alive by the Holy Spirit. That is, the Holy Spirit gives life to our spirit. The life he gives is eternal life. And those who have had this new birth experience are said to be raised up with Christ as we read in Colossians 3 (KJV):1 If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God. 2 Set your affection on things above, not on things on the earth. 3 For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God.

Christ is said to be “our life” when we have been born again. We are also said to have a “new self,” literally a “new man” (Greek καινὸν ἄνθρωπον pronounced kainon anthropon), created to be like God in righteousness and true holiness as in Ephesians 4 (NIV):22 You were taught, with regard to your former way of life, to put off your old self, which is being corrupted by its deceitful desires; 23 to be made new in the attitude of your minds; 24 and to put on the new self, created to be like God in true righteousness and holiness.

It is in this new man or self, which is our inner man or spirit, that we joyfully concur with the law of God as in Romans 7 (KJV):22 For I delight in the law of God after the inward man: 23 But I see another law in my members, warring against the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity to the law of sin which is in my members.

The reason we joyfully concur with the law of God in our inner man is because we now have a new nature, having been born of the Spirit of God as we read in 2 Peter 1 (KJV):4 Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises: that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust.

This is why we are said to be a new creature as in 2 Corinthians 5 (KJV):17 Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new.

And so we see that our outer man or fleshly body is going to die, but our inner man or spirit has the life of the Spirit and is renewed day by day as in 2 Corinthians 4 (KJV):16 For which cause we faint not; but though our outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed day by day.

So Jesus is not saying we are saved by the water of baptism in John, chapter three. He is talking about the fleshly or human birth of water, and he contrasts it with the spiritual birth of the Spirit. The fleshly birth by water, speaking of the water that surrounds the fetus in pregnancy, gives life to our fleshly bodies. But in order to enter the kingdom of God we must have a spiritual birth, and be born of the Spirit. Two births are required to enter the kingdom of God, one physical and one spiritual. So we are not saved when we are baptized. We are baptized because we have believed, and we are already saved. When we obey Jesus’ command to be baptized, we are simply giving evidence of our faith since taking this action is in obedience to the word of God.

The fact that we are saved apart from baptism is shown by the testimony of Peter in Acts, chapter 10, where Peter preaches to the Gentiles in the house of Cornelius, and they, upon hearing his message, were filled with the Holy Spirit and spoke with tongues and exalted God as we read in Acts 10 (NIV):44 While Peter was still speaking these words, the Holy Spirit came on all who heard the message. 45 The circumcised believers who had come with Peter were astonished that the gift of the Holy Spirit had been poured out even on Gentiles. 46 For they heard them speaking in tongues and praising God. Then Peter said, 47 “Surely no one can stand in the way of their being baptized with water. They have received the Holy Spirit just as we have.” 48 So he ordered that they be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ. Then they asked Peter to stay with them for a few days.

The Holy Spirit does not fall upon and fill unbelievers. Those who heard Peter’s message were born again upon hearing the words of the Gospel preached by Peter. And because they believed his words, they received the Holy Spirit at that time, even though they had not been baptized with water yet. When Peter saw that they had received the Holy Spirit just as he and his fellow apostles, he commanded them to be baptized. God was showing us that the Gentiles were also to be included in the church if they believed the Gospel. And God was also showing us that water baptism does not save us.

Chapter 11: The Teaching of Marcion and the Gnostics

Book 1: Chapter XXVII.—Doctrines of Cerdo and Marcion.

1. Cerdo was one who took his system from the followers of Simon, and came to live at Rome in the time of Hyginus, who held the ninth place in the episcopal succession from the apostles downwards. He taught that the God proclaimed by the law and the prophets was not the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. For the former was known, but the latter unknown; while the one also was righteous, but the other benevolent.

2. Marcion of Pontus succeeded him, and developed his doctrine. In so doing, he advanced the most daring blasphemy against Him who is proclaimed as God by the law and the prophets, declaring Him to be the author of evils, to take delight in war, to be infirm of purpose, and even to be contrary to Himself. But Jesus being derived from that father who is above the God that made the world, and coming into Judæa in the times of Pontius Pilate the governor, who was the procurator of Tiberius Cæsar, was manifested in the form of a man to those who were in Judæa, abolishing the prophets and the law, and all the works of that God who made the world, whom also he calls Cosmocrator. Besides this, he mutilates the Gospel which is according to Luke, removing all that is written respecting the generation of the Lord, and setting aside a great deal of the teaching of the Lord, in which the Lord is recorded as most dearly confessing that the Maker of this universe is His Father. He likewise persuaded his disciples that he himself was more worthy of credit than are those apostles who have handed down the Gospel to us, furnishing them not with the Gospel, but merely a fragment of it. In like manner, too, he dismembered the Epistles of Paul, removing all that is said by the apostle respecting that God who made the world, to the effect that He is the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, and also those passages from the prophetic writings which the apostle quotes, in order to teach us that they announced beforehand the coming of the Lord.

3. Salvation will be the attainment only of those souls which had learned his doctrine; while the body, as having been taken from the earth, is incapable of sharing in salvation. In addition to his blasphemy against God Himself, he advanced this also, truly speaking as with the mouth of the devil, and saying all things in direct opposition to the truth,—that Cain, and those like him, and the Sodomites, and the Egyptians, and others like them, and, in fine, all the nations who walked in all sorts of abomination, were saved by the Lord, on His descending into Hades, and on their running unto Him, and that they welcomed Him into their kingdom. But the serpent 2958 [Comp. cap. xxv. 3.] which was in Marcion declared that Abel, and Enoch, and Noah, and those other righteous men who sprang 2959 We here follow the amended version proposed by the Benedictine editor. from the patriarch Abraham, with all the prophets, and those who were pleasing to God, did not partake in salvation. For since these men, he says, knew that their God was constantly tempting them, so now they suspected that He was tempting them, and did not run to Jesus, or believe His announcement: and for this reason he declared that their souls remained in Hades.

4. But since this man is the only one who has dared openly to mutilate the Scriptures, and unblushingly above all others to inveigh against God, I purpose specially to refute him, convicting him out of his own writings; and, with the help of God, I shall overthrow him out of those 2960 A promise never fulfilled: comp. book iii. 12, and Euseb., Hist. Eccl., v. 8. discourses of the Lord and the apostles, which are of authority with him, and of which he makes use. At present, however, I have simply been led to mention him, that thou mightest know that all those who in any way corrupt the truth, and injuriously affect the preaching of the Church, are the disciples and successors of Simon Magus of Samaria. Although they do not confess the name of their master, in order all the more to seduce others, yet they do teach his doctrines. They set forth, indeed, the name of Christ Jesus as a sort of lure, but in various ways they introduce the impieties of Simon; and thus they destroy multitudes, wickedly disseminating their own doctrines by the use of a good name, and, through means of its sweetness and beauty, extending to their hearers the bitter and malignant poison of the serpent, the great author of apostasy. 2961 [Rev. xii. 9.]

Summary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus testifies that “Cerdo was one who took his system from the followers of Simon, and came to live at Rome in the time of Hyginus, who held the ninth place in the episcopal succession from the apostles downwards.” Irenaeus continues as he records that “He taught that the God proclaimed by the law and the prophets was not the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. For the former was known, but the latter unknown; while the one also was righteous, but the other benevolent.”

In paragraph two, Irenaeus then testifies against the Gnostics as he records:

- “Marcion of Pontus succeeded him, and developed his doctrine. In so doing, he advanced the most daring blasphemy against Him who is proclaimed as God by the law and the prophets, declaring Him to be the author of evils, to take delight in war, to be infirm of purpose, and even to be contrary to Himself.”
- “But Jesus being derived from that father who is above the God that made the world, and coming into Judæa in the times of Pontius Pilate the governor, who was the procurator of Tiberius Cæsar, was manifested in the form of a man to those who were in Judæa, abolishing the prophets and the law, and all the works of that God who made the world, whom also he calls Cosmocrator.”
- “Besides this, he mutilates the Gospel which is according to Luke, removing all that is written respecting the generation of the Lord, and setting aside a great deal of the teaching of the Lord, in which the Lord is recorded as most dearly confessing that the Maker of this universe is His Father.”
- “He likewise persuaded his disciples that he himself was more worthy of credit than are those apostles who have handed down the Gospel to us, furnishing them not with the Gospel, but merely a fragment of it.”
- “In like manner, too, he dismembered the Epistles of Paul, removing all that is said by the apostle respecting that God who made the world, to the effect that He is the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, and also those passages from the prophetic writings which the apostle quotes, in order to teach us that they announced beforehand the coming of the Lord.”

In paragraph three, Irenaeus testifies that Marcion also taught:

- “Salvation will be the attainment only of those souls which had learned his doctrine; while the body, as having been taken from the earth, is incapable of sharing in salvation.”
- “In addition to his blasphemy against God Himself, he advanced this also, truly speaking as with the mouth of the devil, and saying all things in direct opposition to the truth,—that Cain, and those like him, and the Sodomites, and the Egyptians, and others like them, and, in fine, all the nations who walked in all sorts of abomination, were saved by the Lord, on His descending into Hades, and on their running unto Him, and that they welcomed Him into their kingdom.”
- “But the serpent was in Marcion declared that Abel, and Enoch, and Noah, and those other righteous men who sprang from the patriarch Abraham, with all the prophets, and those who were pleasing to God, did not partake in salvation. For since these men, he says, knew that their God was constantly tempting them, so now they suspected that He was tempting them, and did not run to Jesus, or believe His announcement: and for this reason he declared that their souls remained in Hades.”

In paragraph four, Irenaeus takes a stand against the errors of Marcion as he then testifies, “But since this man is the only one who has dared openly to mutilate the Scriptures, and unblushingly above all others to inveigh against God, I purpose specially to refute him, convicting him out of his own writings; and, with the help of God, I shall overthrow him out of those discourses of the Lord and the apostles, which are of authority with him, and of which he makes use.” Irenaeus then explains, “At present, however, I have simply been led to mention him, that thou mightest know that all those who in any way corrupt the truth, and injuriously affect the preaching of the Church, are the disciples and successors of Simon Magus of Samaria. Although they do not confess the name of their master, in order all the more to seduce others, yet they do teach his doctrines. They set forth, indeed, the name of Christ Jesus as a sort of lure, but in various ways they introduce the impieties of Simon; and thus they destroy multitudes, wickedly disseminating their own doctrines by the use of a good name, and, through means of its sweetness and beauty, extending to their hearers the bitter and malignant poison of the serpent, the great author of apostasy,” referring to Revelation 12:9.

Commentary: It is helpful to know what Irenaeus is fighting against. The above section outlines the errors of Marcion in Irenaeus’ own words, and gives us a brief introduction to Gnostic beliefs.

In paragraph one, Irenaeus testifies that “Cerdo was one who took his system from the followers of Simon, and came to live at Rome in the time of Hyginus, who held the ninth place in the episcopal succession from the apostles downwards.” Irenaeus continues as he records that “He taught that the God proclaimed by the law and the prophets was not the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. For the former was known, but the latter unknown; while the one also was righteous, but the other benevolent.”

Irenaeus is saying that the belief of Cerdo was that the God of the Old Testament was not the Father whom Jesus refers to in the New Testament. The idea proposed by Cerdo was that the Father whom Jesus referred to was above the God of the Old Testament. The God of the Old Testament was the one who “made the world,” but the god above Him was someone different since Jesus’ Father was loving, and unknown. This idea of Cerdo may be based on the following Scripture:

John 17 (NIV):22 I have given them the glory that you gave me, that they may be one as we are one— 23 I in them and you in me—so that they may be brought to complete unity. Then the world will know that you sent me and have loved them even as you have loved me. 24 “Father, I want those you have given me to be with me where I am, and to see my glory, the glory you have given me because you loved me before the creation of the world. 25 “Righteous Father, though the world does not know you, I know you, and they know that you have sent me. 26 I have made you known to them, and will continue to make you known in order that the love you have for me may be in them and that I myself may be in them.”

However, the reason that the Father was not known by the world was because the world of mankind is dead in trespasses and sins. Until we believe in Jesus Christ, we are dead in trespasses and sins. Such a concept as Cerdo proposes is nowhere mentioned in the Scriptures. This is evidently a doctrine of demons, and the teaching of a false god.

In paragraph two, Irenaeus then testifies against the Gnostics as he records:

- “Marcion of Pontus succeeded him, and developed his doctrine. In so doing, he advanced the most daring blasphemy against Him who is proclaimed as God by the law and the prophets, declaring Him to be the author of evils, to take delight in war, to be infirm of purpose, and even to be contrary to Himself.”
- “But Jesus being derived from that father who is above the God that made the world, and coming into Judæa in the times of Pontius Pilate the governor, who was the procurator of Tiberius Cæsar, was manifested in the form of a man to those who were in Judæa, abolishing the prophets and the law, and all the works of that God who made the world, whom also he calls Cosmocrator.”

Irenaeus testifies that Marcion further developed this error by declaring the God of the Old Testament to be the “author of evils, to take delight in war, to be infirm of purpose, and even to be contrary to Himself.” Irenaeus also testifies that Marcion believed that Jesus was “derived from that father who is above the God that made the world,” the Gnostic doctrine that taught that there was another god, Bythus, who existed before the God of the Old Testament. Irenaeus further states that Marcion believed that Jesus came to abolish the law and the prophets, “and all the works of that god who made the world.” But this is absolutely contrary to the Scriptures and the words of Jesus Himself as we read in Luke 16 (NIV):16 “The Law and the Prophets were proclaimed until John. Since that time, the good news of the kingdom of God is being preached, and everyone is forcing their way into it. 17 It is easier for heaven and earth to disappear than for the least stroke of a pen to drop out of the Law.

Jesus Himself said that He did not come to abolish but to fulfill as we read in Matthew 5 (NIV):17 “Do not think that I have come to abolish the Law or the Prophets; I have not come to abolish them but to fulfill them. 18 For truly I tell you, until heaven and earth disappear, not the smallest letter, not the least stroke of a pen, will by any means disappear from the Law until everything is accomplished.

Irenaeus then testifies against the Gnostics as he records:

- “Besides this, he mutilates the Gospel which is according to Luke, removing all that is written respecting the generation of the Lord, and setting aside a great deal of the teaching of the Lord, in which the Lord is recorded as most dearly confessing that the Maker of this universe is His Father.”
- “He likewise persuaded his disciples that he himself was more worthy of credit than are those apostles who have handed down the Gospel to us, furnishing them not with the Gospel, but merely a fragment of it.”
- “In like manner, too, he dismembered the Epistles of Paul, removing all that is said by the apostle respecting that God who made the world, to the effect that He is the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, and also those passages from the prophetic writings which the apostle quotes, in order to teach us that they announced beforehand the coming of the Lord.”

Irenaeus also states that Marcion mutilates the Gospel of Luke to show only the verses which support his teaching. Likewise, Irenaeus testifies that he “dismembered” the epistles of Paul, so that they are really a product of his own fabrication. Evidently Marcion did not know about the curse on those who add or take away from the word of God as in Revelation 22 (KJV):16 I Jesus have sent mine angel to testify unto you these things in the churches. I am the root and the offspring of David, and the bright and morning star. 17 And the Spirit and the bride say, Come. And let him that heareth say, Come. And let him that is athirst come. And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely. 18 For I testify unto every man that heareth the words of the prophecy of this book, If any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book: 19 And if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from the things which are written in this book. 20 He which testifieth these things saith, Surely I come quickly. Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus. 21 The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. Amen.

We are not to tamper with the word of God.

In paragraph three, Irenaeus testifies that Marcion also taught:

- “Salvation will be the attainment only of those souls which had learned his doctrine; while the body, as having been taken from the earth, is incapable of sharing in salvation.”
- “In addition to his blasphemy against God Himself, he advanced this also, truly speaking as with the mouth of the devil, and saying all things in direct opposition to the truth,—that Cain, and those like him, and the Sodomites, and the Egyptians, and others like them, and, in fine, all the nations who walked in all sorts of abomination, were saved by the Lord, on His descending into Hades, and on their running unto Him, and that they welcomed Him into their kingdom.”
- “But the serpent was in Marcion declared that Abel, and Enoch, and Noah, and those other righteous men who sprang from the patriarch Abraham, with all the prophets, and those who were pleasing to God, did not partake in salvation. For since these men, he says, knew that their God was constantly tempting them, so now they suspected that He was tempting them, and did not run to Jesus, or believe His announcement: and for this reason he declared that their souls remained in Hades.”

Irenaeus testifies that Marcion believed that salvation was only attained by believing his teaching, that the body was incapable of being saved, and that all the Old Testament saints remained in Hades. Again, this is absolutely contrary to Scripture. Paul speaks of the truth of the resurrection of our bodies and argues against those who said there is no resurrection in 1 Corinthians 15 (KJV):12 Now if Christ be preached that he rose from the dead, how say some among you that there is no resurrection of the dead? 13 But if there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen: 14 And if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain. 15 Yea, and we are found false witnesses of God; because we have testified of God that he raised up Christ: whom he raised not up, if so be that the dead rise not. 16 For if the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised: 17 And if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins.

Therefore, it is Marcion and his followers who are false witnesses. The Scriptures also speak of a godly lineage which includes Old Testament saints as being in the lineage of the Messiah as we read in Matthew 1 (NIV):1 This is the genealogy of Jesus the Messiah the son of David, the son of Abraham:

Matthew 1:1-16 details the entire lineage of Jesus, the Son of God, from Abraham to Joseph the husband of Mary. Luke himself plots this lineage from Joseph, the husband of Mary, all the way back to Adam, the son of God in Luke 3:23-38. Luke starts his record in Luke 3 (NIV):23 Now Jesus himself was about thirty years old when he began his ministry. He was the son, so it was thought, of Joseph, the son of Heli,...

And Luke ends his lineage in Luke 3 (NIV):38 the son of Enosh, the son of Seth, the son of Adam, the son of God.

Rightly did Irenaeus testify that “the serpent was in Marcion,” for Jesus Himself said that Abraham rejoiced to see His day in John 8 (KJV):56 Your father Abraham rejoiced to see my day: and he saw it, and was glad.

And Jesus even specifically pointed out Abel as righteous when He spoke woes to the Pharisees in Matthew 23 (KJV):27 Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye are like unto whited sepulchres, which indeed appear beautiful outward, but are within full of dead men's bones, and of all uncleanness. 28 Even so ye also outwardly appear righteous unto men, but within ye are full of hypocrisy and iniquity.

And in Matthew 23 (KJV):33 Ye serpents, ye generation of vipers, how can ye escape the damnation of hell? 34 Wherefore, behold, I send unto you prophets, and wise men, and scribes: and some of them ye shall kill and crucify; and some of them shall ye scourge in your synagogues, and persecute them from city to city: 35 That upon you may come all the righteous blood shed upon the earth, from the blood of righteous Abel unto the blood of Zacharias son of Barachias, whom ye slew between the temple and the altar. 36 Verily I say unto you, All these things shall come upon this generation.

In paragraph four, Irenaeus takes a stand against the errors of Marcion as he then testifies, “But since this man is the only one who has dared openly to mutilate the Scriptures, and unblushingly above all others to inveigh against God, I purpose specially to refute him, convicting him out of his own writings; and, with the help of God, I shall overthrow him out of those discourses of the Lord and the apostles, which are of authority with him, and of which he makes use.” We see Irenaeus’ reliance and faith in the Scriptures here.

Irenaeus then explains, “At present, however, I have simply been led to mention him, that thou mightest know that all those who in any way corrupt the truth, and injuriously affect the preaching of the Church, are the disciples and successors of Simon Magus of Samaria.” Simon seems to be the whipping boy of the Early Church Fathers and the tradition is very strong that points to him as the one responsible for all the errors of heresy. However, we should keep in mind that the Scripture tells us that Simon repented and believed the Gospel and was baptized, and that he also asked for forgiveness after Peter’s rebuke as in Acts 8 (NIV):9 Now for some time a man named Simon had practiced sorcery in the city and amazed all the people of Samaria. He boasted that he was someone great, 10 and all the people, both high and low, gave him their attention and exclaimed, “This man is rightly called the Great Power of God.” 11 They followed him because he had amazed them for a long time with his sorcery. 12 But when they believed Philip as he proclaimed the good news of the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women. 13 Simon himself believed and was baptized. And he followed Philip everywhere, astonished by the great signs and miracles he saw. 14 When the apostles in Jerusalem heard that Samaria had accepted the word of God, they sent Peter and John to Samaria. 15 When they arrived, they prayed for the new believers there that they might receive the Holy Spirit, 16 because the Holy Spirit had not yet come on any of them; they had simply been baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus. 17 Then Peter and John placed their hands on them, and they received the Holy Spirit. 18 When Simon saw that the Spirit was given at the laying on of the apostles’ hands, he offered them money 19 and said, “Give me also this ability so that everyone on whom I lay my hands may receive the Holy Spirit.” 20 Peter answered: “May your money perish with you, because you thought you could buy the gift of God with money! 21 You have no part or share in this ministry, because your heart is not right before God. 22 Repent of this wickedness and pray to the Lord in the hope that he may forgive you for having such a thought in your heart. 23 For I see that you are full of bitterness and captive to sin.” 24 Then Simon answered, “Pray to the Lord for me so that nothing you have said may happen to me.”

Irenaeus continues as he testifies against the Gnostics that, “Although they do not confess the name of their master, in order all the more to seduce others, yet they do teach his doctrines. They set forth, indeed, the name of Christ Jesus as a sort of lure, but in various ways they introduce the impieties of Simon; and thus they destroy multitudes, wickedly disseminating their own doctrines by the use of a good name, and, through means of its sweetness and beauty, extending to their hearers the bitter and malignant poison of the serpent, the great author of apostasy,” referring to Revelation 12 (NIV):9 And the great dragon was cast out, that old serpent, called the Devil, and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world: he was cast out into the earth, and his angels were cast out with him.

In light of this Scripture and knowing the zeal of the Early Church Fathers, I am inclined to think that Simon was only a convenient scapegoat of blame for heresy. The people that Irenaeus is writing against, Marcion, Cerdo, and others, invented a lot of their evil teachings on their own. There is a common denominator though in their writings which show them to be really of one author, and that is Satan. We need look no further. It is recorded that Simon repented. These other men did not.

Book 3: Chapter XVI.—Proofs from the apostolic writings, that Jesus Christ was one and the same, the only begotten Son of God, perfect God and perfect man.

1. But there are some who say that Jesus was merely a receptacle of Christ, upon whom the Christ, as a dove, descended from above, and that when He had declared the unnameable Father He entered into the Pleroma in an incomprehensible and invisible manner: for that He was not comprehended, not only by men, but not even by those powers and virtues which are in heaven, and that Jesus was the Son, but that Christ was the Father, and the Father of Christ, God; while others say that He merely suffered in outward appearance, being naturally impassible. The Valentinians, again, maintain that the dispensational Jesus was the same who passed through Mary, upon whom that Saviour from the more exalted [region] descended, who was also termed Pan, because He possessed the names (vocabula) of all those who had produced Him; but that [this latter] shared with Him, the dispensational one, His power and His name; so that by His means death was abolished, but the Father was made known by that Saviour who had descended from above, whom they do also allege to be Himself the receptacle of Christ and of the entire Pleroma; confessing, indeed, in tongue one Christ Jesus, but being divided in [actual] opinion: for, as I have already observed, it is the practice of these men to say that there was one Christ, who was produced by Monogenes, for the confirmation of the Pleroma; but that another, the Saviour, was sent [forth] for the glorification of the Father; and yet another, the dispensational one, and whom they represent as having suffered, who also bore [in himself] Christ, that Saviour who returned into the Pleroma. I judge it necessary therefore to take into account the entire mind of the apostles regarding our Lord Jesus Christ, and to show that not only did they never hold any such opinions regarding Him; but, still further, that they announced through the Holy Spirit, that those who should teach such doctrines were agents of Satan, sent forth for the purpose of overturning the faith of some, and drawing them away from life.

2. That John knew the one and the same Word of God, and that He was the only begotten, and that He became incarnate for our salvation, Jesus Christ our Lord, I have sufficiently proved from the word of John himself. And Matthew, too, recognising one and the same Jesus Christ, exhibiting his generation as a man from the Virgin, even as God did promise David that He would raise up from the fruit of his body an eternal King, having made the same promise to Abraham a long time previously, says: “The book of the generation of Jesus Christ, the son of David, the son of Abraham.” Then, that he might free our mind from suspicion regarding Joseph, he says: “But the birth of Christ was on this wise. When His mother was espoused to Joseph, before they came together, she was found with child of the Holy Ghost.” Then, when Joseph had it in contemplation to put Mary away, since she proved with child, [Matthew tells us of] the angel of God standing by him, and saying: "Fear not to take unto thee Mary thy wife: for that which is conceived in her is of the Holy Ghost. And she shall bring forth a son, and thou shalt call His name Jesus; for He shall save His people from their sins. Now this was done, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord by the prophet: Behold, a virgin shall conceive, and bring forth a son, and they shall call His name Emmanuel, which is, God with us;" clearly signifying that both the promise made to the fathers had been accomplished, that the Son of God was born of a virgin, and that He Himself was Christ the Saviour whom the prophets had foretold; not, as these men assert, that Jesus was He who was born of Mary, but that Christ was He who descended from above. Matthew might certainly have said, "Now the birth of Jesus was on this wise;" but the Holy Ghost, foreseeing the corrupters [of the truth], and guarding by anticipation against their deceit, says by Matthew, "But the birth of Christ was on this wise;" and that He is Emmanuel, lest perchance we might consider Him as a mere man: for "not by the will of the flesh nor by the will of man, but by the will of God was the Word made flesh;" and that we should not imagine that Jesus was one, and Christ another, but should know them to be one and the same.

3. Paul, when writing to the Romans, has explained this very point: "Paul, an apostle of Jesus Christ, predestinated unto the Gospel of God, which He had promised by His prophets in the holy Scriptures, concerning His Son, who was made to Him of the seed of David according to the flesh, who was predestinated the Son of God with power through the Spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead of our Lord Jesus Christ." And again, writing to the Romans about Israel, he says: "Whose are the fathers, and from whom is Christ according to the flesh, who is God over all, blessed for ever." And again, in his Epistle to the Galatians, he says: "But when the fulness of time had come, God sent forth His Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption;" plainly indicating one God, who did by the prophets make promise of the Son, and one Jesus Christ our Lord, who was of the seed of David according to His birth from Mary; and that Jesus Christ was appointed the Son of God with power, according to the Spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead, as being the first begotten in all the creation; the Son of God being made the Son of man, that through Him we may receive the adoption,—humanity sustaining, and receiving, and embracing the Son of God. Wherefore Mark also says: "The beginning of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God; as it is written in the prophets." Knowing one and the same Son of God, Jesus Christ, who was announced by the prophets, who from the fruit of David's body was Emmanuel, "the messenger of great counsel of the Father;" through whom God caused the day-spring and the Just One to arise to the house of David, and raised up for him an horn of salvation, "and established a testimony in Jacob;" as David says when discoursing on the causes of His birth: "And He appointed a law in Israel, that another generation might know [Him,] the children which should be born from these, and they arising shall themselves declare to their children, so that they might set their hope in God, and seek after His commandments." And again, the angel said, when bringing good tidings to Mary: "He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest; and the Lord shall give unto Him the throne of His father David;" acknowledging that He who is the Son of the Highest, the same is Himself also the Son of David. And David, knowing by the Spirit the dispensation of the advent of this Person, by which He is supreme over all the living and dead, confessed Him as Lord, sitting on the right hand of the Most High Father.

4. But Simeon also—he who had received an intimation from the Holy Ghost that he should not see death, until first he had beheld Christ Jesus—taking Him, the first-begotten of the Virgin, into his hands, blessed God, and said, "Lord, now lettest Thou Thy servant depart in peace, according to Thy word: because mine eyes have seen Thy salvation, which Thou hast prepared before the face of all people; a light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of Thy people Israel;" confessing thus, that the infant whom he was holding in his hands, Jesus, born of Mary, was Christ Himself, the Son of God, the light of all, the glory of Israel itself, and the peace and refreshing of those who had fallen asleep. For He was already despoiling men, by removing their ignorance, conferring upon them His own knowledge, and scattering abroad those who recognised Him, as Esaias says: "Call His name, Quickly spoil, Rapidly divide." Now these are the works of Christ. He therefore was Himself Christ, whom Simeon carrying [in his arms] blessed the Most High; on beholding whom the shepherds glorified God; whom John, while yet in his mother's womb, and He (Christ) in that of Mary, recognising as the Lord, saluted with leaping; whom the Magi, when they had seen, adored, and offered their gifts [to Him], as I have already stated, and prostrated themselves to the eternal King, departed by another way, not now returning by the way of the Assyrians. "For before the child shall have knowledge to cry, Father or mother, He shall receive the power of Damascus, and the spoils of Samaria, against the king of the Assyrians;" declaring, in a mysterious manner indeed, but emphatically, that the Lord did fight with a hidden hand against Amalek. For this cause, too, He suddenly removed those children belonging to the house of David, whose happy lot it was to have been born at that time, that He might send them on before into His kingdom; He, since He was Himself an infant, so arranging it that human infants should be martyrs, slain, according to the Scriptures, for the sake of Christ, who was born in Bethlehem of Judah, in the city of David.

5. Therefore did the Lord also say to His disciples after the resurrection, "O thoughtless ones, and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken! Ought not Christ to have suffered these things, and to enter into His glory?" And again does He say to them: "These are the words which I spoke unto you while I was yet with you, that all things must be fulfilled which were written in the law of Moses, and in the prophets, and in the Psalms, concerning Me. Then opened He their understanding, that they should understand the Scriptures, and said unto them, Thus it is written, and thus it behoved Christ to suffer, and to rise again from the dead, and that repentance for the remission of sins be preached in His name among all nations." Now this is He who was born of Mary; for He says: "The Son of man must suffer many things, and be rejected, and crucified, and on the third day rise again." The Gospel, therefore, knew no other son of man but Him who was of Mary, who also suffered; and no Christ who flew away from Jesus before the passion; but Him who was born it knew as Jesus Christ the Son of God, and that this same suffered and rose again, as John, the disciple of the Lord, verifies, saying: "But these are written, that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, and that believing ye might have eternal life in His name," —foreseeing these blasphemous systems which divide the Lord, as far as lies in their power, saying that He was formed of two different substances. For this reason also he has thus testified to us in his Epistle: "Little children, it is the last time; and as ye have heard that Antichrist doth come, now have many antichrists appeared; whereby we know that it is the last time. They went out from us, but they were not of us; for if they had been of us, they would have continued with us: but [they departed], that they might be made manifest that they are not of us. Know ye therefore, that every lie is from without, and is not of the truth. Who is a liar, but he that denieth that Jesus is the Christ? This is Antichrist."

6. But inasmuch as all those before mentioned, although they certainly do with their tongue confess one Jesus Christ, make fools of themselves, thinking one thing and saying another; for their hypotheses vary, as I have already shown, alleging, [as they do,] that one Being suffered and was born, and that this was Jesus; but that there was another who descended upon Him, and that this was Christ, who also ascended again; and they argue, that he who proceeded from the Demiurge, or he who was dispensational, or he who sprang from Joseph, was the Being subject to suffering; but upon the latter there descended from the invisible and ineffable [places] the former, whom they assert to be incomprehensible, invisible, and impassible: they thus wander from the truth, because their doctrine departs from Him who is truly God, being ignorant that His only-begotten Word, who is always present with the human race, united to and mingled with His own creation, according to the Father's pleasure, and who became flesh, is Himself Jesus Christ our Lord, who did also suffer for us, and rose again on our behalf, and who will come again in the glory of His Father, to raise up all flesh, and for the manifestation of salvation, and to apply the rule of just judgment to all who were made by Him. There is therefore, as I have pointed out, one God the Father, and one Christ Jesus, who came by means of the whole dispensational arrangements [connected with Him], and gathered together all things in Himself. But in every respect, too, He is man, the formation of God; and thus He took up man into Himself, the invisible becoming visible, the incomprehensible being made comprehensible, the impassible becoming capable of suffering, and the Word being made man, thus summing up all things in Himself: so that as in super-celestial, spiritual, and invisible things, the Word of God is supreme, so also in things visible and corporeal He might possess the supremacy, and, taking to Himself the preeminence, as well as constituting Himself Head of the Church, He might draw all things to Himself at the proper time.

7. With Him is nothing incomplete or out of due season, just as with the Father there is nothing incongruous. For all these things were foreknown by the Father; but the Son works them out at the proper time in perfect order and sequence. This was the reason why, when Mary was urging [Him] on to [perform] the wonderful miracle of the wine, and was desirous before the time to partake of the cup of emblematic significance, the Lord, checking her untimely haste, said, "Woman, what have I to do with thee? mine hour is not yet come" — waiting for that hour which was foreknown by the Father. This is also the reason why, when men were often desirous to take Him, it is said, "No man laid hands upon Him, for the hour of His being taken was not yet come;" nor the time of His passion, which had been foreknown by the Father; as also says the prophet Habakkuk, "By this Thou shalt be known when the years have drawn nigh; Thou shalt be set forth when the time comes; because my soul is disturbed by anger, Thou shalt remember Thy mercy." Paul also says: "But when the fulness of time came, God sent forth His Son." By which is made manifest, that all things which had been foreknown of the Father, our Lord did accomplish in their order, season, and hour, foreknown and fitting, being indeed one and the same, but rich and great. For He fulfils the bountiful and comprehensive will of His Father, inasmuch as He is Himself the Saviour of those who are saved, and the Lord of those who are under authority, and the God of all those things which have been formed, the only-begotten of the Father, Christ who was announced, and the Word of God, who became incarnate when the fulness of time had come, at which the Son of God had to become the Son of man.

8. All, therefore, are outside of the [Christian] dispensation, who, under pretext of knowledge, understand that Jesus was one, and Christ another, and the Only-begotten another, from whom again is the Word, and that the Saviour is another, whom these disciples of error allege to be a production of those who were made Æons in a state of degeneracy. Such men are to outward appearance sheep; for they appear to be like us, by what they say in public, repeating the same words as we do; but inwardly they are wolves. Their doctrine is homicidal, conjuring up, as it does, a number of gods, and simulating many Fathers, but lowering and dividing the Son of God in many ways. These are they against whom the Lord has cautioned us beforehand; and His disciple, in his Epistle already mentioned, commands us to avoid them, when he says: "For many deceivers are entered into the world, who confess not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh. This is a deceiver and an antichrist. Take heed to them, that ye lose not what ye have wrought." And again does he say in the Epistle: "Many false prophets are gone out into the world. Hereby know ye the Spirit of God: Every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God; and every spirit which separates Jesus Christ is not of God, but is of antichrist." These words agree with what was said in the Gospel, that "the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us." Wherefore he again exclaims in his Epistle, "Every one that believeth that Jesus is the Christ, has been born of God;" knowing Jesus Christ to be one and the same, to whom the gates of heaven were opened, because of His taking upon Him flesh: who shall also come in the same flesh in which He suffered, revealing the glory of the Father.

9. Concurring with these statements, Paul, speaking to the Romans, declares: "Much more they who receive abundance of grace and righteousness for [eternal] life, shall reign by one, Christ Jesus." It follows from this, that he knew nothing of that Christ who flew away from Jesus; nor did he of the Saviour above, whom they hold to be impassible. For if, in truth, the one suffered, and the other remained incapable of suffering, and the one was born, but the other descended upon him who was born, and left him again, it is not one, but two, that are shown forth. But that the apostle did know Him as one, both who was born and who suffered, namely Christ Jesus, he again says in the same Epistle: "Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized in Christ Jesus were baptized in His death? that like as Christ rose from the dead, so should we also walk in newness of life." But again, showing that Christ did suffer, and was Himself the Son of God, who died for us, and redeemed us with His blood at the time appointed beforehand, he says: "For how is it, that Christ, when we were yet without strength, in due time died for the ungodly? But God commendeth His love towards us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us. Much more, then, being now justified by His blood, we shall be saved from wrath through Him. For if, when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of His Son; much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by His life.” He declares in the plainest manner, that the same Being who was laid hold of, and underwent suffering, and shed His blood for us, was both Christ and the Son of God, who did also rise again, and was taken up into heaven, as he himself [Paul] says: “But at the same time, [it, is] Christ [that] died, yea rather, that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God.” And again, “Knowing that Christ, rising from the dead, dieth no more:” for, as himself foreseeing, through the Spirit, the subdivisions of evil teachers [with regard to the Lord’s person], and being desirous of cutting away from them all occasion of cavil, he says what has been already stated, [and also declares:] “But if the Spirit of Him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, He that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies.” This he does not utter to those alone who wish to hear: Do not err, [he says to all:] Jesus Christ, the Son of God, is one and the same, who did by suffering reconcile us to God, and rose from the dead; who is at the right hand of the Father, and perfect in all things; “who, when He was buffeted, struck not in return; who, when He suffered, threatened not;” and when He underwent tyranny, He prayed His Father that He would forgive those who had crucified Him. For He did Himself truly bring in salvation: since He is Himself the Word of God, Himself the Only-begotten of the Father, Christ Jesus our Lord.

Summary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus testifies, ”But there are some who say that Jesus was merely a receptacle of Christ, upon whom the Christ, as a dove, descended from above, and that when He had declared the unnameable Father He entered into the Pleroma in an incomprehensible and invisible manner:”

Irenaeus continues as he records the Gnostic teaching about Jesus:

- “for that He was not comprehended, not only by men, but not even by those powers and virtues which are in heaven,”
- “and that Jesus was the Son, but that Christ was the Father, and the Father of Christ, God;
- “while others say that He merely suffered in outward appearance, being naturally impassible.”
- “The Valentinians, again, maintain that the dispensational Jesus was the same who passed through Mary, upon whom that Saviour from the more exalted [region] descended, who was also termed Pan, because He possessed the names (vocabula) of all those who had produced Him;”
- “but that [this latter] shared with Him, the dispensational one, His power and His name; so that by His means death was abolished, but the Father was made known by that Saviour who had descended from above, whom they do also allege to be Himself the receptacle of Christ and of the entire Pleroma;”
- “confessing, indeed, in tongue one Christ Jesus, but being divided in [actual] opinion:”
- “for, as I have already observed, it is the practice of these men to say that there was one Christ, who was produced by Monogenes, for the confirmation of the Pleroma;”
- “but that another, the Saviour, was sent [forth] for the glorification of the Father;”
- “and yet another, the dispensational one, and whom they represent as having suffered, who also bore [in himself] Christ, that Saviour who returned into the Pleroma.”

Irenaeus then advises as he again testifies, “I judge it necessary therefore to take into account the entire mind of the apostles regarding our Lord Jesus Christ, and to show that not only did they never hold any such opinions regarding Him; but, still further, that they announced through the Holy Spirit, that those who should teach such doctrines were agents of Satan, sent forth for the purpose of overturning the faith of some, and drawing them away from life.”

In paragraph two, Irenaeus testifies to Jesus as he records:

- “That John knew the one and the same Word of God, and that He was the only begotten, and that He became incarnate for our salvation, Jesus Christ our Lord, I have sufficiently proved from the word of John himself,” referring to John 1:1, 14, 18, 3:16, and 3:18.

- “And Matthew, too, recognising one and the same Jesus Christ, exhibiting his generation as a man from the Virgin, even as God did promise David that He would raise up from the fruit of his body an eternal King, having made the same promise to Abraham a long time previously, says: “The book of the generation of Jesus Christ, the son of David, the son of Abraham,” referring to Matthew 1: 1.
- “Then, that he might free our mind from suspicion regarding Joseph, he says: “But the birth of Christ was on this wise. When His mother was espoused to Joseph, before they came together, she was found with child of the Holy Ghost,” referring to Matthew 1:18.
- “Then, when Joseph had it in contemplation to put Mary away, since she proved with child, [Matthew tells us of] the angel of God standing by him, and saying: “Fear not to take unto thee Mary thy wife: for that which is conceived in her is of the Holy Ghost. And she shall bring forth a son, and thou shalt call His name Jesus; for He shall save His people from their sins,” referring to Matthew 1:20-23.
- “Now this was done, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord by the prophet: Behold, a virgin shall conceive, and bring forth a son, and they shall call His name Emmanuel, which is, God with us,” referring to Matthew 1:24-25.

Irenaeus then clearly testifies as follows:

- “clearly signifying that both the promise made to the fathers had been accomplished,”
- “that the Son of God was born of a virgin, and that He Himself was Christ the Saviour whom the prophets had foretold;”
- “not, as these men assert, that Jesus was He who was born of Mary, but that Christ was He who descended from above.”
- “Matthew might certainly have said, “Now the birth of Jesus was on this wise;” but the Holy Ghost, foreseeing the corrupters [of the truth], and guarding by anticipation against their deceit, says by Matthew, “But the birth of Christ was on this wise;””
- “and that He is Emmanuel,” referring to Matthew 1:23, lest perchance we might consider Him as a mere man:”
- “for “not by the will of the flesh nor by the will of man, but by the will of God was the Word made flesh,” referring to John 1:13-14.
- “and that we should not imagine that Jesus was one, and Christ another, but should know them to be one and the same.”

In paragraph three, Irenaeus testifies, “Paul, when writing to the Romans, has explained this very point: “Paul, an apostle of Jesus Christ, predestinated unto the Gospel of God, which He had promised by His prophets in the holy Scriptures, concerning His Son, who was made to Him of the seed of David according to the flesh, who was predestinated the Son of God with power through the Spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead of our Lord Jesus Christ,” referring to Romans 1:1-4. Irenaeus then again testifies, “And again, writing to the Romans about Israel, he says: “Whose are the fathers, and from whom is Christ according to the flesh, who is God over all, blessed for ever,” referring to Romans 9:5. Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “And again, in his Epistle to the Galatians, he says: “But when the fulness of time had come, God sent forth His Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption,” referring to Galatians 4:4-5. Irenaeus explains Paul as he affirms the following:

- “plainly indicating one God, who did by the prophets make promise of the Son,”
- “and one Jesus Christ our Lord, who was of the seed of David according to His birth from Mary;” “and that Jesus Christ was appointed the Son of God with power, according to the Spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead, as being the first begotten in all the creation;”
- “the Son of God being made the Son of man, that through Him we may receive the adoption,—humanity sustaining, and receiving, and embracing the Son of God.”

Irenaeus continues as he again testifies, “Wherefore Mark also says: “The beginning of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God; as it is written in the prophets,” referring to Mark 1:1. Irenaeus then affirms that all these, “Knowing one and the same Son of God, Jesus Christ, who was announced by the prophets, who from the fruit of David’s body was Emmanuel, “the messenger of great counsel of the Father,” referring to Isaiah 7:14, and Isaiah 9:6 in the Septuagint, “through whom God caused the day-spring and the Just One to arise to the house of David, and raised up for him an horn of salvation,” referring to Luke 1:69,78. Irenaeus continues as he affirms, “and established a testimony in Jacob;” as David says when discoursing on the causes of His birth: “And He appointed a law in Israel, that another generation might know [Him,] the children which should be born from these, and they arising shall themselves declare to their children, so that they might set their hope in God, and seek after His commandments,” referring to Psalm 78:5-7. Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “And again, the angel said, when bringing good tidings to Mary: “He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest; and the Lord shall give unto Him the throne of His father David,” referring to Luke 1:32, “acknowledging that He who is the Son of the Highest, the same is Himself also the Son of David.” Irenaeus then concludes, “And David, knowing by the Spirit the dispensation of the advent of this Person, by which He is supreme over all the living and dead, confessed Him as Lord, sitting on the right hand of the Most High Father,” referring to Psalm 110:1.

In paragraph four, Irenaeus testifies, “But Simeon also—he who had received an intimation from the Holy Ghost that he should not see death, until first he had beheld Christ Jesus— taking Him, the first-begotten of the Virgin, into his hands, blessed God, and said, “Lord, now lettest Thou Thy servant depart in peace, according to Thy word: because mine eyes have seen Thy salvation, which Thou hast prepared before the face of all people; a light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of Thy people Israel,” referring to Luke 2:25-32. Irenaeus explains that Simeon was “confessing thus, that the infant whom he was holding in his hands, Jesus, born of Mary, was Christ Himself, the Son of God, the light of all, the glory of Israel itself, and the peace and refreshing of those who had fallen asleep.” Irenaeus continues as he affirms, “For He was already despoiling men, by removing their ignorance, conferring upon them His own knowledge, and scattering abroad those who recognised Him, as Esaias says: “Call His name, Quickly spoil, Rapidly divide,” referring to part of Isaiah 8:3 in the Septuagint. Irenaeus then testifies, “Now these are the works of Christ.” Irenaeus then points out the following:

- “He therefore was Himself Christ, whom Simeon carrying [in his arms] blessed the Most High;”
- “on beholding whom the shepherds glorified God,” referring to Luke 2:15-20.
- “whom John, while yet in his mother’s womb, and He (Christ) in that of Mary, recognising as the Lord, saluted with leaping,” referring to Mary’s visit to Elizabeth in Luke 1:41-45.
- “whom the Magi, when they had seen, adored, and offered their gifts [to Him], as I have already stated, and prostrated themselves to the eternal King, departed by another way, not now returning by the way of the Assyrians,” referring to Matthew 2:12.
- “For before the child shall have knowledge to cry, Father or mother, He shall receive the power of Damascus, and the spoils of Samaria, against the king of the Assyrians,” referring to Isaiah 8:4, “declaring, in a mysterious manner indeed, but emphatically, that the Lord did fight with a hidden hand against Amalek.”
- “For this cause, too, He suddenly removed those children belonging to the house of David, whose happy lot it was to have been born at that time, that He might send them on before into His kingdom,” referring to Matthew 2:16-18.
- “He, since He was Himself an infant, so arranging it that human infants should be martyrs, slain, according to the Scriptures, for the sake of Christ, who was born in Bethlehem of Judah, in the city of David,” referring to Luke 2:4.

In paragraph five, Irenaeus testifies, “Therefore did the Lord also say to His disciples after the resurrection, “O thoughtless ones, and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken! Ought not Christ to have suffered these things, and to enter into His glory?,” referring to Luke 24:25-26. Irenaeus then testifies, “And again does He say to them: “These are the words which I spoke unto you while I was yet with you, that all things must be fulfilled which were written in the law of Moses, and in the prophets, and in the Psalms, concerning Me. Then opened He their understanding, that they should understand the Scriptures, and said unto them, Thus it is written, and thus it behoved Christ to suffer, and to rise again from the dead, and that repentance for the remission of sins be preached in His name among all nations,” referring to Luke 24:44-47. Irenaeus then testifies, “Now this is He who was born of Mary; for He says: “The Son of man must suffer many things, and be rejected, and crucified, and on the third day rise again,” referring to Mark 8:31 and Luke 9:21-22. Irenaeus affirms the following:

- “The Gospel, therefore, knew no other son of man but Him who was of Mary, who also suffered;”
- “and no Christ who flew away from Jesus before the passion;”
- “but Him who was born it knew as Jesus Christ the Son of God, and that this same suffered and rose again, as John, the disciple of the Lord, verifies, saying: “But these are written, that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, and that believing ye might have eternal life in His name,” referring to John 20:30-31, “—foreseeing these blasphemous systems which divide the Lord, as far as lies in their power, saying that He was formed of two different substances.”
- “For this reason also he has thus testified to us in his Epistle: “Little children, it is the last time; and as ye have heard that Antichrist doth come, now have many antichrists appeared; whereby we know that it is the last time. They went out from us, but they were not of us,” referring to 1 John 2:18-19, “for if they had been of us, they would have continued with us: but [they departed], that they might be made manifest that they are not of us. Know ye therefore, that every lie is from without, and is not of the truth. Who is a liar, but he that denieth that Jesus is the Christ? This is Antichrist,” ,” referring to 1 John 2:20-22

In paragraph six, Irenaeus then again testifies, “But inasmuch as all those before mentioned, although they certainly do with their tongue confess one Jesus Christ, make fools of themselves, thinking one thing and saying another; for their hypotheses vary, as I have already shown, alleging, [as they do,]” as follows:

- “that one Being suffered and was born, and that this was Jesus; but that there was another who descended upon Him, and that this was Christ, who also ascended again;”
- “and they argue, that he who proceeded from the Demiurge, or he who was dispensational, or he who sprang from Joseph, was the Being subject to suffering; but upon the latter there descended from the invisible and ineffable [places] the former, whom they assert to be incomprehensible, invisible, and impassible:”

Irenaeus then testifies that, “they thus wander from the truth, because their doctrine departs from Him who is truly God, being ignorant that His only-begotten Word, who is always present with the human race, united to and mingled with His own creation, according to the Father’s pleasure, and who became flesh, is Himself Jesus Christ our Lord, who did also suffer for us, and rose again on our behalf, and who will come again in the glory of His Father, to raise up all flesh, and for the manifestation of salvation, and to apply the rule of just judgment to all who were made by Him.” Irenaeus again affirms, “There is therefore, as I have pointed out, one God the Father, and one Christ Jesus, who came by means of the whole dispensational arrangements [connected with Him], and gathered together all things in Himself.” And Irenaeus continues as he affirms, “But in every respect, too, He is man, the formation of God; and thus He took up man into Himself, the invisible becoming visible, the incomprehensible being made comprehensible, the impassible becoming capable of suffering, and the Word being made man, thus summing up all things in Himself: so that as in super-celestial, spiritual, and invisible things, the Word of God is supreme, so also in things visible and corporeal He might possess the supremacy, and, taking to Himself the preeminence, as well as constituting Himself Head of the Church, He might draw all things to Himself at the proper time,” referring to Colossians 1:18.

In paragraph seven, Irenaeus affirms that, “With Him is nothing incomplete or out of due season, just as with the Father there is nothing incongruous.” Irenaeus then adds, “For all these things were foreknown by the Father; but the Son works them out at the proper time in perfect order and sequence.” Irenaeus then explains:

- “This was the reason why when Mary was urging [Him] on to [perform] the wonderful miracle of the wine, and was desirous before the time to partake of the cup of emblematic significance, the Lord, checking her untimely haste, said, “Woman, what have I to do with thee? mine hour is not yet come” — waiting for that hour which was foreknown by the Father,” and referring to John 2:1-3.

- “This is also the reason why, when men were often desirous to take Him, it is said, “No man laid hands upon Him, for the hour of His being taken was not yet come,” referring to John 7:30.
- “nor the time of His passion, which had been foreknown by the Father; as also says the prophet Habakkuk, “By this Thou shalt be known when the years have drawn nigh; Thou shalt be set forth when the time comes; because my soul is disturbed by anger, Thou shalt remember Thy mercy,” referring to Habakkuk 3:2.
- “Paul also says: “But when the fulness of time came, God sent forth His Son,” referring to Galatians 4:4.

Irenaeus then testifies, “By which is made manifest, that all things which had been foreknown of the Father, our Lord did accomplish in their order, season, and hour, foreknown and fitting, being indeed one and the same, but rich and great. For He fulfils the bountiful and comprehensive will of His Father, inasmuch as He is Himself the Saviour of those who are saved, and the Lord of those who are under authority, and the God of all those things which have been formed, the only-begotten of the Father, Christ who was announced, and the Word of God, who became incarnate when the fulness of time had come, at which the Son of God had to become the Son of man.”

In paragraph eight, Irenaeus affirms that, “All, therefore, are outside of the [Christian] dispensation, who, under pretext of knowledge, understand that Jesus was one, and Christ another, and the Only-begotten another, from whom again is the Word, and that the Saviour is another, whom these disciples of error allege to be a production of those who were made Æons in a state of degeneracy.” Irenaeus informs us that “Such men are to outward appearance sheep; for they appear to be like us, by what they say in public, repeating the same words as we do; but inwardly they are wolves,” referring to Matthew 7:15. Irenaeus does not mince words when he testifies, “Their doctrine is homicidal, conjuring up, as it does, a number of gods, and simulating many Fathers, but lowering and dividing the Son of God in many ways.” Irenaeus warns us that “These are they against whom the Lord has cautioned us beforehand,” referring to Matthew 10:16, 24:11,24,25. Irenaeus then warns, “and His disciple, in his Epistle already mentioned, commands us to avoid them, when he says: “For many deceivers are entered into the world, who confess not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh. This is a deceiver and an antichrist, referring to 2 John 1:7. Irenaeus continues as he then warns, “Take heed to them, that ye lose not what ye have wrought,” referring to 2 John 1:8. Irenaeus then adds, “And again does he say in the Epistle: “Many false prophets are gone out into the world. Hereby know ye the Spirit of God: Every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God; and every spirit which separates Jesus Christ is not of God, but is of antichrist,” referring to 1 John 4:1-3. Irenaeus then points out that “These words agree with what was said in the Gospel, that “the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us,” referring to John 1:14. Then, showing the unity of the apostle John’s writings, Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “Wherefore he again exclaims in his Epistle, “Every one that believeth that Jesus is the Christ, has been born of God,” referring to 1 John 5:1. Irenaeus then concludes, “knowing Jesus Christ to be one and the same, to whom the gates of heaven were opened, because of His taking upon Him flesh: who shall also come in the same flesh in which He suffered, revealing the glory of the Father.”

In paragraph nine, Irenaeus testifies, “Concurring with these statements, Paul, speaking to the Romans, declares: “Much more they who receive abundance of grace and righteousness for [eternal] life, shall reign by one, Christ Jesus,” referring to Romans 5:17. Irenaeus then affirms, “It follows from this, that he knew nothing of that Christ who flew away from Jesus; nor did he of the Saviour above, whom they hold to be impassible. For if, in truth, the one suffered, and the other remained incapable of suffering, and the one was born, but the other descended upon him who was born, and left him again, it is not one, but two, that are shown forth.” Irenaeus then concludes as he testifies, “But that the apostle did know Him as one, both who was born and who suffered, namely Christ Jesus, he again says in the same Epistle: “Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized in Christ Jesus were baptized in His death? that like as Christ rose from the dead, so should we also walk in newness of life,” paraphrasing Romans 6:3-4. Irenaeus continues further as he testifies, “But again, showing that Christ did suffer, and was Himself the Son of God, who died for us, and redeemed us with His blood at the time appointed beforehand, he says: “For how is it, that Christ, when we were yet without strength, in due time died for the ungodly? But God commendeth His love towards us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us. Much more, then, being now justified by His blood, we shall be saved from wrath through Him. For if, when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of His Son; much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by His life,” paraphrasing Romans 5:6-10. Irenaeus then concludes as he testifies, ”He declares in the plainest manner, that the same Being who was laid hold of, and underwent suffering, and shed His blood for us, was both Christ and the Son of God, who did also rise again, and was taken up into heaven, as he himself [Paul] says: “But at the same time, [it, is] Christ [that] died, yea rather, that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God,” referring to Romans 8:34. Irenaeus then adds, “And again, “Knowing that Christ, rising from the dead, dieth no more,” referring to Romans 6:9, “for, as himself foreseeing, through the Spirit, the subdivisions of evil teachers [with regard to the Lord’s person], and being desirous of cutting away from them all occasion of cavil, he says what has been already stated, [and also declares:] “But if the Spirit of Him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, He that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies,” referring to Romans 8:11. Irenaeus then concludes as he warns, “This he does not utter to those alone who wish to hear: Do not err, [he says to all:] Jesus Christ, the Son of God, is one and the same, who did by suffering reconcile us to God, and rose from the dead; who is at the right hand of the Father, and perfect in all things; “who, when He was buffeted, struck not in return; who, when He suffered, threatened not,” referring to 1 Peter 2:23, “and when He underwent tyranny, He prayed His Father that He would forgive those who had crucified Him,” referring to Luke 23:34. Irenaeus then testifies in conclusion of this chapter, “For He did Himself truly bring in salvation: since He is Himself the Word of God, Himself the Only-begotten of the Father, Christ Jesus our Lord.”

Commentary: In this chapter of his writing, Irenaeus gives us a telescopic view into the Gnostic teachings of his time. By understanding how he responds, we get a clear picture of the Gnostic doctrine.

In paragraph one, Irenaeus testifies, ”But there are some who say that Jesus was merely a receptacle of Christ, upon whom the Christ, as a dove, descended from above, and that when He had declared the unnameable Father He entered into the Pleroma in an incomprehensible and invisible manner:”

Irenaeus continues as he records the Gnostic teaching about Jesus:

- “for that He was not comprehended, not only by men, but not even by those powers and virtues which are in heaven,”
- “and that Jesus was the Son, but that Christ was the Father, and the Father of Christ, God;
- “while others say that He merely suffered in outward appearance, being naturally impassible.”
- “The Valentinians, again, maintain that the dispensational Jesus was the same who passed through Mary, upon whom that Saviour from the more exalted [region] descended, who was also termed Pan, because He possessed the names (vocalia) of all those who had produced Him;”
- “but that [this latter] shared with Him, the dispensational one, His power and His name; so that by His means death was abolished, but the Father was made known by that Saviour who had descended from above, whom they do also allege to be Himself the receptacle of Christ and of the entire Pleroma;”
- “confessing, indeed, in tongue one Christ Jesus, but being divided in [actual] opinion:”
- “for, as I have already observed, it is the practice of these men to say that there was one Christ, who was produced by Monogenes, for the confirmation of the Pleroma;”
- “but that another, the Saviour, was sent [forth] for the glorification of the Father;”
- “and yet another, the dispensational one, and whom they represent as having suffered, who also bore [in himself] Christ, that Saviour who returned into the Pleroma.”

Irenaeus then advises as he again testifies, “I judge it necessary therefore to take into account the entire mind of the apostles regarding our Lord Jesus Christ, and to show that not only did they never hold any such opinions regarding Him; but, still further, that they announced through the Holy Spirit, that those who should teach such doctrines were agents of Satan, sent forth for the purpose of overturning the faith of some, and drawing them away from life.”

This is very astute of Irenaeus. He wants to show us that when taken as a whole, the writings of the apostles agree and give us a portrait of the real Jesus Christ. And this is exactly what Irenaeus does. He does not take the Scriptures out of context, but rather places them in context so that the truth may be discerned.

In paragraph two, Irenaeus testifies to Jesus as he records:

- “That John knew the one and the same Word of God, and that He was the only begotten, and that He became incarnate for our salvation, Jesus Christ our Lord, I have sufficiently proved from the word of John himself,” referring to John 1:1, 14, 18, 3:16, and 3:18.

The Scriptures attest to the veracity of Irenaeus’ statements in John 1 (NASB):1 In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God.

And in John 1 (NASB):14 And the Word became flesh, and dwelt among us, and we saw His glory, glory as of the only begotten from the Father, full of grace and truth.

And in John 1 (NASB):18 No one has seen God at any time; the only begotten God who is in the bosom of the Father, He has explained Him.

And in John 3 (NASB):18 "He who believes in Him is not judged; he who does not believe has been judged already, because he has not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God.

- “And Matthew, too, recognising one and the same Jesus Christ, exhibiting his generation as a man from the Virgin, even as God did promise David that He would raise up from the fruit of his body an eternal King, having made the same promise to Abraham a long time previously, says: “The book of the generation of Jesus Christ, the son of David, the son of Abraham,” referring to Matthew 1 (NIV):1 This is the genealogy of Jesus the Messiah the son of David, the son of Abraham:
- “Then, that he might free our mind from suspicion regarding Joseph, he says: “But the birth of Christ was on this wise. When His mother was espoused to Joseph, before they came together, she was found with child of the Holy Ghost,” referring to Matthew 1 (NIV):18 This is how the birth of Jesus the Messiah came about: His mother Mary was pledged to be married to Joseph, but before they came together, she was found to be pregnant through the Holy Spirit.
- “Then, when Joseph had it in contemplation to put Mary away, since she proved with child, [Matthew tells us of] the angel of God standing by him, and saying: “Fear not to take unto thee Mary thy wife: for that which is conceived in her is of the Holy Ghost. And she shall bring forth a son, and thou shalt call His name Jesus; for He shall save His people from their sins,” referring to referring to Matthew 1 (NIV):20 But after he had considered this, an angel of the Lord appeared to him in a dream and said, “Joseph son of David, do not be afraid to take Mary home as your wife, because what is conceived in her is from the Holy Spirit. 21 She will give birth to a son, and you are to give him the name Jesus, because he will save his people from their sins.” 22 All this took place to fulfill what the Lord had said through the prophet: 23 “The virgin will conceive and give birth to a son, and they will call him Immanuel” (which means “God with us”).
- “Now this was done, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord by the prophet: Behold, a virgin shall conceive, and bring forth a son, and they shall call His name Emmanuel, which is, God with us,” referring to referring to Matthew 1 (NIV):24 When Joseph woke up, he did what the angel of the Lord had commanded him and took Mary home as his wife. 25 But he did not consummate their marriage until she gave birth to a son. And he gave him the name Jesus.

Irenaeus then clearly testifies as follows:

- “clearly signifying that both the promise made to the fathers had been accomplished,”
- “that the Son of God was born of a virgin, and that He Himself was Christ the Saviour whom the prophets had foretold;”
- “not, as these men assert, that Jesus was He who was born of Mary, but that Christ was He who descended from above.”

- “Matthew might certainly have said, “Now the birth of Jesus was on this wise;” but the Holy Ghost, foreseeing the corrupters [of the truth], and guarding by anticipation against their deceit, says by Matthew, “But the birth of Christ was on this wise;””
- “and that He is Emmanuel,” referring again to Matthew 1:23, lest perchance we might consider Him as a mere man;” Matthew 1 (NIV):23 “The virgin will conceive and give birth to a son, and they will call him Immanuel” (which means “God with us”).
- “for “not by the will of the flesh nor by the will of man, but by the will of God was the Word made flesh,” referring in context to John 1 (NIV):12 Yet to all who did receive him, to those who believed in his name, he gave the right to become children of God— 13 children born not of natural descent, nor of human decision or a husband’s will, but born of God. 14 The Word became flesh and made his dwelling among us. We have seen his glory, the glory of the one and only Son, who came from the Father, full of grace and truth.
- “and that we should not imagine that Jesus was one, and Christ another, but should know them to be one and the same.“

Irenaeus takes the word of God slightly out of context here to prove his point that the “word was made flesh.” But the Scripture actually supports him just the same since those who receive him as He is, the word made flesh and the only begotten from the Father, are born of God.

Again, Irenaeus then affirms that “we should not imagine that Jesus was one, and Christ another, but should know them to be one and the same.”

In paragraph three, Irenaeus testifies, “Paul, when writing to the Romans, has explained this very point: “Paul, an apostle of Jesus Christ, predestinated unto the Gospel of God, which He had promised by His prophets in the holy Scriptures, concerning His Son, who was made to Him of the seed of David according to the flesh, who was predestinated the Son of God with power through the Spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead of our Lord Jesus Christ,” referring to Romans 1 (KJV):1 Paul, a servant of Jesus Christ, called to be an apostle, separated unto the gospel of God, 2 (Which he had promised afore by his prophets in the holy scriptures,) 3 Concerning his Son Jesus Christ our Lord, which was made of the seed of David according to the flesh; 4 And declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead:

Irenaeus then again testifies, “And again, writing to the Romans about Israel, he says: “Whose are the fathers, and from whom is Christ according to the flesh, who is God over all, blessed for ever,” referring to Romans 9 (KJV):5 Whose are the fathers, and of whom as concerning the flesh Christ came, who is over all, God blessed for ever. Amen.

Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “And again, in his Epistle to the Galatians, he says: “But when the fulness of time had come, God sent forth His Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption,” referring to Galatians 4 (KJV):4 But when the fulness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law, 5 To redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons.

Irenaeus then explains Paul as he affirms the following:

- “plainly indicating one God, who did by the prophets make promise of the Son,”
- “and one Jesus Christ our Lord, who was of the seed of David according to His birth from Mary;” “and that Jesus Christ was appointed the Son of God with power, according to the Spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead, as being the first begotten in all the creation;”
- “the Son of God being made the Son of man, that through Him we may receive the adoption,— humanity sustaining, and receiving, and embracing the Son of God.”

Not only so, but Irenaeus is also plainly testifying to his own faith that Jesus Christ is Lord over all, God blessed forever. Amen Irenaeus!

Irenaeus continues as he again testifies, “Wherefore Mark also says: “The beginning of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God; as it is written in the prophets,” referring to Mark 1 (NIV):1 The beginning of the good news about Jesus the Messiah, the Son of God.

Irenaeus then affirms that all these, “Knowing one and the same Son of God, Jesus Christ, who was announced by the prophets, who from the fruit of David’s body was Emmanuel, “the messenger of great counsel of the Father,” referring to Isaiah 7:14, and also Isaiah 9:6 in the Septuagint.

Isaiah 7 (NASB):14 "Therefore the Lord Himself will give you a sign: Behold, a virgin will be with child and bear a son, and she will call His name Immanuel.

Isaiah 9 (Septuagint) 6 For a child is born to us, and a son is given to us, whose government is upon his shoulder: and his name is called the Messenger of great counsel: for I will bring peace upon the princes, and health to him.

Isaiah 9 (NASB):6 For a child will be born to us, a son will be given to us; And the government will rest on His shoulders; And His name will be called Wonderful Counselor, Mighty God, Eternal Father, Prince of Peace.

Irenaeus continues as he adds, “through whom God caused the day-spring and the Just One to arise to the house of David, and raised up for him an horn of salvation,” referring to Luke 1 (NIV):69 He has raised up a horn of salvation for us in the house of his servant David.

And to Luke 1 (KJV):78 Through the tender mercy of our God; whereby the dayspring from on high hath visited us.

Irenaeus then continues as he affirms, “and established a testimony in Jacob;” as David says when discoursing on the causes of His birth: “And He appointed a law in Israel, that another generation might know [Him,] the children which should be born from these, and they arising shall themselves declare to their children, so that they might set their hope in God, and seek after His commandments.”

Though Irenaeus attributes his quote to David, it was actually from Asaph’s Psalm 78, as we read in Psalm 78 (NIV):5 He decreed statutes for Jacob and established the law in Israel, which he commanded our ancestors to teach their children, 6 so the next generation would know them, even the children yet to be born, and they in turn would tell their children. 7 Then they would put their trust in God and would not forget his deeds but would keep his commands.

Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “And again, the angel said, when bringing good tidings to Mary: “He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest; and the Lord shall give unto Him the throne of His father David,” referring to Luke 1 (NIV):32 He will be great and will be called the Son of the Most High. The Lord God will give him the throne of his father David.

Irenaeus then continues as he adds, “acknowledging that He who is the Son of the Highest, the same is Himself also the Son of David.” Irenaeus then concludes, “And David, knowing by the Spirit the dispensation of the advent of this Person, by which He is supreme over all the living and dead, confessed Him as Lord, sitting on the right hand of the Most High Father,” referring to Psalm 110 (NIV):1 The LORD says to my lord: “Sit at my right hand until I make your enemies a footstool for your feet.”

In paragraph four, Irenaeus testifies, “But Simeon also —he who had received an intimation from the Holy Ghost that he should not see death, until first he had beheld Christ Jesus— taking Him, the first-begotten of the Virgin, into his hands, blessed God, and said, “Lord, now lettest Thou Thy servant depart in peace, according to Thy word: because mine eyes have seen Thy salvation, which Thou hast prepared before the face of all people; a light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of Thy people Israel,” referring to Luke 2 (NIV):25 Now there was a man in Jerusalem called Simeon, who was righteous and devout. He was waiting for the consolation of Israel, and the Holy Spirit was on him. 26 It had been revealed to him by the Holy Spirit that he would not die before he had seen the Lord’s Messiah. 27 Moved by the Spirit, he went into the temple courts. When the parents brought in the child Jesus to do for him what the custom of the Law required, 28 Simeon took him in his arms and praised God, saying: 29 “Sovereign Lord, as you have promised, you may now dismiss your servant in peace. 30 For my eyes have seen your salvation, 31 which you have prepared in the sight of all nations: 32 a light for revelation to the Gentiles, and the glory of your people Israel.”

Irenaeus explains that Simeon was “confessing thus, that the infant whom he was holding in his hands, Jesus, born of Mary, was Christ Himself, the Son of God, the light of all, the glory of Israel itself, and the peace and refreshing of those who had fallen asleep.”

Irenaeus continues as he affirms, “For He was already despoiling men, by removing their ignorance, conferring upon them His own knowledge, and scattering abroad those who recognised Him, as Esaias says: “Call His name, Quickly spoil, Rapidly divide,” referring to part of Isaiah 8:3 in the Septuagint.

Irenaeus is referring to a passage in Isaiah from which he extracts only the name of the child born to Isaiah as he then asserts that “He was already despoiling men, by removing their ignorance, conferring upon them His own knowledge, and scattering abroad those who recognised Him, as Esaias says: “Call His name, Quickly spoil, Rapidly divide.” Irenaeus then explains that this refers to Christ as he continues, “Now these are the works of Christ. He therefore was Himself Christ, whom Simeon carrying [in his arms] blessed the Most High.”

I believe Irenaeus means to say that, even as a babe, Christ Jesus brought immediate change to the world of mankind in that he was the fulfillment of the promise of God that a redeemer would come. But the verse in context relates to a coming judgment on Israel in Isaiah’s time. Here is the verse in context.

Isaiah 8 (Septuagint): 1 And the Lord said to me, Take to thyself a volume of a great new book, and write in it with a man’s pen concerning the making a rapid plunder of spoils; for it is near at hand. 2 And make me witnesses of faithful men, Urias, and Zacharias the son of Barachias. 3 And I went in to the prophetess; and she conceived, and bore a son. And the Lord said to me, Call his name, Spoil quickly, plunder speedily. 4 For before the child shall know how to call his father or his mother, one shall take the power of Damascus and the spoils of Samaria before the king of the Assyrians.

Isaiah 8 (NASB): 1 Then the LORD said to me, “Take for yourself a large tablet and write on it in ordinary letters: Swift is the booty, speedy is the prey.” 2 And I will take to Myself faithful witnesses for testimony, Uriah the priest and Zechariah the son of Jeberechiah.” 3 So I approached the prophetess, and she conceived and gave birth to a son. Then the LORD said to me, “Name him Maher-shalal-hash-baz; 4 for before the boy knows how to cry out ‘My father’ or ‘My mother,’ the wealth of Damascus and the spoil of Samaria will be carried away before the king of Assyria.”

The name Maher-shalal-hash-baz in Hebrew means “Swift is the booty, speedy is the prey,” as in verse 1. Isaiah was prophesying of coming judgment on Israel for their unfaithfulness as we read in Isaiah 8 (KJV): 5 The LORD spake also unto me again, saying, 6 Forasmuch as this people refuseth the waters of Shiloah that go softly, and rejoice in Rezin and Remaliah's son; 7 Now therefore, behold, the Lord bringeth up upon them the waters of the river, strong and many, even the king of Assyria, and all his glory: and he shall come up over all his channels, and go over all his banks: 8 And he shall pass through Judah; he shall overflow and go over, he shall reach even to the neck; and the stretching out of his wings shall fill the breadth of thy land, O Immanuel.

The Lord was saying that Israel was about to go into captivity to the Assyrians. This happened in 723 B.C.

So Irenaeus testifies, “Now these are the works of Christ,” and then points out the following:

- “He therefore was Himself Christ, whom Simeon carrying [in his arms] blessed the Most High;”
- “on beholding whom the shepherds glorified God,” referring in context to Luke 2 (NIV): 8 And there were shepherds living out in the fields nearby, keeping watch over their flocks at night. 9 An angel of the Lord appeared to them, and the glory of the Lord shone around them, and they were terrified. 10 But the angel said to them, “Do not be afraid. I bring you good news that will cause great joy for all the people. 11 Today in the town of David a Savior has been born to you; he is the Messiah, the Lord. 12 This will be a sign to you: You will find a baby wrapped in cloths and lying in a manger.” 13 Suddenly a great company of the heavenly host appeared with the angel, praising God and saying, 14 “Glory to God in the highest heaven, and on earth peace to those on whom his favor rests.” 15 When the angels had left them and gone into heaven, the shepherds said to one another, “Let’s go to Bethlehem and see this thing that has happened, which the Lord has told us about.” 16 So they hurried off and found Mary and Joseph, and the baby, who was lying in the manger. 17 When they had seen him, they spread the word concerning what had been told them about this child, 18 and all who heard it were amazed at what the shepherds said to them. 19 But Mary treasured up all these things and pondered them in her heart. 20 The shepherds returned, glorifying and praising God for all the things they had heard and seen, which were just as they had been told.

- “whom John, while yet in his mother’s womb, and He (Christ) in that of Mary, recognising as the Lord, saluted with leaping,” referring to Mary’s visit to Elizabeth in context in Luke 1 (NIV):39 At that time Mary got ready and hurried to a town in the hill country of Judea, 40 where she entered Zechariah’s home and greeted Elizabeth. 41 When Elizabeth heard Mary’s greeting, the baby leaped in her womb, and Elizabeth was filled with the Holy Spirit. 42 In a loud voice she exclaimed: “Blessed are you among women, and blessed is the child you will bear! 43 But why am I so favored, that the mother of my Lord should come to me? 44 As soon as the sound of your greeting reached my ears, the baby in my womb leaped for joy. 45 Blessed is she who has believed that the Lord would fulfill his promises to her!”
- “whom the Magi, when they had seen, adored, and offered their gifts [to Him], as I have already stated, and prostrated themselves to the eternal King, departed by another way, not now returning by the way of the Assyrians,” referring to Matthew 2 (NIV):1 After Jesus was born in Bethlehem in Judea, during the time of King Herod, Magi from the east came to Jerusalem 2 and asked, “Where is the one who has been born king of the Jews? We saw his star when it rose and have come to worship him.”
And to Matthew 2 (NIV):12 And having been warned in a dream not to go back to Herod, they returned to their country by another route.
- “For before the child shall have knowledge to cry, Father or mother, He shall receive the power of Damascus, and the spoils of Samaria, against the king of the Assyrians,” referring to Isaiah 8:4, “declaring, in a mysterious manner indeed, but emphatically, that the Lord did fight with a hidden hand against Amalek.” Irenaeus asserts here that Isaiah refers to Christ when he says, “For before the child shall have knowledge to cry, Father or mother, He shall receive the power of Damascus, and the spoils of Samaria, against the king of the Assyrians,” referring to Isaiah 8 (Septuagint):4 For before the child shall know how to call his father or his mother, one shall take the power of Damascus and the spoils of Samaria before the king of the Assyrians.
And to Isaiah 8 (KJV):4 For before the child shall have knowledge to cry, My father, and my mother, the riches of Damascus and the spoil of Samaria shall be taken away before the king of Assyria.
As we saw above, this was a prophecy of coming judgment on Israel and did not relate to Christ.
- “For this cause, too, He suddenly removed those children belonging to the house of David, whose happy lot it was to have been born at that time, that He might send them on before into His kingdom,” referring to Matthew 2 (NIV):16 When Herod realized that he had been outwitted by the Magi, he was furious, and he gave orders to kill all the boys in Bethlehem and its vicinity who were two years old and under, in accordance with the time he had learned from the Magi. 17 Then what was said through the prophet Jeremiah was fulfilled: 18 “A voice is heard in Ramah, weeping and great mourning, Rachel weeping for her children and refusing to be comforted, because they are no more.”
- “He, since He was Himself an infant, so arranging it that human infants should be martyrs, slain, according to the Scriptures, for the sake of Christ, who was born in Bethlehem of Judah, in the city of David,” referring to Luke 2 (KJV):4 And Joseph also went up from Galilee, out of the city of Nazareth, into Judaea, unto the city of David, which is called Bethlehem; (because he was of the house and lineage of David:)

In paragraph five, Irenaeus testifies, “Therefore did the Lord also say to His disciples after the resurrection, “O thoughtless ones, and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken! Ought not Christ to have suffered these things, and to enter into His glory?,” referring to Luke 24 (NIV):25 He said to them, “How foolish you are, and how slow to believe all that the prophets have spoken! 26 Did not the Messiah have to suffer these things and then enter his glory?”

Irenaeus then testifies, “And again does He say to them: “These are the words which I spoke unto you while I was yet with you, that all things must be fulfilled which were written in the law of Moses, and in the prophets, and in the Psalms, concerning Me. Then opened He their understanding, that they should understand the Scriptures, and said unto them, Thus it is written, and thus it behoved Christ to suffer, and to rise again from the dead, and that repentance for the remission of sins be preached in His name among all nations,” referring to Luke 24 (NIV):44 He said to them, “This is what I told you while I was still with you: Everything must be fulfilled that is written about me in the Law of Moses, the Prophets and the Psalms.” 45 Then he opened their minds so they could understand the Scriptures. 46 He told them, “This is what is written: The Messiah will suffer and rise from the dead on the third day, 47 and repentance for the forgiveness of sins will be preached in his name to all nations, beginning at Jerusalem.

Irenaeus then testifies, “Now this is He who was born of Mary; for He says: “The Son of man must suffer many things, and be rejected, and crucified, and on the third day rise again,” referring to Mark 8 (NIV):31 He then began to teach them that the Son of Man must suffer many things and be rejected by the elders, the chief priests and the teachers of the law, and that he must be killed and after three days rise again.

And to Luke 9 (NIV):21 Jesus strictly warned them not to tell this to anyone. 22 And he said, “The Son of Man must suffer many things and be rejected by the elders, the chief priests and the teachers of the law, and he must be killed and on the third day be raised to life.”

Irenaeus then affirms the following:

- “The Gospel, therefore, knew no other son of man but Him who was of Mary, who also suffered;”
- “and no Christ who flew away from Jesus before the passion;”
- “but Him who was born it knew as Jesus Christ the Son of God, and that this same suffered and rose again, as John, the disciple of the Lord, verifies, saying: “But these are written, that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, and that believing ye might have eternal life in His name,” referring to John 20 (NIV):30 Jesus performed many other signs in the presence of his disciples, which are not recorded in this book. 31 But these are written that you may believe that Jesus is the Messiah, the Son of God, and that by believing you may have life in his name.
- “—foreseeing these blasphemous systems which divide the Lord, as far as lies in their power, saying that He was formed of two different substances.”
- “For this reason also he has thus testified to us in his Epistle: “Little children, it is the last time; and as ye have heard that Antichrist doth come, now have many antichrists appeared; whereby we know that it is the last time. They went out from us, but they were not of us,” referring to 1 John 2 (KJV):18 Little children, it is the last time: and as ye have heard that antichrist shall come, even now are there many antichrists; whereby we know that it is the last time. 19 They went out from us, but they were not of us; for if they had been of us, they would no doubt have continued with us: but they went out, that they might be made manifest that they were not all of us.
- “for if they had been of us, they would have continued with us: but [they departed], that they might be made manifest that they are not of us. Know ye therefore, that every lie is from without, and is not of the truth. Who is a liar, but he that denieth that Jesus is the Christ? This is Antichrist,” ,” referring to 1 John 2 (KJV):20 But ye have an unction from the Holy One, and ye know all things. 21 I have not written unto you because ye know not the truth, but because ye know it, and that no lie is of the truth. 22 Who is a liar but he that denieth that Jesus is the Christ? He is antichrist, that denieth the Father and the Son.

In paragraph six, Irenaeus then again testifies, “But inasmuch as all those before mentioned, although they certainly do with their tongue confess one Jesus Christ, make fools of themselves, thinking one thing and saying another; for their hypotheses vary, as I have already shown, alleging, [as they do,]” as follows:

- “that one Being suffered and was born, and that this was Jesus; but that there was another who descended upon Him, and that this was Christ, who also ascended again;”
- “and they argue, that he who proceeded from the Demiurge, or he who was dispensational, or he who sprang from Joseph, was the Being subject to suffering; but upon the latter there descended from the invisible and ineffable [places] the former, whom they assert to be incomprehensible, invisible, and impassible:”

Irenaeus then testifies that, “they thus wander from the truth, because their doctrine departs from Him who is truly God, being ignorant that His only-begotten Word, who is always present with the human race, united to and mingled with His own creation, according to the Father’s pleasure, and who became flesh, is Himself Jesus Christ our Lord, who did also suffer for us, and rose again on our behalf,” 1 Peter 2 (KJV):21 For even hereunto were ye called: because Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example, that ye should follow his steps:

And to 2 Corinthians 5 (KJV):14 For the love of Christ constraineth us; because we thus judge, that if one died for all, then were all dead: 15 And that he died for all, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto him which died for them, and rose again.

Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “and who will come again in the glory of His Father, to raise up all flesh, and for the manifestation of salvation, and to apply the rule of just judgment to all who were made by Him,” reminding us of Matthew 16 (NIV):27 For the Son of Man is going to come in his Father’s glory with his angels, and then he will reward each person according to what they have done.

Irenaeus again affirms, “There is therefore, as I have pointed out, one God the Father, and one Christ Jesus, who came by means of the whole dispensational arrangements [connected with Him], and gathered together all things in Himself.” And Irenaeus continues as he affirms, “But in every respect, too, He is man, the formation of God; and thus He took up man into Himself, the invisible becoming visible, the incomprehensible being made comprehensible, the impassible becoming capable of suffering, and the Word being made man, thus summing up all things in Himself: so that as in super-celestial, spiritual, and invisible things, the Word of God is supreme, so also in things visible and corporeal He might possess the supremacy, and, taking to Himself the preeminence, as well as constituting Himself Head of the Church, He might draw all things to Himself at the proper time,” referring to Colossians 1 (KJV):18 And he is the head of the body, the church: who is the beginning, the firstborn from the dead; that in all things he might have the preeminence.

In paragraph seven, Irenaeus affirms that, “With Him is nothing incomplete or out of due season, just as with the Father there is nothing incongruous.” Irenaeus then adds, “For all these things were foreknown by the Father; but the Son works them out at the proper time in perfect order and sequence.” Irenaeus then explains:

- “This was the reason why when Mary was urging [Him] on to [perform] the wonderful miracle of the wine, and was desirous before the time to partake of the cup of emblematic significance, the Lord, checking her untimely haste, said, “Woman, what have I to do with thee? mine hour is not yet come” — waiting for that hour which was foreknown by the Father,” and referring to John 2 (NIV):1 On the third day a wedding took place at Cana in Galilee. Jesus’ mother was there, 2 and Jesus and his disciples had also been invited to the wedding. 3 When the wine was gone, Jesus’ mother said to him, “They have no more wine.” 4 “Woman, why do you involve me?” Jesus replied. “My hour has not yet come.”
- “This is also the reason why, when men were often desirous to take Him, it is said, “No man laid hands upon Him, for the hour of His being taken was not yet come,” referring to John 7 (NIV):30 At this they tried to seize him, but no one laid a hand on him, because his hour had not yet come.
- “nor the time of His passion, which had been foreknown by the Father; as also says the prophet Habakkuk, “By this Thou shalt be known when the years have drawn nigh; Thou shalt be set forth when the time comes; because my soul is disturbed by anger, Thou shalt remember Thy mercy.” Habakkuk did speak as in Ambacum (Habakkuk) 3 (Septuagint):2 O Lord, I have heard thy report, and was afraid: I considered thy works, and was amazed: thou shalt be known between the two living creatures, thou shalt be acknowledged when the years draw nigh; thou shalt be manifested when the time is come; when my soul is troubled, thou wilt in wrath remember mercy. And also in Habakkuk 3 (NASB):2

LORD, I have heard the report about You and I fear. O LORD, revive Your work in the midst of the years, In the midst of the years make it known; In wrath remember mercy.

- “Paul also says: “But when the fulness of time came, God sent forth His Son,” referring to Galatians 4 (KJV):4 But when the fulness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law.

Irenaeus then testifies,” By which is made manifest, that all things which had been foreknown of the Father, our Lord did accomplish in their order, season, and hour, foreknown and fitting, being indeed one and the same, but rich and great. For He fulfils the bountiful and comprehensive will of His Father, inasmuch as He is Himself the Saviour of those who are saved, and the Lord of those who are under authority, and the God of all those things which have been formed, the only-begotten of the Father, Christ who was announced, and the Word of God, who became incarnate when the fulness of time had come, at which the Son of God had to become the Son of man.”

Irenaeus unequivocally confesses his faith in the Lord Jesus Christ with these words.

In paragraph eight, Irenaeus affirms that, “All, therefore, are outside of the [Christian] dispensation, who, under pretext of knowledge, understand that Jesus was one, and Christ another, and the Only-begotten another, from whom again is the Word, and that the Saviour is another, whom these disciples of error allege to be a production of those who were made Æons in a state of degeneracy.” Irenaeus informs us that “Such men are to outward appearance sheep; for they appear to be like us, by what they say in public, repeating the same words as we do; but inwardly they are wolves,” referring to Matthew 7 (NIV):15 “Watch out for false prophets. They come to you in sheep’s clothing, but inwardly they are ferocious wolves.

Irenaeus does not mince words when he testifies, “Their doctrine is homicidal, conjuring up, as it does, a number of gods, and simulating many Fathers, but lowering and dividing the Son of God in many ways.” Irenaeus warns us that “These are they against whom the Lord has cautioned us beforehand,” referring to Matthew 10 (NIV):16 “I am sending you out like sheep among wolves. Therefore be as shrewd as snakes and as innocent as doves.

And to Matthew 24 (NIV):11 and many false prophets will appear and deceive many people.

And to Matthew 24 (NIV):24 For false messiahs and false prophets will appear and perform great signs and wonders to deceive, if possible, even the elect. 25 See, I have told you ahead of time.

Irenaeus then warns, “and His disciple, in his Epistle already mentioned, commands us to avoid them, when he says: “For many deceivers are entered into the world, who confess not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh. This is a deceiver and an antichrist, referring to 2 John 1 (KJV):7 For many deceivers are entered into the world, who confess not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh. This is a deceiver and an antichrist.

Irenaeus continues as he then warns, “Take heed to them, that ye lose not what ye have wrought,” referring to 2 John 1 (KJV):8 Look to yourselves, that we lose not those things which we have wrought, but that we receive a full reward.

Irenaeus then adds, “And again does he say in the Epistle: “Many false prophets are gone out into the world. Hereby know ye the Spirit of God: Every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God; and every spirit which separates Jesus Christ is not of God, but is of antichrist,” referring to 1 John 4 (KJV):1 Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God: because many false prophets are gone out into the world. 2 Hereby know ye the Spirit of God: Every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God: 3 And every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is not of God: and this is that spirit of antichrist, whereof ye have heard that it should come; and even now already is it in the world.

Irenaeus then points out that “These words agree with what was said in the Gospel, that “the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us,” referring to John 1 (NASB):14 And the Word became flesh, and dwelt among us, and we saw His glory, glory as of the only begotten from the Father, full of grace and truth.

Then, showing the unity of the apostle John’s writings, Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “Wherefore he again exclaims in his Epistle, “Every one that believeth that Jesus is the Christ, has been born of God,” referring to 1 John 5 (KJV):1 Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ is born of God: and every one that loveth him that begat loveth him also that is begotten of him.

Irenaeus then concludes, “knowing Jesus Christ to be one and the same, to whom the gates of heaven were opened, because of His taking upon Him flesh: who shall also come in the same flesh in which He suffered, revealing the glory of the Father,” referring possibly to Acts 1 (NIV):11 “Men of Galilee,” they said, “why do you stand here looking into the sky? This same Jesus, who has been taken from you into heaven, will come back in the same way you have seen him go into heaven.”

And to Matthew 16 (NIV):27 For the Son of Man is going to come in his Father’s glory with his angels, and then he will reward each person according to what they have done.

In paragraph nine, Irenaeus testifies, “Concurring with these statements, Paul, speaking to the Romans, declares: “Much more they who receive abundance of grace and righteousness for [eternal] life, shall reign by one, Christ Jesus,” referring to Romans 5 (KJV):17 For if by one man's offence death reigned by one; much more they which receive abundance of grace and of the gift of righteousness shall reign in life by one, Jesus Christ.)

Irenaeus then affirms, “It follows from this, that he knew nothing of that Christ who flew away from Jesus; nor did he of the Saviour above, whom they hold to be impassible. For if, in truth, the one suffered, and the other remained incapable of suffering, and the one was born, but the other descended upon him who was born, and left him again, it is not one, but two, that are shown forth.” Irenaeus then concludes as he testifies, “But that the apostle did know Him as one, both who was born and who suffered, namely Christ Jesus, he again says in the same Epistle: “Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized in Christ Jesus were baptized in His death? that like as Christ rose from the dead, so should we also walk in newness of life,” referring to Romans 6 (KJV):3 Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? 4 Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life.

Irenaeus continues further as he testifies, “But again, showing that Christ did suffer, and was Himself the Son of God, who died for us, and redeemed us with His blood at the time appointed beforehand, he says: “For how is it, that Christ, when we were yet without strength, in due time died for the ungodly? But God commendeth His love towards us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us. Much more, then, being now justified by His blood, we shall be saved from wrath through Him. For if, when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of His Son; much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by His life,” referring to Romans 5 (KJV):6 For when we were yet without strength, in due time Christ died for the ungodly. 7 For scarcely for a righteous man will one die: yet peradventure for a good man some would even dare to die. 8 But God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us. 9 Much more then, being now justified by his blood, we shall be saved from wrath through him. 10 For if, when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by his life.

Irenaeus then concludes as he testifies, “He declares in the plainest manner, that the same Being who was laid hold of, and underwent suffering, and shed His blood for us, was both Christ and the Son of God, who did also rise again, and was taken up into heaven, as he himself [Paul] says: “But at the same time, [it, is] Christ [that] died, yea rather, that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God,” referring to Romans 8 (NASB):34 who is the one who condemns? Christ Jesus is He who died, yes, rather who was raised, who is at the right hand of God, who also intercedes for us.

Irenaeus then adds, “And again, “Knowing that Christ, rising from the dead, dieth no more,” referring to Romans 6 (KJV):9 Knowing that Christ being raised from the dead dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over him.

Irenaeus continues as he explains, “for, as himself foreseeing, through the Spirit, the subdivisions of evil teachers [with regard to the Lord’s person], and being desirous of cutting away from them all occasion of cavil, he says what has been already stated, [and also declares:] “But if the Spirit of Him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, He that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies,” referring to Romans 8 (KJV):11 But if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you.

Irenaeus then concludes as he warns, “This he does not utter to those alone who wish to hear: Do not err, [he says to all:] Jesus Christ, the Son of God, is one and the same, who did by suffering reconcile us to God, and rose from the dead; who is at the right hand of the Father, and perfect in all things; “who, when He was buffeted, struck not in return; who, when He suffered, threatened not,” referring to 1 Peter 2 (KJV):23 Who, when he was reviled, reviled not again; when he suffered, he threatened not; but committed himself to him that judgeth righteously:

Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “and when He underwent tyranny, He prayed His Father that He would forgive those who had crucified Him,” referring to Luke 23 (KJV):34 Then said Jesus, Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do. And they parted his raiment, and cast lots.

Irenaeus then testifies in conclusion of this chapter, “For He did Himself truly bring in salvation: since He is Himself the Word of God, Himself the Only-begotten of the Father, Christ Jesus our Lord.”

Chapter 12: Teaching on the Atonement

Book 3: Chapter XVIII.—Continuation of the foregoing argument. Proofs from the writings of St. Paul, and from the words of Our Lord, that Christ and Jesus cannot be considered as distinct beings; neither can it be alleged that the Son of God became man merely in appearance, but that He did so truly and actually.

1. 3632 Again a Syriac fragment supplies some important words. See Harvey, vol. ii. p. 440. As it has been clearly demonstrated that the Word, who existed in the beginning with God, by whom all things were made, who was also always present with mankind, was in these last days, according to the time appointed by the Father, united to His own workmanship, inasmuch as He became a man liable to suffering, [it follows] that every objection is set aside of those who say, "If our Lord was born at that time, Christ had therefore no previous existence." For I have shown that the Son of God did not then begin to exist, being with the Father from the beginning; but when He became incarnate, and was made man, He commenced afresh 3633 So the Syriac. The Latin has, "in seipso recapitulavit," He summed up in Himself. [As the Second Adam, 1 Cor. xv. 47.] the long line of human beings, and furnished us, in a brief, comprehensive manner, with salvation; so that what we had lost in Adam—namely, to be according to the image and likeness of God—that we might recover in Christ Jesus.

2. For as it was not possible that the man who had once for all been conquered, and who had been destroyed through disobedience, could reform himself, and obtain the prize of victory; and as it was also impossible that he could attain to salvation who had fallen under the power of sin,—the Son effected both these things, being the Word of God, descending from the Father, becoming incarnate, stooping low, even to death, and consummating the arranged plan of our salvation, upon whom [Paul], exhorting us unhesitatingly to believe, again says, "Who shall ascend into heaven? that is, to bring down Christ; or who shall descend into the deep? that is, to liberate Christ again from the dead." Then he continues, "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised Him from the dead, thou shalt be saved." And he renders the reason why the Son of God did these things, saying, "For to this end Christ both lived, and died, and revived, that He might rule over the living and the dead." And again, writing to the Corinthians, he declares, "But we preach Christ Jesus crucified;" and adds, "The cup of blessing which we bless, is it not the communion of the blood of Christ?"

3. But who is it that has had fellowship with us in the matter of food? Whether is it he who is conceived of by them as the Christ above, who extended himself through Horos, and imparted a form to their mother; or is it He who is from the Virgin, Emmanuel, who did eat butter and honey, of whom the prophet declared, "He is also a man, and who shall know him?" He was likewise preached by Paul: "For I delivered," he says, "unto you first of all, that Christ died for our sins, according to the Scriptures; and that He was buried, and rose again the third day, according to the Scriptures." It is plain, then, that Paul knew no other Christ besides Him alone, who both suffered, and was buried, and rose again, who was also born, and whom he speaks of as man. For after remarking, "But if Christ be preached, that He rose from the dead," he continues, rendering the reason of His incarnation, "For since by man came death, by man [came] also the resurrection of the dead." And everywhere, when [referring to] the passion of our Lord, and to His human nature, and His subjection to death, he employs the name of Christ, as in that passage: "Destroy not him with thy meat for whom Christ died." And again: "But now, in Christ, ye who sometimes were far off are made nigh by the blood of Christ." And again: "Christ has redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us: for it is written, Cursed is every one that hangeth upon a tree." And again: "And through thy knowledge shall the weak brother perish, for whom Christ died;" indicating that the impassible Christ did not descend upon Jesus, but that He Himself, because He was Jesus Christ, suffered for us; He, who lay in the tomb, and rose again, who descended and ascended,—the Son of God having been made the Son of man, as the very name itself doth declare. For in the name of Christ is implied, He that anoints, He that is anointed, and the unction itself with which He is anointed. And it is the Father who anoints, but the Son who is anointed by the Spirit, who is the unction, as the Word declares by Isaiah, "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because He hath anointed me,"—pointing out both the anointing Father, the anointed Son, and the unction, which is the Spirit.

4. The Lord Himself, too, makes it evident who it was that suffered; for when He asked the disciples, "Who do men say that I, the Son of man, am?" and when Peter had replied, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God;" and when he had been commended by Him [in these words], "That flesh and blood had not revealed it to him, but the Father who is in heaven," He made it clear that He, the Son of man, is Christ the Son of the living God. "For from that time forth," it is said, "He began to show to His disciples, how that He must go unto Jerusalem, and suffer many things of the priests, and be rejected, and crucified, and rise again the third day." He who was acknowledged by Peter as Christ, who pronounced him blessed because the Father had revealed the Son of the living God to him, said that He must Himself suffer many things, and be crucified; and then He rebuked Peter, who imagined that He was the Christ as the generality of men supposed [that the Christ should be], and was averse to the idea of His suffering, [and] said to the disciples, "If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow Me. For whosoever will save his life, shall lose it; and whosoever will lose it for My sake shall save it." For these things Christ spoke openly, He being Himself the Saviour of those who should be delivered over to death for their confession of Him, and lose their lives.

5. If, however, He was Himself not to suffer, but should fly away from Jesus, why did He exhort His disciples to take up the cross and follow Him,—that cross which these men represent Him as not having taken up, but [speak of Him] as having relinquished the dispensation of suffering? For that He did not say this with reference to the acknowledging of the Stauros (cross) above, as some among them venture to expound, but with respect to the suffering which He should Himself undergo, and that His disciples should endure, He implies when He says, "For whosoever will save his life, shall lose it; and whosoever will lose, shall find it." And that His disciples must suffer for His sake, He [implied when He] said to the Jews, "Behold, I send you prophets, and wise men, and scribes: and some of them ye shall kill and crucify." And to the disciples He was wont to say, "And ye shall stand before governors and kings for My sake; and they shall scourge some of you, and slay you, and persecute you from city to city." He knew, therefore, both those who should suffer persecution, and He knew those who should have to be scourged and slain because of Him; and He did not speak of any other cross, but of the suffering which He should Himself undergo first, and His disciples afterwards. For this purpose did He give them this exhortation: "Fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul; but rather fear Him who is able to send both soul and body into hell;" [thus exhorting them] to hold fast those professions of faith which they had made in reference to Him. For He promised to confess before His Father those who should confess His name before men; but declared that He would deny those who should deny Him, and would be ashamed of those who should be ashamed to confess Him. And although these things are so, some of these men have proceeded to such a degree of temerity, that they even pour contempt upon the martyrs, and vituperate those who are slain on account of the confession of the Lord, and who suffer all things predicted by the Lord, and who in this respect strive to follow the footprints of the Lord's passion, having become martyrs of the suffering One; these we do also enroll with the martyrs themselves. For, when inquisition shall be made for their blood, and they shall attain to glory, then all shall be confounded by Christ, who have cast a slur upon their martyrdom. And from this fact, that He exclaimed upon the cross, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do," the long-suffering, patience, compassion, and goodness of Christ are exhibited, since He both suffered, and did Himself exculpate those who had maltreated Him. For the Word of God, who said to us, "Love your enemies, and pray for those that hate you," Himself did this very thing upon the cross; loving the human race to such a degree, that He even prayed for those putting Him to death. If, however, any one, going upon the supposition that there are two [Christs], forms a judgment in regard to them, that [Christ] shall be found much the better one, and more patient, and the truly good one, who, in the midst of His own wounds and stripes, and the other [cruelties] inflicted upon Him, was beneficent, and unmindful of the wrongs perpetrated upon Him, than he who flew away, and sustained neither injury nor insult.

6. This also does likewise meet [the case] of those who maintain that He suffered only in appearance. For if He did not truly suffer, no thanks to Him, since there was no suffering at all; and when we shall actually begin to suffer, He will seem as leading us astray, exhorting us to endure buffering, and to turn the other 3658 Matt. v. 39, cheek, if He did not Himself before us in reality suffer the same; and as He misled them by seeming to them what He was not, so does He also mislead us, by exhorting us to endure what He did not endure Himself. [In that case] we shall be even above the Master, because we suffer and sustain what our Master never bore or endured. But as our Lord is alone truly Master, so the Son of God is truly good and patient, the Word of God the Father having been made the Son of man. For He fought and conquered; for He was man contending for the fathers, 3659 “Pro patribus, ἀντὶ τῶν πατρῶν. The reader will here observe the clear statement of the doctrine of atonement, whereby alone sin is done away.”—Harvey. And through obedience doing away with disobedience completely: for He bound the strong man, 3660 Matt. xii. 29, and set free the weak, and endowed His own handiwork with salvation, by destroying sin. For He is a most holy and merciful Lord, and loves the human race.

7. Therefore, as I have already said, He caused man (human nature) to cleave to and to become, one with God. For unless man had overcome the enemy of man, the enemy would not have been legitimately vanquished. And again: unless it had been God who had freely given salvation, we could never have possessed it securely. And unless man had been joined to God, he could never have become a partaker of incorruptibility. For it was incumbent upon the Mediator between God and men, by His relationship to both, to bring both to friendship and concord, and present man to God, while He revealed God to man. 3661 The Latin text, “et facere, ut et Deus assumeret hominem, et homo se dederet Deo,” here differs widely from the Greek preserved by Theodoret. We have followed the latter, which is preferred by all the editors. For, in what way could we be partaken of the adoption of sons, unless we had received from Him through the Son that fellowship which refers to Himself, unless His Word, having been made flesh, had entered into communion with us? Wherefore also He passed through every stage of life, restoring to all communion with God. Those, therefore, who assert that He appeared putatively, and was neither born in the flesh nor truly made man, are as yet under the old condemnation, holding out patronage to sin; for, by their showing, death has not been vanquished, which “reigned from Adam to Moses, even over them that had not sinned after the similitude of Adam’s transgression.” 3662 Rom. v. 14. But the law coming, which was given by Moses, and testifying of sin that it is a sinner, did truly take away his (death’s) kingdom, showing that he was no king, but a robber; and it revealed him as a murderer. It laid, however, a weighty burden upon man, who had sin in himself, showing that he was liable to death. For as the law was spiritual, it merely made sin to stand out in relief, but did not destroy it. For sin had no dominion over the spirit, but over man. For it behoved Him who was to destroy sin, and redeem man under the power of death, that He should Himself be made that very same thing which he was, that is, man; who had been drawn by sin into bondage, but was held by death, so that sin should be destroyed by man, and man should go forth from death. For as by the disobedience of the one man who was originally moulded from virgin soil, the many were made sinners, 3663 Rom. v. 19, and forfeited life; so was it necessary that, by the obedience of one man, who was originally born from a virgin, many should be justified and receive salvation. Thus, then, was the Word of God made man, as also Moses says: “God, true are His works.” 3664 Deut. xxxii. 4. But if, not having been made flesh, He did appear as if flesh, His work was not a true one. But what He did appear, that He also was: God recapitulated in Himself the ancient formation of man, that He might kill sin, deprive death of its power, and vivify man; and therefore His works are true.

Summary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus argues that, “As it has been clearly demonstrated that the Word, who existed in the beginning with God, by whom all things were made, who was also always present with mankind, was in these last days, according to the time appointed by the Father, united to His own workmanship, inasmuch as He became a man liable to suffering, [it follows] that every objection is set aside of those who say, “If our Lord was born at that time, Christ had therefore no previous existence.” And Irenaeus affirms, “For I have shown that the Son of God did not then begin to exist, being with the Father from the beginning; but when He became incarnate, and was made man, He commenced afresh the long line of human beings, and furnished us, in a brief, comprehensive manner, with salvation; so that what we had lost in Adam—namely, to be according to the image and likeness of God—that we might recover in Christ Jesus.”

In paragraph two, Irenaeus testifies, “For as it was not possible that the man who had once for all been conquered, and who had been destroyed through disobedience, could reform himself, and obtain the prize of victory; and as it was also impossible that he could attain to salvation who had fallen under the power of sin,” referring to Romans 3:9, “—the Son effected both these things, being the Word of God, descending from the Father, becoming incarnate, stooping low, even to death, and consummating the arranged plan of our salvation, upon whom [Paul], exhorting us unhesitatingly to believe, again says, “Who shall ascend into heaven? that is, to bring down Christ; or who shall descend into the deep? that is, to liberate Christ again from the dead.” Then he continues, “If thou shall confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised Him from the dead, thou shall be saved,” referring in context to Romans 10:6-10. Irenaeus again testifies, “And he renders the reason why the Son of God did these things, saying, “For to this end Christ both lived, and died, and revived, that He might rule over the living and the dead,” referring to Romans 14:9. Irenaeus concludes as he testifies, “And again, writing to the Corinthians, he declares, “But we preach Christ Jesus crucified,” referring to 1 Corinthians 1:23, “and adds, “The cup of blessing which we bless, is it not the communion of the blood of Christ?,” referring to 1 Corinthians 10:16.

In paragraph three, Irenaeus asks, “But who is it that has had fellowship with us in the matter of food? Whether is it he who is conceived of by them as the Christ above, who extended himself through Horos, and imparted a form to their mother; or is it He who is from the Virgin, Emmanuel, who did eat butter and honey,” referring to Isaiah 7:14-15, “of whom the prophet declared, “He is also a man, and who shall know him?,” possibly referring in context to Isaiah 53:1-4. Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “He was likewise preached by Paul: “For I delivered,” he says, “unto you first of all, that Christ died for our sins, according to the Scriptures; and that He was buried, and rose again the third day, according to the Scriptures,” referring to 1 Corinthians 15:3-4. Irenaeus then affirms, “It is plain, then, that Paul knew no other Christ besides Him alone, who both suffered, and was buried, and rose again, who was also born, and whom he speaks of as man. For after remarking, “But if Christ be preached, that He rose from the dead,” referring to 1 Corinthians 15:12, “he continues, rendering the reason of His incarnation, “For since by man came death, by man [came] also the resurrection of the dead,” referring to 1 Corinthians 15:21. Irenaeus again testifies, “And everywhere, when [referring to] the passion of our Lord, and to His human nature, and His subjection to death, he employs the name of Christ, as in that passage: “Destroy not him with thy meat for whom Christ died,” referring to Romans 14:15. Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “And again: “But now, in Christ, ye who sometimes were far off are made nigh by the blood of Christ,” referring to Ephesians 2:13. Irenaeus then testifies, “And again: “Christ has redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us: for it is written, Cursed is every one that hangeth upon a tree,” referring to Galatians 3:13. Irenaeus then testifies again, “And again: “And through thy knowledge shall the weak brother perish, for whom Christ died,” referring to 1 Corinthians 8:11, “indicating that the impassible Christ did not descend upon Jesus, but that He Himself, because He was Jesus Christ, suffered for us; He, who lay in the tomb, and rose again, who descended and ascended,—the Son of God having been made the Son of man, as the very name itself doth declare.” Irenaeus then points out, “For in the name of Christ is implied, He that anoints, He that is anointed, and the unction itself with which He is anointed.” And Irenaeus then affirms, “And it is the Father who anoints, but the Son who is anointed by the Spirit, who is the unction, as the Word declares by Isaiah, “The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because He hath anointed me,” referring to Isaiah 61:1, “—pointing out both the anointing Father, the anointed Son, and the unction, which is the Spirit.”

In paragraph four, Irenaeus testifies, “The Lord Himself, too, makes it evident who it was that suffered; for when He asked the disciples, “Who do men say that I, the Son of man, am?,” referring to Matthew 16:13,

“and when Peter had replied, “Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God;” and when he had been commended by Him [in these words], “That flesh and blood had not revealed it to him, but the Father who is in heaven,” He made it clear that He, the Son of man, is Christ the Son of the living God,” referring to Matthew 16:16-17. Irenaeus then continues, “For from that time forth,” it is said, “He began to show to His disciples, how that He must go unto Jerusalem, and suffer many things of the priests, and be rejected, and crucified, and rise again the third day,” referring to Matthew 16:21. Irenaeus then affirms, “He who was acknowledged by Peter as Christ, who pronounced him blessed because the Father had revealed the Son of the living God to him, said that He must Himself suffer many things, and be crucified; and then He rebuked Peter, who imagined that He was the Christ as the generality of men supposed [that the Christ should be], and was averse to the idea of His suffering,” referring to Matthew 16:22-23, “[and] said to the disciples, “If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow Me. For whosoever will save his life, shall lose it; and whosoever will lose it for My sake shall save it,” referring to Matthew 16:24-25. And Irenaeus concludes as he affirms, “For these things Christ spoke openly, He being Himself the Saviour of those who should be delivered over to death for their confession of Him, and lose their lives.”

In paragraph five, Irenaeus argues, “If, however, He was Himself not to suffer, but should fly away from Jesus, why did He exhort His disciples to take up the cross and follow Him,” referring again to Matthew 16:24, “—that cross which these men represent Him as not having taken up, but [speak of Him] as having relinquished the dispensation of suffering?” Irenaeus then testifies, “For that He did not say this with reference to the acknowledging of the Stauros (cross) above, as some among them venture to expound, but with respect to the suffering which He should Himself undergo, and that His disciples should endure, He implies when He says, “For whosoever will save his life, shall lose it; and whosoever will lose, shall find it,” referring again to Matthew 16:25. Again Irenaeus testifies, “And that His disciples must suffer for His sake, He [implied when He] said to the Jews, “Behold, I send you prophets, and wise men, and scribes: and some of them ye shall kill and crucify,” referring to Matthew 23:34. And Irenaeus continues to testify, “And to the disciples He was wont to say, “And ye shall stand before governors and kings for My sake; and they shall scourge some of you, and slay you, and persecute you from city to city,” referring to Matthew 10:17-18. Irenaeus then affirms, “He knew, therefore, both those who should suffer persecution, and He knew those who should have to be scourged and slain because of Him; and He did not speak of any other cross, but of the suffering which He should Himself undergo first, and His disciples afterwards.” Again Irenaeus testifies, “For this purpose did He give them this exhortation: “Fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul; but rather fear Him who is able to send both soul and body into hell,” referring to Matthew 10:28, “[thus exhorting them] to hold fast those professions of faith which they had made in reference to Him.” Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “For He promised to confess before His Father those who should confess His name before men; but declared that He would deny those who should deny Him, and would be ashamed of those who should be ashamed to confess Him,” referring to Matthew 10:32-33. Irenaeus then records, “And although these things are so, some of these men have proceeded to such a degree of temerity, that they even pour contempt upon the martyrs, and vituperate those who are slain on account of the confession of the Lord, and who suffer all things predicted by the Lord, and who in this respect strive to follow the footprints of the Lord’s passion, having become martyrs of the suffering One; these we do also enroll with the martyrs themselves. For, when inquisition shall be made for their blood, and they shall attain to glory, then all shall be confounded by Christ, who have cast a slur upon their martyrdom.” Irenaeus then testifies, “And from this fact, that He exclaimed upon the cross, “Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do,” referring to Luke 23:34, “the long-suffering, patience, compassion, and goodness of Christ are exhibited, since He both suffered, and did Himself exculpate those who had maltreated Him.” Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “For the Word of God, who said to us, “Love your enemies, and pray for those that hate you,” referring to Matthew 5:44, “Himself did this very thing upon the cross; loving the human race to such a degree, that He even prayed for those putting Him to death.” Irenaeus then affirms as he argues, “If, however, any one, going upon the supposition that there are two [Christs], forms a judgment in regard to them, that [Christ] shall be found much the better one, and more patient, and the truly good one, who, in the midst of His own wounds and stripes, and the other [cruelties] inflicted upon Him, was beneficent, and unmindful of the wrongs perpetrated upon Him, than he who flew away, and sustained neither injury nor insult.”

In paragraph six, Irenaeus argues, “This also does likewise meet [the case] of those who maintain that He suffered only in appearance. For if He did not truly suffer, no thanks to Him, since there was no suffering at all; and when we shall actually begin to suffer, He will seem as leading us astray, exhorting us to endure buffering, and to turn the other cheek,” referring to Matthew 5:39, “if He did not Himself before us in reality suffer the same; and as He misled them by seeming to them what He was not, so does He also mislead us, by exhorting us to endure what He did not endure Himself.” Irenaeus then points out, “[In that case] we shall be even above the Master, because we suffer and sustain what our Master never bore or endured.” Irenaeus then affirms, “But as our Lord is alone truly Master, so the Son of God is truly good and patient, the Word of God the Father having been made the Son of man. For He fought and conquered; for He was man contending for the fathers.” Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “And through obedience doing away with disobedience completely: for He bound the strong man,” referring to Matthew 12:29, “and set free the weak, and endowed His own handiwork with salvation, by destroying sin,” referring possibly to Hebrews 9:26. Irenaeus concludes as he affirms, “For He is a most holy and merciful Lord, and loves the human race,” referring to John 3:16.

In paragraph seven, Irenaeus affirms, “Therefore, as I have already said, He caused man (human nature) to cleave to and to become, one with God.” And Irenaeus then argues, point by point:

- “For unless man had overcome the enemy of man, the enemy would not have been legitimately vanquished.”
- “And again: unless it had been God who had freely given salvation, we could never have possessed it securely.”
- “And unless man had been joined to God, he could never have become a partaker of incorruptibility.”
- “For it was incumbent upon the Mediator between God and men, by His relationship to both, to bring both to friendship and concord, and present man to God, while He revealed God to man.”
- “For, in what way could we be partaken of the adoption of sons, unless we had received from Him through the Son that fellowship which refers to Himself, unless His Word, having been made flesh, had entered into communion with us?”

Irenaeus then affirms, “Wherefore also He passed through every stage of life, restoring to all communion with God.” Irenaeus continues as he affirms, “Those, therefore, who assert that He appeared putatively, and was neither born in the flesh nor truly made man, are as yet under the old condemnation, holding out patronage to sin; for, by their showing, death has not been vanquished, which “reigned from Adam to Moses, even over them that had not sinned after the similitude of Adam’s transgression,” referring to Romans 5:14. Irenaeus then affirms, “But the law coming, which was given by Moses, and testifying of sin that it is a sinner, did truly take away his (death’s) kingdom, showing that he was no king, but a robber; and it revealed him as a murderer,” referring to John 10:1, John 8:44, and Hebrews 2:14. Irenaeus then affirms, “It laid, however, a weighty burden upon man, who had sin in himself, showing that he was liable to death,” referring to Romans 7:17. Irenaeus again testifies, “For as the law was spiritual,” referring to Romans 7:14, “it merely made sin to stand out in relief, but did not destroy it.” Irenaeus then affirms, “For sin had no dominion over the spirit, but over man,” referring to Rom 3:23. Irenaeus again testifies, “For it behoved Him who was to destroy sin, and redeem man under the power of death, that He should Himself be made that very same thing which he was, that is, man; who had been drawn by sin into bondage, but was held by death, so that sin should be destroyed by man, and man should go forth from death.” Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “For as by the disobedience of the one man who was originally moulded from virgin soil, the many were made sinners,” referring to Matthew 5:19, “and forfeited life; so was it necessary that, by the obedience of one man, who was originally born from a virgin, many should be justified and receive salvation.” Irenaeus then concludes as he affirms, “Thus, then, was the Word of God made man, as also Moses says: “God, true are His works,” referring to Deuteronomy 32:4. And Irenaeus continues as he argues, “But if, not having been made flesh, He did appear as if flesh, His work was not a true one. But what He did appear, that He also was: God recapitulated in Himself the ancient formation of man, that He might kill sin, deprive death of its power, and vivify man; and therefore His works are true.”

Commentary: Irenaeus' intention here in this chapter was not to write the doctrine of the atonement, but to destroy the arguments of the Gnostics. In his defense of the faith, Irenaeus gives us more understanding of what he was fighting against. It is helpful to understand what Irenaeus was fighting against so that we understand his arguments more clearly. Here are some of the Gnostic beliefs revealed in this chapter which are as follows:

- In paragraph one, some Gnostics said that Christ could have no previous existence if he was actually born a man.
- In paragraph three, some Gnostics said that Christ was above but “extended himself through Horos.” We will discuss Horos in Chapter 16: The Gnostic Doctrine of the Seed.
- In paragraph four and five, we find that the Gnostics were “averse to the idea of His suffering.”
- In paragraph five also, some Gnostics believed that the Christ flew away from Jesus on the cross. They also believed that the Christ did not take up the cross, but “relinquished the dispensation of suffering.”
- And also in paragraph five, we find that the Gnostics expounded that Christ only exhorted His disciples to take up the cross and follow Him “with reference to the acknowledging of the Stauros (cross) above.”
- Also in paragraph five, we find that some of the Gnostics “proceeded to such a degree of temerity, that they even pour contempt upon the martyrs, and vituperate those who are slain on account of the confession of the Lord, and who suffer all things predicted by the Lord, and who in this respect strive to follow the footprints of the Lord’s passion, having become martyrs of the suffering One.” These “have cast a slur upon their martyrdom.”
- In paragraph six we find that there were some Gnostics “who maintain that He suffered only in appearance.”
- And in paragraph seven we find that some Gnostics “assert that He appeared putatively, and was neither born in the flesh nor truly made man.”

Now, beginning in paragraph one, Irenaeus argues that, “As it has been clearly demonstrated that the Word, who existed in the beginning with God, by whom all things were made, who was also always present with mankind, was in these last days, according to the time appointed by the Father, united to His own workmanship, inasmuch as He became a man liable to suffering, [it follows] that every objection is set aside of those who say, “If our Lord was born at that time, Christ had therefore no previous existence.”

The Gnostics were asserting that because Jesus was a man, He could have had no previous existence. Irenaeus is refuting the teaching of the Gnostics who believed that Christ had no previous existence, and that Jesus did not really partake of the flesh but only appeared to. And Irenaeus states very clearly that He is “the Word” who “existed in the beginning with God,” and was He “by whom all things were made.” This is a direct reference to John’s Gospel in John 1 (NASB): 1 In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. 2 He was in the beginning with God. 3 All things came into being through Him, and apart from Him nothing came into being that has come into being.

Irenaeus here shows us his strong belief in the deity of Jesus Christ, as he then also affirms, “For I have shown that the Son of God did not then begin to exist, being with the Father from the beginning; but when He became incarnate, and was made man, He commenced afresh the long line of human beings, and furnished us, in a brief, comprehensive manner, with salvation; so that what we had lost in Adam—namely, to be according to the image and likeness of God—that we might recover in Christ Jesus.”

Irenaeus freely admits that the Son of God “became incarnate, and was made man,” yet he states very clearly that He “did not then begin to exist, being with the Father from the beginning.” This is again a very strong confession of faith in the deity of Jesus Christ by Irenaeus.

Irenaeus is alluding to the reason that Christ came, which was for salvation. That is, Christ came to save man, and did so by becoming a man so that man might recover “what we had lost in Adam.”

As to his statement that “He commenced afresh the long line of human beings, and furnished us, in a brief, comprehensive manner, with salvation; so that what we had lost in Adam—namely, to be according to the image and likeness of God—that we might recover in Christ Jesus,” Irenaeus is probably drawing from Paul’s words in 1 Corinthians 15 (NIV):22 For as in Adam all die, so in Christ all will be made alive.

And in 1 Corinthians 15 (NIV):47 The first man was of the dust of the earth; the second man is of heaven.

And in 2 Corinthians 5 (KJV):17 Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new.

The Scriptures do not specifically say that man lost the image and likeness of God when he sinned, though it is in some respects implied. Irenaeus may be referring to Colossians 3 (KJV):9 Lie not one to another, seeing that ye have put off the old man with his deeds; 10 And have put on the new man, which is renewed in knowledge after the image of him that created him: 11 Where there is neither Greek nor Jew, circumcision nor uncircumcision, Barbarian, Scythian, bond nor free: but Christ is all, and in all.

The fact that man is made in the image and likeness of God is stated in two verses in Scripture, and is not in doubt. The first is in Genesis 1 (NIV):26 Then God said, “Let us make mankind in our image, in our likeness, so that they may rule over the fish in the sea and the birds in the sky, over the livestock and all the wild animals, and over all the creatures that move along the ground.” 27 So God created mankind in his own image, in the image of God he created them; male and female he created them.

The second is in Genesis 5 (NIV):1 This is the written account of Adam’s family line. When God created mankind, he made them in the likeness of God.

After Adam sinned, it is stated in the Scripture that he bore a son in his own likeness according to his image as in Genesis 5 (NIV):3 When Adam had lived 130 years, he had a son in his own likeness, in his own image; and he named him Seth.

Though man sinned, the form of man is still in the image and likeness of God for it is the law of His being. However, man is dead in trespasses and sins in his spirit, and so it is in man’s spirit that he must be renewed and made alive to God. This is why Jesus came as a man, and in the flesh of a man, to redeem man as we read in Philippians 2 (NIV):5 In your relationships with one another, have the same mindset as Christ Jesus: 6 Who, being in very nature God, did not consider equality with God something to be used to his own advantage; 7 rather, he made himself nothing by taking the very nature of a servant, being made in human likeness. 8 And being found in appearance as a man, he humbled himself by becoming obedient to death— even death on a cross!

Man is still made in the image and likeness of God, but is dead in trespasses and sins. What man lost in Adam was righteousness and holiness of the truth as we read in Ephesians 4 (KJV):24 And that ye put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness.

When we are born again, that is, when we are born of the Spirit, this righteousness and holiness of the truth is recovered. We are no longer under the power of our sinful flesh. This is also mentioned in Colossians 3 (KJV):9 Lie not one to another, seeing that ye have put off the old man with his deeds; 10 And have put on the new man, which is renewed in knowledge after the image of him that created him: 11 Where there is neither Greek nor Jew, circumcision nor uncircumcision, Barbarian, Scythian, bond nor free: but Christ is all, and in all.

When we were dead in sin, we were excluded from the life of God because of our ignorance as in Ephesians 4 (KJV):18 Having the understanding darkened, being alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in them, because of the blindness of their heart:

Now in Christ, this knowledge has been restored. So in our spirit we are made a new man or woman, created in righteousness and holiness of the truth, and renewed in knowledge according to the image of the One who created him. The human form is still our form, but the change has happened to our spirits on the inside. When we are born again, we are made partakers of the divine nature as we read in 2 Peter 1 (NASB):4 For by these He has granted to us His precious and magnificent promises, so that by them you may become partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world by lust.

This is why Paul speaks of our inner man as being renewed day by day as in 2 Corinthians 4 (NIV):16 Therefore we do not lose heart. Though outwardly we are wasting away, yet inwardly we are being renewed day by day.

However, our outer man of flesh, though it is made in the image and likeness of God, still has sin in its members as Paul reveals in Romans 7 (NIV):14 For we know that the law is spiritual: but I am carnal, sold under sin. 15 For that which I do I allow not: for what I would, that do I not; but what I hate, that do I. 16 If then I do that which I would not, I consent unto the law that it is good. 17 Now then it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me. 18 For I know that in me (that is, in my flesh,) dwelleth no good thing: for to will is present with me; but how to perform that which is good I find not. 19 For the good that I would I do not: but the evil which I would not, that I do. 20 Now if I do that I would not, it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me. 21 I find then a law, that, when I would do good, evil is present with me. 22 For I delight in the law of God after the inward man: 23 But I see another law in my members, warring against the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity to the law of sin which is in my members. 24 O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death? 25 I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord. So then with the mind I myself serve the law of God; but with the flesh the law of sin.

Paul identifies himself as a believer when he says in verse 16 that he consents “unto the law that it is good,” and in verse 18 when he says that “to will is present with me,” that is, the will to do good. Then in verse 22 Paul says that he delights “in the law of God after the inward man.” An unbeliever could not say this. The fact is, according to the Scriptures, believers still have sin in their flesh. The apostle John warns us not to deny this fact in 1 John 1 (NASB):8 If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us.

This is why Paul tells believers to put off the old, and to put on the new as we read again in Ephesians 4 (NASB):22 That ye put off concerning the former conversation the old man, which is corrupt according to the deceitful lusts; 23 And be renewed in the spirit of your mind; 24 And that ye put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness.

This is why we now groan within ourselves, waiting for the redemption of our body as Paul reveals in Romans 8 (NASB):23 And not only they, but ourselves also, which have the firstfruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body.

We shall be changed at the resurrection as the Psalmist says in Psalms 17 (NIV):15 As for me, I will behold thy face in righteousness: I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with thy likeness.

And the apostle John mentions this as well in 1 John 3 (NASB):2 Beloved, now we are children of God, and it has not appeared as yet what we will be. We know that when He appears, we will be like Him, because we will see Him just as He is.

At the present time however, we believers are being changed in our soul, that is in our mind, will, emotions, and conscience to look more and more like Him as we read in 2 Corinthians 3 (NIV):18 And we all, who with unveiled faces contemplate the Lord’s glory, are being transformed into his image with ever-increasing glory, which comes from the Lord, who is the Spirit.

This change or transformation will ultimately result in our glorification as we read in Romans 8 (NIV):29 For those God foreknew he also predestined to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the firstborn among many brothers and sisters. 30 And those he predestined, he also called; those he called, he also justified; those he justified, he also glorified.

We must be careful to include the entire context of the word of God in our interpretation of the Scriptures. Without qualification, Irenaeus’ statement that Christ came “so that what we had lost in Adam—namely, to be according to the image and likeness of God—that we might recover in Christ Jesus,” could lead us to believe that man has been restored to Adam’s innocent state before he fell into sin. This could lead us also to believe that we do not still have sin in our flesh after we are saved, and that we have attained a sinless state. While it is true that we have a standing before God as righteous because of our justification, we must still wash our feet as Jesus told us in John 13:10. We will not be perfect until we see Him at the resurrection.

In paragraph two, Irenaeus testifies, “For as it was not possible that the man who had once for all been conquered, and who had been destroyed through disobedience, could reform himself, and obtain the prize of victory; and as it was also impossible that he could attain to salvation who had fallen under the power of sin,” referring to Romans 3 (KJV):9 What then? Are we better than they? No, in no wise: for we have before proved both Jews and Gentiles, that they are all under sin.

We note that in the Greek, it does not say that we are “under the power of sin,” but simply that we are “under sin” as the King James Version has it. Even so, Irenaeus has here captured the essence of the atonement, and correctly stated man's dilemma. That is, it is impossible for man "under the power of sin" to attain to his own salvation. Man cannot save himself.

Irenaeus then continues as he forcefully points out, "—the Son effected both these things, being the Word of God, descending from the Father, becoming incarnate, stooping low, even to death, and consummating the arranged plan of our salvation, upon whom [Paul], exhorting us unhesitatingly to believe, again says, "Who shall ascend into heaven? that is, to bring down Christ; or who shall descend into the deep? that is, to liberate Christ again from the dead." Then he continues, "If thou shall confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised Him from the dead, thou shall be saved," referring in context to Romans 10 (NIV):6 But the righteousness that is by faith says: "Do not say in your heart, "Who will ascend into heaven?" (that is, to bring Christ down) 7 "or "Who will descend into the deep?" (that is, to bring Christ up from the dead). 8 But what does it say? "The word is near you; it is in your mouth and in your heart," that is, the message concerning faith that we proclaim: 9 If you declare with your mouth, "Jesus is Lord," and believe in your heart that God raised him from the dead, you will be saved. 10 For it is with your heart that you believe and are justified, and it is with your mouth that you profess your faith and are saved.

This is the message of the Gospel being preached by Irenaeus in his refutation of the Gnostic heresies. Irenaeus has correctly stated that God has done for man what man could not do for himself. That is, God obtained the prize of victory, and has attained salvation for man.

Irenaeus then again testifies, "And he renders the reason why the Son of God did these things, saying, "For to this end Christ both lived, and died, and revived, that He might rule over the living and the dead," referring to Romans 14 (NIV):9 For this very reason, Christ died and returned to life so that he might be the Lord of both the dead and the living.

The context of this verse may be better understood when we read Romans 14 (NIV):8 If we live, we live for the Lord; and if we die, we die for the Lord. So, whether we live or die, we belong to the Lord. The thought here is that Christ died and lived again so that He could raise from the dead those who believed in Him, for whether we live or die, we are the Lord's.

Irenaeus then concludes as he testifies, "And again, writing to the Corinthians, he declares, "But we preach Christ Jesus crucified," referring to 1 Corinthians 1 (NIV):23 but we preach Christ crucified: a stumbling block to Jews and foolishness to Gentiles.

That is, Paul preached the Christ actually died on the cross. The Gnostics were saying that Jesus died on the cross, but Christ flew away from Jesus on the cross and did not die on the cross.

Irenaeus then concludes, "and adds, "The cup of blessing which we bless, is it not the communion of the blood of Christ?," referring to 1 Corinthians 10 (KJV):16 The cup of blessing which we bless, is it not the communion of the blood of Christ? The bread which we break, is it not the communion of the body of Christ?

That is, the communion celebration is a remembrance of the blood of Christ shed on the cross. Irenaeus' point is well taken. The Scriptures are perfectly clear. Christ died on the cross for us.

In paragraph three, Irenaeus asks, "But who is it that has had fellowship with us in the matter of food? Whether is it he who is conceived of by them as the Christ above, who extended himself through Horos, and imparted a form to their mother; or is it He who is from the Virgin, Emmanuel, who did eat butter and honey," referring to Isaiah 7 (NIV):14 Therefore the Lord himself will give you a sign: The virgin will conceive and give birth to a son, and will call him Immanuel. 15 He will be eating curds and honey when he knows enough to reject the wrong and choose the right.

Irenaeus continues, "of whom the prophet declared, "He is also a man, and who shall know him?," possibly referring to Isaiah 53 (KJV):1 Who hath believed our report? and to whom is the arm of the LORD revealed? 2 For he shall grow up before him as a tender plant, and as a root out of a dry ground: he hath no form nor comeliness; and when we shall see him, there is no beauty that we should desire him. 3 He is despised and rejected of men; a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief: and we hid as it were our faces from him; he was despised, and we esteemed him not. 4 Surely he hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows: yet we did esteem him stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted. 5 But he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes we are healed.

Irenaeus points out that Christ was really a man who had a birth, and who had fellowship with us in eating and drinking as it was even prophesied that He would.

Irenaeus then testifies, “He was likewise preached by Paul: “For I delivered,” he says, “unto you first of all, that Christ died for our sins, according to the Scriptures; and that He was buried, and rose again the third day, according to the Scriptures,” referring to 1 Corinthians 15 (NIV):3 For what I received I passed on to you as of first importance: that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures, 4 that he was buried, that he was raised on the third day according to the Scriptures.

Irenaeus again has stated the crux of the atonement. That is, Christ died for our sins, and this was according to the Scriptures, as was His death and resurrection.

Irenaeus then affirms, “It is plain, then, that Paul knew no other Christ besides Him alone, who both suffered, and was buried, and rose again, who was also born, and whom he speaks of as man. For after remarking, “But if Christ be preached, that He rose from the dead,” referring in context to 1 Corinthians 15 (NIV):12 But if it is preached that Christ has been raised from the dead, how can some of you say that there is no resurrection of the dead?

Irenaeus then finishes his thought saying, “he continues, rendering the reason of His incarnation, “For since by man came death, by man [came] also the resurrection of the dead,” referring to 1 Corinthians 15 (NIV):21 For since death came through a man, the resurrection of the dead comes also through a man.

Irenaeus argues forcefully here, and in accordance with the Scriptures, that God had a plan to save man from his sin, and that this plan was accomplished by Jesus Christ who was born, and died for our sins, and was raised again from the dead in order that man might also be raised from the dead.

Irenaeus then proves his point as he argues, “And everywhere, when [referring to] the passion of our Lord, and to His human nature, and His subjection to death, he employs the name of Christ, as in that passage: “Destroy not him with thy meat for whom Christ died,” referring to Romans 14 (NIV):15 If your brother or sister is distressed because of what you eat, you are no longer acting in love. Do not by your eating destroy someone for whom Christ died.

Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “And again: “But now, in Christ, ye who sometimes were far off are made nigh by the blood of Christ,” referring to Ephesians 2 (NIV):13 But now in Christ Jesus you who once were far away have been brought near by the blood of Christ.

Irenaeus then testifies, “And again: “Christ has redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us: for it is written, Cursed is every one that hangeth upon a tree,” referring to Galatians 3 (NASB):13 Christ redeemed us from the curse of the Law, having become a curse for us—for it is written, "CURSED IS EVERYONE WHO HANGS ON A TREE"—

Irenaeus then testifies again, “And again: “And through thy knowledge shall the weak brother perish, for whom Christ died,” referring to 1 Corinthians 8 (NIV):11 So this weak brother or sister, for whom Christ died, is destroyed by your knowledge.

And Irenaeus points out that Paul was “indicating that the impassible Christ did not descend upon Jesus, but that He Himself, because He was Jesus Christ, suffered for us; He, who lay in the tomb, and rose again, who descended and ascended,—the Son of God having been made the Son of man, as the very name itself doth declare.”

Irenaeus here points out that the Christ suffered for us, and he then points out, “For in the name of Christ is implied, He that anoints, He that is anointed, and the unction itself with which He is anointed.”

In Hebrew the word is מָשִׁיחַ (pronounced mawsheekh) and means anointed. Gesenius’ Hebrew-Chaldee Lexicon to the Old Testament, Samuel Prideaux Tregelles, LL.D., page 516.

The Hebrew word translated into Greek is Χριστός (pronounced kreestos), which comes from Χρίω (pronounced khreeo), and means “to smear or rub with oil,” and means by implication, “anoint.” Strong’s Concordance.

Irenaeus then explains as he affirms, “And it is the Father who anoints, but the Son who is anointed by the Spirit, who is the unction, as the Word declares by Isaiah, “The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because He hath anointed me,” referring to Isaiah 61 (NASB):1 The Spirit of the Lord GOD is upon me, Because the LORD has anointed me To bring good news to the afflicted; He has sent me to bind up the brokenhearted, To proclaim liberty to captives And freedom to prisoners;

Irenaeus affirms that this is “—pointing out both the anointing Father, the anointed Son, and the unction, which is the Spirit.” Irenaeus has admirably defended the faith, making good use of the Scriptures by here pointing out the need for Christ to come and die for man's sin in order that He might attain salvation for man, which was something man could not do for himself.

In paragraph four, Irenaeus then testifies, "The Lord Himself, too, makes it evident who it was that suffered; for when He asked the disciples, "Who do men say that I, the Son of man, am?," referring to Matthew 16 (NIV):13 When Jesus came to the region of Caesarea Philippi, he asked his disciples, "Who do people say the Son of Man is?"

Irenaeus then continues, "and when Peter had replied, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God;" and when he had been commended by Him [in these words], "That flesh and blood had not revealed it to him, but the Father who is in heaven," He made it clear that He, the Son of man, is Christ the Son of the living God," referring to Matthew 16 (NIV):16 Simon Peter answered, "You are the Messiah, the Son of the living God." 17 Jesus replied, "Blessed are you, Simon son of Jonah, for this was not revealed to you by flesh and blood, but by my Father in heaven.

Again, Irenaeus has defended the faith here by clearly stating from the Scriptures that Jesus Christ is the Son of the living God. Irenaeus then continues, "For from that time forth," it is said, "He began to show to His disciples, how that He must go unto Jerusalem, and suffer many things of the priests, and be rejected, and crucified, and rise again the third day," referring to Matthew 16 (NIV):21 From that time on Jesus began to explain to his disciples that he must go to Jerusalem and suffer many things at the hands of the elders, the chief priests and the teachers of the law, and that he must be killed and on the third day be raised to life.

Irenaeus then affirms, "He who was acknowledged by Peter as Christ, who pronounced him blessed because the Father had revealed the Son of the living God to him, said that He must Himself suffer many things, and be crucified; and then He rebuked Peter, who imagined that He was the Christ as the generality of men supposed [that the Christ should be], and was averse to the idea of His suffering," referring to Matthew 16 (NIV):22 Peter took him aside and began to rebuke him. "Never, Lord!" he said. "This shall never happen to you!" 23 Jesus turned and said to Peter, "Get behind me, Satan! You are a stumbling block to me; you do not have in mind the concerns of God, but merely human concerns."

Irenaeus continues, "[and] said to the disciples, "If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow Me. For whosoever will save his life, shall lose it; and whosoever will lose it for My sake shall save it," referring to Matthew 16 (NIV):24 Then Jesus said to his disciples, "Whoever wants to be my disciple must deny themselves and take up their cross and follow me. 25 For whoever wants to save their life will lose it, but whoever loses their life for me will find it.

And Irenaeus concludes as he affirms, "For these things Christ spoke openly, He being Himself the Saviour of those who should be delivered over to death for their confession of Him, and lose their lives." Irenaeus points out that all is not lost by losing our lives for our confession of Him, for He is able to raise the dead to life again.

In paragraph five, Irenaeus argues forcefully, "If, however, He was Himself not to suffer, but should fly away from Jesus, why did He exhort His disciples to take up the cross and follow Him," referring again to Matthew 16:24, "—that cross which these men represent Him as not having taken up, but [speak of Him] as having relinquished the dispensation of suffering?" Irenaeus then testifies, "For that He did not say this with reference to the acknowledging of the Stauros (cross) above, as some among them venture to expound, but with respect to the suffering which He should Himself undergo, and that His disciples should endure, He implies when He says, "For whosoever will save his life, shall lose it; and whosoever will lose, shall find it," referring again to Matthew 16:25. The Gnostics apparently denied that the Christ suffered for us in the flesh.

Again Irenaeus testifies, "And that His disciples must suffer for His sake, He [implied when He] said to the Jews, "Behold, I send you prophets, and wise men, and scribes: and some of them ye shall kill and crucify," referring to Matthew 23 (NIV):34 Therefore I am sending you prophets and sages and teachers. Some of them you will kill and crucify; others you will flog in your synagogues and pursue from town to town.

And Irenaeus continues to testify, "And to the disciples He was wont to say, "And ye shall stand before governors and kings for My sake; and they shall scourge some of you, and slay you, and persecute you from city to city," referring to Matthew 10 (NIV):17 Be on your guard; you will be handed over to the local councils and be flogged in the synagogues. 18 On my account you will be brought before governors and kings as witnesses to them and to the Gentiles.

Irenaeus then affirms, “He knew, therefore, both those who should suffer persecution, and He knew those who should have to be scourged and slain because of Him; and He did not speak of any other cross, but of the suffering which He should Himself undergo first, and His disciples afterwards.” Again Irenaeus testifies, “For this purpose did He give them this exhortation: “Fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul; but rather fear Him who is able to send both soul and body into hell,” referring to Matthew 10 (NIV):28 Do not be afraid of those who kill the body but cannot kill the soul. Rather, be afraid of the One who can destroy both soul and body in hell. Irenaeus continues, “[thus exhorting them] to hold fast those professions of faith which they had made in reference to Him.”

Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “For He promised to confess before His Father those who should confess His name before men; but declared that He would deny those who should deny Him, and would be ashamed of those who should be ashamed to confess Him,” referring to Matthew 10 (NIV):32 “Whoever acknowledges me before others, I will also acknowledge before my Father in heaven. 33 But whoever disowns me before others, I will disown before my Father in heaven.

Irenaeus argues very cogently for faith in Jesus Christ. His arguments are in agreement with the Scriptures and are compelling.

Irenaeus then records, “And although these things are so, some of these men have proceeded to such a degree of temerity, that they even pour contempt upon the martyrs, and vituperate those who are slain on account of the confession of the Lord, and who suffer all things predicted by the Lord, and who in this respect strive to follow the footprints of the Lord’s passion, having become martyrs of the suffering One; these we do also enroll with the martyrs themselves. For, when inquisition shall be made for their blood, and they shall attain to glory, then all shall be confounded by Christ, who have cast a slur upon their martyrdom.”

The Gnostics apparently even poured “contempt upon the martyrs,” and vituperated “those who are slain on account of the confession of the Lord.” Irenaeus then testifies, “And from this fact, that He exclaimed upon the cross, “Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do,” referring to Luke 23 (NIV):34 Jesus said, “Father, forgive them, for they do not know what they are doing.” And they divided up his clothes by casting lots.

Irenaeus then continues, “the long-suffering, patience, compassion, and goodness of Christ are exhibited, since He both suffered, and did Himself exculpate those who had maltreated Him.” Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “For the Word of God, who said to us, “Love your enemies, and pray for those that hate you,” referring to Matthew 5 (NIV):44 But I tell you, love your enemies and pray for those who persecute you.

And Irenaeus affirms, “Himself did this very thing upon the cross; loving the human race to such a degree, that He even prayed for those putting Him to death.” Irenaeus then affirms as he argues, “If, however, any one, going upon the supposition that there are two [Christs], forms a judgment in regard to them, that [Christ] shall be found much the better one, and more patient, and the truly good one, who, in the midst of His own wounds and stripes, and the other [cruelties] inflicted upon Him, was beneficent, and unmindful of the wrongs perpetrated upon Him, than he who flew away, and sustained neither injury nor insult.” Bravo Irenaeus!

In paragraph six, Irenaeus argues, “This also does likewise meet [the case] of those who maintain that He suffered only in appearance. For if He did not truly suffer, no thanks to Him, since there was no suffering at all; and when we shall actually begin to suffer, He will seem as leading us astray, exhorting us to endure buffering, and to turn the other cheek,” referring to Matthew 5 (NIV):39 But I tell you, do not resist an evil person. If anyone slaps you on the right cheek, turn to them the other cheek also.

Irenaeus continues, “if He did not Himself before us in reality suffer the same; and as He misled them by seeming to them what He was not, so does He also mislead us, by exhorting us to endure what He did not endure Himself.” Irenaeus then forcefully points out, “[In that case] we shall be even above the Master, because we suffer and sustain what our Master never bore or endured.” Irenaeus then affirms, “But as our Lord is alone truly Master, so the Son of God is truly good and patient, the Word of God the Father having been made the Son of man. For He fought and conquered; for He was man contending for the fathers.” Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “And through obedience doing away with disobedience completely: for He bound the strong man,” referring to Matthew 12 (NIV):29 “Or again, how can anyone enter a strong man’s house and carry off his possessions unless he first ties up the strong man? Then he can plunder his house.

And Irenaeus then finishes, “and set free the weak, and endowed His own handiwork with salvation, by destroying sin,” referring to possibly to Hebrews 9 (NIV):26 Otherwise Christ would have had to suffer many times since the creation of the world. But he has appeared once for all at the culmination of the ages to do away with sin by the sacrifice of himself.

Irenaeus concludes as he affirms, “For He is a most holy and merciful Lord, and loves the human race,” referring to John 3 (NIV):16 For God so loved the world that he gave his one and only Son, that whoever believes in him shall not perish but have eternal life.

In paragraph seven, Irenaeus affirms, “Therefore, as I have already said, He caused man (human nature) to cleave to and to become, one with God.” And Irenaeus then again argues forcefully, point by point:

- “For unless man had overcome the enemy of man, the enemy would not have been legitimately vanquished.”
- “And again: unless it had been God who had freely given salvation, we could never have possessed it securely.”
- “And unless man had been joined to God, he could never have become a partaker of incorruptibility.”
- “For it was incumbent upon the Mediator between God and men, by His relationship to both, to bring both to friendship and concord, and present man to God, while He revealed God to man.”
- “For, in what way could we be partaken of the adoption of sons, unless we had received from Him through the Son that fellowship which refers to Himself, unless His Word, having been made flesh, had entered into communion with us?”

Irenaeus is trying to explain how man was saved here, which was necessary because of man’s sin. He then affirms, “Wherefore also He passed through every stage of life, restoring to all communion with God.” Irenaeus believed that Jesus lived past 50 years of age. I will deal with this in Chapter 18: Irenaeus Believed Jesus’ Age about 50 Years, so I will not go into it here in detail. Suffice it to say that we can show from the Scriptures that Jesus was about 33 1/2 years of age when He died. But it was not necessary for Jesus to have lived through every stage of life for Him to restore communion with God to everyone as Irenaeus seems to suggest. The issue is sin. It is sin that keeps us from communion with God.

Irenaeus continues as he affirms, “Those, therefore, who assert that He appeared putatively, and was neither born in the flesh nor truly made man, are as yet under the old condemnation, holding out patronage to sin; for, by their showing, death has not been vanquished, which “reigned from Adam to Moses, even over them that had not sinned after the similitude of Adam’s transgression,” referring to Romans 5 (NASB):14 Nevertheless death reigned from Adam until Moses, even over those who had not sinned in the likeness of the offense of Adam, who is a type of Him who was to come.

Irenaeus then affirms, “But the law coming, which was given by Moses, and testifying of sin that it is a sinner, did truly take away his (death’s) kingdom, showing that he was no king, but a robber; and it revealed him as a murderer,” referring to John 10 (NIV):1 “Very truly I tell you Pharisees, anyone who does not enter the sheep pen by the gate, but climbs in by some other way, is a thief and a robber.

And to John 8 (NIV):44 You belong to your father, the devil, and you want to carry out your father’s desires. He was a murderer from the beginning, not holding to the truth, for there is no truth in him. When he lies, he speaks his native language, for he is a liar and the father of lies.

Irenaeus then affirms, “It laid, however, a weighty burden upon man, who had sin in himself, showing that he was liable to death,” referring to Romans 7 (NASB):17 So now, no longer am I the one doing it, but sin which dwells in me.

Irenaeus hits the nail on the head here. Man has sin in himself, which makes him liable to death. Irenaeus then again testifies, “For as the law was spiritual,” referring to Romans 7 (NIV):14 We know that the law is spiritual; but I am unspiritual, sold as a slave to sin.

Irenaeus then continues, “it merely made sin to stand out in relief, but did not destroy it,” reminding us of Romans 3 (NIV):20 Therefore no one will be declared righteous in God’s sight by the works of the law; rather, through the law we become conscious of our sin.

Irenaeus then affirms, “For sin had no dominion over the spirit, but over man,” referring to Romans 3 (NIV):23 for all have sinned and fall short of the glory of God.

This also agrees with Paul statement in Romans 3 (NIV):9 What shall we conclude then? Do we have any advantage? Not at all! For we have already made the charge that Jews and Gentiles alike are all under the power of sin.

Irenaeus again testifies, “For it behoved Him who was to destroy sin, and redeem man under the power of death, that He should Himself be made that very same thing which he was, that is, man; who had been drawn by sin into bondage, but was held by death, so that sin should be destroyed by man, and man should go forth from death,” referring possibly to Hebrews 2 (NIV):14 Since the children have flesh and blood, he too shared in their humanity so that by his death he might break the power of him who holds the power of death—that is, the devil— 15 and free those who all their lives were held in slavery by their fear of death.

And to Hebrews 2 (NIV):17 For this reason he had to be made like them, fully human in every way, in order that he might become a merciful and faithful high priest in service to God, and that he might make atonement for the sins of the people.

Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “For as by the disobedience of the one man who was originally moulded from virgin soil, the many were made sinners, and forfeited life; so was it necessary that, by the obedience of one man, who was originally born from a virgin, many should be justified and receive salvation,” referring to Romans 5 (NIV):19 For just as through the disobedience of the one man the many were made sinners, so also through the obedience of the one man the many will be made righteous.

Irenaeus then concludes as he affirms, “Thus, then, was the Word of God made man, as also Moses says: “God, true are His works,” referring to Deuteronomy 32 (Septuagint):4 As for God, his works are true, and all his ways are judgment: God is faithful, and there is no unrighteousness in him; just and holy is the Lord.

And as in Deuteronomy 32 (NIV):4 He is the Rock, his works are perfect, and all his ways are just. A faithful God who does no wrong, upright and just is he.

And Irenaeus continues as he argues, “But if, not having been made flesh, He did appear as if flesh, His work was not a true one. But what He did appear, that He also was: God recapitulated in Himself the ancient formation of man, that He might kill sin, deprive death of its power, and vivify man; and therefore His works are true,” reminding us of 1 Corinthians 15 (NIV):56 The sting of death is sin, and the power of sin is the law. 57 But thanks be to God! He gives us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ.

And of Hebrews 9 (KJV):26 For then must he often have suffered since the foundation of the world: but now once in the end of the world hath he appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself.

Irenaeus has taken up the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God, and destroyed the arguments of the Gnostics. We must say, “Bravo, Irenaeus.” His teaching is in accordance with the Scriptures. Though he did not give us the complete doctrine of atonement here, Irenaeus did assure us that Christ came as a man, was crucified, died, and was buried, and rose again, all for our sins. Irenaeus believed in the real Jesus Christ, the Son of God, as taught in the Scriptures.

Book 5: Chapter I.—Christ alone is able to teach divine things, and to redeem us: He, the same, took flesh of the Virgin Mary, not merely in appearance, but actually, by the operation of the Holy Spirit, in order to renovate us. Strictures on the conceits of Valentinus and Ebion.

1. For in no other way could we have learned the things of God, unless our Master, existing as the Word, had become man. For no other being had the power of revealing to us the things of the Father, except His own proper Word. For what other person “knew the mind of the Lord,” or who else “has become His counsellor?” 4450 Rom. xi. 34. Again, we could have learned in no other way than by seeing our Teacher, and hearing His voice with our own ears, that, having become imitators of His works as well as doers of His words, we may have communion with Him, receiving increase from the perfect One, and from Him who is prior to all creation. We—who were but lately created by the only best and good Being, by Him also who has the gift of immortality, having been formed after His likeness (predestinated, according to the prescience of the Father, that we, who had as yet no existence, might come into being), and made the first-fruits of creation 4451 “Initium facturæ,” which Grabe thinks should be thus translated with reference to Jas. i. 18.—have received, in the times known beforehand, [the blessings of salvation] according to the ministration of the Word, who is perfect in all things, as the mighty Word, and very man, who, redeeming us by His own blood in a manner consonant to reason, gave Himself as a redemption for those who had been led into captivity. And since the apostasy tyrannized over us unjustly, and, though we were by nature the property of the omnipotent God, alienated us contrary to nature, rendering us its own disciples, the Word of God, powerful in all things, and not defective with regard to His own justice, did righteously turn against that apostasy, and redeem from it His own property, not by violent means, as the [apostasy] had obtained dominion over us at the beginning, when it insatiably snatched away what was not its own, but by means of persuasion, as became a God of counsel, who does not use violent means to obtain what He desires; so that neither should justice be infringed upon, nor the ancient handiwork of God go to destruction. Since the Lord thus has redeemed us through His own blood, giving His soul for our souls, and His flesh for our flesh, 4452 [Compare Clement, cap. 49, p. 18, this volume.] and has also poured out the Spirit of the Father for the union and communion of God and man, imparting indeed God to men by means of the Spirit, and, on the other hand, attaching man to God by His own incarnation, and bestowing upon us at His coming immortality durably and truly, by means of communion with God,—all the doctrines of the heretics fall to ruin.

2. Vain indeed are those who allege that He appeared in mere seeming. For these things were not done in appearance only, but in actual reality. But if He did appear as a man, when He was not a man, neither could the Holy Spirit have rested upon Him,—an occurrence which did actually take place—as the Spirit is invisible; nor, [in that case], was there any degree of truth in Him, for He was not that which He seemed to be. But I have already remarked that Abraham and the other prophets beheld Him after a prophetic manner, foretelling in vision what should come to pass. If, then, such a being has now appeared in outward semblance different from what he was in reality, there has been a certain prophetic vision made to men; and another advent of His must be looked forward to, in which He shall be such as He has now been seen in a prophetic manner. And I have proved already, that it is the same thing to say that He appeared merely to outward seeming, and [to affirm] that He received nothing from Mary. For He would not have been one truly possessing flesh and blood, by which He redeemed us, unless He had summed up in Himself the ancient formation of Adam. Vain therefore are the disciples of Valentinus who put forth this opinion, in order that they may exclude the flesh from salvation, and cast aside what God has fashioned.

Summary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus affirms, “For in no other way could we have learned the things of God, unless our Master, existing as the Word, had become man. For no other being had the power of revealing to us the things of the Father, except His own proper Word. For what other person “knew the mind of the Lord,” or who else “has become His counsellor?,” referring to Romans 9:34. Irenaeus continues as he again affirms, “Again, we could have learned in no other way than by seeing our Teacher, and hearing His voice with our own ears, that, having become imitators of His works as well as doers of His words, we may have communion with Him, receiving increase from the perfect One, and from Him who is prior to all creation.” Irenaeus then affirms, “We—who were but lately created by the only best and good Being, by Him also who has the gift of immortality, having been formed after His likeness (predestinated, according to the prescience of the Father, that we, who had as yet no existence, might come into being), and made the first-fruits of creation have received, in the times known beforehand, [the blessings of salvation] according to the ministration of the Word, who is perfect in all things, as the mighty Word, and very man, who, redeeming us by His own blood in a manner consonant to reason, gave Himself as a redemption for those who had been led into captivity.” Irenaeus then describes the apostasy as he affirms, “And since the apostasy tyrannized over us unjustly, and, though we were by nature the property of the omnipotent God, alienated us contrary to nature, rendering us its own disciples, the Word of God, powerful in all things, and not defective with regard to His own justice, did righteously turn against that apostasy, and redeem from it His own property, not by violent means, as the [apostasy] had obtained dominion over us at the beginning, when it insatiably snatched away what was not its own, but by means of persuasion, as became a God of counsel, who does not use violent means to obtain what He desires; so that neither should justice be infringed upon, nor the ancient handiwork of God go to destruction.” Irenaeus continues as he affirms, “Since the Lord thus has redeemed us through His own blood, giving His soul for our souls, and His flesh for our flesh, and has also poured out the Spirit of the Father for the union and communion of God and man, imparting indeed God to men by means of the Spirit, and, on the other hand, attaching man to God by His own incarnation, and bestowing upon us at His coming immortality durably and truly, by means of communion with God,—all the doctrines of the heretics fall to ruin.”

In paragraph two, Irenaeus testifies, “Vain indeed are those who allege that He appeared in mere seeming. For these things were not done in appearance only, but in actual reality. But if He did appear as a man, when He was not a man, neither could the Holy Spirit have rested upon Him,—an occurrence which did actually take place—as the Spirit is invisible; nor, [in that case], was there any degree of truth in Him, for He was not that which He seemed to be.” Irenaeus then affirms, “But I have already remarked that Abraham and the other prophets beheld Him after a prophetic manner, foretelling in vision what should come to pass.” Irenaeus then reasons, “If, then, such a being has now appeared in outward semblance different from what he was in reality, there has been a certain prophetic vision made to men; and another advent of His must be looked forward to, in which He shall be such as He has now been seen in a prophetic manner.” Irenaeus continues as he again reasons, “And I have proved already, that it is the same thing to say that He appeared merely to outward seeming, and [to affirm] that He received nothing from Mary. For He would not have been one truly possessing flesh and blood, by which He redeemed us, unless He had summed up in Himself the ancient formation of Adam.” Irenaeus then judges, “Vain therefore are the disciples of Valentinus who put forth this opinion, in order that they may exclude the flesh from salvation, and cast aside what God has fashioned.”

Commentary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus affirms, “For in no other way could we have learned the things of God, unless our Master, existing as the Word, had become man. For no other being had the power of revealing to us the things of the Father, except His own proper Word. For what other person “knew the mind of the Lord,” or who else “has become His counsellor?,” referring to Romans 11 (NIV):34 “Who has known the mind of the Lord? Or who has been his counselor?”

Irenaeus continues as he again affirms, “Again, we could have learned in no other way than by seeing our Teacher, and hearing His voice with our own ears, that, having become imitators of His works as well as doers of His words, we may have communion with Him, receiving increase from the perfect One, and from Him who is prior to all creation.” Irenaeus then affirms, “We—who were but lately created by the only best and good Being, by Him also who has the gift of immortality, having been formed after His likeness (predestinated, according to the prescience of the Father, that we, who had as yet no existence, might come into being),” referring in context to Romans 8 (NIV):29 For those God foreknew he also predestined to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the firstborn among many brothers and sisters. 30 And those he predestined, he also called; those he called, he also justified; those he justified, he also glorified.

Irenaeus continues as he affirms, “and made the first-fruits of creation have received, in the times known beforehand, [the blessings of salvation] according to the ministration of the Word, who is perfect in all things, as the mighty Word, and very man, who, redeeming us by His own blood in a manner consonant to reason, gave Himself as a redemption for those who had been led into captivity,” referring in part to James 1 (NIV):18 He chose to give us birth through the word of truth, that we might be a kind of firstfruits of all he created.

And to Hebrews 9 (NIV):12 Neither by the blood of goats and calves, but by his own blood he entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us.

Irenaeus then describes the apostasy as he affirms, “And since the apostasy tyrannized over us unjustly, and, though we were by nature the property of the omnipotent God, alienated us contrary to nature, rendering us its own disciples, the Word of God, powerful in all things, and not defective with regard to His own justice, did righteously turn against that apostasy, and redeem from it His own property, not by violent means, as the [apostasy] had obtained dominion over us at the beginning, when it insatiably snatched away what was not its own, but by means of persuasion, as became a God of counsel, who does not use violent means to obtain what

He desires; so that neither should justice be infringed upon, nor the ancient handiwork of God go to destruction.” ”

When Irenaeus says that “the Word of God, powerful in all things, and not defective with regard to His own justice, did righteously turn against that apostasy, and redeem from it His own property,” he is saying that God was true to His word. Irenaeus points out that God did this redemption is such a way “so that neither should justice be infringed upon, nor the ancient handiwork of God go to destruction.” God is true to His word and does not say one thing and do another. John Piper says, ”God’s righteousness is His unwavering allegiance to do what is right, that is, most ultimately, to uphold the infinite worth of His glory.” The Future of Justification, A Response to N. T. Wright, by John Piper, page 78.

Irenaeus speaks here of the tyranny of the apostasy. He says that the apostasy “tyrannized over us unjustly,” and “alienated us contrary to nature, rendering us its own disciples,” and “had obtained dominion over us at the beginning, when it insatiably snatched away what was not its own,” and did so by “violent means.” In this writing of Irenaeus, we are led to believe that the “apostasy” caused the fall of man. Irenaeus mentions this apostasy in several chapters of his writing and there can be no doubt that he assigns the fault to Satan, the “leader of the apostasy.”

Book 1: Chapter XXVII, paragraph four, “They set forth, indeed, the name of Christ Jesus as a sort of lure, but in various ways they introduce the impieties of Simon; and thus they destroy multitudes, wickedly disseminating their own doctrines by the use of a good name, and, through means of its sweetness and beauty, extending to their hearers the bitter and malignant poison of the serpent, the great author of apostasy.”

Book 2: Chapter XX, paragraph three, “For the Lord, through means of suffering, “ascending into the lofty place, led captivity captive, gave gifts to men,” and conferred on those that believe in Him the power “to tread upon serpents and scorpions, and on all the power of the enemy,” that is, of the leader of apostasy.

Book 4: Chapter XLI, paragraph one, “Inasmuch as the Lord has said that there are certain angels, [viz. those] of the devil, for whom eternal fire is prepared; and as, again, He declares with regard to the tares, “The tares are the children of the wicked one,” it must be affirmed that He has ascribed all who are of the apostasy to him who is the ringleader of this transgression.”

Book 4: Chapter XLI, paragraph two, “Since, therefore, all things were made by God, and since the devil has become the cause of apostasy to himself and others, justly does the Scripture always term those who remain in a state of apostasy “sons of the devil” and “angels of the wicked one” (maligni).”

Book 4: Chapter XLI, paragraph three, “When, however, they believe and are subject to God, and go on and keep His doctrine, they are the sons of God; but when they have apostatized and fallen into transgression, they are ascribed to their chief, the devil—to him who first became the cause of apostasy to himself, and afterwards to others.

Irenaeus understood that it was Satan who sinned at first, as the “leader of the apostasy.” The serpent in the garden of Eden is revealed to be Satan in Revelations 12 (NASB):9 And the great dragon was thrown down, the serpent of old who is called the devil and Satan, who deceives the whole world; he was thrown down to the earth, and his angels were thrown down with him.

But it is also true that Irenaeus does not acquit man of his responsibility for joining the “apostasy” for in Book 4: Chapter XXXVII, paragraph 7, he says, “The Lord has therefore endured all these things on our behalf, in order that we, having been instructed by means of them all, may be in all respects circumspect for the time to come, and that, having been rationally taught to love God, we may continue in His perfect love: for God has displayed long-suffering in the case of man’s apostasy; while man has been instructed by means of it, as also the prophet says, “Thine own apostasy shall heal thee;” God thus determining all things beforehand for the bringing of man to perfection, for his edification, and for the revelation of His dispensations, that goodness may both be made apparent, and righteousness perfected, and that the Church may be fashioned after the image of His Son, and that man may finally be brought to maturity at some future time, becoming ripe through such privileges to see and comprehend God.”

Irenaeus then gives us the essence of the atonement as he says, “Since the Lord thus has redeemed us through His own blood, giving His soul for our souls, and His flesh for our flesh, and has also poured out the Spirit of the Father for the union and communion of God and man, imparting indeed God to men by means of the Spirit, and, on the other hand, attaching man to God by His own incarnation, and bestowing upon us at His coming immortality durably and truly, by means of communion with God,—all the doctrines of the heretics fall to ruin.”

What stands out to me in this paragraph are Irenaeus’ words “His soul for our souls, and His flesh for our flesh,” and this so justice would not “be infringed upon, nor the ancient handiwork of God go to destruction.” This is exactly the idea of the atonement. Sin has to be atoned for, or man will go to destruction. This was the whole idea of the Old Covenant laws of sacrifice and offerings as in Hebrews 9 (NIV):22 In fact, the law requires that nearly everything be cleansed with blood, and without the shedding of blood there is no forgiveness.

For forgiveness to happen, there has to be atonement. And the atonement must equal the offense, and this according to the law as in Exodus 21 (NIV):22 “If people are fighting and hit a pregnant woman and she gives birth prematurely but there is no serious injury, the offender must be fined whatever the woman’s husband demands and the court allows. 23 But if there is serious injury, you are to take life for life, 24 eye for eye, tooth for tooth, hand for hand, foot for foot, 25 burn for burn, wound for wound, bruise for bruise.

Justice must not be infringed upon. Peter tells us that sin has been destroyed by Jesus when He died in the flesh for sins once and for all, the righteous for the unrighteous, as we read in 1 Peter 3 (NIV):18 For Christ also suffered once for sins, the righteous for the unrighteous, to bring you to God. He was put to death in the body but made alive in the Spirit.

Our God is an awesome God, and as the Psalmist says, His righteousness is limitless as in Psalms 71 (NIV):19 Your righteousness, God, reaches to the heavens, you who have done great things. Who is like you, God?

He is a God who does great things. There is no one like our God. We were apostate, hostile in mind, and engaged in evil deeds, yet He reconciled us through physical death as we read in Colossians 1 (NIV):21 Once you were alienated from God and were enemies in your minds because of your evil behavior. 22 But now he has reconciled you by Christ’s physical body through death to present you holy in his sight, without blemish and free from accusation— 23 if you continue in your faith, established and firm, and do not move from the hope held out in the gospel. This is the gospel that you heard and that has been proclaimed to every creature under heaven, and of which I, Paul, have become a servant.

The atonement is a great and awesome thing that the Lord has done for us.

In paragraph two, Irenaeus testifies, “Vain indeed are those who allege that He appeared in mere seeming. For these things were not done in appearance only, but in actual reality. But if He did appear as a man, when He was not a man, neither could the Holy Spirit have rested upon Him,—an occurrence which did actually take place—as the Spirit is invisible,” referring possibly to Matthew’s account as in Matthew 3 (NIV):13 Then Jesus came from Galilee to the Jordan to be baptized by John. 14 But John tried to deter him, saying, “I need to be baptized by you, and do you come to me?” 15 Jesus replied, “Let it be so now; it is proper for us to do this to fulfill all righteousness.” Then John consented. 16 As soon as Jesus was baptized, he went up out of the water. At that moment heaven was opened, and he saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove and alighting on him. 17 And a voice from heaven said, “This is my Son, whom I love; with him I am well pleased.”

Irenaeus continues as he argues, “nor, [in that case], was there any degree of truth in Him, for He was not that which He seemed to be.” Irenaeus then affirms, “But I have already remarked that Abraham and the other prophets beheld Him after a prophetic manner, foretelling in vision what should come to pass.” Irenaeus then reasons, “If, then, such a being has now appeared in outward semblance different from what he was in reality, there has been a certain prophetic vision made to men; and another advent of His must be looked forward to, in which He shall be such as He has now been seen in a prophetic manner.” Irenaeus continues as he again reasons, “And I have proved already, that it is the same thing to say that He appeared merely to outward seeming, and [to affirm] that He received nothing from Mary. For He would not have been one truly possessing flesh and blood, by which He redeemed us, unless He had summed up in Himself the ancient formation of Adam.” Irenaeus then judges, “Vain therefore are the disciples of Valentinus who put forth this opinion, in order that they may exclude the flesh from salvation, and cast aside what God has fashioned.”

Now the Gnostics’ assertion that Jesus only appeared to suffer reminds me of the test of spirits that John gave us as in 1 John 4 (NIV):1 Dear friends, do not believe every spirit, but test the spirits to see whether they are from God, because many false prophets have gone out into the world. 2 This is how you can recognize the Spirit of God: Every spirit that acknowledges that Jesus Christ has come in the flesh is from God, 3 but every spirit that does not acknowledge Jesus is not from God. This is the spirit of the antichrist, which you have heard is coming and even now is already in the world. 4 You, dear children, are from God and have overcome them, because the one who is in you is greater than the one who is in the world. 5 They are from the world and therefore speak from the viewpoint of the world, and the world listens to them. 6 We are from God, and whoever knows God listens to us; but whoever is not from God does not listen to us. This is how we recognize the Spirit of truth and the spirit of falsehood.

It is obvious that these Gnostics fail this test, and have the spirit of error. The fact that Jesus came in the flesh is plainly stated in the Scriptures in Luke 1 (NIV):26 In the sixth month of Elizabeth’s pregnancy, God sent the angel Gabriel to Nazareth, a town in Galilee, 27 to a virgin pledged to be married to a man named Joseph, a descendant of David. The virgin’s name was Mary. 28 The angel went to her and said, “Greetings, you who are highly favored! The Lord is with you.” 29 Mary was greatly troubled at his words and wondered what kind of greeting this might be. 30 But the angel said to her, “Do not be afraid, Mary; you have found favor with God. 31 You will conceive and give birth to a son, and you are to call him Jesus. 32 He will be great and will be called the Son of the Most High. The Lord God will give him the throne of his father David, 33 and he will reign over Jacob’s descendants forever; his kingdom will never end.” 34 “How will this be,” Mary asked the angel, “since I am a virgin?” 35 The angel answered, “The Holy Spirit will come on you, and the power of the Most High will overshadow you. So the holy one to be born will be called the Son of God. 36 Even Elizabeth your relative is going to have a child in her old age, and she who was said to be unable to conceive is in her sixth month. 37 For no word from God will ever fail.” 38 “I am the Lord’s servant,” Mary answered. “May your word to me be fulfilled.” Then the angel left her.

In this passage it is revealed that God sent the angel Gabriel to announce the birth of Jesus to Mary. His was no ordinary birth but it was a birth. And this birth actually took place in Bethlehem as it was prophesied. Luke tells us that shepherds saw the physical babe lying in a manger in Luke 2 (NIV):8 And there were shepherds living out in the fields nearby, keeping watch over their flocks at night. 9 An angel of the Lord appeared to them, and the glory of the Lord shone around them, and they were terrified. 10 But the angel said to them, “Do not be afraid. I bring you good news that will cause great joy for all the people. 11 Today in the town of David a Savior has been born to you; he is the Messiah, the Lord. 12 This will be a sign to you: You will find a baby wrapped in cloths and lying in a manger.” 13 Suddenly a great company of the heavenly host appeared with the angel, praising God and saying, 14 “Glory to God in the highest heaven, and on earth peace to those on whom his favor rests.” 15 When the angels had left them and gone into heaven, the shepherds said to one another, “Let’s go to Bethlehem and see this thing that has happened, which the Lord has told us about.” 16 So they hurried off and found Mary and Joseph, and the baby, who was lying in the manger. 17 When they had seen him, they spread the word concerning what had been told them about this child, 18 and all who heard it were amazed at what the shepherds said to them. 19 But Mary treasured up all these things and pondered them in her heart. 20 The shepherds returned, glorifying and praising God for all the things they had heard and seen, which were just as they had been told.

In verse eleven above, the Savior who was born was named by the angels as Christ, the Lord, as Irenaeus also notes. And when Jesus was grown, He was baptized as we read in John 1 (NIV):29 The next day John saw Jesus coming toward him and said, “Look, the Lamb of God, who takes away the sin of the world! 30 This is the one I meant when I said, ‘A man who comes after me has surpassed me because he was before me.’ 31 I myself did not know him, but the reason I came baptizing with water was that he might be revealed to Israel.” 32 Then John gave this testimony: “I saw the Spirit come down from heaven as a dove and remain on him. 33 And I myself did not know him, but the one who sent me to baptize with water told me, ‘The man on whom you see the Spirit come down and remain is the one who will baptize with the Holy Spirit.’ 34 I have seen and I testify that this is God’s Chosen One.”

Just as Irenaeus argues, the Spirit could not dwell in Him if He did not have a physical body. Lastly we note that John the apostle leaned on Jesus’ physical body at the last supper as in John 13 (KJV):25 He then lying on Jesus’ breast saith unto him, Lord, who is it?

And in John 21 (KJV):20 Then Peter, turning about, seeth the disciple whom Jesus loved following; which also leaned on his breast at supper, and said, Lord, which is he that betrayeth thee?

Thus possessing a physical body, Jesus actually suffered as stated plainly in the Scriptures. By Jesus own words is this true, and when Peter tried to stop him, Jesus rebuked him as Irenaeus has also noted in Mark 8 (NIV):31 He then began to teach them that the Son of Man must suffer many things and be rejected by the elders, the chief priests and the teachers of the law, and that he must be killed and after three days rise again. 32 He spoke plainly about this, and Peter took him aside and began to rebuke him. 33 But when Jesus turned and looked at his disciples, he rebuked Peter. “Get behind me, Satan!” he said. “You do not have in mind the concerns of God, but merely human concerns.”

Jesus explains to His disciples that the Scriptures foretold His death as we read in Mark 9 (NIV):11 And they asked him, “Why do the teachers of the law say that Elijah must come first?” 12 Jesus replied, “To be sure, Elijah does come first, and restores all things. Why then is it written that the Son of Man must suffer much and be rejected? 13 But I tell you, Elijah has come, and they have done to him everything they wished, just as it is written about him.”

Jesus is referring to Isaiah 53:1-12 which foretold of the suffering that the Messiah would have to undergo as we read in Isaiah 53 (NIV):4 Surely he took up our pain and bore our suffering, yet we considered him punished by God, stricken by him, and afflicted. 5 But he was pierced for our transgressions, he was crushed for our iniquities; the punishment that brought us peace was on him, and by his wounds we are healed. 6 We all, like sheep, have gone astray, each of us has turned to our own way; and the LORD has laid on him the iniquity of us all.

Luke tells us what happened before Jesus’ crucifixion in Luke 22 (NIV):63 The men who were guarding Jesus began mocking and beating him. 64 They blindfolded him and demanded, “Prophecy! Who hit you?” 65 And they said many other insulting things to him.

The Gospel of Matthew describes Jesus’ death in Matthew 27 (NIV):45 From noon until three in the afternoon darkness came over all the land. 46 About three in the afternoon Jesus cried out in a loud voice, “Eli, Eli, lema sabachthani?” (which means “My God, my God, why have you forsaken me?”). 47 When some of those standing there heard this, they said, “He’s calling Elijah.” 48 Immediately one of them ran and got a sponge. He filled it with wine vinegar, put it on a staff, and offered it to Jesus to drink. 49 The rest said, “Now leave him alone. Let’s see if Elijah comes to save him.”

Peter tells us His death was agony, being nailed to a cross as we read in Acts 2 (NIV):22 “Fellow Israelites, listen to this: Jesus of Nazareth was a man accredited by God to you by miracles, wonders and signs, which God did among you through him, as you yourselves know. 23 This man was handed over to you by God’s deliberate plan and foreknowledge; and you, with the help of wicked men, put him to death by nailing him to the cross. 24 But God raised him from the dead, freeing him from the agony of death, because it was impossible for death to keep its hold on him.

To those who don’t believe He suffered, Jesus shows us the print of the nails in His hands as we read in John 20 (NIV):24 Now Thomas (also known as Didymus), one of the Twelve, was not with the disciples when Jesus came. 25 So the other disciples told him, “We have seen the Lord!” But he said to them, “Unless I see the nail marks in his hands and put my finger where the nails were, and put my hand into his side, I will not believe.” 26 A week later his disciples were in the house again, and Thomas was with them. Though the doors were locked, Jesus came and stood among them and said, “Peace be with you!” 27 Then he said to Thomas, “Put your finger here; see my hands. Reach out your hand and put it into my side. Stop doubting and believe.” 28 Thomas said to him, “My Lord and my God!” 29 Then Jesus told him, “Because you have seen me, you have believed; blessed are those who have not seen and yet have believed.”

Peter tells us that Jesus' flesh died as we read in 1 Peter 3 (KJV):18 For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit:

All of these Scriptures testify to the fact that Jesus had a real physical body. Truly Jesus fought our battles and conquered them for us. Our battle is against sin which had overpowered us. But Jesus truly destroyed our sin, as Irenaeus says, and died on the cross for us and paid the penalty that we deserved.

And truly God's love is so great that He made a way for us to be one with Him again as we read in John 3 (KJV):16 For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life.

As Jesus was looking forward to His impending death on the cross, He prayed as in John 17 (KJV):1 These words spake Jesus, and lifted up his eyes to heaven, and said, Father, the hour is come; glorify thy Son, that thy Son also may glorify thee: 2 As thou hast given him power over all flesh, that he should give eternal life to as many as thou hast given him. 3 And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent. 4 I have glorified thee on the earth: I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do. 5 And now, O Father, glorify thou me with thine own self with the glory which I had with thee before the world was.

To know the only true God and Jesus Christ whom He has sent is indeed eternal life. Jesus knew His time in the flesh was going to come to an end soon as we read in John 17 (KJV):13 And now come I to thee; and these things I speak in the world, that they might have my joy fulfilled in themselves. 14 I have given them thy word; and the world hath hated them, because they are not of the world, even as I am not of the world.

Jesus knew that the world is polluted with sin and that the world hates all those who are not of the world. Jesus set Himself apart from the world. That is, He sanctified Himself so that we might be sanctified and be one with the God the Father again just as He is one with the Father as we read in John 17 (KJV):19 And for their sakes I sanctify myself, that they also might be sanctified through the truth. 20 Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word; 21 That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me.

Jesus spoke of this oneness, this love relationship that God the Father wants with us. He also said that the greatest commandment, the one that is the fulfillment of the whole law is this, that we should love the Lord our God with all our heart as we read in Matthew 22 (KJV):34 But when the Pharisees had heard that he had put the Sadducees to silence, they were gathered together. 35 Then one of them, which was a lawyer, asked him a question, tempting him, and saying, 36 Master, which is the great commandment in the law? 37 Jesus said unto him, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. 38 This is the first and great commandment. 39 And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. 40 On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets.

God's whole purpose in creating man was that there would be a love relationship between God and man. That there would be a oneness, a communion, a sharing of feelings, a friendship, a concord was God's design from the beginning. Irenaeus says correctly that the law only brought the knowledge of sin in man to man's attention and awareness, as we read in Romans 3 (KJV):20 Therefore by the deeds of the law there shall no flesh be justified in his sight: for by the law is the knowledge of sin.

But the law did not destroy sin and only "made sin to stand out in relief," as Irenaeus says. Irenaeus quotes the Scripture correctly, that it is the obedience of the one man that justifies and saves us as in Romans 5 (KJV):19 For as by one man's disobedience many were made sinners, so by the obedience of one shall many be made righteous.

Irenaeus does not present a full treatment of the meaning of the atonement in the Bible but he does point out the crux of it. That is, he points out that Jesus made satisfaction for our sin so that we can be one with God again. He is the only one who could make satisfaction for our sin since He was the only sinless man who ever lived. When He was on earth, through obedience He did "away with disobedience completely." His sacrifice was the one and only sacrifice ever offered that could do away with sin as we read again in Hebrews 9 (KJV):26 For then must he often have suffered since the foundation of the world: but now once in the end of the world hath he appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself.

Jesus has destroyed sin, again, as Irenaeus says, by making satisfaction for it and thereby redeeming man from the power of death as we read in 1 Corinthians 15 (KJV):56 The sting of death is sin; and the strength of sin is the law. 57 But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ. “The New Testament emphasis on the completion and finality of Christ’s sacrifice of himself for us has much practical application, because it assures us that there is no more penalty for sin left for us to pay. The penalty has entirely been paid by Christ, and we should have no remaining fear of condemnation or punishment.” Systematic Theology, Wayne Grudem, Chapter 27: The Atonement, page 578.

Book 5: Chapter XVII.—There is but one Lord and one God, the Father and Creator of all things, who has loved us in Christ, given us commandments, and remitted our sins; whose Son and Word Christ proved Himself to be, when He forgave our sins.

1. Now this being is the Creator (Demiurgus), who is, in respect of His love, the Father; but in respect of His power, He is Lord; and in respect of His wisdom, our Maker and Fashioner; by transgressing whose commandment we became His enemies. And therefore in the last times the Lord has restored us into friendship through His incarnation, having become “the Mediator between God and men;” 4590 1 Tim. ii. 5. propitiating indeed for us the Father against whom we had sinned, and cancelling (consolatus) our disobedience by His own obedience; For this reason also He has taught us to say in prayer, “And forgive us our debts;” 4591 Matt. vi. 12. since indeed He is our Father, whose debtors we were, having transgressed His commandments. But who is this Being? Is He some unknown one, and a Father who gives no commandment to any one? Or is He the God who is proclaimed in the Scriptures, to whom we were debtors, having transgressed His commandment? Now the commandment was given to man by the Word. For Adam, it is said, “heard the voice of the Lord God.” 4592 Gen. iii. 8. Rightly then does His Word say to man, “Thy sins are forgiven thee;” 4593 Matt. ix. 2; Luke v. 20. He, the same against whom we had sinned in the beginning, grants forgiveness of sins in the end. But if indeed we had disobeyed the command of any other, while it was a different being who said, “Thy sins are forgiven thee;” 4594 Matt. ix. 2; Luke v. 20. such an one is neither good, nor true, nor just. For how can he be good, who does not give from what belongs to himself? Or how can he be just, who snatches away the goods of another? And in what way can sins be truly remitted, unless that He against whom we have sinned has Himself granted remission “through the bowels of mercy of our God,” in which “He has visited us” 4595 Luke i. 78. through His Son?

Summary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus testifies, “Now this being is the Creator (Demiurgus), who is, in respect of His love, the Father; but in respect of His power, He is Lord; and in respect of His wisdom, our Maker and Fashioner; by transgressing whose commandment we became His enemies, referring to Romans 5:10. Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “And therefore in the last times the Lord has restored us into friendship through His incarnation, having become “the Mediator between God and men;” referring to 1 Timothy 2:5, “propitiating indeed for us the Father against whom we had sinned, and cancelling (consolatus) our disobedience by His own obedience,” referring to Romans 3:25, 1 John 2:2. Irenaeus then testifies, “For this reason also He has taught us to say in prayer, “And forgive us our debts,” referring to Matthew 6:12, “since indeed He is our Father, whose debtors we were, having transgressed His commandments,” drawing from Romans 3:23. Irenaeus then challenges the Gnostics as he asks rhetorically, “But who is this Being? Is He some unknown one, and a Father who gives no commandment to any one? Or is He the God who is proclaimed in the Scriptures, to whom we were debtors, having transgressed His commandment?” Irenaeus then proves his point as he continues, “Now the commandment was given to man by the Word. For Adam, it is said, “heard the voice of the Lord God,” referring to Genesis 3:8 in the Septuagint. Irenaeus then refers to the Gospels when Jesus spoke to the paralytic before He healed him. “Rightly then does His Word say to man, “Thy sins are forgiven thee,” referring to Matthew 9:2 and Luke 5:20. Irenaeus then testifies, “He, the same against whom we had sinned in the beginning, grants forgiveness of sins in the end,” reminding us of Acts 13:38. Irenaeus then reasons, “But if indeed we had disobeyed the command of any other, while it was a different being who said, “Thy sins are forgiven thee; such an one is neither good, nor true, nor just. For how can he be good, who does not give from what belongs to himself? Or how can he be just, who snatches away the goods of another? And in what way can sins be truly remitted, unless that He against whom we have sinned has Himself granted remission “through the bowels of mercy of our God,” in which “He has visited us” through His Son?,” referring to Luke 1:78.

Commentary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus testifies, “Now this being is the Creator (Demiurgus), who is, in respect of His love, the Father; but in respect of His power, He is Lord; and in respect of His wisdom, our Maker and Fashioner; by transgressing whose commandment we became His enemies, referring to Romans 5 (KJV):10 For if, when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by his life.

Paul uses the plural in the first person, that is, “we were enemies.” He includes himself in that category. The verses just before this one in Romans help us understand why we were enemies as they state we were helpless sinners as we read in Romans 5 (KJV):6 For when we were yet without strength, in due time Christ died for the ungodly. 7 For scarcely for a righteous man will one die: yet peradventure for a good man some would even dare to die. 8 But God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us. 9 Much more then, being now justified by his blood, we shall be saved from wrath through him.

The Greek word used for enemies in verse 10 is ἐχθροί (pronounced echthroi). Vine’s says that as an adjective, it primarily denotes hated or hateful. It is used as a noun signifying an enemy, or adversary, and is said of the Devil. Expository Dictionary of New Testament Words, W.E. Vine, Vol. II, page 30.

This is the word used in Matthew 13 (KJV):39 The enemy that sowed them is the devil; the harvest is the end of the world; and the reapers are the angels.

It is also used in reference to death in 1 Corinthians 15 (KJV):26 The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death.

The same word is also used in Colossians 1 (KJV):21 And you, that were sometime alienated and enemies in your mind by wicked works, yet now hath he reconciled 22 In the body of his flesh through death, to present you holy and unblameable and unproveable in his sight: 23 If ye continue in the faith grounded and settled, and be not moved away from the hope of the gospel, which ye have heard, and which was preached to every creature which is under heaven; whereof I Paul am made a minister;

We must understand that before Christ we were by nature children of wrath as we read in Ephesians 2 (KJV):3 Among whom also we all had our conversation in times past in the lusts of our flesh, fulfilling the desires of the flesh and of the mind; and were by nature the children of wrath, even as others.

Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “And therefore in the last times the Lord has restored us into friendship through His incarnation, having become “the Mediator between God and men;” referring in context to 1 Timothy 2 (KJV):5 For there is one God, and one mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus; 6 Who gave himself a ransom for all, to be testified in due time.

Irenaeus then continues, “propitiating indeed for us the Father against whom we had sinned, and cancelling (consolatus) our disobedience by His own obedience,” referring in context to Romans 3 (KJV):23 For all have sinned, and come short of the glory of God; 24 Being justified freely by his grace through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus: 25 Whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in his blood, to declare his righteousness for the remission of sins that are past, through the forbearance of God; 26 To declare, I say, at this time his righteousness: that he might be just, and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus.

By the word “propitiating”, Irenaeus could also be referring to 1 John 2 (NASB):2 And he is the propitiation for our sins: and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world.

And to 1 John 4 (NASB):10 Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins.

The Greek word for propitiation in these verses is ἱλασμός (pronounced hilasmos). Strong’s Concordance says that this word is a prime root and means atonement, i.e. (concretely) an expiator: propitiation; Merriam-Webster’s online dictionary says atonement is the “reparation for an offense or injury : SATISFACTION.”

And regarding our disobedience being cancelled “by His own obedience,” we find that Irenaeus refers to Romans 5 (KJV):19 For as by one man's disobedience many were made sinners, so by the obedience of one shall many be made righteous.

Irenaeus continues as he then testifies, “For this reason also He has taught us to say in prayer, “And forgive us our debts,” referring to Matthew 6 (KJV):12 And forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors.

And Irenaeus continues, “since indeed He is our Father, whose debtors we were, having transgressed His commandments,” drawing from Romans 3:23 above. Irenaeus then challenges the Gnostics as he asks rhetorically, “But who is this Being? Is He some unknown one, and a Father who gives no commandment to any one? Or is He the God who is proclaimed in the Scriptures, to whom we were debtors, having transgressed His commandment?” Irenaeus then proves his point as he continues, “Now the commandment was given to man by the Word. For Adam, it is said, “heard the voice of the Lord God,” referring in context to Genesis 3 (Septuagint):9 And they heard the voice of the Lord God walking in the garden in the afternoon; and both Adam and his wife hid themselves from the face of the Lord God in the midst of the trees of the garden. 10 And the Lord God called Adam and said to him, Adam, where art thou? 11 And he said to him, I heard thy voice as thou walkedst in the garden, and I feared because I was naked and I hid myself.

Our more current version reads as in Genesis 3 (NASB):8 They heard the sound of the LORD God walking in the garden in the cool of the day, and the man and his wife hid themselves from the presence of the LORD God among the trees of the garden. 9 Then the LORD God called to the man, and said to him, "Where are you?" 10 He said, "I heard the sound of You in the garden, and I was afraid because I was naked; so I hid myself."

Irenaeus then refers to the Gospels when Jesus spoke to the paralytic before He healed him. “Rightly then does His Word say to man, “Thy sins are forgiven thee,” referring to Matthew 9 (KJV):2 And, behold, they brought to him a man sick of the palsy, lying on a bed: and Jesus seeing their faith said unto the sick of the palsy; Son, be of good cheer; thy sins be forgiven thee.

And to Luke 5 (KJV):20 And when he saw their faith, he said unto him, Man, thy sins are forgiven thee.

Irenaeus then testifies, “He, the same against whom we had sinned in the beginning, grants forgiveness of sins in the end,” reminding us of Acts 13 (KJV):38 Be it known unto you therefore, men and brethren, that through this man is preached unto you the forgiveness of sins:

And of Hebrews 13 (KJV):8 Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and to day, and for ever.

Irenaeus then argues against the Gnostics as he reasons, “But if indeed we had disobeyed the command of any other, while it was a different being who said, “Thy sins are forgiven thee; such an one is neither good, nor true, nor just. For how can he be good, who does not give from what belongs to himself? Or how can he be just, who snatches away the goods of another? And in what way can sins be truly remitted, unless that He against whom we have sinned has Himself granted remission “through the bowels of mercy of our God,” in which “He has visited us” through His Son?,” referring to Luke 1 (KJV):78 Through the tender mercy of our God; whereby the dayspring from on high hath visited us.

The point Irenaeus is making here is that, for God to forgive us our sin, He must be the one whom we transgressed against. If He were not, it would be fantasy forgiveness and not real and not according to the truth. As it is, “the Lord has restored us into friendship through His incarnation.” The Lord Himself is our Savior as we read in Luke 1 (KJV):68 Blessed be the Lord God of Israel; for he hath visited and redeemed his people.

And it was through the Son, as Irenaeus points out, that this cancellation of debt, this propitiation, was made to the Father. That God the Father provided this propitiation was a matter of His mercy alone.

Also, in this paragraph, Irenaeus says of Jesus, “Rightly then does His Word say to man, “Thy sins are forgiven thee.” Irenaeus is referring to Jesus as “the Word,” as he does frequently in His writings. The apostle John does the same in his Gospel as we read in John 1 (NASB):1 In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. 2 He was in the beginning with God. 3 All things came into being through Him, and apart from Him nothing came into being that has come into being. 4 In Him was life, and the life was the Light of men. 5 The Light shines in the darkness, and the darkness did not comprehend it.

That this word is the same word that became flesh and dwelt among us, there can be no doubt as we see in John 1 (NASB):14 And the Word became flesh, and dwelt among us, and we saw His glory, glory as of the only begotten from the Father, full of grace and truth. 15 John testified about Him and cried out, saying, “This was He of whom I said, ‘He who comes after me has a higher rank than I, for He existed before me.’” 16 For of His fullness we have all received, and grace upon grace. 17 For the Law was given through Moses; grace and truth were realized through Jesus Christ. 18 No one has seen God at any time; the only begotten God who is in the bosom of the Father, He has explained Him.

Also, Irenaeus captures what the atonement means for mankind, which is the restoration of friendship with God through His incarnation. Our relationship with our Creator has been restored. Christ became “the Mediator between God and men propitiating indeed for us the Father against whom we had sinned, and cancelling (consolatus) our disobedience by His own obedience.” Sin as an issue has been dealt with. We are free indeed by this truth.

Lewis Sperry Chafer says in this extended quote that in the Old Testament, the term atonement “is a translation of two Hebrew words, but one of them, Kophar, is generally in view and it is used about seventy times. Its meaning is ‘to cover.’ This, the distinct and limited meaning of the Hebrew word, should not be invested with New Testament ideas, which contemplate a finished or completed work. Under the Old Testament provision the one who had sinned was himself fully forgiven and released, but the ground upon which it could be wrought was itself only typical and not actual. God forgave and restored where sin was only covered by animal sacrifices, but the true basis upon which forgiveness could ever be granted was the intention on God’s part to take up the sin later that He had forgiven and deal with it righteously and effectively through the sacrificial death of His Son on the cross. That efficacious death was typified in the required animal sacrifice. According to Romans 3:25 –“Whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in his blood, to declare his righteousness for the remission of sins that are past, through the forbearance of God”—the fact that Christ bore the sins which were committed before, which sins had already been forgiven on the typical ground that they were covered, ranks as one of the major accomplishments of His death. It is as though unnumbered promissory notes had been handed to Christ for Him to pay. If the notes are paid as promised, God is thereby proved to have been righteous in the forgiving of sin with no other demands having been made upon the sinner than that an offering be brought which, regardless of how much it was understood by that sinner, was in God’s sight an anticipation and recognition of His final meeting of every holy demand against sin by the efficacious blood of Christ. In other words, God pretermitted or passed over the sins, not judging them finally at the time they were forgiven. Such a course, it is obvious, would be a very unrighteous dealing if those sins were not in due time to be brought into judgment. All sins of the Mosaic age were thus shown to have been “covered” but not “taken away.” In contrast to this temporary expedient, all sin which God forgives has been and is now “taken away.” In two New Testament passages that vital contrast appears. It is written, “For it is not possible that the blood of bulls and of goats should take away sins....And every priest standeth daily ministering and offering oftentimes the same sacrifices, which can never take away sins; but this man, after he had offered one sacrifice for sins for ever, sat down on the right hand of God; from henceforth expecting till his enemies be made his footstool. For by one offering he hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified” (Heb. 10:4,11-14). Added to this is the direct statement of John 1:29, “Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world.” This great declaration from John was a doctrinal innovation of immeasurable proportions. The same contrast between the divine dealings with sin in the past dispensation and in the present dispensation is indicated again at Acts 17:30.” Systematic Theology, Lewis Sperry Chafer, Volume VII, page 25-26.

Dr. Chafer refers in context to Acts 17 (KJV):30 And the times of this ignorance God winked at; but now commandeth all men every where to repent: 31 Because he hath appointed a day, in the which he will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained; whereof he hath given assurance unto all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead.

Chapter 13: Refutation of the Teaching of the Transmigration of Souls

Book 3: Chapter XXXIII.—Absurdity of the doctrine of the transmigration of souls.

1. We may subvert their doctrine as to transmigration from body to body by this fact, that souls remember nothing whatever of the events which took place in their previous states of existence. For if they were sent forth with this object, that they should have experience of every kind of action, they must of necessity retain a remembrance of those things which have been previously accomplished, that they might fill up those in which they were still deficient, and not by always hovering, without intermission, round the same pursuits, spend their labour wretchedly in vain (for the mere union of a body [with a soul] could not altogether extinguish the memory and contemplation of those things which had formerly been experienced 3281 Harvey thinks that this parenthesis has fallen out of its proper place, and would insert it immediately after the opening period of the chapter.), and especially as they came [into the world] for this very purpose. For as, when the body is asleep and at rest, whatever things the soul sees by herself, and does in a vision, recollecting many of these, she also communicates them to the body; and as it happens that, when one awakes, perhaps after a long time, he relates what he saw in a dream, so also would he undoubtedly remember those things which he did before he came into this particular body. For if that which is seen only for a very brief space of time, or has been conceived of simply in a phantasm, and by the soul alone, through means of a dream, is remembered after she has mingled again with the body, and been dispersed through all the members, much more would she remember those things in connection with which she stayed during so long a time, even throughout the whole period of a bypast life.

2. With reference to these objections, Plato, that ancient Athenian, who also was the first 3282 It is a mistake of Irenæus to say that the doctrine of metempsychosis originated with Plato: it was first publicly taught by Pythagoras, who learned it from the Egyptians. Comp. Clem. Alex., Strom., i. 15: Herodot., ii. 123. to introduce this opinion, when he could not set them aside, invented the [notion of] a cup of oblivion, imagining that in this way he would escape this sort of difficulty. He attempted no kind of proof [of his supposition], but simply replied dogmatically [to the objection in question], that when souls enter into this life, they are caused to drink of oblivion by that demon who watches their entrance [into the world], before they effect an entrance into the bodies [assigned them]. It escaped him, that [by speaking thus] he fell into another greater perplexity. For if the cup of oblivion, after it has been drunk, can obliterate the memory of all the deeds that have been done, how, O Plato, dost thou obtain the knowledge of this fact (since thy soul is now in the body), that, before it entered into the body, it was made to drink by the demon a drug which caused oblivion? For if thou hast a remembrance of the demon, and the cup, and the entrance [into life], thou oughtest also to be acquainted with other things; but if, on the other hand, thou art ignorant of them, then there is no truth in the story of the demon, nor in the cup of oblivion prepared with art.

3. In opposition, again, to those who affirm that the body itself is the drug of oblivion, this observation may be made: How, then, does it come to pass, that whatsoever the soul sees by her own instrumentality, both in dreams and by reflection or earnest mental exertion, while the body is passive, she remembers, and reports to her neighbours? But, again, if the body itself were [the cause of] oblivion, then the soul, as existing in the body, could not remember even those things which were perceived long ago either by means of the eyes or the ears; but, as soon as the eye was turned from the things looked at, the memory of them also would undoubtedly be destroyed. For the soul, as existing in the very [cause of] oblivion, could have no knowledge of anything else than that only which it saw at the present moment. How, too, could it become acquainted with divine things, and retain a remembrance of them while existing in the body, since, as they maintain, the body itself is [the cause of] oblivion? But the prophets also, when they were upon the earth, remembered likewise, on their returning to their ordinary state of mind, 3283 “In hominem conversi,” literally, “returning into man.” whatever things they spiritually saw or heard in visions of heavenly objects, and related them to others. The body, therefore, does not cause the soul to forget those things which have been spiritually witnessed; but the soul teaches the body, and shares with it the spiritual vision which it has enjoyed.

4. For the body is not possessed of greater power than the soul, since indeed the former is inspired, and vivified, and increased, and held together by the latter; but the soul possesses 3284 “Possidet.” Massuet supposes this word to represent κυριεύει, “rules over” and Stieren κρατύνει, governs; while Harvey thinks the whole clause corresponds to κρατεῖ καὶ κυριεύει τοῦ σώματος, which we have rendered above. and rules over the body. It is doubtless retarded in its velocity, just in the exact proportion in which the body shares in its motion; but it never loses the knowledge which properly belongs to it. For the body may be compared to an instrument; but the soul is possessed of the reason of an artist. As, therefore, the artist finds the idea of a work to spring up rapidly in his mind, but can only carry it out slowly by means of an instrument, owing to the want of perfect pliability in the matter acted upon, and thus the rapidity of his mental operation, being blended with the slow action of the instrument, gives rise to a moderate kind of movement [towards the end contemplated]; so also the soul, by being mixed up with the body belonging to it, is in a certain measure impeded, its rapidity being blended with the body’s slowness. Yet it does not lose altogether its own peculiar powers; but while, as it were, sharing life with the body, it does not itself cease to live. Thus, too, while communicating other things to the body, it neither loses the knowledge of them, nor the memory of those things which have been witnessed.

5. If, therefore, the soul remembers nothing 3285 Literally, none of things past. of what took place in a former state of existence, but has a perception of those things which are here, it follows that she never existed in other bodies, nor did things of which she has no knowledge, nor [once] knew things which she cannot [now mentally] contemplate. But, as each one of us receives his body through the skillful working of God, so does he also possess his soul. For God is not so poor or destitute in resources, that He cannot confer its own proper soul on each individual body, even as He gives it also its special character. And therefore, when the number [fixed upon] is completed, [that number] which He had predetermined in His own counsel, all those who have been enrolled for life [eternal] shall rise again, having their own bodies, and having also their own souls, and their own spirits, in which they had pleased God. Those, on the other hand, who are worthy of punishment, shall go away into it, they too having their own souls and their own bodies, in which they stood apart from the grace of God. Both classes shall then cease from any longer begetting and being begotten, from marrying and being given in marriage; so that the number of mankind, corresponding to the fore-ordination of God, being completed, may fully realize the scheme formed by the Father. 3286 The Latin text is here very confused, but the Greek original of the greater part of this section has happily been preserved. [This Father here anticipates in outline many ideas which St. Augustine afterwards corrected and elaborated.]

Summary: Here in paragraph one, Irenaeus begins his refutation of the error of the “doctrine of transmigration from body to body.” Simply, he says it is a fact that “souls remember nothing whatever of the events which took place in their previous states of existence.” He reasons that, if the object is to “have experience of every kind of action,” then they would have to have some recollection of what they had experienced so that they could experience new things and not “spend their labor wretchedly in vain.” For just as a person who is asleep and has had a dream has some recollection when he awakes of what he saw in the dream, “so also would he undoubtedly remember those things which he did before he came into this particular body.” If then one remembers a dream, why not “the whole period of a bypast life,” Irenaeus asks?

In paragraph two, Irenaeus quotes the dogmatic reply of Plato, who believed in this teaching of the transmigration of souls, who also said that “when souls enter into this life, they are caused to drink of oblivion by that demon who watches their entrance [into the world], before they effect an entrance into the bodies [assigned them].” Of course Irenaeus did not let slip the fact that, if this were really true, then how did Plato “remember” that it was a demon drug which obliterated the memory, since he himself had a soul and a body?

In paragraph three, Irenaeus says that the body cannot be “the drug of oblivion,” that is, that which causes the memory to be erased. The reason is that, if the body were the drug of oblivion, even present day experiences would be erased and we would have no recollection of anything. In addition, we could not have recollection of spiritual things for the same reason. The Prophets, Irenaeus says, remembered their visions long afterwards and they related them to others. “The soul teaches the body, and shares with it the spiritual vision which it has enjoyed,” he says.

In paragraph four, Irenaeus says that “the soul possesses the body,” and “rules over the body.” The soul inspires, vivifies, increases, and holds together the body. The soul is “retarded in its velocity, just in the exact proportion in which the body shares in its motion.” The body is the instrument and the soul the artist. The soul does not cease to live though it shares life with the body. Therefore, it never loses the knowledge it possesses, “nor the memory of those things which have been witnessed.”

In paragraph five Irenaeus says that, if the soul “remembers nothing of what took place in a former state of existence,” then “it follows that she never existed in other bodies.” God gives each one his own body and soul and its special character. When the resurrection takes place, “all those who have been enrolled for life [eternal] shall rise again, having their own bodies, and having also their own souls, and their own spirits, in which they had pleased God.” Likewise, those who “stood apart from the grace of God” shall go to be punished “having their own souls and their own bodies.” Both classes shall marry no more and the number of mankind shall be fixed, “corresponding to the foreordination of God.”

Commentary: This is a good example of the method of Irenaeus and how he effectively demolishes a heresy.

In paragraph one, Irenaeus basically is arguing against reincarnation. He says that the soul has memory even in a dream state and therefore would remember a past life experience. This flies in the face of the heresy of the transmigration of souls which says that there is no remembrance whatever of events that took place in a previous state or states of existence.

In paragraph two, Irenaeus effectively demolishes the myth, whether started by Plato, or Pythagoras, or the Egyptians, that when a soul reincarnates or transmigrates into another existence, it is caused to drink a cup of oblivion. Irenaeus argues that this would wipe out all memory, and therefore is unprovable by any in existence currently, since they themselves who argue this position could not remember their former state because the cup of oblivion would have wiped it away from their memory.

In paragraph three, Irenaeus turns the argument that the body is the cup of oblivion on its heels and throws it crashing down, saying that there could be no memory at all if the body was the cup of oblivion, and that there would be no remembrance of divine things. He contrasts the Old Testament prophets who, after returning from a trance or a vision, remembered everything they saw spiritually and related these things to others.

Then in paragraph four, Irenaeus explains that the soul is the possessor of the body, not the other way around. As a musical instrument in the hands of a musician, so the body is played by the soul. Irenaeus says that an artist may have a burst of inspiration and creativity yet must he work out his composition at the pace allowed by his instrument which is not perfectly pliable. Thus are the rapidity of his ideas slowed by the medium by which they are expressed. So also, Irenaeus says, is the soul impeded by the body. The soul is the artist but the body is the instrument which does not prohibit movement, but moderates it so that the soul may be seen working out its expression through the body. The soul does not lose “its own peculiar powers” but shares its life with the body.

Lastly, in paragraph five Irenaeus shows that, because the soul has remembrance of things done in the present life, it stands to reason it never had any other existence since it remembers nothing of a preexistent state. Irenaeus says that it is God who gives the soul its own special character to match its own unique body. Irenaeus believes that God has “predetermined in His own counsel” the number of souls who will inherit eternal life and who will rise again “having their own bodies, and having also their own souls, and their own spirits, in which they had pleased God.” This seems to me to be in agreement with Paul in Romans 8 (KJV):28 And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose. 29 For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the firstborn among many brethren. 30 Moreover whom he did predestinate, them he also called: and whom he called, them he also justified: and whom he justified, them he also glorified.

He states correctly that marriage will cease, and those who stood apart from the grace of God will go away to punishment just as we read in Matthew 22 (KJV):30 For in the resurrection they neither marry, nor are given in marriage, but are as the angels of God in heaven. 31 But as touching the resurrection of the dead, have ye not read that which was spoken unto you by God, saying, 32 I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob? God is not the God of the dead, but of the living.

And there will also be a resurrection of the unrighteous dead who will have bodies and souls as we read in Mark 9 (KJV):42 And whosoever shall offend one of these little ones that believe in me, it is better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and he were cast into the sea. 43 And if thy hand offend thee, cut it off: it is better for thee to enter into life maimed, than having two hands to go into hell, into the fire that never shall be quenched: 44 Where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched.

Chapter 14: The Gospel of Judas a Fake

Book 1: Chapter XXXI.—Doctrines of the Cainites.

1. Others again declare that Cain derived his being from the Power above, and acknowledge that Esau, Korah, the Sodomites, and all such persons, are related to themselves. On this account, they add, they have been assailed by the Creator, yet no one of them has suffered injury. For Sophia was in the habit of carrying off that which belonged to her from them to herself. They declare that Judas the traitor was thoroughly acquainted with these things, and that he alone, knowing the truth as no others did, accomplished the mystery of the betrayal; by him all things, both earthly and heavenly, were thus thrown into confusion. They produce a fictitious history of this kind, which they style the Gospel of Judas.

Summary: Irenaeus testifies here that the Gnostics claimed that Cain, Esau, Korah, and the Sodomites were derived from “the Power above.” Irenaeus also testifies that they claim that the Creator assailed them but “no one of them has suffered injury.” Irenaeus also testifies that they claimed that Judas “accomplished the mystery of the betrayal,” and knew the truth “as no others did.” Irenaeus records that the Gospel of Judas is a “fictitious history.”

Commentary: It is helpful to know your enemy. The Gospel of Judas is a fake gospel. Did those who believe such a thing never read the Gospel of John? Jesus Himself says that Judas is lost as in John 17 (KJV):12 While I was with them in the world, I kept them in thy name: those that thou gavest me I have kept, and none of them is lost, but the son of perdition; that the scripture might be fulfilled.

The Gospels tell us that Satan entered Judas as we read in Mark 14 (KJV):17 And in the evening he cometh with the twelve. 18 And as they sat and did eat, Jesus said, Verily I say unto you, One of you which eateth with me shall betray me. 19 And they began to be sorrowful, and to say unto him one by one, Is it I? and another said, Is it I? 20 And he answered and said unto them, It is one of the twelve, that dippeth with me in the dish. 21 The Son of man indeed goeth, as it is written of him: but woe to that man by whom the Son of man is betrayed! good were it for that man if he had never been born.

And in Luke 22 (KJV):2 And the chief priests and scribes sought how they might kill him; for they feared the people. 3 Then entered Satan into Judas surnamed Iscariot, being of the number of the twelve. 4 And he went his way, and communed with the chief priests and captains, how he might betray him unto them.

And also in John 13 (KJV):26 Jesus answered, He it is, to whom I shall give a sop, when I have dipped it. And when he had dipped the sop, he gave it to Judas Iscariot, the son of Simon. 27 And after the sop Satan entered into him. Then said Jesus unto him, That thou doest, do quickly. 28 Now no man at the table knew for what intent he spake this unto him.

It is recorded in the book of Acts that Matthias took Judas’ apostolic office as we read in Acts 1 (KJV):16 Men and brethren, this scripture must needs have been fulfilled, which the Holy Ghost by the mouth of David spake before concerning Judas, which was guide to them that took Jesus. 17 For he was numbered with us, and had obtained part of this ministry. 18 Now this man purchased a field with the reward of iniquity; and falling headlong, he burst asunder in the midst, and all his bowels gushed out. 19 And it was known unto all the dwellers at Jerusalem; insomuch as that field is called in their proper tongue, Aceldama, that is to say, The field of blood. 20 For it is written in the book of Psalms, Let his habitation be desolate, and let no man dwell therein: and his bishoprick let another take. 21 Wherefore of these men which have companied with us all the time that the Lord Jesus went in and out among us, 22 Beginning from the baptism of John, unto that same day that he was taken up from us, must one be ordained to be a witness with us of his resurrection. 23 And they appointed two, Joseph called Barsabas, who was surnamed Justus, and Matthias. 24 And they prayed, and said, Thou, Lord, which knowest the hearts of all men, shew whether of these two thou hast chosen, 25 That he may take part of this ministry and apostleship, from which Judas by transgression fell, that he might go to his own place. 26 And they gave forth their lots; and the lot fell upon Matthias; and he was numbered with the eleven apostles.

It is evident that the Gospel of Judas is a false Gospel.

Chapter 15: Intelligent Design in Creation

Book 2: Chapter II.—The world was not formed by angels, or by any other being, contrary to the will of the most high God, but was made by the Father through the Word. 2990 [This noble chapter is a sort of homily on Heb. i.]

1. Those, moreover, who say that the world was formed by angels, or by any other maker of it, contrary to the will of Him who is the Supreme Father, err first of all in this very point, that they maintain that angels formed such and so mighty a creation, contrary to the will of the Most High God. This would imply that angels were more powerful than God; or if not so, that He was either careless, or inferior, or paid no regard to those things which took place among His own possessions, whether they turned out ill or well, so that He might drive away and prevent the one, while He praised and rejoiced over the other. But if one would not ascribe such conduct even to a man of any ability, how much less to God

2. Next let them tell us whether these things have been formed within the limits which are contained by Him, and in His proper territory, or in regions belonging to others, and lying beyond Him? But if they say [that these things were done] beyond Him, then all the absurdities already mentioned will face them, and the Supreme God will be enclosed by that which is beyond Him, in which also it will be necessary that He should find His end. If, on the other hand, [these things were done] within His own proper territory, it will be very idle to say that the world was thus formed within His proper territory against His will by angels who are themselves under His power, or by any other being, as if either He Himself did not behold all things which take place among His own possessions, or 2991 The common text has “ut:” we prefer to read “aut” with Erasmus and others. was not aware of the things to be done by angels.

3. If, however, [the things referred to were done] not against His will, but with His concurrence and knowledge, as some [of these men] think, the angels, or the Former of the world [whoever that may have been], will no longer be the causes of that formation, but the will of God. For if He is the Former of the world, He too made the angels, or at least was the cause of their creation; and He will be regarded as having made the world who prepared the causes of its formation. Although they maintain that the angels were made by a long succession downwards, or that the Former of the world [sprang] from the Supreme Father, as Basilides asserts; nevertheless that which is the cause of those things which have been made will still be traced to Him who was the Author of such a succession. [The case stands] just as regards success in war, which is ascribed to the king who prepared those things which are the cause of victory; and, in like manner, the creation of any state, or of any work, is referred to him who prepared materials for the accomplishment of those results which were afterwards brought about. Wherefore, we do not say that it was the axe which cut the wood, or the saw which divided it; but one would very properly say that the man cut and divided it who formed the axe and the saw for this purpose, and [who also formed] at a much earlier date all the tools by which the axe and the saw themselves were formed. With justice, therefore, according to an analogous process of reasoning, the Father of all will be declared the Former of this world, and not the angels, nor any other [so-called] former of the world, other than He who was its Author, and had formerly 2992 Vossius and others read “primus” instead of “prius,” but on defective ms. authority. been the cause of the preparation for a creation of this kind.

Summary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus affirms that those “Those, moreover, who say that the world was formed by angels, or by any other maker of it, contrary to the will of Him who is the Supreme Father, err first of all in this very point, that they maintain that angels formed such and so mighty a creation, contrary to the will of the Most High God.” Irenaeus concludes that, “This would imply that angels were more powerful than God; or if not so, that He was either careless, or inferior, or paid no regard to those things which took place among His own possessions, whether they turned out ill or well, so that He might drive away and prevent the one, while He praised and rejoiced over the other.” Irenaeus then reasons, “But if one would not ascribe such conduct even to a man of any ability, how much less to God.”

In paragraph two, Irenaeus goads the Gnostics as he says, “Next let them tell us whether these things have been formed within the limits which are contained by Him, and in His proper territory, or in regions belonging to others, and lying beyond Him?” Irenaeus then opposes them as he argues, “But if they say [that these things were done] beyond Him, then all the absurdities already mentioned will face them, and the Supreme God will be enclosed by that which is beyond Him, in which also it will be necessary that He should find His end.” Irenaeus then points out that, “If, on the other hand, [these things were done] within His own proper territory, it will be very idle to say that the world was thus formed within His proper territory against His will by angels who are themselves under His power, or by any other being, as if either He Himself did not behold all things which take place among His own possessions was not aware of the things to be done by angels.”

In paragraph three, Irenaeus argues, “If, however, [the things referred to were done] not against His will, but with His concurrence and knowledge, as some [of these men] think, the angels, or the Former of the world [whoever that may have been], will no longer be the causes of that formation, but the will of God.” Irenaeus then reasons, “For if He is the Former of the world, He too made the angels, or at least was the cause of their creation; and He will be regarded as having made the world who prepared the causes of its formation.” Irenaeus then points out that, “Although they maintain that the angels were made by a long succession downwards, or that the Former of the world [sprang] from the Supreme Father, as Basilides asserts; nevertheless that which is the cause of those things which have been made will still be traced to Him who was the Author of such a succession.” Irenaeus then judges, “[The case stands] just as regards success in war, which is ascribed to the king who prepared those things which are the cause of victory; and, in like manner, the creation of any state, or of any work, is referred to him who prepared materials for the accomplishment of those results which were afterwards brought about.” Irenaeus then adds, “Wherefore, we do not say that it was the axe which cut the wood, or the saw which divided it; but one would very properly say that the man cut and divided it who formed the axe and the saw for this purpose, and [who also formed] at a much earlier date all the tools by which the axe and the saw themselves were formed.” And Irenaeus concludes, “With justice, therefore, according to an analogous process of reasoning, the Father of all will be declared the Former of this world, and not the angels, nor any other [so-called] former of the world, other than He who was its Author, and had formerly been the cause of the preparation for a creation of this kind.”

Commentary: Here in this chapter of his writing, Irenaeus’ clear thinking echoes even our present day theories of intelligent design. In paragraph one, he points out the absurdity of saying that the Supreme God did not know what the angels were doing when He created the world. Even a man knows what is being done to the things he possesses.

In paragraph two, Irenaeus again argues it is absurd to say that the Supreme God has an end, or that something is done beyond Him, behind His back as it were.

In paragraph three, he adds that even if God were only the cause of the formation of the world, and that someone else formed it, it is still caused by His will since He began the succession of events that led to its existence. Even if He only prepared for its formation, He is still its Author.

Irenaeus says that tools don’t exist without a purpose and a designer. Likewise, “we do not say that it was the axe which cut the wood, or the saw which divided it; but one would very properly say that the man cut and divided it who formed the axe and the saw for this purpose, and [who also formed] at a much earlier date all the tools by which the axe and the saw themselves were formed.” By this statement I see that Irenaeus understood the basis of the argument for intelligent design. Intelligence to form a saw implies intelligence to use a saw. And intelligence implies a designer. Today we know that man has DNA, which is the intelligence by which man’s physical being is formed. And so we must conclude that man therefore must have an intelligent designer, for where did the saw and the axe come from? And likewise where did DNA come from?

Just as a king who “prepared those things which are the cause of victory,” or the creation of any work is referred “to him who prepared materials for the accomplishment of those results which were afterwards brought about,” so also “with justice, therefore, according to an analogous process of reasoning, the Father of all will be declared the Former of this world, and not the angels.” If a purpose can be seen in tools such as an axe or a saw, then so, “for a creation of this kind,” its author must have been the cause of the preparation.

Bravo Irenaeus!

Chapter 16: The Gnostic Doctrine of the Seed

Book 2: Chapter XIX.—Absurdities of the heretics as to their own origin: their opinions respecting the Demiurge shown to be equally untenable and ridiculous.

1. But what sort of talk also is this concerning their seed—that it was conceived by the mother according to the configuration of those angels who wait upon the Saviour,—shapeless, without form, and imperfect; and that it was deposited in the Demiurge without his knowledge, in order that through his instrumentality it might attain to perfection and form in that soul which he had, [so to speak,] filled with seed? This is to affirm, in the first place, that those angels who wait upon their Saviour are imperfect, and without figure or form; if indeed that which was conceived according to their appearance was generated any such kind of being [as has been described].

2. Then, in the next place, as to their saying that the Creator was ignorant of that deposit of seed which took place into him, and again, of that impartation of seed which was made by him to man, their words are futile and vain, and are in no way susceptible of proof. For how could he have been ignorant of it, if that seed had possessed any substance and peculiar properties? If, on the other hand, it was without substance and without quality, and so was really nothing, then, as a matter of course, he was ignorant of it. For those things which have a certain motion of their own, and quality, either of heat, or swiftness, or sweetness, or which differ from others in brilliance, do not escape the notice even of men, since they mingle in the sphere of human action: far less can they [be hidden from] God, the Maker of this universe. With reason, however, [is it said, that] their seed was not known to Him, since it is without any quality of general utility, and without the substance requisite for any action, and is, in fact, a pure nonentity. It really seems to me, that, with a view to such opinions, the Lord expressed Himself thus: “For every idle word that men speak, they shall give account on the day of judgment.” 3088 Matt. xii. 36. [The serious spirit of this remark lends force to it as exposition.] For all teachers of a like character to these, who fill men’s ears with idle talk, shall, when they stand at the throne of judgment, render an account for those things which they have vainly imagined and falsely uttered against the Lord, proceeding, as they have done, to such a height of audacity as to declare of themselves that, on account of the substance of their seed, they are acquainted with the spiritual Pleroma, because that man who dwells within reveals to them the true Father; for the animal nature required 3089 Comp. i. 6, 1. to be disciplined by means of the senses. But [they hold that] the Demiurge, while receiving into himself the whole of this seed, through its being deposited in him by the Mother, still remained utterly ignorant of all things, and had no understanding of anything connected with the Pleroma.

3. And that they are the truly “spiritual,” inasmuch as a certain particle of the Father of the universe has been deposited in their souls, since, according to their assertions, they have souls formed of the same substance as the Demiurge himself, yet that he, although he received from the Mother, once for all, the whole [of the divine] seed, and possessed it in himself, still remained of an animal nature, and had not the slightest understanding of those things which are above, which things they boast that they themselves understand, while they are still on earth;—does not this crown all possible absurdity? For to imagine that the very same seed conveyed knowledge and perfection to the souls of these men, while it only gave rise to ignorance in the God who made them, is an opinion that can be held only by those utterly frantic, and totally destitute of common sense.

4. Further, it is also a most absurd and groundless thing for them to say that the seed was, by being thus deposited, reduced to form and increased, and so was prepared for all the reception of perfect rationality. For there will be in it an admixture of matter—that substance which they hold to have been derived from ignorance and defect; [and this will prove itself] more apt and useful than was the light of their Father, if indeed, when born, according to the contemplation of that [light], it was without form or figure, but derived from this [matter], form, and appearance, and increase, and perfection. For if that light which proceeds from the Pleroma was the cause to a spiritual being that it possessed neither form, nor appearance, nor its own special magnitude, while its descent to this world added all these things to it, and brought it to perfection, then a sojourn here (which they also term darkness) would seem much more efficacious and useful than was the light of their Father. But how can it be regarded as other than ridiculous, to affirm that their mother ran the risk of being almost extinguished in matter, and was almost on the point of being destroyed by it, had she not then with difficulty stretched herself outwards, and leaped, [as it were,] out of herself, receiving assistance from the Father; but that her seed increased in this same matter, and received a form, and was made fit for the reception of perfect rationality; and this, too, while “bubbling up” among substances dissimilar and unfamiliar to itself, according to their own declaration that the earthly is opposed to the spiritual, and the spiritual to the earthly? How, then, could “a little particle,” 442 “Parvum emissum”—a small emission. as they say, increase, and receive shape, and reach perfection, in the midst of substances contrary to and unfamiliar to itself?

5. But further, and in addition to what has been said, the question occurs, Did their mother, when she beheld the angels, bring forth the seed all at once, or only one by one [in succession]? If she brought forth the whole simultaneously and at once, that which was thus produced cannot now be of an infantile character: its descent, therefore, into those men who now exist must be superfluous. 443 That is, there could be no need for its descending into them that it might increase, receive form, and thus be prepared for the reception of perfect reason. But if one by one, then she did not form her conception according to the figure of those angels whom she beheld; for, contemplating them all together, and once for all, so as to conceive by them, she ought to have brought forth once for all the offspring of those from whose forms she had once for all conceived.

6. Why was it, too, that, beholding the angels along with the Saviour, she did indeed conceive their images, but not that of the Saviour, who is far more beautiful than they? Did He not please her; and did she not, on that account, conceive after His likeness? How was it, too, that the Demiurge, whom they can call an animal being, having, as they maintain, his own special magnitude and figure, was produced perfect as respects his substance; while that which is spiritual, which also ought to be more effective than that which is animal, was sent forth imperfect, and he required to descend into a soul, that in it he might obtain form, and thus becoming perfect, might be rendered fit for the reception of perfect reason? If, then, he obtains form in mere earthly and animal men, he can no longer be said to be after the likeness of angels whom they call lights, but [after the likeness] of those men who are here below. For he will not possess in that case the likeness and appearance of angels, but of those souls in whom also he receives shape; just as water when poured into a vessel takes the form of that vessel, and if on any occasion it happens to congeal in it, it will acquire the form of the vessel in which it has thus been frozen, since souls themselves possess the figure of the body [in which they dwell]; for they themselves have been adapted to the vessel [in which they exist], as I have said before. If, then, that seed [referred to] is here solidified and formed into a definite shape, it will possess the figure of a man, and not the form of the angels. How is it possible, therefore, that that seed should be after images of the angels, seeing it has obtained a form after the likeness of men? Why, again, since it was of a spiritual nature, had it any need of descending into flesh? For what is carnal stands in need of that which is spiritual, if indeed it is to be saved, that in it it may be sanctified and cleared from all impurity, and that what is mortal may be swallowed up by immortality; but that which is spiritual has no need whatever of those things which are here below. For it is not we who benefit it, but it that improves us.

7. Still more manifestly is that talk of theirs concerning their seed proved to be false, and that in a way which must be evident to every one, by the fact that they declare those souls which have received seed from the Mother to be superior to all others; wherefore also they have been honoured by the Demiurge, and constituted princes, and kings, and priests. For if this were true, the high priest Caiaphas, and Annas, and the rest of the chief priests, and doctors of the law, and rulers of the people, would have been the first to believe in the Lord, agreeing as they did with respect 3095 The meaning apparently is, that by the high position which all these in common occupied, they proved themselves, on the principles of the heretics, to belong to the favoured “seed,” and should therefore have eagerly have welcomed the Lord. Or the meaning may be, “hurrying together to that relationship,” that is, to the relationship secured by faith in Christ. to that relationship; and even before them should have been Herod the king. But since neither he, nor the chief priests, nor the rulers, nor the eminent of the people, turned to Him [in faith], but, on the contrary, those who sat begging by the highway, the deaf, and the blind, while He was rejected and despised by others, according to what Paul declares, “For ye see your calling, brethren, that there are not many wise men among you, not many noble, not many mighty; but those things of the world which were despised hath God chosen.” 3096 1 Cor. i. 26, 28, somewhat loosely quoted. Such souls, therefore, were not superior to others on account of the seed deposited in them, nor on this account were they honoured by the Demiurge.

8. As to the point, then, that their system is weak and untenable as well as utterly chimerical, enough has been said. For it is not needful, to use a common proverb, that one should drink up the ocean who wishes to learn that its water is salt. But, just as in the case of a statue which is made of clay, but coloured on the outside that it may be thought to be of gold, while it really is of clay, any one who takes out of it a small particle, and thus laying it open reveals the clay, will set free those who seek the truth from a false opinion; in the same way have I (by exposing not a small part only, but the several heads of their system which are of the greatest importance) shown to as many as do not wish wittingly to be led astray, what is wicked, deceitful, seductive, and pernicious, connected with the school of the Valentinians, and all those other heretics who promulgate wicked opinions respecting the Demiurge, that is, the Fashioner and Former of this universe, and who is in fact the only true God—exhibiting, [as I have done,] how easily their views are overthrown.

9. For who that has any intelligence, and possesses only a small proportion of truth, can tolerate them, when they affirm that there is another god above the Creator; and that there is another Monogenes as well as another Word of God, whom also they describe as having been produced in [a state of] degeneracy; and another Christ, whom they assert to have been formed, along with the Holy Spirit, later than the rest of the Æons; and another Saviour, who, they say, did not proceed from the Father of all, but was a kind of joint production of those Æons who were formed in [a state of] degeneracy, and that He was produced of necessity on account of this very degeneracy? It is thus their opinion that, unless the Æons had been in a state of ignorance and degeneracy, neither Christ, nor the Holy Spirit, nor Horos, nor the Saviour, nor the angels, nor their Mother, nor her seed, nor the rest of the fabric of the world, would have been produced at all; but the universe would have been a desert, and destitute of the many good things which exist in it. They are therefore not only chargeable with impiety against the Creator, declaring Him the fruit of a defect, but also against Christ and the Holy Spirit, affirming that they were produced on account of that defect; and, in like manner, that the Saviour [was produced] subsequently to [the existence of] that defect. And who will tolerate the remainder of their vain talk, which they cunningly endeavour to accommodate to the parables, and have in this way plunged both themselves, and those who give credit to them, in the profoundest depths of impiety?

Summary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus asks, “But what sort of talk also is this concerning their seed—that it was conceived by the mother according to the configuration of those angels who wait upon the Saviour,—shapeless, without form, and imperfect; and that it was deposited in the Demiurge without his knowledge, in order that through his instrumentality it might attain to perfection and form in that soul which he had, [so to speak,] filled with seed?” Irenaeus concludes that to teach “This is to affirm, in the first place, that those angels who wait upon their Saviour are imperfect, and without figure or form; if indeed that which was conceived according to their appearance was generated any such kind of being [as has been described].”

In paragraph two, Irenaeus testifies, “Then, in the next place, as to their saying that the Creator was ignorant of that deposit of seed which took place into him, and again, of that impartation of seed which was made by him to man, their words are futile and vain, and are in no way susceptible of proof.” Irenaeus then reasons, “For how could he have been ignorant of it, if that seed had possessed any substance and peculiar properties? If, on the other hand, it was without substance and without quality, and so was really nothing, then, as a matter of course, he was ignorant of it. For those things which have a certain motion of their own, and quality, either of heat, or swiftness, or sweetness, or which differ from others in brilliance, do not escape the notice even of men, since they mingle in the sphere of human action: far less can they [be hidden from] God, the Maker of this universe.” Irenaeus then concludes, “With reason, however, [is it said, that] their seed was not known to Him, since it is without any quality of general utility, and without the substance requisite for any action, and is, in fact, a pure nonentity.” Irenaeus then testifies, “It really seems to me, that, with a view to such opinions, the Lord expressed Himself thus: “For every idle word that men speak, they shall give account on the day of judgment,” referring to Matthew 12:36. Irenaeus then judges, “For all teachers of a like character to these, who fill men’s ears with idle talk, shall, when they stand at the throne of judgment, render an account for those things which they have vainly imagined and falsely uttered against the Lord, proceeding, as they have done, to such a height of audacity as to declare of themselves that, on account of the substance of their seed, they are acquainted with the spiritual Pleroma, because that man who dwells within reveals to them the true Father; for the animal nature required to be disciplined by means of the senses.” Irenaeus then records, “But [they hold that] the Demiurge, while receiving into himself the whole of this seed, through its being deposited in him by the Mother, still remained utterly ignorant of all things, and had no understanding of anything connected with the Pleroma.”

In paragraph three, Irenaeus explains the Gnostic beliefs as he records, “And that they are the truly “spiritual,” inasmuch as a certain particle of the Father of the universe has been deposited in their souls, since, according to their assertions, they have souls formed of the same substance as the Demiurge himself, yet that he, although he received from the Mother, once for all, the whole [of the divine] seed, and possessed it in himself, still remained of an animal nature, and had not the slightest understanding of those things which are above, which things they boast that they themselves understand, while they are still on earth;—does not this crown all possible absurdity?” Irenaeus thus concludes, “For to imagine that the very same seed conveyed knowledge and perfection to the souls of these men, while it only gave rise to ignorance in the God who made them, is an opinion that can be held only by those utterly frantic, and totally destitute of common sense.”

In paragraph four, Irenaeus argues, “Further, it is also a most absurd and groundless thing for them to say that the seed was, by being thus deposited, reduced to form and increased, and so was prepared for all the reception of perfect rationality.” Irenaeus then reasons, “For there will be in it an admixture of matter—that substance which they hold to have been derived from ignorance and defect; [and this will prove itself] more apt and useful than was the light of their Father, if indeed, when born, according to the contemplation of that [light], it was without form or figure, but derived from this [matter], form, and appearance, and increase, and perfection.” Irenaeus further reasons, “For if that light which proceeds from the Pleroma was the cause to a spiritual being that it possessed neither form, nor appearance, nor its own special magnitude, while its descent to this world added all these things to it, and brought it to perfection, then a sojourn here (which they also term darkness) would seem much more efficacious and useful than was the light of their Father.” Irenaeus then rightly asks, “But how can it be regarded as other than ridiculous, to affirm that their mother ran the risk of being almost extinguished in matter, and was almost on the point of being destroyed by it, had she not then with difficulty stretched herself outwards, and leaped, [as it were,] out of herself, receiving assistance from the Father; but that her seed increased in this same matter, and received a form, and was made fit for the reception of perfect rationality; and this, too, while “bubbling up” among substances dissimilar and unfamiliar to itself, according to their own declaration that the earthly is opposed to the spiritual, and the spiritual to the earthly?” Irenaeus then concludes as he asks, “How, then, could “a little particle,” as they say, increase, and receive shape, and reach perfection, in the midst of substances contrary to and unfamiliar to itself?”

Then in paragraph five, Irenaeus asks, “Did their mother, when she beheld the angels, bring forth the seed all at once, or only one by one [in succession]?” Irenaeus reasons that “If she brought forth the whole simultaneously and at once, that which was thus produced cannot now be of an infantile character: its descent, therefore, into those men who now exist must be superfluous.” In this regard the editor’s note, 443, is helpful as it explains, “That is, there could be no need for its descending into them that it might increase, receive form, and thus be prepared for the reception of perfect reason.” Irenaeus then argues, “But if one by one, then she did not form her conception according to the figure of those angels whom she beheld; for, contemplating them all together, and once for all, so as to conceive by them, she ought to have brought forth once for all the offspring of those from whose forms she had once for all conceived.”

In paragraph six, Irenaeus, being most familiar with the Gnostic doctrine, asks, “Why was it, too, that, beholding the angels along with the Saviour, she did indeed conceive their images, but not that of the Saviour, who is far more beautiful than they?” Irenaeus chides the Gnostics as he again asks, “Did He not please her; and did she not, on that account, conceive after His likeness?” Irenaeus then adds, “How was it, too, that the Demiurge, whom they can call an animal being, having, as they maintain, his own special magnitude and figure, was produced perfect as respects his substance; while that which is spiritual, which also ought to be more effective than that which is animal, was sent forth imperfect, and he required to descend into a soul, that in it he might obtain form, and thus becoming perfect, might be rendered fit for the reception of perfect reason?” Irenaeus thus concludes, that “If, then, he obtains form in mere earthly and animal men, he can no longer be said to be after the likeness of angels whom they call lights, but [after the likeness] of those men who are here below.” Irenaeus then explains, “For he will not possess in that case the likeness and appearance of angels, but of those souls in whom also he receives shape;” Irenaeus then reasons, “just as water when poured into a vessel takes the form of that vessel, and if on any occasion it happens to congeal in it, it will acquire the form of the vessel in which it has thus been frozen, since souls themselves possess the figure of the body [in which they dwell]; for they themselves have been adapted to the vessel [in which they exist], as I have said before.” Again Irenaeus reasons, “If, then, that seed [referred to] is here solidified and formed into a definite shape, it will possess the figure of a man, and not the form of the angels.” Irenaeus rightly asks, “How is it possible, therefore, that that seed should be after images of the angels, seeing it has obtained a form after the likeness of men?” And again Irenaeus asks, “Why, again, since it was of a spiritual nature, had it any need of descending into flesh?” Irenaeus then concludes, “For what is carnal stands in need of that which is spiritual, if indeed it is to be saved, that in it it may be sanctified and cleared from all impurity, and that what is mortal may be swallowed up by immortality; but that which is spiritual has no need whatever of those things which are here below. For it is not we who benefit it, but it that improves us.”

In paragraph seven, Irenaeus reasons, “Still more manifestly is that talk of theirs concerning their seed proved to be false, and that in a way which must be evident to every one, by the fact that they declare those souls which have received seed from the Mother to be superior to all others; wherefore also they have been honoured by the Demiurge, and constituted princes, and kings, and priests. For if this were true, the high priest Caiaphas, and Annas, and the rest of the chief priests, and doctors of the law, and rulers of the people, would have been the first to believe in the Lord, agreeing as they did with respect to that relationship; and even before them should have been Herod the king.” Irenaeus then testifies, “But since neither he, nor the chief priests, nor the rulers, nor the eminent of the people, turned to Him [in faith], but, on the contrary, those who sat begging by the highway, the deaf, and the blind, while He was rejected and despised by others, according to what Paul declares, “For ye see your calling, brethren, that there are not many wise men among you, not many noble, not many mighty; but those things of the world which were despised hath God chosen,” referring to 1 Corinthians 1:26,28. Irenaeus concludes, “Such souls, therefore, were not superior to others on account of the seed deposited in them, nor on this account were they honoured by the Demiurge.”

In paragraph eight, Irenaeus points out the obvious as he affirms, “As to the point, then, that their system is weak and untenable as well as utterly chimerical, enough has been said. For it is not needful, to use a common proverb, that one should drink up the ocean who wishes to learn that its water is salt.” Irenaeus then reasons, “But, just as in the case of a statue which is made of clay, but coloured on the outside that it may be thought to be of gold, while it really is of clay, any one who takes out of it a small particle, and thus laying it open reveals the clay, will set free those who seek the truth from a false opinion; in the same way have I (by exposing not a small part only, but the several heads of their system which are of the greatest importance) shown to as many as do not wish wittingly to be led astray, what is wicked, deceitful, seductive, and pernicious, connected with the school of the Valentinians, and all those other heretics who promulgate wicked opinions respecting the Demiurge, that is, the Fashioner and Former of this universe, and who is in fact the only true God—exhibiting, [as I have done,] how easily their views are overthrown.”

And in paragraph nine, Irenaeus thunders as he states, “For who that has any intelligence, and possesses only a small proportion of truth, can tolerate them, when they affirm that:”

- “there is another god above the Creator;”

- “and that there is another Monogenes as well as another Word of God, whom also they describe as having been produced in [a state of] degeneracy”;
- “and another Christ, whom they assert to have been formed, along with the Holy Spirit, later than the rest of the Æons;”
- “and another Saviour, who, they say, did not proceed from the Father of all, but was a kind of joint production of those Æons who were formed in [a state of] degeneracy, and that He was produced of necessity on account of this very degeneracy?”

Irenaeus continues to describe the Gnostics’ doctrine as he testifies, “It is thus their opinion that, unless the Æons had been in a state of ignorance and degeneracy, neither Christ, nor the Holy Spirit, nor Horos, nor the Saviour, nor the angels, nor their Mother, nor her seed, nor the rest of the fabric of the world, would have been produced at all;” Irenaeus then points out in rebuttal, “but the universe would have been a desert, and destitute of the many good things which exist in it.” Irenaeus then testifies, “They are therefore not only chargeable with impiety against the Creator, declaring Him the fruit of a defect, but also against Christ and the Holy Spirit, affirming that they were produced on account of that defect; and, in like manner, that the Saviour [was produced] subsequently to [the existence of] that defect. And who will tolerate the remainder of their vain talk, which they cunningly endeavour to accommodate to the parables, and have in this way plunged both themselves, and those who give credit to them, in the profoundest depths of impiety?”

Commentary: We must here give credit to Irenaeus here for he has most admirably defended the faith against a heresy that runs very deep in its absurd, weak, untenable, chimerical, and fanciful doctrines. Before commenting, it is good to remember some of the basic tenets of Gnostic teaching which we touched on when we reviewed basic Gnostic beliefs in Chapter 5: His Reliance on the Scriptures when we discussed Book 4: Chapter XIX. Here are the basic tenets of Gnosticism that are stated there:

- Matter is evil and spirit is good.
- The true God, Bythus, relating to the abyss, is unknowable.
- The Demiurge, creator of the earth and God of the Old Testament and of the Jews, is inferior to Bythus.
- The Pleroma is where the aeons dwelt.
- The aeons are beings born of Bythus and a consort.

Now to give some background of Gnostic belief, Irenaeus records of the Gnostics in Book 1: Chapter I:

1. They maintain, then, that in the invisible and ineffable heights above there exists a certain perfect, preexistent Æon,¹⁶ This term Æon (Αἰών) seems to have been formed from the words ἀεὶ ὄν, ever-existing. “We may take αἰών, therefore,” says Harvey (Irenæus, cxix.), “in the Valentinian acceptance of the word, to mean an emanation from the divine substance, subsisting co-ordinately and co-eternally with the Deity, the Pleroma still remaining one.” whom they call Proarche, Propator, and Bythus, and describe as being invisible and incomprehensible. Eternal and unbegotten, he remained throughout innumerable cycles of ages in profound serenity and quiescence. There existed along with him Ennoea, whom they also call Charis and Sige.¹⁷ Sige, however, was no true consort of Bythus, who included in himself the idea of male and female, and was the one cause of all things: comp. Hippolytus, Philosop., vi. 29. There seems to have been considerable disagreement among these heretics as to the completion of the mystical number thirty. Valentinus himself appears to have considered Bythus as a monad, and Sige as a mere nonentity. The two latest Æons, Christ and the Holy Spirit, would then complete the number thirty. But other Gnostic teachers included both Bythus and Sige in that mystical number. At last this Bythus determined to send forth from himself the beginning of all things, and deposited this production (which he had resolved to bring forth) in his contemporary Sige, even as seed is deposited in the womb. She then, having received this seed, and becoming pregnant, gave birth to Nous, who was both similar and equal to him who had produced him, and was alone capable of comprehending his father’s greatness. This Nous they call also Monogenes, and Father, and the Beginning of all Things. Along with him was also produced Aletheia; and these four constituted the first and first-begotten Pythagorean Tetrad, which they also denominate the root of all things. For there are first Bythus and Sige, and then Nous and Aletheia. And Monogenes, perceiving for what purpose he had been produced, also himself sent forth Logos and Zoe, being the father of all those who were to come after him, and the beginning and fashioning of the entire Pleroma. By the conjunction of Logos and Zoe were brought forth Anthropos and Ecclesia; and thus was formed the first-begotten Ogdoad, the root and substance of all things, called among them by four names, viz., Bythus, and Nous, and Logos, and Anthropos. For each of these is masculo-feminine, as follows: Propator was united by a conjunction with his Ennoea; then Monogenes, that is Nous, with Aletheia; Logos with Zoe, and Anthropos with Ecclesia.

2. These Æons having been produced for the glory of the Father, and wishing, by their own efforts, to effect this object, sent forth emanations by means of conjunction. Logos and Zoe, after producing Anthropos and Ecclesia, sent forth other ten Æons, whose names are the following: Bythus and Mixis, Ageratos and Henosis, Autophyes and Hedone, Acinetos and Syncrasis, Monogenes and Macaria. 18 It may be well to give here the English equivalents of the names of these Æons and their authors. They are as follows: Bythus, Profundity; Proarche, First-Beginning; Propator, First-Father; Ennoea, Idea; Charis, Grace; Sige, Silence; Nous, Intelligence; Aletheia, Truth; Logos, Word; Zoe, Life; Anthropos, Man; Ecclesia, Church; Bythus, Deep; Mixis, Mingling; Ageratos, Undecaying; Henosis, Union; Autophyes, Self-existent; Hedone, Pleasure; Acinetos, Immoveable; Syncrasis, Blending; Monogenes, Only-Begotten; Macaria, Happiness; Paracletus, Advocate; Pistis, Faith; Patricos, Ancestral; Elpis, Hope; Metricos, Metrical; Agape, Love; Ainos, Praise; Synesis, Understanding; Ecclesiasticus, Ecclesiastical; Macariotes, Felicity; Theletos, Desiderated; Sophia, Wisdom. These are the ten Æons whom they declare to have been produced by Logos and Zoe. They then add that Anthropos himself, along with Ecclesia, produced twelve Æons, to whom they give the following names: Paracletus and Pistis, Patricos and Elpis, Metricos and Agape, Ainos and Synesis, Ecclesiasticus and Macariotes, Theletos and Sophia.

3. Such are the thirty Æons in the erroneous system of these men; and they are described as being wrapped up, so to speak, in silence, and known to none [except these professing teachers]. Moreover, they declare that this invisible and spiritual Pleroma of theirs is tripartite, being divided into an Ogdoad, a Decad, and a Duodecad. And for this reason they affirm it was that the “Saviour”— for they do not please to call Him “Lord”—did no work in public during the space of thirty years, 19 Luke 3:23 thus setting forth the mystery of these Æons. They maintain also, that these thirty Æons are most plainly indicated in the parable 20 Matthew 20:1-16 of the labourers sent into the vineyard. For some are sent about the first hour, others about the third hour, others about the sixth hour, others about the ninth hour, and others about the eleventh hour. Now, if we add up the numbers of the hours here mentioned, the sum total will be thirty: for one, three, six, nine, and eleven, when added together, form thirty. And by the hours, they hold that the Æons were pointed out; while they maintain that these are great, and wonderful, and hitherto unspeakable mysteries which it is their special function to develop; and so they proceed when they find anything in the multitude 21 Some omit ἐν πλῆθει, while others render the words “a definite number,” thus: “And if there is anything else in Scripture which is referred to by a definite number.” of things contained in the Scriptures which they can adopt and accommodate to their baseless speculations.

To summarize, Bythus is the “certain perfect, preexistent Æon” who exists “in the invisible and ineffable heights above.” Bythus is “invisible and incomprehensible,” and “eternal and unbegotten,” and he has “remained throughout innumerable cycles of ages in profound serenity and quiescence.” And apparently, according to Irenaeus, the Gnostics believed that there “existed along with him Ennoea, whom they also call Charis and Sige.” Irenaeus then records that, “At last this Bythus determined to send forth from himself the beginning of all things, and deposited this production (which he had resolved to bring forth) in his contemporary Sige, even as seed is deposited in the womb. She then, having received this seed, and becoming pregnant,” she gave birth to Nous and Aletheia. Nous was also called Monogenes, and from Nous and Aletheia came “forth Logos and Zoe.” Nous became “the father of all those who were to come after him, and the beginning and fashioning of the entire Pleroma.” Eventually there were thirty Æons “in the erroneous system of these men,” who tried to show that this was revealed in the Scriptures as they pointed to the parable of the laborers in the vineyard in Matthew 20:1-16. They also use certain Greek words such as Logos meaning word, Aletheia meaning truth, Nous meaning mind, Zoe meaning life, and so forth, found in the Scriptures as names of their Aeons, supposing to show more Scriptural support for their scheme.

And in Book 1: Chapter II, Irenaeus explains the production of Jesus as follows:

1. They proceed to tell us that the Propator of their scheme was known only to Monogenes, who sprang from him; in other words, only to Nous, while to all the others he was invisible and incomprehensible. And, according to them, Nous alone took pleasure in contemplating the Father, and exulting in considering his immeasurable greatness; while he also meditated how he might communicate to the rest of the Æons the greatness of the Father, revealing to them how vast and mighty he was, and how he was without beginning,—beyond comprehension, and altogether incapable of being seen. But, in accordance with the will of the Father, Sige restrained him, because it was his design to lead them all to an acquaintance with the aforesaid Propator, and to create within them a desire of investigating his nature. In like manner, the rest of the Æons also, in a kind of quiet way, had a wish to behold the Author of their being, and to contemplate that First Cause which had no beginning.

2. But there rushed forth in advance of the rest that Æon who was much the latest of them, and was the youngest of the Duodecad which sprang from Anthropos and Ecclesia, namely Sophia, and suffered passion apart from the embrace of her consort Theletos. This passion, indeed, first arose among those who were connected with Nous and Aletheia, but passed as by contagion to this degenerate Æon, who acted under a pretence of love, but was in reality influenced by temerity, because she had not, like Nous, enjoyed communion with the perfect Father. This passion, they say, consisted in a desire to search into the nature of the Father; for she wished, according to them, to comprehend his greatness. When she could not attain her end, inasmuch as she aimed at an impossibility, and thus became involved in an extreme agony of mind, while both on account of the vast profundity as well as the unsearchable nature of the Father, and on account of the love she bore him, she was ever stretching herself forward, there was danger lest she should at last have been absorbed by his sweetness, and resolved into his absolute essence, unless she had met with that Power which supports all things, and preserves them outside of the unspeakable greatness. This power they term Horos; by whom, they say, she was restrained and supported; and that then, having with difficulty been brought back to herself, she was convinced that the Father is incomprehensible, and so laid aside her original design, along with that passion which had arisen within her from the overwhelming influence of her admiration.

3. But others of them fabulously describe the passion and restoration of Sophia as follows: They say that she, having engaged in an impossible and impracticable attempt, brought forth an amorphous substance, such as her female nature enabled her to produce. ²² Alluding to the Gnostic notion that, in generation, the male gives form, the female substance. Sophia, therefore, being a female Æon, gave to her enthymesis substance alone, without form. Comp. Hippol., Philosop., vi. 30. When she looked upon it, her first feeling was one of grief, on account of the imperfection of its generation, and then of fear lest this should end ²³ Some render this obscure clause, “lest it should never attain perfection,” but the above seems preferable. See Hippol., vi. 31, where the fear referred to is extended to the whole Pleroma. her own existence. Next she lost, as it were, all command of herself, and was in the greatest perplexity while endeavouring to discover the cause of all this, and in what way she might conceal what had happened. Being greatly harassed by these passions, she at last changed her mind, and endeavoured to return anew to the Father. When, however, she in some measure made the attempt, strength failed her, and she became a suppliant of the Father. The other Æons, Nous in particular, presented their supplications along with her. And hence they declare material substance ²⁴ “The reader will observe the parallel; as the enthymesis of Bythus produced intelligent substance, so the enthymesis of Sophia resulted in the formation of material substance.”—Harvey. had its beginning from ignorance and grief, and fear and bewilderment.

4. The Father afterwards produces, in his own image, by means of Monogenes, the above-mentioned Horos, without conjunction, ²⁵ Some propose reading these words in the dative rather than the accusative, and thus to make them refer to the image of the Father: masculo-feminine. For they maintain that sometimes the Father acts in conjunction with Sige, but that at other times he shows himself independent both of male and female. They term this Horos both Stauros and Lytrotes, and Carpistes, and Horothetes, and Metagoges. 26 The meaning of these terms is as follows: Stauros means primarily a stake, and then a cross; Lytrotes is a Redeemer; Carpistes, according to Grabe, means an Emancipator, according to Neander a Reaper; Horothetes is one that fixes boundaries; and Metagoges is explained by Neander as being one that brings back, from the supposed function of Horos, to bring back all that sought to wander from the special grade of being assigned them. And by this Horos they declare that Sophia was purified and established, while she was also restored to her proper conjunction. For her enthymesis (or inborn idea) having been taken away from her, along with its supervening passion, she herself certainly remained within the Pleroma; but her enthymesis, with its passion, was separated from her by Horos, fenced 27 The common text has ἀποστερηθῆναι, was deprived; but Billius proposes to read ἀποσταυρωθῆναι, in conformity with the ancient Latin version, “crucifixam.” off, and expelled from that circle. This enthymesis was, no doubt, a spiritual substance, possessing some of the natural tendencies of an Æon, but at the same time shapeless and without form, because it had received nothing. 28 That is, had not shared in any male influence, but was a purely female production. And on this account they say that it was an imbecile and feminine production. 29 Literally, “fruit.” Harvey remarks on this expression, “that what we understand by emanations, the Gnostic described as spiritual fructification; and as the seed of a tree is in itself, even in the embryo state, so these various Æons, as existing always in the divine nature, were co-eternal with it.”

5. After this substance had been placed outside of the Pleroma of the Æons, and its mother restored to her proper conjunction, they tell us that Monogenes, acting in accordance with the prudent forethought of the Father, gave origin to another conjugal pair, namely Christ and the Holy Spirit (lest any of the Æons should fall into a calamity similar to that of Sophia), for the purpose of fortifying and strengthening the Pleroma, and who at the same time completed the number of the Æons. Christ then instructed them as to the nature of their conjunction, and taught them that those who possessed a comprehension of the Unbegotten were sufficient for themselves. 30 This is an exceedingly obscure and difficult passage. Harvey’s rendering is: “For, say they, Christ taught them the nature of their copulæ, (namely,) that being cognisant of their (limited) perception of the Unbegotten they needed no higher knowledge, and that He enounced,” etc. the words seem scarcely capable of yielding this sense: we have followed the interpretation of Billius. He also announced among them what related to the knowledge of the Father,—namely, that he cannot be understood or comprehended, nor so much as seen or heard, except in so far as he is known by Monogenes only. And the reason why the rest of the Æons possess perpetual existence is found in that part of the Father’s nature which is incomprehensible; but the reason of their origin and formation was situated in that which may be comprehended regarding him, that is, in the Son. 31 Both the text and meaning are here very doubtful. Some think that the import of the sentence is, that the knowledge that the Father is incomprehensible secured the continued safety of the Æons, while the same knowledge conferred upon Monogenes his origin and form. Christ, then, who had just been produced, effected these things among them.

6. But the Holy Spirit 32 The Greek text inserts ἓν, one, before “Holy Spirit.” taught them to give thanks on being all rendered equal among themselves, and led them to a state of true repose. Thus, then, they tell us that the Æons were constituted equal to each other in form and sentiment, so that all became as Nous, and Logos, and Anthropos, and Christus. The female Æons, too, became all as Aletheia, and Zoe, and Spiritus, and Ecclesia. Everything, then, being thus established, and brought into a state of perfect rest, they next tell us that these beings sang praises with great joy to the Propator, who himself shared in the abounding exaltation. Then, out of gratitude for the great benefit which had been conferred on them, the whole Pleroma of the Æons, with one design and desire, and with the concurrence of Christ and the Holy Spirit, their Father also setting the seal of His approval on their conduct, brought together whatever each one had in himself of the greatest beauty and preciousness; and uniting all these contributions so as skilfully to blend the whole, they produced, to the honour and glory of Bythus, a being of most perfect beauty, the very star of the Pleroma, and the perfect fruit [of it], namely Jesus. Him they also speak of under the name of Saviour, and Christ, and patronymically, Logos, and Everything, because He was formed from the contributions of all. And then we are told that, by way of honour, angels of the same nature as Himself were simultaneously produced, to act as His body-guard.

To summarize, Book 1: Chapter II is a description of the “passion and restoration of Sophia,” who was evidently saved from being expelled from the Pleroma by Horos, whom “the Father afterwards produces, in his own image, by means of Monogenes.” This Horos “purified and established” Sophia, who “having engaged in an impossible and impracticable attempt, brought forth an amorphous substance, such as her female nature enabled her to produce.” Irenaeus defines “enthymesis” as he explains in paragraph 4, “For her enthymesis (or inborn idea) having been taken away from her, along with its supervening passion, she herself certainly remained within the Pleroma; but her enthymesis, with its passion, was separated from her by Horos, fenced off, and expelled from that circle. This enthymesis was, no doubt, a spiritual substance, possessing some of the natural tendencies of an Æon, but at the same time shapeless and without form, because it had received nothing. And on this account they say that it was an imbecile and feminine production.” This is important because this enthymesis is also termed Achamoth as we read in Book 1: Chapter IV, “The enthymesis of that Sophia who dwells above, which they also term Achamoth, 63 This term, though Tertullian declares himself to have been ignorant of its derivation, was evidently formed from the Hebrew word חֹכְמָה —chockmah, wisdom, being removed from the Pleroma, together with her passion, they relate to have, as a matter of course, become violently excited in those places of darkness and vacuity [to which she had been banished].”

Irenaeus continues in Book 1: Chapter II, paragraph 5 and records, “After this substance had been placed outside of the Pleroma of the Æons, and its mother restored to her proper conjunction, they tell us that Monogenes, acting in accordance with the prudent forethought of the Father, gave origin to another conjugal pair, namely Christ and the Holy Spirit (lest any of the Æons should fall into a calamity similar to that of Sophia), for the purpose of fortifying and strengthening the Pleroma, and who at the same time completed the number of the Æons.” Irenaeus concludes in paragraph 6, “Then, out of gratitude for the great benefit which had been conferred on them, the whole Pleroma of the Æons, with one design and desire, and with the concurrence of Christ and the Holy Spirit, their Father also setting the seal of His approval on their conduct, brought together whatever each one had in himself of the greatest beauty and preciousness; and uniting all these contributions so as skilfully to blend the whole, they produced, to the honour and glory of Bythus, a being of most perfect beauty, the very star of the Pleroma, and the perfect fruit [of it], namely Jesus. Him they also speak of under the name of Saviour, and Christ, and patronymically, Logos, and Everything, because He was formed from the contributions of all. And then we are told that, by way of honour, angels of the same nature as Himself were simultaneously produced, to act as His body-guard.”

And in Book 1: Chapter V, Irenaeus explains the formation of the Demiurge as follows:

1. These three kinds of existence, then, having, according to them, been now formed,—one from the passion, which was matter; a second from the conversion, which was animal; and the third, that which she (Achamoth) herself brought forth, which was spiritual,—she next addressed herself to the task of giving these form. But she could not succeed in doing this as respected the spiritual existence, because it was of the same nature with herself. She therefore applied herself to give form to the animal substance which had proceeded from her own conversion, and to bring forth to light the instructions of the Saviour. 78 “In order that,” says Grabe, “this formation might not be merely according to essence, but also according to knowledge, as the formation of the mother Achamoth was characterized above.” And they say she first formed out of animal substance him who is Father and King of all things, both of these which are of the same nature with himself, that is, animal substances, which they also call right-handed, and those which sprang from the passion, and from matter, which they call left-handed. For they affirm that he formed all the things which came into existence after him, being secretly impelled thereto by his mother. From this circumstance they style him Metropator, 79 Metropator, as proceeding only from his mother Achamoth: Apator, as having no male progenitor. Apator, Demiurge, and Father, saying that he is Father of the substances on the right hand, that is, of the animal, but Demiurge of those on the left, that is, of the material, while he is at the same time the king of all. For they say that this Enthymesis, desirous of making all things to the honour of the Æons, formed images of them, or rather that the Saviour 80 Harvey remarks, “The Valentinian Saviour being an aggregation of all the æonic perfections, the images of them were reproduced by the spiritual conception of Achamoth beholding the glory of Σωτήρ. The reader will not fail to observe that every successive development is the reflex of a more divine antecedent.” did so through her instrumentality. And she, in the image 81 The relation indicated seems to be as follows: Achamoth, after being formed “according to knowledge,” was outside of the Pleroma as the image of Propator, the Demiurge was as Nous, and the mundane angels which he formed corresponded to the other Æons of the Pleroma. of the invisible Father, kept herself concealed from the Demiurge. But he was in the image of the only-begotten Son, and the angels and archangels created by him were in the image of the rest of the Æons.

2. They affirm, therefore, that he was constituted the Father and God of everything outside of the Pleroma, being the creator of all animal and material substances. For he it was that discriminated these two kinds of existence hitherto confused, and made corporeal from incorporeal substances, fashioned things heavenly and earthly, and became the Framer (Demiurge) of things material and animal, of those on the right and those on the left, of the light and of the heavy, and of those tending upwards as well as of those tending downwards. He created also seven heavens, above which they say that he, the Demiurge, exists. And on this account they term him Hebdomas, and his mother Achamoth Ogdoads, preserving the number of the first-begotten and primary Ogdoad as the Pleroma. They affirm, moreover, that these seven heavens are intelligent, and speak of them as being angels, while they refer to the Demiurge himself as being an angel bearing a likeness to God; and in the same strain, they declare that Paradise, situated above the third heaven, is a fourth angel possessed of power, from whom Adam derived certain qualities while he conversed with him.

3. They go on to say that the Demiurge imagined that he created all these things of himself, while he in reality made them in conjunction with the productive power of Achamoth. He formed the heavens, yet was ignorant of the heavens; he fashioned man, yet knew not man; he brought to light the earth, yet had no acquaintance with the earth; and, in like manner, they declare that he was ignorant of the forms of all that he made, and knew not even of the existence of his own mother, but imagined that he himself was all things. They further affirm that his mother originated this opinion in his mind, because she desired to bring him forth possessed of such a character that he should be the head and source of his own essence, and the absolute ruler over every kind of operation [that was afterwards attempted]. This mother they also call Ogdoad, Sophia, Terra, Jerusalem, Holy Spirit, and, with a masculine reference, Lord. 82 “Achamoth by these names must be understood to have an intermediate position between the divine prototypal idea and creation: she was the reflex of the one, and therefore masculo-feminine; she was the pattern to be realized in the latter, and therefore was named Earth and Jerusalem.” —Harvey. Her place of habitation is an intermediate one, above the Demiurge indeed, but below and outside of the Pleroma, even to the end. 83 But after the consummation here referred to, Achamoth regained the Pleroma: see below, chap. vii. 1.

4. As, then, they represent all material substance to be formed from three passions, viz., fear, grief, and perplexity, the account they give is as follows: Animal substances originated from fear and from conversion; the Demiurge they also describe as owing his origin to conversion; but the existence of all the other animal substances they ascribe to fear, such as the souls of irrational animals, and of wild beasts, and men. And on this account, he (the Demiurge), being incapable of recognising any spiritual essences, imagined himself to be God alone, and declared through the prophets, “I am God, and besides me there is none else.” 84 Isaiah xlv. 5, 6, Isaiah xlv. 9. They further teach that the spirits of wickedness derived their origin from grief. Hence the devil, whom they also call Cosmocrator (the ruler of the world), and the demons, and the angels, and every wicked spiritual being that exists, found the source of their existence. They represent the Demiurge as being the son of that mother of theirs (Achamoth), and Cosmocrator as the creature of the Demiurge. Cosmocrator has knowledge of what is above himself, because he is a spirit of wickedness; but the Demiurge is ignorant of such things, inasmuch as he is merely animal. Their mother dwells in that place which is above the heavens, that is, in the intermediate abode; the Demiurge in the heavenly place, that is, in the hebdomad; but the Cosmocrator in this our world. The corporeal elements of the world, again, sprang, as we before remarked, from bewilderment and perplexity, as from a more ignoble source. Thus the earth arose from her state of stupor; water from the agitation caused by her fear; air from the consolidation of her grief; while fire, producing death and corruption, was inherent in all these elements, even as they teach that ignorance also lay concealed in these three passions.

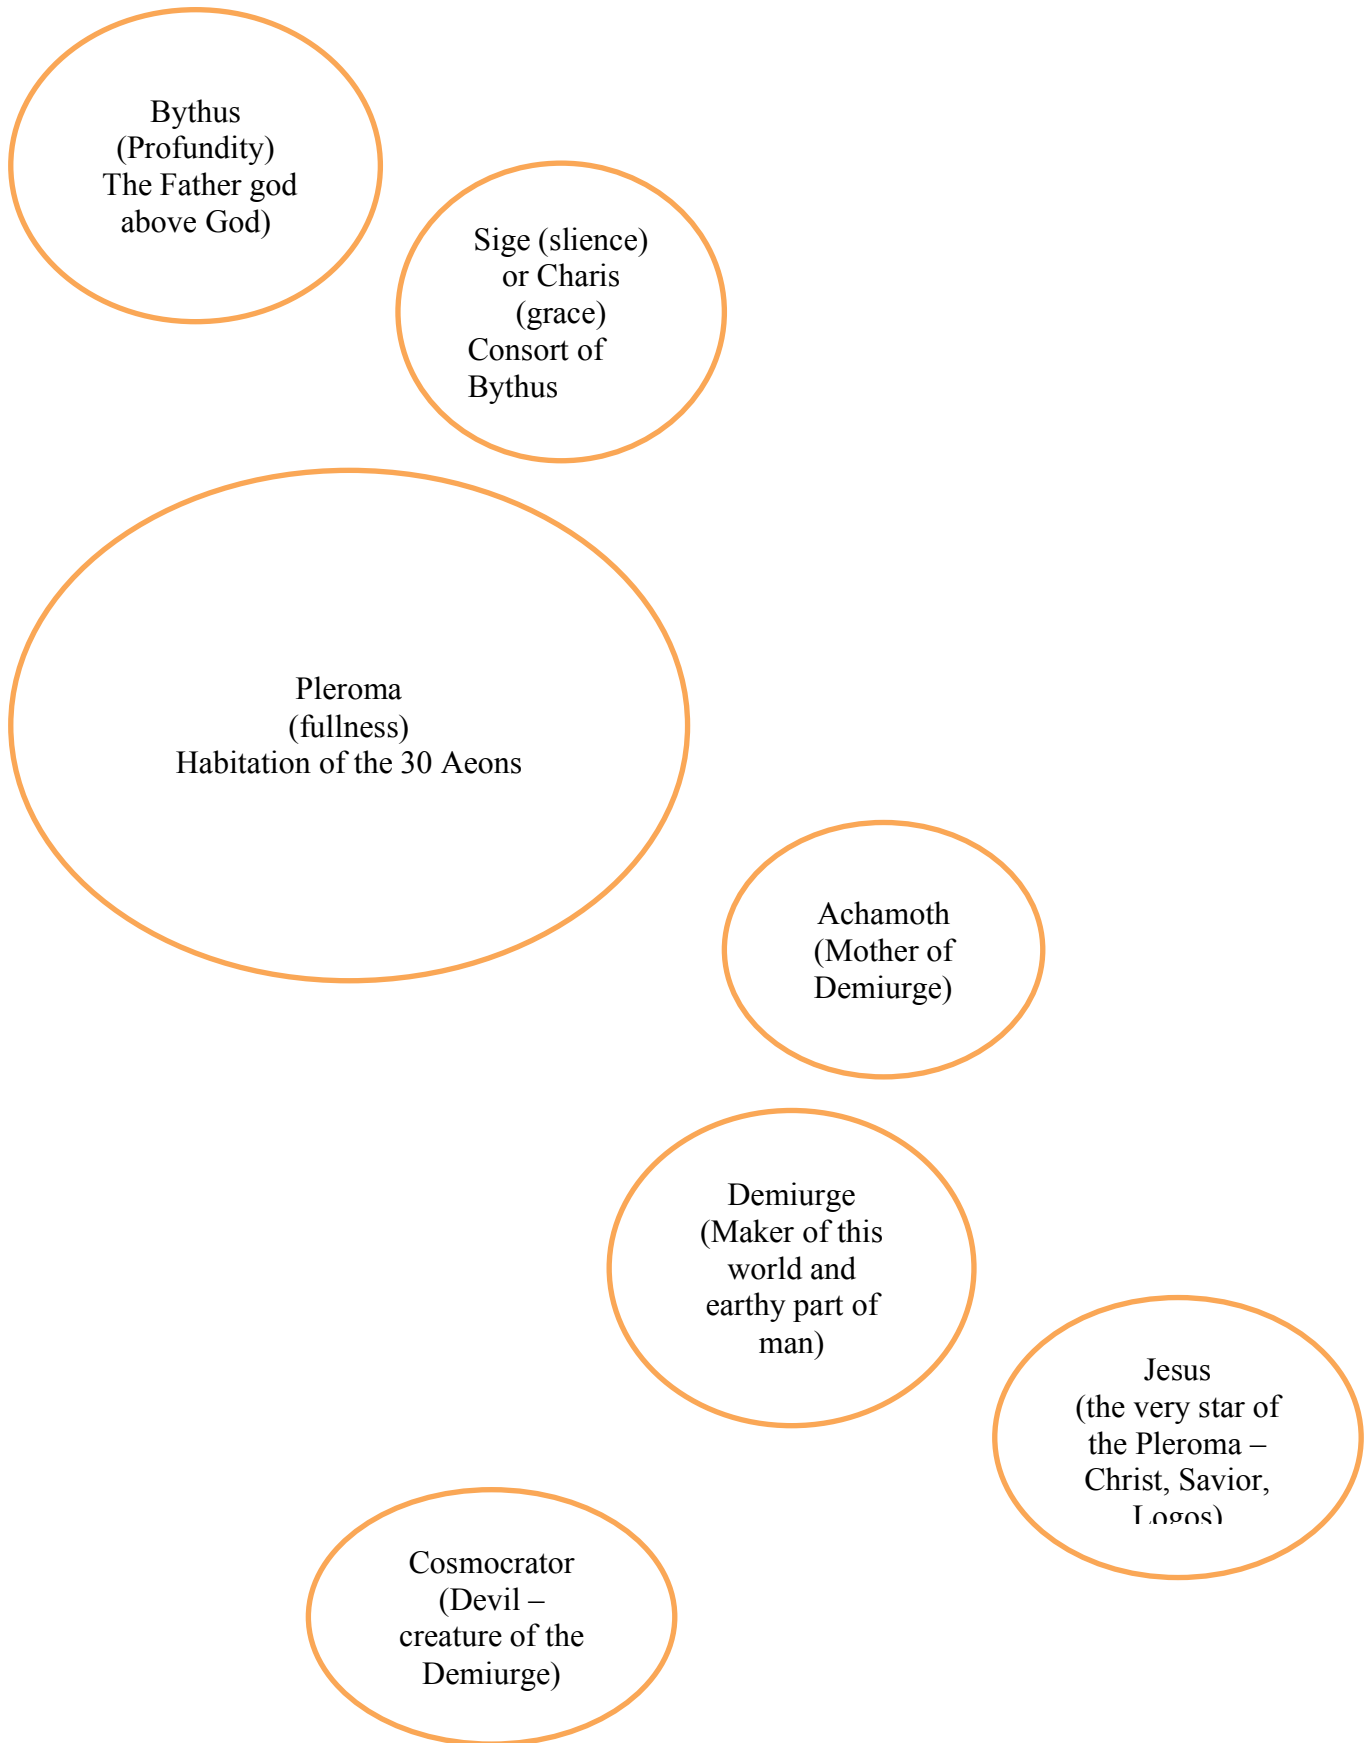

5. Having thus formed the world, he (the Demiurge) also created the earthy [part of] man, not taking him from this dry earth, but from an invisible substance consisting of fusible and fluid matter, and then afterwards, as they define the process, breathed into him the animal part of his nature. It was this latter which was created after his image and likeness. The material part, indeed, was very near to God, so far as the image went, but not of the same substance with him. The animal, on the other hand, was so in respect to likeness; and hence his substance was called the spirit of life, because it took its rise from a spiritual outflowing. After all this, he was, they say, enveloped all round with a covering of skin; and by this they mean the outward sensitive flesh.

6. But they further affirm that the Demiurge himself was ignorant of that offspring of his mother Achamoth, which she brought forth as a consequence of her contemplation of those angels who waited on the Saviour, and which was, like herself, of a spiritual nature. She took advantage of this ignorance to deposit it (her production) in him without his knowledge, in order that, being by his instrumentality infused into that animal soul proceeding from himself, and being thus carried as in a womb in this material body, while it gradually increased in strength, might in course of time become fitted for the reception of perfect rationality. 85 An account is here given of the infusion of a spiritual principle into mankind. The Demiurge himself could give no more than the animal soul; but, unwittingly to himself, he was made the instrument of conveying that spiritual essence from Achamoth, which had grown up within her from the contemplation of those angels who accompanied the Saviour. Thus it came to pass, then, according to them, that, without any knowledge on the part of the Demiurge, the man formed by his inspiration was at the same time, through an unspeakable providence, rendered a spiritual man by the simultaneous inspiration received from Sophia. For, as he was ignorant of his mother, so neither did he recognise her offspring. This [offspring] they also declare to be the Ecclesia, an emblem of the Ecclesia which is above. This, then, is the kind of man whom they conceive of: he has his animal soul from the Demiurge, his body from the earth, his fleshy part from matter, and his spiritual man from the mother Achamoth.

Now putting all of this loosely together, we have the following scheme painted by Irenaeus of the Gnostic doctrines.

Gnostic Scheme

Aeons in the Pleroma

Now, with this as background, we return to paragraph one of this Book 2: Chapter XIX. Irenaeus asks, “But what sort of talk also is this concerning their seed—that it was conceived by the mother according to the configuration of those angels who wait upon the Saviour,—shapeless, without form, and imperfect; and that it was deposited in the Demiurge without his knowledge, in order that through his instrumentality it might attain to perfection and form in that soul which he had, [so to speak,] filled with seed?” Irenaeus concludes that to teach “This is to affirm, in the first place, that those angels who wait upon their Saviour are imperfect, and without figure or form; if indeed that which was conceived according to their appearance was generated any such kind of being [as has been described].”

Irenaeus is here restating a belief of the Gnostics, that the mother, Achamoth, conceived seed “according to the configuration of those angels who wait upon the Saviour,—shapeless, without form, and imperfect.” This seed according to Gnostic belief apparently “was deposited in the Demiurge without his knowledge.” This was so that “through his instrumentality it might attain to perfection and form in that soul which he had, [so to speak,] filled with seed.” Irenaeus then reasons that, if the seed needed to attain to perfection, then it was imperfect. Therefore, if it was conceived according to the appearance of the angels, then this is the same as affirming “in the first place, that those angels who wait upon their Saviour are imperfect, and without figure or form; if indeed that which was conceived according to their appearance was generated any such kind of being [as has been described].”

To summarize, in paragraph one we learn that the Demiurge received a deposit of seed within himself without his knowledge, and that he would deposit a seed in a human being, and that it would ripen into perfection so to speak, and form in the soul he had filled with seed, that is, that he had deposited seed in.

In paragraph two, Irenaeus testifies, “Then, in the next place, as to their saying that the Creator was ignorant of that deposit of seed which took place into him, and again, of that impartation of seed which was made by him to man, their words are futile and vain, and are in no way susceptible of proof.” Irenaeus then reasons, “For how could he have been ignorant of it, if that seed had possessed any substance and peculiar properties? If, on the other hand, it was without substance and without quality, and so was really nothing, then, as a matter of course, he was ignorant of it. For those things which have a certain motion of their own, and quality, either of heat, or swiftness, or sweetness, or which differ from others in brilliance, do not escape the notice even of men, since they mingle in the sphere of human action: far less can they [be hidden from] God, the Maker of this universe.” Remember that “God, the Maker of this universe,” according to the Gnostic doctrine, is the Demiurge, and inferior god to Bythus.

Irenaeus then concludes, “With reason, however, [is it said, that] their seed was not known to Him, since it is without any quality of general utility, and without the substance requisite for any action, and is, in fact, a pure nonentity.” Irenaeus then testifies, “It really seems to me, that, with a view to such opinions, the Lord expressed Himself thus: “For every idle word that men speak, they shall give account on the day of judgment,” referring to Matthew 12:36.

To summarize, here in paragraph two, Irenaeus pulls apart the Gnostic scheme. He asks how could the Creator, that is the Demiurge, be ignorant of seed being placed within him, and even more, how could he be ignorant “of that impartation of seed which was made by him to man?” Irenaeus says that “their words are futile and vain, and are in no way susceptible of proof.” Even men, he says, notice that which is “in the sphere of human action.” How then could “they [be hidden from] God, the Maker of this universe?” And so Irenaeus concludes that these are teachers “who fill men’s ears with idle talk,” and they shall “stand at the throne of judgment,” and “render an account for those things which they have vainly imagined and falsely uttered against the Lord,” referring to Jesus’ words in Matthew 12 (KJV):36 But I say unto you, That every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment.

Bravo Irenaeus! Continuing in paragraph two, we see that Irenaeus then judges, “For all teachers of a like character to these, who fill men’s ears with idle talk, shall, when they stand at the throne of judgment, render an account for those things which they have vainly imagined and falsely uttered against the Lord, proceeding, as they have done, to such a height of audacity as to declare of themselves that, on account of the substance of their seed, they are acquainted with the spiritual Pleroma, because that man who dwells within reveals to them the true Father; for the animal nature required to be disciplined by means of the senses.” We will give more description of “the animal nature” Irenaeus mentions here shortly.

Irenaeus then records, “But [they hold that] the Demiurge, while receiving into himself the whole of this seed, through its being deposited in him by the Mother, still remained utterly ignorant of all things, and had no understanding of anything connected with the Pleroma.”

Again to summarize, in order to show the absolute absurdity of the Gnostic teachings, Irenaeus reasons how could man be aware of the seed placed in him, and yet “the Demiurge, while receiving into himself the whole of this seed, through its being deposited in him by the Mother, still remained utterly ignorant of all things, and had no understanding of anything connected with the Pleroma.” The Pleroma again was where the aeons dwelt.

Now we note that the Demiurge was a term borrowed from Greek philosophy by the Gnostics. In the Columbia Encyclopedia, we find the following definition:

demiurge (dēm'ēûrj') [Gr.,=workman, craftsman], name given by Plato in a mythological passage in the Timaeus to the creator God. In Gnosticism the Demiurge, creator of the material world, was not God but the Archon, or chief of the lowest order of spirits or aeons. According to the Gnostics, the Demiurge was able to endow man only with psyche (sensuous soul)—the pneuma (rational soul) having been added by God. The Gnostics identified the Demiurge with the Jehovah of the Hebrews. In philosophy the term is used to denote a divinity who is the builder of the universe rather than its creator. The Columbia Encyclopedia, 6th ed. | 2012 | Copyright.

Now with regard to “the animal nature” Irenaeus mentions above, we note that Irenaeus says in this paragraph two that the Gnostics “proceeding, as they have done, to such a height of audacity as to declare of themselves that, on account of the substance of their seed, they are acquainted with the spiritual Pleroma, because that man who dwells within reveals to them the true Father; for the animal nature required to be disciplined by means of the senses.”

This “animal nature” is referred to by Irenaeus in Book 1: Chapter VI as follows:

1. There being thus three kinds of substances, they declare of all that is material (which they also describe as being “on the left hand”) that it must of necessity perish, inasmuch as it is incapable of receiving any afflatus of incorruption. As to every animal existence (which they also denominate “on the right hand”), they hold that, inasmuch as it is a mean between the spiritual and the material, it passes to the side to which inclination draws it. Spiritual substance, again, they describe as having been sent forth for this end, that, being here united with that which is animal, it might assume shape, the two elements being simultaneously subjected to the same discipline. And this they declare to be “the salt” 86 Matthew v. 13, 14. and “the light of the world.” For the animal substance had need of training by means of the outward senses; and on this account they affirm that the world was created, as well as that the Saviour came to the animal substance (which was possessed of free-will), that He might secure for it salvation. For they affirm that He received the first-fruits of those whom He was to save [as follows], from Achamoth that which was spiritual, while He was invested by the Demiurge with the animal Christ, but was begirt 87 “The doctrine of Valentinus, therefore,” says Harvey, “as regards the human nature of Christ, was essentially Docetic. His body was animal, but not material, and only visible and tangible as having been formed κατ' οἰκονομίαν and κατεσκευασμένον ἀρρήτω τέχνῃ.” by a [special] dispensation with a body endowed with an animal nature, yet constructed with unspeakable skill, so that it might be visible and tangible, and capable of enduring suffering. At the same time, they deny that He assumed anything material [into His nature], since indeed matter is incapable of salvation. They further hold that the consummation of all things will take place when all that is spiritual has been formed and perfected by Gnosis (knowledge); and by this they mean spiritual men who have attained to the perfect knowledge of God, and been initiated into these mysteries by Achamoth. And they represent themselves to be these persons.

2. Animal men, again, are instructed in animal things; such men, namely, as are established by their works, and by a mere faith, while they have not perfect knowledge. We of the Church, they say, are these persons. 88 [That is, carnal; men of the carnal mind, psychic instead of pneumatic. Rom. viii. 6.] Wherefore also they maintain that good works are necessary to us, for that otherwise it is impossible we should be saved. But as to themselves, they hold that they shall be entirely and undoubtedly saved, not by means of conduct, but because they are spiritual by nature. 89 On account of what they had received from Achamoth. For, just as it is impossible that material substance should partake of salvation (since, indeed, they maintain that it is incapable of receiving it), so again it is impossible that spiritual substance (by which they mean themselves) should ever come under the power of corruption, whatever the sort of actions in which they indulged. For even as gold, when submersed in filth, loses not on that account its beauty, but retains its own native qualities, the filth having no power to injure the gold, so they affirm that they cannot in any measure suffer hurt, or lose their spiritual substance, whatever the material actions in which they may be involved.

3. Wherefore also it comes to pass, that the “most perfect” among them addict themselves without fear to all those kinds of forbidden deeds of which the Scriptures assure us that “they who do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God.” 90 Galatians v. 21. For instance, they make no scruple about eating meats offered in sacrifice to idols, imagining that they can in this way contract no defilement. Then, again, at every heathen festival celebrated in honour of the idols, these men are the first to assemble; and to such a pitch do they go, that some of them do not even keep away from that bloody spectacle hateful both to God and men, in which gladiators either fight with wild beasts, or singly encounter one another. Others of them yield themselves up to the lusts of the flesh with the utmost greediness, maintaining that carnal things should be allowed to the carnal nature, while spiritual things are provided for the spiritual. Some of them, moreover, are in the habit of defiling those women to whom they have taught the above doctrine, as has frequently been confessed by those women who have been led astray by certain of them, on their returning to the Church of God, and acknowledging this along with the rest of their errors. Others of them, too, openly and without a blush, having become passionately attached to certain women, seduce them away from their husbands, and contract marriages of their own with them. Others of them, again, who pretend at first to live in all modesty with them as with sisters, have in course of time been revealed in their true colours, when the sister has been found with child by her [pretended] brother.

4. And committing many other abominations and impieties, they run us down (who from the fear of God guard against sinning even in thought or word) as utterly contemptible and ignorant persons, while they highly exalt themselves, and claim to be perfect, and the elect seed. For they declare that we simply receive grace for use, wherefore also it will again be taken away from us; but that they themselves have grace as their own special possession, which has descended from above by means of an unspeakable and indescribable conjunction; and on this account more will be given them. 91 Comp. Luke xix. 26. They maintain, therefore, that in every way it is always necessary for them to practise the mystery of conjunction. And that they may persuade the thoughtless to believe this, they are in the habit of using these very words, “Whosoever being in this world does not so love a woman as to obtain possession of her, is not of the truth, nor shall attain to the truth. But whosoever being of 92 Comp. John xvii. 16. The Valentinians, while in the world, claimed to be not of the world, as animal men were. this world has intercourse with woman, shall not attain to the truth, because he has so acted under the power of concupiscence.” On this account, they tell us that it is necessary for us whom they call animal men, and describe as being of the world, to practise continence and good works, that by this means we may attain at length to the intermediate habitation, but that to them who are called “the spiritual and perfect” such a course of conduct is not at all necessary. For it is not conduct of any kind which leads into the Pleroma, but the seed sent forth thence in a feeble, immature state, and here brought to perfection.

Irenaeus records that the Gnostics believed that there were three kinds of substances, the material, the spiritual, and the animal. The animal “is a mean between the spiritual and the material,” and “it passes to the side to which inclination draws it.” The Gnostics describe the spiritual substance “as having been sent forth for this end, that, being here united with that which is animal, it might assume shape, the two elements being simultaneously subjected to the same discipline.” Irenaeus says that they declare this to be “the salt” and “the light of the world.” The Gnostics believed that “the animal substance had need of training by means of the outward senses; and on this account they affirm that the world was created, as well as that the Saviour came to the animal substance (which was possessed of free-will), that He might secure for it salvation.” The Gnostics, according to Irenaeus, also deny that Christ “assumed anything material [into His nature], since indeed matter is incapable of salvation.” Irenaeus here states also that, “They further hold that the consummation of all things will take place when all that is spiritual has been formed and perfected by Gnosis (knowledge); and by this they mean spiritual men who have attained to the perfect knowledge of God, and been initiated into these mysteries by Achamoth. And they represent themselves to be these persons.”

So we could liken the “animal” to the soul of man, that is, the unseen parts of man relating to the mind, will, emotions, and conscience. The flesh would relate to the “material” part of man which cannot be saved according to Gnostic teaching.

In paragraph three, Irenaeus explains the Gnostic beliefs as he records, “And that they are the truly “spiritual,” inasmuch as a certain particle of the Father of the universe has been deposited in their souls, since, according to their assertions, they have souls formed of the same substance as the Demiurge himself, yet that he, although he received from the Mother, once for all, the whole [of the divine] seed, and possessed it in himself, still remained of an animal nature, and had not the slightest understanding of those things which are above, which things they boast that they themselves understand, while they are still on earth;—does not this crown all possible absurdity?” Irenaeus thus concludes, “For to imagine that the very same seed conveyed knowledge and perfection to the souls of these men, while it only gave rise to ignorance in the God who made them, is an opinion that can be held only by those utterly frantic, and totally destitute of common sense.”

Now we must agree with Irenaeus that the assertions of the Gnostics “crown all possible absurdity.” For “to imagine that the very same seed conveyed knowledge and perfection to the souls of these men, while it only gave rise to ignorance in the God who made them, is an opinion that can be held only by those utterly frantic, and totally destitute of common sense,” as Irenaeus says.

In paragraph four, Irenaeus argues, “Further, it is also a most absurd and groundless thing for them to say that the seed was, by being thus deposited, reduced to form and increased, and so was prepared for all the reception of perfect rationality.” Irenaeus then reasons, “For there will be in it an admixture of matter—that substance which they hold to have been derived from ignorance and defect; [and this will prove itself] more apt and useful than was the light of their Father, if indeed, when born, according to the contemplation of that [light], it was without form or figure, but derived from this [matter], form, and appearance, and increase, and perfection.”

To summarize, Irenaeus points out that, “if indeed, when born, according to the contemplation of that [light],” the seed “was without form or figure, but derived from this [matter], form, and appearance, and increase, and perfection,” it will be more “useful than was the light of their Father.”

Irenaeus further reasons, “For if that light which proceeds from the Pleroma was the cause to a spiritual being that it possessed neither form, nor appearance, nor its own special magnitude, while its descent to this world added all these things to it, and brought it to perfection, then a sojourn here (which they also term darkness) would seem much more efficacious and useful than was the light of their Father.”

This we would call common sense. Bravo Irenaeus!

Irenaeus then rightly asks, “But how can it be regarded as other than ridiculous, to affirm that their mother ran the risk of being almost extinguished in matter, and was almost on the point of being destroyed by it, had she not then with difficulty stretched herself outwards, and leaped, [as it were,] out of herself, receiving assistance from the Father; but that her seed increased in this same matter, and received a form, and was made fit for the reception of perfect rationality; and this, too, while “bubbling up” among substances dissimilar and unfamiliar to itself, according to their own declaration that the earthly is opposed to the spiritual, and the spiritual to the earthly?” Irenaeus then concludes as he asks, “How, then, could “a little particle,” as they say, increase, and receive shape, and reach perfection, in the midst of substances contrary to and unfamiliar to itself?”

Yes, to summarize again, Irenaeus asks “how can it be regarded as other than ridiculous, to affirm that,” the “earthly is opposed to the spiritual, and the spiritual to the earthly,” and yet assert that “a little particle” could “increase, and receive shape, and reach perfection, in the midst of substances contrary to and unfamiliar to itself?”

Then in paragraph five, Irenaeus asks, “Did their mother, when she beheld the angels, bring forth the seed all at once, or only one by one [in succession]?” Irenaeus reasons that “If she brought forth the whole simultaneously and at once, that which was thus produced cannot now be of an infantile character: its descent, therefore, into those men who now exist must be superfluous.” In this regard the editor’s note, 443, is helpful as it explains, “That is, there could be no need for its descending into them that it might increase, receive form, and thus be prepared for the reception of perfect reason.” The editor’s note makes perfect sense.

Irenaeus then argues, “But if one by one, then she did not form her conception according to the figure of those angels whom she beheld; for, contemplating them all together, and once for all, so as to conceive by them, she ought to have brought forth once for all the offspring of those from whose forms she had once for all conceived.”

In paragraph five, Irenaeus does battle with the wind. Whether the mother in the Gnostic scheme gave birth all at once or one by one is a question to which there is no answer. This argument probably made more sense to those who were immediately impacted by the Gnostic teaching in Irenaeus’ time.

In paragraph six, Irenaeus, being most familiar with the Gnostic doctrine, asks, “Why was it, too, that, beholding the angels along with the Saviour, she did indeed conceive their images, but not that of the Saviour, who is far more beautiful than they?” Irenaeus chides the Gnostics as he again asks, “Did He not please her; and did she not, on that account, conceive after His likeness?” Irenaeus then adds, “How was it, too, that the Demiurge, whom they can call an animal being, having, as they maintain, his own special magnitude and figure, was produced perfect as respects his substance; while that which is spiritual, which also ought to be more effective than that which is animal, was sent forth imperfect, and he required to descend into a soul, that in it he might obtain form, and thus becoming perfect, might be rendered fit for the reception of perfect reason?”

Irenaeus thus concludes, that “If, then, he obtains form in mere earthly and animal men, he can no longer be said to be after the likeness of angels whom they call lights, but [after the likeness] of those men who are here below.” Irenaeus then explains, “For he will not possess in that case the likeness and appearance of angels, but of those souls in whom also he receives shape;” Irenaeus then reasons, “just as water when poured into a vessel takes the form of that vessel, and if on any occasion it happens to congeal in it, it will acquire the form of the vessel in which it has thus been frozen, since souls themselves possess the figure of the body [in which they dwell]; for they themselves have been adapted to the vessel [in which they exist], as I have said before.” Of course, Irenaeus makes perfect sense here.

Again Irenaeus reasons, “If, then, that seed [referred to] is here solidified and formed into a definite shape, it will possess the figure of a man, and not the form of the angels.” Irenaeus rightly asks, “How is it possible, therefore, that that seed should be after images of the angels, seeing it has obtained a form after the likeness of men?” And again Irenaeus asks, “Why, again, since it was of a spiritual nature, had it any need of descending into flesh?” Irenaeus then concludes, “For what is carnal stands in need of that which is spiritual, if indeed it is to be saved, that in it it may be sanctified and cleared from all impurity, and that what is mortal may be swallowed up by immortality; but that which is spiritual has no need whatever of those things which are here below. For it is not we who benefit it, but it that improves us.”

In paragraph six, the gist of Irenaeus’ argument is summed up when he points out that, “If, then, that seed [referred to] is here solidified and formed into a definite shape, it will possess the figure of a man, and not the form of the angels.” How then “is it possible, therefore,” Irenaeus asks, “that that seed should be after images of the angels, seeing it has obtained a form after the likeness of men?” Again, Irenaeus combats this heresy as he asks, “Why, again, since it was of a spiritual nature, had it any need of descending into flesh?” Irenaeus points out that “what is carnal stands in need of that which is spiritual, if indeed it is to be saved, that in it it may be sanctified and cleared from all impurity, and that what is mortal may be swallowed up by immortality; but that which is spiritual has no need whatever of those things which are here below.” We don’t benefit the spiritual but the spiritual benefits us, Irenaeus argues.

In paragraph seven, Irenaeus reasons, “Still more manifestly is that talk of theirs concerning their seed proved to be false, and that in a way which must be evident to every one, by the fact that they declare those souls which have received seed from the Mother to be superior to all others; wherefore also they have been honoured by the Demiurge, and constituted princes, and kings, and priests. For if this were true, the high priest Caiaphas, and Annas, and the rest of the chief priests, and doctors of the law, and rulers of the people, would have been the first to believe in the Lord, agreeing as they did with respect to that relationship; and even before them should have been Herod the king.” Irenaeus then testifies, “But since neither he, nor the chief priests, nor the rulers, nor the eminent of the people, turned to Him [in faith], but, on the contrary, those who sat begging by the highway, the deaf, and the blind, while He was rejected and despised by others, according to what Paul declares, “For ye see your calling, brethren, that there are not many wise men among you, not many noble, not many mighty; but those things of the world which were despised hath God chosen,” referring in context to 1 Corinthians 1 (KJV):26 For ye see your calling, brethren, how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called: 27 But God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty; 28 And base things of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to nought things that are: 29 That no flesh should glory in his presence. 30 But of him are ye in Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption: 31 That, according as it is written, He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord.

Irenaeus rightly concludes, “Such souls, therefore, were not superior to others on account of the seed deposited in them, nor on this account were they honoured by the Demiurge.”

In paragraph eight, Irenaeus points out the obvious as he affirms, “As to the point, then, that their system is weak and untenable as well as utterly chimerical, enough has been said. For it is not needful, to use a common proverb, that one should drink up the ocean who wishes to learn that its water is salt.” Irenaeus then reasons, “But, just as in the case of a statue which is made of clay, but coloured on the outside that it may be thought to be of gold, while it really is of clay, any one who takes out of it a small particle, and thus laying it open reveals the clay, will set free those who seek the truth from a false opinion; in the same way have I (by exposing not a small part only, but the several heads of their system which are of the greatest importance) shown to as many as do not wish wittingly to be led astray, what is wicked, deceitful, seductive, and pernicious, connected with the school of the Valentinians, and all those other heretics who promulgate wicked opinions respecting the Demiurge, that is, the Fashioner and Former of this universe, and who is in fact the only true God—exhibiting, [as I have done,] how easily their views are overthrown.”

In paragraph eight, Irenaeus boldly declares that the Gnostic “system is weak and untenable as well as utterly chimerical.” Irenaeus says that the Gnostics are covered on the outside with gold but on the inside they are statues made of clay. While they are thought to be of gold, anyone who examines even “a small particle” of their teaching will reveal the clay, and “will set free those who seek the truth from a false opinion.” Again, Irenaeus boldly declares that “in the same way have I (by exposing not a small part only, but the several heads of their system which are of the greatest importance) shown to as many as do not wish wittingly to be led astray, what is wicked, deceitful, seductive, and pernicious, connected with the school of the Valentinians, and all those other heretics who promulgate wicked opinions respecting the Demiurge, that is, the Fashioner and Former of this universe, and who is in fact the only true God.” Irenaeus testifies that their views are easily overthrown, just as he has done here in this chapter of his writing.

And in paragraph nine, Irenaeus thunders as he states, “For who that has any intelligence, and possesses only a small proportion of truth, can tolerate them, when they affirm that:”

- “there is another god above the Creator;”
- “and that there is another Monogenes as well as another Word of God, whom also they describe as having been produced in [a state of] degeneracy”;
- “and another Christ, whom they assert to have been formed, along with the Holy Spirit, later than the rest of the Æons;”
- “and another Saviour, who, they say, did not proceed from the Father of all, but was a kind of joint production of those Æons who were formed in [a state of] degeneracy, and that He was produced of necessity on account of this very degeneracy?”

Irenaeus continues to describe the Gnostics’ doctrine as he testifies, “It is thus their opinion that, unless the Æons had been in a state of ignorance and degeneracy, neither Christ, nor the Holy Spirit, nor Horos, nor the Saviour, nor the angels, nor their Mother, nor her seed, nor the rest of the fabric of the world, would have been produced at all;” Irenaeus then points out in rebuttal, “but the universe would have been a desert, and destitute of the many good things which exist in it.” Irenaeus then testifies, “They are therefore not only chargeable with impiety against the Creator, declaring Him the fruit of a defect, but also against Christ and the Holy Spirit, affirming that they were produced on account of that defect; and, in like manner, that the Saviour [was produced] subsequently to [the existence of] that defect. And who will tolerate the remainder of their vain talk, which they cunningly endeavour to accommodate to the parables, and have in this way plunged both themselves, and those who give credit to them, in the profoundest depths of impiety?"

Wikipedia has the following for the word, Monogenes.

Monogenēs (μονογενής) is a Greek word which may be used both as an adjective monogenēs pais only child, or only legitimate child, special child, and also on its own as a noun; o monogenēs "the only one", or "the only legitimate child".

Wikipedia has the following for the word, Horos.

Horos - A figure entirely peculiar to Valentinian Gnosticism is that of Horos (the Limiter). The name is perhaps an echo of the Egyptian Horus. The task of Horos is to separate the fallen Aeons from the upper world of Aeons. At the same time he becomes a kind of world-creative power, who in this capacity helps to construct an ordered world out of Sophia and her passions. He is also called Stauros (cross), and we frequently meet with references to the figure of Stauros. Speculations about the Stauros are older than Christianity, and a Platonic conception may have been at work here.

Irenaeus boldly declares that the Gnostics “are therefore not only chargeable with impiety against the Creator, declaring Him the fruit of a defect, but also against Christ and the Holy Spirit, affirming that they were produced on account of that defect; and, in like manner, that the Saviour [was produced] subsequently to [the existence of] that defect.” Irenaeus adds that with “their vain talk, which they cunningly endeavour to accommodate to the parables,” the Gnostics have also “plunged both themselves, and those who give credit to them, in the profoundest depths of impiety.” Bravo Irenaeus! He has defended the faith admirably here.

Chapter 17: The Passion of Christ

Book 2: Chapter XX.—Futility of the arguments adduced to demonstrate the sufferings of the twelfth Æon, from the parables, the treachery of Judas, and the passion of our Saviour.

1. That they improperly and illogically apply both the parables and the actions of the Lord to their falsely-devised system, I prove as follows: They endeavour, for instance, to demonstrate that passion which, they say, happened in the case of the twelfth Æon, from this fact, that the passion of the Saviour was brought about by the twelfth apostle, and happened in the twelfth month. For they hold that He preached [only] for one year after His baptism. They maintain also that the same thing was clearly set forth in the case of her who suffered from the issue of blood. For the woman suffered during twelve years, and through touching the hem of the Saviour's garment she was made whole by that power which went forth from the Saviour, and which, they affirm, had a previous existence. For that Power who suffered was stretching herself outwards and flowing into immensity, so that she was in danger of being dissolved into the general substance [of the Æons]; but then, touching the primary Tetrad, which is typified by the hem of the garment, she was arrested, and ceased from her passion.

2. Then, again, as to their assertion that the passion of the twelfth Æon was proved through the conduct of Judas, how is it possible that Judas can be compared [with this Æon] as being an emblem of her—he who was expelled from the number of the twelve, ⁴⁵⁰ Or, “from the twelfth number”—the twelfth position among the apostles. And never restored to his place? For that Æon, whose type they declare Judas to be, after being separated from her Enthymesis, was restored or recalled [to her former position]; but Judas was deprived [of his office], and cast out, while Matthias was ordained in his place, according to what is written, “And his bishopric let another take.” ⁴⁵¹ Acts i. 20, from Ps. cix. 8. They ought therefore to maintain that the twelfth Æon was cast out of the Pleroma, and that another was produced, or sent forth to fill her place; if, that is to say, she is pointed at in Judas. Moreover, they tell us that it was the Æon herself who suffered, but Judas was the betrayer, [and not the sufferer.] Even they themselves acknowledge that it was the suffering Christ, and not Judas, who came to [the endurance of] passion. How, then, could Judas, the betrayer of Him who had to suffer for our salvation, be the type and image of that Æon who suffered?

3. But, in truth, the passion of Christ was neither similar to the passion of the Æon, nor did it take place in similar circumstances. For the Æon underwent a passion of dissolution and destruction, so that she who suffered was in danger also of being destroyed. But the Lord, our Christ, underwent a valid, and not a merely ⁴⁵² The text is here uncertain. Most editions read “et quæ non cederet,” but Harvey prefers “quæ non accederet” (for “accideret”), and remarks that the corresponding Greek would be καὶ οὐ τυχόν, which we have translated as above. accidental passion; not only was He Himself not in danger of being destroyed, but He also established fallen man ⁴⁵³ “Corruptum hominem.” by His own strength, and recalled him to incorruption. The Æon, again, underwent passion while she was seeking after the Father, and was not able to find Him; but the Lord suffered that He might bring those who have wandered from the Father, back to knowledge and to His fellowship. The search into the greatness of the Father became to her a passion leading to destruction; but the Lord, having suffered, and bestowing the knowledge of the Father, conferred on us salvation. Her passion, as they declare, gave origin to a female offspring, weak, infirm, unformed, and ineffective; but His passion gave rise to strength and power. For the Lord, through means of suffering, “ascending into the lofty place, led captivity captive, gave gifts to men,” ⁴⁵⁴ Ps. lxxviii. 18; Eph. iv. 8. and conferred on those that believe in Him the power “to tread upon serpents and scorpions, and on all the power of the enemy,” ⁴⁵⁵ Luke x. 19; [Mark xvi. 17, 18.] that is, of the leader of apostasy. Our Lord also by His passion destroyed death, and dispersed error, and put an end to corruption, and destroyed ignorance, while He manifested life and revealed truth, and bestowed the gift of incorruption. But their Æon, when she had suffered, established ⁴⁵⁶ Though the reading “substituit” is found in all the mss.

and editions, it has been deemed corrupt, and “sustinuit” has been proposed instead of it. Harvey supposes it the equivalent of ὑπέστησε, and then somewhat strangely adds “for ἀπέστησε.” There seems to us no difficulty in the word, and consequently no necessity for change. ignorance, and brought forth a substance without shape, out of which all material works have been produced—death, corruption, error, and such like.

Summary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus explains the Gnostic heresy as he says, “That they improperly and illogically apply both the parables and the actions of the Lord to their falsely-devised system, I prove as follows:”

- “They endeavour, for instance, to demonstrate that passion which, they say, happened in the case of the twelfth Æon, from this fact, that the passion of the Saviour was brought about by the twelfth apostle, and happened in the twelfth month.”
- “For they hold that He preached [only] for one year after His baptism.”
- “They maintain also that the same thing was clearly set forth in the case of her who suffered from the issue of blood. For the woman suffered during twelve years, and through touching the hem of the Saviour’s garment she was made whole by that power which went forth from the Saviour, and which, they affirm, had a previous existence. For that Power who suffered was stretching herself outwards and flowing into immensity, so that she was in danger of being dissolved into the general substance [of the Æons]; but then, touching the primary Tetrad, which is typified by the hem of the garment, she was arrested, and ceased from her passion.”

In paragraph two, Irenaeus debunks the Gnostic heresy about Judas as he explains, “Then, again, as to their assertion that the passion of the twelfth Æon was proved through the conduct of Judas, how is it possible that Judas can be compared [with this Æon] as being an emblem of her—he who was expelled from the number of the twelve, And never restored to his place? For that Æon, whose type they declare Judas to be, after being separated from her Enthymesis, was restored or recalled [to her former position]; but Judas was deprived [of his office], and cast out, while Matthias was ordained in his place, according to what is written, “And his bishopric let another take,” referring to Acts 1:20 and Psalm 109:8.

Irenaeus continues to show the unreasonableness of Gnostic teaching as he explains further, “They ought therefore to maintain that the twelfth Æon was cast out of the Pleroma, and that another was produced, or sent forth to fill her place; if, that is to say, she is pointed at in Judas. Moreover, they tell us that it was the Æon herself who suffered, but Judas was the betrayer, [and not the sufferer.] Even they themselves acknowledge that it was the suffering Christ, and not Judas, who came to [the endurance of] passion. How, then, could Judas, the betrayer of Him who had to suffer for our salvation, be the type and image of that Æon who suffered?”

In paragraph three, Irenaeus contrasts the “passion of Christ” with “the passion of the Aeon,” as he testifies, “But, in truth, the passion of Christ was neither similar to the passion of the Æon, nor did it take place in similar circumstances.” Irenaeus then makes the following observations about the differences between the “the passion of the Aeon” and the “passion of Christ”:

- “For the Æon underwent a passion of dissolution and destruction, so that she who suffered was in danger also of being destroyed. But the Lord, our Christ, underwent a valid, and not a merely accidental passion; not only was He Himself not in danger of being destroyed, but He also established fallen man by His own strength, and recalled him to incorruption.”
- “The Æon, again, underwent passion while she was seeking after the Father, and was not able to find Him; but the Lord suffered that He might bring those who have wandered from the Father, back to knowledge and to His fellowship.”
- “The search into the greatness of the Father became to her a passion leading to destruction; but the Lord, having suffered, and bestowing the knowledge of the Father, conferred on us salvation.”
- “Her passion, as they declare, gave origin to a female offspring, weak, infirm, unformed, and ineffective; but His passion gave rise to strength and power. For the Lord, through means of suffering, “ascending into the lofty place, led captivity captive, gave gifts to men,” referring to Psalm 68:18 and Ephesians 4:8, “and conferred on those that believe in Him the power “to tread upon serpents and scorpions, and on all the power of the enemy,” referring to Luke 10:19 and Mark 16:17-18, “that is, of the leader of apostasy.”

- “Our Lord also by His passion destroyed death, and dispersed error, and put an end to corruption, and destroyed ignorance, while He manifested life and revealed truth, and bestowed the gift of incorruption. But their Æon, when she had suffered, ignorance, and brought forth a substance without shape, out of which all material works have been produced—death, corruption, error, and such like.”

Commentary: Here Irenaeus points out the error of the Gnostics in trying to compare the Passion of Jesus Christ to the 12th Æon. We could summarize the difference simply by saying that Jesus succeeded and the 12th Æon failed.

In paragraph one, Irenaeus explains the Gnostic heresy as he says, “That they improperly and illogically apply both the parables and the actions of the Lord to their falsely-devised system, I prove as follows:”

- “They endeavour, for instance, to demonstrate that passion which, they say, happened in the case of the twelfth Æon, from this fact, that the passion of the Saviour was brought about by the twelfth apostle, and happened in the twelfth month.”

There is no record in the Scriptures that Judas was the twelfth apostle.

- “For they hold that He preached [only] for one year after His baptism.”

The testimony of Scripture as we shall see in the following, Chapter 18: Irenaeus Believed Jesus’ Age about 50 Years, is that Jesus preached for three and one half years.

- “They maintain also that the same thing was clearly set forth in the case of her who suffered from the issue of blood. For the woman suffered during twelve years, and through touching the hem of the Saviour’s garment she was made whole by that power which went forth from the Saviour, and which, they affirm, had a previous existence. For that Power who suffered was stretching herself outwards and flowing into immensity, so that she was in danger of being dissolved into the general substance [of the Æons]; but then, touching the primary Tetrad, which is typified by the hem of the garment, she was arrested, and ceased from her passion.”

Nothing is said in the Scripture about an Æon, or a Tetrad. The passage they are referring to is recorded in Matthew 9 (NIV):20 Just then a woman who had been subject to bleeding for twelve years came up behind him and touched the edge of his cloak. 21 She said to herself, “If I only touch his cloak, I will be healed.” 22 Jesus turned and saw her. “Take heart, daughter,” he said, “your faith has healed you.” And the woman was healed at that moment.

Jesus points out that it was her faith that had made her well. The woman had faith in Jesus’ power to heal her. This is also stated in Mark 5 (NIV):25 And a woman was there who had been subject to bleeding for twelve years. 26 She had suffered a great deal under the care of many doctors and had spent all she had, yet instead of getting better she grew worse. 27 When she heard about Jesus, she came up behind him in the crowd and touched his cloak, 28 because she thought, “If I just touch his clothes, I will be healed.” 29 Immediately her bleeding stopped and she felt in her body that she was freed from her suffering. 30 At once Jesus realized that power had gone out from him. He turned around in the crowd and asked, “Who touched my clothes?” 31 “You see the people crowding against you,” his disciples answered, “and yet you can ask, ‘Who touched me?’” 32 But Jesus kept looking around to see who had done it. 33 Then the woman, knowing what had happened to her, came and fell at his feet and, trembling with fear, told him the whole truth. 34 He said to her, “Daughter, your faith has healed you. Go in peace and be freed from your suffering.”

Mark reveals that the power to heal the woman proceeded from Jesus. Though Jesus did not see the woman when she touched his garment, He perceived that power had gone out of Him. The woman herself came to Jesus and told Him the truth. She admitted that it was Jesus whom she had had faith in to heal her. No mention of Tetrads or Aeons is to be found here. The Scripture says that it was the Holy Spirit who empowered Jesus as we read in Acts 10 (KJV):38 How God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost and with power: who went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed of the devil; for God was with him.

In paragraph two, Irenaeus debunks the Gnostic heresy about Judas as he explains, “Then, again, as to their assertion that the passion of the twelfth Æon was proved through the conduct of Judas, how is it possible that Judas can be compared [with this Æon] as being an emblem of her—he who was expelled from the number of the twelve, And never restored to his place? For that Æon, whose type they declare Judas to be, after being separated from her Enthymesis, was restored or recalled [to her former position]; but Judas was deprived [of his office], and cast out, while Matthias was ordained in his place, according to what is written, “And his bishopric let another take,” referring in context to Acts 1 (KJV):15 And in those days Peter stood up in the midst of the disciples, and said, (the number of names together were about an hundred and twenty,) 16 Men and brethren, this scripture must needs have been fulfilled, which the Holy Ghost by the mouth of David spake before concerning Judas, which was guide to them that took Jesus. 17 For he was numbered with us, and had obtained part of this ministry. 18 Now this man purchased a field with the reward of iniquity; and falling headlong, he burst asunder in the midst, and all his bowels gushed out. 19 And it was known unto all the dwellers at Jerusalem; insomuch as that field is called in their proper tongue, Aeldama, that is to say, The field of blood. 20 For it is written in the book of Psalms, Let his habitation be desolate, and let no man dwell therein: and his bishoprick let another take. 21 Wherefore of these men which have companied with us all the time that the Lord Jesus went in and out among us, 22 Beginning from the baptism of John, unto that same day that he was taken up from us, must one be ordained to be a witness with us of his resurrection. 23 And they appointed two, Joseph called Barsabas, who was surnamed Justus, and Matthias. 24 And they prayed, and said, Thou, Lord, which knowest the hearts of all men, shew whether of these two thou hast chosen, 25 That he may take part of this ministry and apostleship, from which Judas by transgression fell, that he might go to his own place. 26 And they gave forth their lots; and the lot fell upon Matthias; and he was numbered with the eleven apostles.

And to Psalm 109 (KJV):8 Let his days be few; and let another take his office.

Irenaeus continues to show the unreasonableness of Gnostic teaching as he explains further, “They ought therefore to maintain that the twelfth Æon was cast out of the Pleroma, and that another was produced, or sent forth to fill her place; if, that is to say, she is pointed at in Judas. Moreover, they tell us that it was the Æon herself who suffered, but Judas was the betrayer, [and not the sufferer.] Even they themselves acknowledge that it was the suffering Christ, and not Judas, who came to [the endurance of] passion. How, then, could Judas, the betrayer of Him who had to suffer for our salvation, be the type and image of that Æon who suffered?”

Irenaeus’ argument is valid.

In paragraph three, Irenaeus contrasts the “passion of Christ” with “the passion of the Aeon,” as he testifies, “But, in truth, the passion of Christ was neither similar to the passion of the Æon, nor did it take place in similar circumstances.” Irenaeus then makes the following observations about the differences between the “the passion of the Aeon” and the “passion of Christ”:

The following attributes may be discerned concerning the “the passion of the Aeon”:

- the “Æon underwent a passion of dissolution and destruction, so that she who suffered was in danger also of being destroyed.”
- The “Æon, again, underwent passion while she was seeking after the Father, and was not able to find Him;”
- The “search into the greatness of the Father became to her a passion leading to destruction;”
- “Her passion, as they declare, gave origin to a female offspring, weak, infirm, unformed, and ineffective;”

- their Æon, when she had suffered, established ignorance, and brought forth a substance without shape, out of which all material works have been produced—death, corruption, error, and such like.”

The following attributes in contrast may be discerned concerning the “passion of the Christ”:

- the “Lord, our Christ, underwent a valid, and not a merely accidental passion; not only was He Himself not in danger of being destroyed, but He also established fallen man by His own strength, and recalled him to incorruption.”
- the “Lord suffered that He might bring those who have wandered from the Father, back to knowledge and to His fellowship.”
- the “Lord, having suffered, and bestowing the knowledge of the Father, conferred on us salvation.”
- “His passion gave rise to strength and power. For the Lord, through means of suffering, “ascending into the lofty place, led captivity captive, gave gifts to men,” referring to Psalm 68:18 and Ephesians 4:8, “and conferred on those that believe in Him the power “to tread upon serpents and scorpions, and on all the power of the enemy,” referring to Luke 10:19 and Mark 16:17-18, “that is, of the leader of apostasy.”
- “Our Lord also by His passion destroyed death, and dispersed error, and put an end to corruption, and destroyed ignorance, while He manifested life and revealed truth, and bestowed the gift of incorruption.”

Irenaeus points out in paragraph three that Jesus’ passion was real. Jesus’ death and resurrection were not a cunningly devised fairy tale as Peter testifies in 2 Peter 1 (NASB):16 For we did not follow cleverly devised tales when we made known to you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but we were eyewitnesses of His majesty. 17 For when He received honor and glory from God the Father, such an utterance as this was made to Him by the Majestic Glory, “This is My beloved Son with whom I am well-pleased”— 18 and we ourselves heard this utterance made from heaven when we were with Him on the holy mountain.

Being an eyewitness, Peter testifies that he and the other eyewitnesses who have written the Scriptures have the word of prophecy made more sure as we read in 2 Peter 1 (NASB):19 So we have the prophetic word made more sure, to which you do well to pay attention as to a lamp shining in a dark place, until the day dawns and the morning star arises in your hearts. 20 But know this first of all, that no prophecy of Scripture is a matter of one’s own interpretation, 21 for no prophecy was ever made by an act of human will, but men moved by the Holy Spirit spoke from God.

Peter spoke of things he really saw and heard as an eyewitness. Therefore when he was moved by the Holy Spirit to write his epistles, we do well to pay attention to him as he says, to a lamp shining in a dark place. Peter actually heard Jesus utter the words that Irenaeus refers to in Luke 10 (NASB):19 "Behold, I have given you authority to tread on serpents and scorpions, and over all the power of the enemy, and nothing will injure you.

These words are echoed in the Gospel of Mark in Mark 16 (NASB):18 "These signs will accompany those who have believed: in My name they will cast out demons, they will speak with new tongues; 19 they will pick up serpents, and if they drink any deadly poison, it will not hurt them; they will lay hands on the sick, and they will recover."

The Lord Jesus accomplished real things as Irenaeus points out when he says, “Our Lord also by His passion destroyed death, and dispersed error, and put an end to corruption, and destroyed ignorance, while He manifested life and revealed truth, and bestowed the gift of incorruption.”

Now Peter also testifies to the writings of Paul as we read in 2 Peter 3 (KJV):14 Wherefore, beloved, seeing that ye look for such things, be diligent that ye may be found of him in peace, without spot, and blameless. 15 And account that the longsuffering of our Lord is salvation; even as our beloved brother Paul also according to the wisdom given unto him hath written unto you; 16 As also in all his epistles, speaking in them of these things; in which are some things hard to be understood, which they that are unlearned and unstable wrest, as they do also the other scriptures, unto their own destruction.

Irenaeus also refers to Paul when he testifies, “His passion gave rise to strength and power. For the Lord, through means of suffering, “ascending into the lofty place, led captivity captive, gave gifts to men,” referring in context to Ephesians 4 (NASB):7 But to each one of us grace was given according to the measure of Christ’s gift. 8 Therefore it says, “WHEN HE ASCENDED ON HIGH, HE LED CAPTIVE A HOST OF CAPTIVES, AND HE GAVE GIFTS TO MEN.” 9 (Now this expression, “He ascended,” what does it mean except that He also had descended into the lower parts of the earth? 10 He who descended is Himself also He who ascended far above all the heavens, so that He might fill all things.)

Christ descended into the lower parts of the earth to lead those righteous men and women who had died prior to His death on the cross into heaven itself, just as Irenaeus testifies, “For the Lord, through means of suffering, “ascending into the lofty place, led captivity captive, gave gifts to men,” referring to Ephesians 4:8. This is a fulfillment of Psalm 68 which in context reads as in Psalm 68 (NASB):18 You have ascended on high, You have led captive Your captives; You have received gifts among men, Even among the rebellious also, that the LORD God may dwell there. 19 Blessed be the Lord, who daily bears our burden, The God who is our salvation. Selah. 20 God is to us a God of deliverances; And to GOD the Lord belong escapes from death. 21 Surely God will shatter the head of His enemies, The hairy crown of him who goes on in his guilty deeds.

When the Gnostics interpret the Scriptures in this way, they are like a thief trying to enter by another way, and not by the door as we read in John 10 (NIV):1 “Very truly I tell you Pharisees, anyone who does not enter the sheep pen by the gate, but climbs in by some other way, is a thief and a robber. 2 The one who enters by the gate is the shepherd of the sheep. 3 The gatekeeper opens the gate for him, and the sheep listen to his voice. He calls his own sheep by name and leads them out. 4 When he has brought out all his own, he goes on ahead of them, and his sheep follow him because they know his voice. 5 But they will never follow a stranger; in fact, they will run away from him because they do not recognize a stranger’s voice.” 6 Jesus used this figure of speech, but the Pharisees did not understand what he was telling them. 7 Therefore Jesus said again, “Very truly I tell you, I am the gate for the sheep. 8 All who have come before me are thieves and robbers, but the sheep have not listened to them. 9 I am the gate; whoever enters through me will be saved. They will come in and go out, and find pasture. 10 The thief comes only to steal and kill and destroy; I have come that they may have life, and have it to the full. 11 “I am the good shepherd. The good shepherd lays down his life for the sheep.

The Gnostics, just like thieves and robbers, have lied in wait to deceive by using Christian phrases out of context. Their words sound holy but they have taken Biblical terms completely out of context and used them to have an appearance of godliness, as it were in sheep’s clothing, but inwardly they are ravaging wolves.

Chapter 18: Irenaeus Believed Jesus' Age about 50 Years

Book 2: Chapter XXII.—The thirty Æons are not typified by the fact that Christ was baptized in His thirtieth year: He did not suffer in the twelfth month after His baptism, but was more than fifty years old when He died.

...

4. Being thirty years old when He came to be baptized, and then possessing the full age of a Master, 3131 Or, "teacher," magistri. He came to Jerusalem, so that He might be properly acknowledged 3132 Harvey strangely remarks here, that "the reading audiret, followed by Massuet, makes no sense." He gives audiretur in his text, but proposes to read ordiretur. The passage may, however, be translated as above, without departing from the Benedictine reading audiret. by all as a Master. For He did not seem one thing while He was another, as those affirm who describe Him as being man only in appearance; but what He was, that He also appeared to be. Being a Master, therefore, He also possessed the age of a Master, not despising or evading any condition of humanity, nor setting aside in Himself that law which He had 3133 "Neque solvens suam legem in se humani generis." Massuet would expunge "suam;" but, as Harvey well observes, "it has a peculiar significance, nor abrogating his own law." appointed for the human race, but sanctifying every age, by that period corresponding to it which belonged to Himself. For He came to save all through means of Himself—all, I say, who through Him are born again to God 3134 "Renascentur in Deum." The reference in these words is doubtless to baptism, as clearly appears from comparing book iii. 17, 1. —infants, 3135 It has been remarked by Wall and others, that we have here the statement of a valuable fact as to the baptism of infants in the primitive Church. and children, and boys, and youths, and old men. He therefore passed through every age, becoming an infant for infants, thus sanctifying infants; a child for children, thus sanctifying those who are of this age, being at the same time made to them an example of piety, righteousness, and submission; a youth for youths, becoming an example to youths, and thus sanctifying them for the Lord. So likewise He was an old man for old men, that He might be a perfect Master for all, not merely as respects the setting forth of the truth, but also as regards age, sanctifying at the same time the aged also, and becoming an example to them likewise. Then, at last, He came on to death itself, that He might be "the first-born from the dead, that in all things He might have the preeminence," 3136 Col. i. 18. the Prince of life, 3137 Acts iii. 15. existing before all, and going before all. 3138 [That our Lord was prematurely old may be inferred from the text which Irenæus regards as proof that he literally lived to be old. St. John viii. 56, 57; comp. Isa. liii. 2.]

5. They, however, that they may establish their false opinion regarding that which is written, "to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord," maintain that He preached for one year only, and then suffered in the twelfth month. [In speaking thus,] they are forgetful to their own disadvantage, destroying His whole work, and robbing Him of that age which is both more necessary and more honourable than any other; that more advanced age, I mean, during which also as a teacher He excelled all others. For how could He have had disciples, if He did not teach? And how could He have taught, unless He had reached the age of a Master? For when He came to be baptized, He had not yet completed His thirtieth year, but was beginning to be about thirty years of age (for thus Luke, who has mentioned His years, has expressed it: "Now Jesus was, as it were, beginning to be thirty years old," 3139 Luke iii. 23. when He came to receive baptism); and, [according to these men,] He preached only one year reckoning from His baptism. On completing His thirtieth year He suffered, being in fact still a young man, and who had by no means attained to advanced age. Now, that the first stage of early life embraces thirty years, 3140 The Latin text of this clause is, "Quia autem triginta annorum ætas prima indolis est juvenis" —words which it seems almost impossible to translate. Grabe regarded "indolis" as being in the nominative, while Massuet contends it is in the genitive case; and so regarding it, we might translate, "Now that the age of thirty is the first age of the mind of youth,” etc. But Harvey re-translates the clause into Greek as follows: Ὅτι δὲ ἡ τῶν τριάκοντα ἐτῶν ἡλικία ἢ πρώτη τῆς διαθήσεώς ἐστι νέας— words which we have endeavoured to render as above. The meaning clearly is, that the age of thirty marked the transition point from youth to maturity, and that this extends onwards to the fortieth year, every one will admit; but from the fortieth and fiftieth year a man begins to decline towards old age, which our Lord possessed while He still fulfilled the office of a Teacher, even as the Gospel and all the elders testify; those who were conversant in Asia with John, the disciple of the Lord, [affirming] that John conveyed to them that information. 3141 With respect to this extraordinary assertion of Irenæus, Harvey remarks: “The reader may here perceive the unsatisfactory character of tradition, where a mere fact is concerned. From reasonings founded upon the evangelical history, as well as from a preponderance of external testimony, it is most certain that our Lord’s ministry extended but little over three years; yet here Irenæus states that it included more than ten years, and appeals to a tradition derived, as he says, from those who had conversed with an apostle” And he remained among them up to the times of Trajan. 3142 Trajan’s reign commenced a.d. 98, and St. John is said to have lived to the age of a hundred years. Some of them, moreover, saw not only John, but the other apostles also, and heard the very same account from them, and bear testimony as to the [validity of] the statement. Whom then should we rather believe? Whether such men as these, or Ptolemæus, who never saw the apostles, and who never even in his dreams attained to the slightest trace of an apostle?

Summary: In paragraph four, Irenæus testifies that, “Being thirty years old when He came to be baptized,” referring to Luke 3:23, “and then possessing the full age of a Master, He came to Jerusalem, so that He might be properly acknowledged by all as a Master.” Irenæus then affirms, “For He did not seem one thing while He was another, as those affirm who describe Him as being man only in appearance; but what He was, that He also appeared to be.” Irenæus then asserts, “Being a Master, therefore, He also possessed the age of a Master, not despising or evading any condition of humanity, nor setting aside in Himself that law which He had appointed for the human race, but sanctifying every age, by that period corresponding to it which belonged to Himself.” Irenæus then testifies, “For He came to save all through means of Himself—all, I say, who through Him are born again to God—infants, and children, and boys, and youths, and old men,” referring possibly to John 1:12-13. Irenæus then affirms, “He therefore passed through every age, becoming an infant for infants, thus sanctifying infants; a child for children, thus sanctifying those who are of this age, being at the same time made to them an example of piety, righteousness, and submission; a youth for youths, becoming an example to youths, and thus sanctifying them for the Lord.” Irenæus then asserts, “So likewise He was an old man for old men, that He might be a perfect Master for all, not merely as respects the setting forth of the truth, but also as regards age, sanctifying at the same time the aged also, and becoming an example to them likewise.” Irenæus then testifies, “Then, at last, He came on to death itself, that He might be “the first-born from the dead, that in all things He might have the preeminence,” referring to Colossians 1:18, “the Prince of life,” referring to Acts 3:15, “existing before all, and going before all,” referring in part to Colossians 1:17.

In paragraph five, Irenæus testifies that the Gnostics in order that “they may establish their false opinion regarding that which is written, “to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord,” maintain that He preached for one year only, and then suffered in the twelfth month.” Irenæus then argues, “[In speaking thus,] they are forgetful to their own disadvantage, destroying His whole work, and robbing Him of that age which is both more necessary and more honourable than any other; that more advanced age, I mean, during which also as a teacher He excelled all others. For how could He have had disciples, if He did not teach? And how could He have taught, unless He had reached the age of a Master? For when He came to be baptized, He had not yet completed His thirtieth year, but was beginning to be about thirty years of age (for thus Luke, who has mentioned His years, has expressed it: “Now Jesus was, as it were, beginning to be thirty years old,” when He came to receive baptism),” referring to Luke 3:23. Irenæus continues as he says, “and, [according to these men,] He preached only one year reckoning from His baptism. On completing His thirtieth year He suffered, being in fact still a young man, and who had by no means attained to advanced age.”

Irenæus then argues, “Now, that the first stage of early life embraces thirty years, and that this extends onwards to the fortieth year, every one will admit; but from the fortieth and fiftieth year a man begins to decline towards old age, which our Lord possessed while He still fulfilled the office of a Teacher, even as the Gospel and all the elders testify; those who were conversant in Asia with John, the disciple of the Lord, [affirming] that John conveyed to them that information. And he remained among them up to the times of Trajan. Some of them, moreover, saw not only John, but the other apostles also, and heard the very same account from them, and bear testimony as to the [validity of] the statement. Whom then should we rather believe? Whether such men as these, or Ptolemæus, who never saw the apostles, and who never even in his dreams attained to the slightest trace of an apostle?"

Commentary: In paragraph four, Irenaeus testifies that, "Being thirty years old when He came to be baptized," referring to Luke 3 (ESV):23 Jesus, when he began his ministry, was about thirty years of age, being the son (as was supposed) of Joseph, the son of Heli.

Irenaeus continues as he then asserts, "and then possessing the full age of a Master, He came to Jerusalem, so that He might be properly acknowledged by all as a Master." Irenaeus then affirms, "For He did not seem one thing while He was another, as those affirm who describe Him as being man only in appearance; but what He was, that He also appeared to be." Irenaeus then asserts, "Being a Master, therefore, He also possessed the age of a Master, not despising or evading any condition of humanity, nor setting aside in Himself that law which He had appointed for the human race, but sanctifying every age, by that period corresponding to it which belonged to Himself." That is, Irenaeus is saying that, because Jesus was a Master teacher, it goes without saying that he was the age of a master. However, we note that Jesus was the teacher because He is the Son of God, and not because He was of mature in age.

Irenaeus then testifies, "For He came to save all through means of Himself—all, I say, who through Him are born again to God—infants, and children, and boys, and youths, and old men," referring possibly to John 1 (KJV):12 But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name: 13 Which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God.

Irenaeus then affirms, "He therefore passed through every age, becoming an infant for infants, thus sanctifying infants; a child for children, thus sanctifying those who are of this age, being at the same time made to them an example of piety, righteousness, and submission; a youth for youths, becoming an example to youths, and thus sanctifying them for the Lord." It is true that He came to save all ages, every man, woman, and child. He is our example no matter what our age.

Irenaeus then asserts, "So likewise He was an old man for old men, that He might be a perfect Master for all, not merely as respects the setting forth of the truth, but also as regards age, sanctifying at the same time the aged also, and becoming an example to them likewise."

While it is true that Jesus sanctified every age of man or woman, it is not true that he reached the age of fifty as we shall see.

Irenaeus then testifies, "Then, at last, He came on to death itself, that He might be "the first-born from the dead, that in all things He might have the preeminence," referring to Colossians 1 (ESV):18 And he is the head of the body, the church. He is the beginning, the firstborn from the dead, that in everything he might be preeminent.

Irenaeus then continues as he testifies, "the Prince of life," referring in context to Acts 3 (ESV):14 But you denied the Holy and Righteous One, and asked for a murderer to be granted to you, 15 and you killed the Author of life, whom God raised from the dead. To this we are witnesses.

Irenaeus again testifies as he concludes, "existing before all, and going before all," referring in part to Colossians 1 (ESV):17 And he is before all things, and in him all things hold together.

In paragraph five, Irenaeus testifies that the Gnostics in order that "they may establish their false opinion regarding that which is written, "to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord," maintain that He preached for one year only, and then suffered in the twelfth month." Apparently the Gnostics were taking Jesus' words in Luke, chapter 4, out of context. The verse reads in context as in Luke 4 (KJV):17 And there was delivered unto him the book of the prophet Esaias. And when he had opened the book, he found the place where it was written, 18 The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the brokenhearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised, 19 To preach the acceptable year of the Lord.

Luke is referring to Isaiah 61 (KJV):1 The Spirit of the Lord GOD is upon me; because the LORD hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek; he hath sent me to bind up the brokenhearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound; 2 To proclaim the acceptable year of the LORD, and the day of vengeance of our God; to comfort all that mourn;

The Gnostics were saying that because Jesus was proclaiming the acceptable year of the Lord, He therefore preached for only one year. This is false as we shall see.

Irenaeus then argues, “[In speaking thus,] they are forgetful to their own disadvantage, destroying His whole work, and robbing Him of that age which is both more necessary and more honourable than any other; that more advanced age, I mean, during which also as a teacher He excelled all others. For how could He have had disciples, if He did not teach? And how could He have taught, unless He had reached the age of a Master? For when He came to be baptized, He had not yet completed His thirtieth year, but was beginning to be about thirty years of age (for thus Luke, who has mentioned His years, has expressed it: “Now Jesus was, as it were, beginning to be thirty years old,” when He came to receive baptism),” referring again to Luke 3 (NASB):23 When He began His ministry, Jesus Himself was about thirty years of age, being, as was supposed, the son of Joseph.

Irenaeus then continues as he says, “and, [according to these men,] He preached only one year reckoning from His baptism. On completing His thirtieth year He suffered, being in fact still a young man, and who had by no means attained to advanced age.”

Irenaeus then argues from the traditions of his time, “Now, that the first stage of early life embraces thirty years, and that this extends onwards to the fortieth year, every one will admit; but from the fortieth and fiftieth year a man begins to decline towards old age, which our Lord possessed while He still fulfilled the office of a Teacher, even as the Gospel and all the elders testify; those who were conversant in Asia with John, the disciple of the Lord, [affirming] that John conveyed to them that information.”

Irenaeus does not supply us with any first hand accounts to support this assertion. He continues as he again asserts, “And he remained among them up to the times of Trajan. Some of them, moreover, saw not only John, but the other apostles also, and heard the very same account from them, and bear testimony as to the [validity of] the statement. Whom then should we rather believe? Whether such men as these, or Ptolemæus, who never saw the apostles, and who never even in his dreams attained to the slightest trace of an apostle?”

We will see here very clearly how much of a grip tradition had on the thinking of Irenaeus and the Church in Irenaeus’ time.

Now here in paragraph five, Irenaeus believes Jesus reached almost 50 years old and he bases this assertion on the Gospel of John as we read in John 8 (NASB):57 So the Jews said to Him, "You are not yet fifty years old, and have You seen Abraham?"

At least Irenaeus in part uses Scripture references to support his contention. He argues that to be a teacher, one would have to have reached close to 50 years of age. With men, this is often true, especially in Irenaeus’ time. However, Jesus was not dependent on man for His message or His wisdom. Therefore He did not need years of study to validate His message. He Himself said His words were not His own but His Father’s as in John 17 (NASB):8 for the words which You gave Me I have given to them; and they received them and truly understood that I came forth from You, and they believed that You sent Me.

Again, Jesus told us that His words and teaching were not His but the Father’s as we read in John 7 (NASB):16 So Jesus answered them and said, "My teaching is not Mine, but His who sent Me. 17 "If anyone is willing to do His will, he will know of the teaching, whether it is of God or whether I speak from Myself. 18 "He who speaks from himself seeks his own glory; but He who is seeking the glory of the One who sent Him, He is true, and there is no unrighteousness in Him.

His words came from the Holy Spirit as we see in John 3 (NASB):34 "For He whom God has sent speaks the words of God; for He gives the Spirit without measure.

Besides this, a thorough reading of the New Testament reveals Jesus to have begun his ministry at about 30 years of age and continuing for about 3 ½ years as we read in Luke 3 (ESV):23 Jesus, when he began his ministry, was about thirty years of age, being the son (as was supposed) of Joseph, the son of Heli.

We know that John the Baptist was born about 6 months prior to Jesus for the angel says to Mary in Luke 1 (ESV):36 And behold, your relative Elizabeth in her old age has also conceived a son, and this is the sixth month with her who was called barren.

As Jesus was ministering, and before John was put in prison, the Scripture records in Luke 7 (NIV):18 The disciples of John reported all these things to him. And John, 19 calling two of his disciples to him, sent them to the Lord, saying, “Are you the one who is to come, or shall we look for another?” 20 And when the men had come to him, they said, “John the Baptist has sent us to you, saying, ‘Are you the one who is to come, or shall we look for another?’” 21 In that hour he healed many people of diseases and plagues and evil spirits, and on many who were blind he bestowed sight. 22 And he answered them, “Go and tell John what you have seen and heard: the blind receive their sight, the lame walk, lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, the dead are raised up, the poor have good news preached to them. 23 And blessed is the one who is not offended by me.” 24 When John's messengers had gone, Jesus began to speak to the crowds concerning John: “What did you go out into the wilderness to see? A reed shaken by the wind? 25 What then did you go out to see? A man dressed in soft clothing? Behold, those who are dressed in splendid clothing and live in luxury are in kings' courts. 26 What then did you go out to see? A prophet? Yes, I tell you, and more than a prophet. 27 This is he of whom it is written, “‘Behold, I send my messenger before your face, who will prepare your way before you.’”

Speaking of John, Luke looks ahead to his imprisonment as we read in Luke 3 (KJV):18 And many other things in his exhortation preached he unto the people. 19 But Herod the tetrarch, being reprov'd by him for Herodias his brother Philip's wife, and for all the evils which Herod had done, 20 Added yet this above all, that he shut up John in prison.

But Luke then looks back at when Jesus came to be baptized by him in the Jordan as in Luke 3 (KJV):21 Now when all the people were baptized, it came to pass, that Jesus also being baptized, and praying, the heaven was opened, 22 And the Holy Ghost descended in a bodily shape like a dove upon him, and a voice came from heaven, which said, Thou art my beloved Son; in thee I am well pleased.

Luke then comes current and describes how Jesus went from the Jordan where John was baptizing to the wilderness for forty days as we read in Luke 4 (ESV):1 And Jesus, full of the Holy Spirit, returned from the Jordan and was led by the Spirit in the wilderness 2 for forty days, being tempted by the devil. And he ate nothing during those days. And when they were ended, he was hungry.

But then He immediately was led by the Spirit to begin His ministry as Luke continues his narrative in Luke 4 (KJV):14 And Jesus returned in the power of the Spirit into Galilee: and there went out a fame of him through all the region round about. 15 And he taught in their synagogues, being glorified of all. 16 And he came to Nazareth, where he had been brought up: and, as his custom was, he went into the synagogue on the sabbath day, and stood up for to read. 17 And there was delivered unto him the book of the prophet Esaias. And when he had opened the book, he found the place where it was written, 18 The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the brokenhearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised, 19 To preach the acceptable year of the Lord. 20 And he closed the book, and he gave it again to the minister, and sat down. And the eyes of all them that were in the synagogue were fastened on him. 21 And he began to say unto them, This day is this scripture fulfilled in your ears.

Jesus Himself also tells us a parable that hints at His age as we see in Luke 13 (KJV):6 He spake also this parable; A certain man had a fig tree planted in his vineyard; and he came and sought fruit thereon, and found none. 7 Then said he unto the dresser of his vineyard, Behold, these three years I come seeking fruit on this fig tree, and find none: cut it down; why cumbereth it the ground? 8 And he answering said unto him, Lord, let it alone this year also, till I shall dig about it, and dung it: 9 And if it bear fruit, well: and if not, then after that thou shalt cut it down.

History records that Pontius Pilate's retirement will not allow Jesus to have reached the age of years that would include Him in Trajan's reign who reigned as Roman Emperor from 98 A.D. until his death in 117 A.D. We know that Pilate was relieved from duty in 36 A.D. Jesus had to have been crucified before this. Schaff says, “Pontius Pilate was ten years governor of Judaea, from A.D. 26 to 36. Herod Antipas was deposed by Caligula, A.D. 39. Philip, his brother, died A.D. 34. Consequently, Christ must have died before A.D. 34, at an age of thirty-three, if we allow three years for his public ministry.” History of the Christian Church, Volume I, Chapter II, page 121, Philip P. Schaff.

Schaff also says that the date of Herod’s death has been “verified by the astronomical calculation of the eclipse of the moon, which took place March 13, A.U. 750, a few days before Herod’s death. Allowing two months or more for the vents between the birth of Christ and the murder of the Innocents by Herod, the Nativity must be put back at least to February or January, A.U. 750 (or B.C. 4), if not earlier.” History of the Christian Church, Volume I, Chapter II, page 112, Philip P. Schaff.

But Irenaeus’ history books were not like ours, and he can be forgiven for this misinterpretation. Irenaeus was also fighting the Gnostic heresy, and was earnestly contending for the faith. One of his shields was a little wobbly. It is better now.

One more thing we should note. Jesus’ authority to preach and teach was not because of His age, but because of His anointing by the Holy Spirit as we read in Luke 4 (KJV):32 And they were astonished at his doctrine: for his word was with power.

And in Luke 4 (KJV):36 And they were all amazed, and spake among themselves, saying, What a word is this! for with authority and power he commandeth the unclean spirits, and they come out.

And in John 5 (KJV):36 But I have greater witness than that of John: for the works which the Father hath given me to finish, the same works that I do, bear witness of me, that the Father hath sent me.

And again in John 10 (KJV):25 Jesus answered them, I told you, and ye believed not: the works that I do in my Father’s name, they bear witness of me.

And in John 14 (KJV):10 Believest thou not that I am in the Father, and the Father in me? the words that I speak unto you I speak not of myself: but the Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works.

And in Acts 10 (KJV):38 How God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost and with power: who went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed of the devil; for God was with him.

Chapter 19: Spiritual Gifts

Book 2: Chapter XXXI.—Recapitulation and application of the foregoing arguments.

...

2. Moreover, those also will be thus confuted who belong to Simon and Carpocrates, and if there be any others who are said to perform miracles—who do not perform what they do either through the power of God, or in connection with the truth, nor for the well-being of men, but for the sake of destroying and misleading mankind, by means of magical deceptions, and with universal deceit, thus entailing greater harm than good on those who believe them, with respect to the point on which they lead them astray. For they can neither confer sight on the blind, nor hearing on the deaf, nor chase away all sorts of demons—[none, indeed,] except those that are sent into others by themselves, if they can even do so much as this. Nor can they cure the weak, or the lame, or the paralytic, or those who are distressed in any other part of the body, as has often been done in regard to bodily infirmity. Nor can they furnish effective remedies for those external accidents which may occur. And so far are they from being able to raise the dead, as the Lord raised them, and the apostles did by means of prayer, and as has been frequently done in the brotherhood on account of some necessity—the entire Church in that particular locality entreating [the boon] with much fasting and prayer, the spirit of the dead man has returned, and he has been bestowed in answer to the prayers of the saints—that they do not even believe this can be possibly be done, [and hold] that the resurrection from the dead 3263 Comp. 2 Tim. ii. 17, 18. [On the sub-apostolic age and this subject of miracles, Newman, in spite of his sophistical argumentation, may well be consulted for his references, etc. Translation of the Abbé Fleury, p. xi. Oxford, 1842.] is simply an acquaintance with that truth which they proclaim.

Summary: In this paragraph, Irenaeus warns, “Moreover, those also will be thus confuted who belong to Simon and Carpocrates, and if there be any others who are said to perform miracles—who do not perform what they do either through the power of God, or in connection with the truth, nor for the well-being of men, but for the sake of destroying and misleading mankind, by means of magical deceptions, and with universal deceit, thus entailing greater harm than good on those who believe them, with respect to the point on which they lead them astray.” Irenaeus then testifies, “For they can neither confer sight on the blind, nor hearing on the deaf, nor chase away all sorts of demons—[none, indeed,] except those that are sent into others by themselves, if they can even do so much as this.” Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “Nor can they cure the weak, or the lame, or the paralytic, or those who are distressed in any other part of the body, as has often been done in regard to bodily infirmity. Nor can they furnish effective remedies for those external accidents which may occur. And so far are they from being able to raise the dead, as the Lord raised them, and the apostles did by means of prayer, and as has been frequently done in the brotherhood on account of some necessity—the entire Church in that particular locality entreating [the boon] with much fasting and prayer, the spirit of the dead man has returned, and he has been bestowed in answer to the prayers of the saints—that they do not even believe this can be possibly be done, [and hold] that the resurrection from the dead is simply an acquaintance with that truth which they proclaim.”

Commentary: In this paragraph, Irenaeus warns, against deceitful workers who “are said to perform miracles.” These deceivers “do not perform what they do either through the power of God, or in connection with the truth, nor for the well-being of men, but for the sake of destroying and misleading mankind.” They use magic and deceit and do “greater harm than good on those who believe them.” These deceitful workers cannot “confer sight on the blind, nor hearing on the deaf, nor chase away all sorts of demons.” They cannot cure anything, Irenaeus says, except maybe move a demon from one person to another. Neither are they “able to raise the dead, as the Lord raised them, and the apostles did by means of prayer, and as has been frequently done in the brotherhood on account of some necessity—the entire Church in that particular locality entreating [the boon] with much fasting and prayer, the spirit of the dead man has returned, and he has been bestowed in answer to the prayers of the saints.” These deceitful workers “do not even believe this can be possibly be done.” That is, these deceivers do not believe in the resurrection of the dead. Instead, they hold that it is “simply an acquaintance with that truth which they proclaim.”

Irenaeus is here concerned about the source of the power that is effecting the miracle, and rightly so. He testifies here that, “those also will be thus confuted who belong to Simon and Carpocrates, and if there be any others who are said to perform miracles—who do not perform what they do either through the power of God, or in connection with the truth, nor for the well-being of men, but for the sake of destroying and misleading mankind, by means of magical deceptions, and with universal deceit, thus entailing greater harm than good on those who believe them, with respect to the point on which they lead them astray.” “Nor can they furnish effective remedies for those external accidents which may occur,” Irenaeus says. Irenaeus is saying that the power must be of God and it must connect to the truth, and be for the wellbeing of man in order to be effective.

In other words, we must judge the source of the power, whether it is of God or not, in order to trust that it will be effective. Irenaeus says that if it does not meet these criteria, it will do more harm than good. His point is that the remedies done by other sources than God are not “effective remedies.” Those who believe in such powers do not have a firm grasp of what the resurrection means, their resurrection being only “an acquaintance with that truth which they proclaim,” which is a fantasy and no resurrection at all.

While Irenaeus points out the deceptive nature of miracles which are supposedly done by those who would lead people astray from the true God, he also acknowledges and testifies to the power of God working miracles reported in the Gospels, as well as His answers to the prayers of the saints which “has been frequently done in the brotherhood on account of some necessity.” Irenaeus also acknowledges the presence of demons as he testifies against the deceitful workers saying, “For they can neither confer sight on the blind, nor hearing on the deaf, nor chase away all sorts of demons—[none, indeed,] except those that are sent into others by themselves, if they can even do so much as this.”

Such deceitful workers remind us of Paul’s warning to Timothy in 2 Timothy 2 (KJV):15 Study to shew thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth. 16 But shun profane and vain babblings: for they will increase unto more ungodliness. 17 And their word will eat as doth a canker: of whom is Hymenaeus and Philetus; 18 Who concerning the truth have erred, saying that the resurrection is past already; and overthrow the faith of some. 19 Nevertheless the foundation of God standeth sure, having this seal, The Lord knoweth them that are his. And, let every one that nameth the name of Christ depart from iniquity.

Now regarding the source of the power of deceitful workers, in the Book of Acts we see an example of such a demonic source of power in Simon Magus, but note that Simon repented and believed the Gospel as we read in Acts 8 (KJV):9 But there was a certain man, called Simon, which beforetime in the same city used sorcery, and bewitched the people of Samaria, giving out that himself was some great one: 10 To whom they all gave heed, from the least to the greatest, saying, This man is the great power of God. 11 And to him they had regard, because that of long time he had bewitched them with sorceries. 12 But when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women. 13 Then Simon himself believed also: and when he was baptized, he continued with Philip, and wondered, beholding the miracles and signs which were done.

Luke tells us here that Simon himself believed, and he was baptized as well. Luke continues his narrative in Acts 8 (KJV):14 Now when the apostles which were at Jerusalem heard that Samaria had received the word of God, they sent unto them Peter and John: 15 Who, when they were come down, prayed for them, that they might receive the Holy Ghost: 16 (For as yet he was fallen upon none of them: only they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus.) 17 Then laid they their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost. 18 And when Simon saw that through laying on of the apostles' hands the Holy Ghost was given, he offered them money, 19 Saying, Give me also this power, that on whomsoever I lay hands, he may receive the Holy Ghost. 20 But Peter said unto him, Thy money perish with thee, because thou hast thought that the gift of God may be purchased with money. 21 Thou hast neither part nor lot in this matter: for thy heart is not right in the sight of God. 22 Repent therefore of this thy wickedness, and pray God, if perhaps the thought of thine heart may be forgiven thee. 23 For I perceive that thou art in the gall of bitterness, and in the bond of iniquity.

24 Then answered Simon, and said, Pray ye to the LORD for me, that none of these things which ye have spoken come upon me.

Simon seems to have repented as we see here that he asks Peter for prayer to be forgiven of his sin.

Another example of a demonic source of power is found in the Scriptures when Barnabas and Paul were sent out by the Holy Spirit on a missionary journey as in Acts 13 (KJV):4 So they, being sent forth by the Holy Ghost, departed unto Seleucia; and from thence they sailed to Cyprus. 5 And when they were at Salamis, they preached the word of God in the synagogues of the Jews: and they had also John to their minister. 6 And when they had gone through the isle unto Paphos, they found a certain sorcerer, a false prophet, a Jew, whose name was Barjesus: 7 Which was with the deputy of the country, Sergius Paulus, a prudent man; who called for Barnabas and Saul, and desired to hear the word of God. 8 But Elymas the sorcerer (for so is his name by interpretation) withstood them, seeking to turn away the deputy from the faith. 9 Then Saul, (who also is called Paul,) filled with the Holy Ghost, set his eyes on him. 10 And said, O full of all subtilty and all mischief, thou child of the devil, thou enemy of all righteousness, wilt thou not cease to pervert the right ways of the Lord? 11 And now, behold, the hand of the Lord is upon thee, and thou shalt be blind, not seeing the sun for a season. And immediately there fell on him a mist and a darkness; and he went about seeking some to lead him by the hand. 12 Then the deputy, when he saw what was done, believed, being astonished at the doctrine of the Lord.

Elymas the magician withstood the work of the Lord and sought to turn people away from the faith. Hopefully, the judgment of God resulted in his repentance.

On Paul's second missionary journey we see another instance of demonic power when Paul and Silas encounter a girl with a spirit of divination as we read in Acts 16 (KJV):16 And it came to pass, as we went to prayer, a certain damsel possessed with a spirit of divination met us, which brought her masters much gain by soothsaying: 17 The same followed Paul and us, and cried, saying, These men are the servants of the most high God, which shew unto us the way of salvation. 18 And this did she many days. But Paul, being grieved, turned and said to the spirit, I command thee in the name of Jesus Christ to come out of her. And he came out the same hour.

Paul cast out the spirit of divination in the name of Jesus Christ. This freed the girl for a time. We don't know if she truly repented or a worse thing happened to her. However, by casting out the spirit, God opened another door in their ministry as is recorded in Acts 16 (KJV):19 And when her masters saw that the hope of their gains was gone, they caught Paul and Silas, and drew them into the marketplace unto the rulers, 20 And brought them to the magistrates, saying, These men, being Jews, do exceedingly trouble our city, 21 And teach customs, which are not lawful for us to receive, neither to observe, being Romans. 22 And the multitude rose up together against them: and the magistrates rent off their clothes, and commanded to beat them. 23 And when they had laid many stripes upon them, they cast them into prison, charging the jailor to keep them safely: 24 Who, having received such a charge, thrust them into the inner prison, and made their feet fast in the stocks. 25 And at midnight Paul and Silas prayed, and sang praises unto God: and the prisoners heard them. 26 And suddenly there was a great earthquake, so that the foundations of the prison were shaken: and immediately all the doors were opened, and every one's bands were loosed. 27 And the keeper of the prison awaking out of his sleep, and seeing the prison doors open, he drew out his sword, and would have killed himself, supposing that the prisoners had been fled. 28 But Paul cried with a loud voice, saying, Do thyself no harm: for we are all here. 29 Then he called for a light, and sprang in, and came trembling, and fell down before Paul and Silas, 30 And brought them out, and said, Sirs, what must I do to be saved?

The casting out of the spirit of divination ultimately resulted in the jailer's salvation and his whole household. This was an instance of the spiritual gift of working of miracles exercised by Paul. That is, Paul had the gift of the Spirit to work the miracle of casting out a demon, for this cannot be done by human strength alone.

It is helpful to know a little about demon possession. In this story in the Gospel of Luke, a man had a spirit that caused him to be mute, and Jesus uses this event to teach us about demons as we read in Luke 11 (KJV):14 And he was casting out a devil, and it was dumb. And it came to pass, when the devil was gone out, the dumb spake; and the people wondered. 15 But some of them said, He casteth out devils through Beelzebub the chief of the devils. 16 And others, tempting him, sought of him a sign from heaven. 17 But he, knowing their thoughts, said unto them, Every kingdom divided against itself is brought to desolation; and a house divided against a house falleth. 18 If Satan also be divided against himself, how shall his kingdom stand? because ye say that I cast out devils through Beelzebub. 19 And if I by Beelzebub cast out devils, by whom do your sons cast them out? therefore shall they be your judges. 20 But if I with the finger of God cast out devils, no doubt the kingdom of God is come upon you. 21 When a strong man armed keepeth his palace, his goods are in peace: 22 But when a stronger than he shall come upon him, and overcome him, he taketh from him all his armour wherein he trusted, and divideth his spoils. 23 He that is not with me is against me: and he that gathereth not with me scattereth. 24 When the unclean spirit is gone out of a man, he walketh through dry places, seeking rest; and finding none, he saith, I will return unto my house whence I came out. 25 And when he cometh, he findeth it swept and garnished. 26 Then goeth he, and taketh to him seven other spirits more wicked than himself; and they enter in, and dwell there: and the last state of that man is worse than the first.

In this passage, when the demon left the man, he was able to speak. Jesus, in answer to some of the crowd's claim that He cast out demons by Beelzebub, the prince of the demons, said that Satan's kingdom could not stand if Satan is casting out Satan so to speak. Jesus describes demon possession as a strong man overpowering another man and taking the spoils. Jesus then says that He casts out demons by the finger of God. By this He meant the Spirit of God. He then warns us that after the demon, or strong man, is cast out, he may come back if we don't walk in obedience to the Lord and the word of God. Our last state in that case would be worse than the first. Jesus was real.

We note that Irenaeus does testify that bodily infirmity has often been cured and even resurrection from the dead "has been frequently done in the brotherhood on account of some necessity—the entire Church in that particular locality entreating [the boon] with much fasting and prayer, the spirit of the dead man has returned, and he has been bestowed in answer to the prayers of the saints."

The Holy Spirit was still manifesting in the time of Irenaeus, according to Irenaeus' testimony.

4. If, however, they maintain that the Lord, too, performed such works simply in appearance, we shall refer them to the prophetic writings, and prove from these both that all things were thus 3274 That is, as being done in reality, and not in appearance. predicted regarding Him, and did take place undoubtedly, and that He is the only Son of God. Wherefore, also, those who are in truth His disciples, receiving grace from Him, do in His name perform [miracles], so as to promote the welfare of other men, according to the gift which each one has received from Him. For some do certainly and truly drive out devils, so that those who have thus been cleansed from evil spirits frequently both believe [in Christ], and join themselves to the Church. Others have foreknowledge of things to come: they see visions, and utter prophetic expressions. Others still, heal the sick by laying their hands upon them, and they are made whole. Yea, moreover, as I have said, the dead even have been raised up, and remained 3275 Harvey here notes: "The reader will not fail to remark this highly interesting testimony, that the divine χαρίσματα bestowed upon the infant Church were not wholly extinct in the days of Irenæus. Possibly the venerable Father is speaking from his own personal recollection of some who had been raised from the dead, and had continued for a time living witnesses of the efficacy of Christian faith." [See cap. xxxi., supra.] among us for many years. And what shall I more say? It is not possible to name the number of the gifts which the Church, [scattered] throughout the whole world, has received from God, in the name of Jesus Christ, who was crucified under Pontius Pilate, and which she exerts day by day for the benefit of the Gentiles, neither practising deception upon any, nor taking any reward 3276 Comp. Acts viii. 9, 18. from them [on account of such miraculous interpositions]. For as she has received freely 3277 Matt. x. 8. from God, freely also does she minister [to others].

Summary: In paragraph four, Irenaeus testifies, "If, however, they maintain that the Lord, too, performed such works simply in appearance, we shall refer them to the prophetic writings, and prove from these both that all things were thus predicted regarding Him, and did take place undoubtedly, and that He is the only Son of God.” Irenaeus elaborates as he further testifies, “For some do certainly and truly drive out devils, so that those who have thus been cleansed from evil spirits frequently both believe [in Christ], and join themselves to the Church. Others have foreknowledge of things to come: they see visions, and utter prophetic expressions. Others still, heal the sick by laying their hands upon them, and they are made whole. Yea, moreover, as I have said, the dead even have been raised up, and remained among us for many years.” Irenaeus then asks as he testifies, “And what shall I more say? It is not possible to name the number of the gifts which the Church, [scattered] throughout the whole world, has received from God, in the name of Jesus Christ, who was crucified under Pontius Pilate, and which she exerts day by day for the benefit of the Gentiles, neither practising deception upon any, nor taking any reward from them [on account of such miraculous interpositions]. For as she has received freely from God, freely also does she minister [to others],” referring to Matthew 10:8.

Commentary: Irenaeus again testifies that the Holy Spirit was very much present in the church of his day, as he begins by arguing in defense of the faith here in paragraph four, “If, however, they maintain that the Lord, too, performed such works simply in appearance, we shall refer them to the prophetic writings, and prove from these both that all things were thus predicted regarding Him, and did take place undoubtedly, and that He is the only Son of God.” Irenaeus gives strong testimony to his faith when he says, “He is the only Son of God.”

Irenaeus then also testifies that evil spirits evidently were still around as well, for such believers were driving them out, as he records, “For some do certainly and truly drive out devils, so that those who have thus been cleansed from evil spirits frequently both believe [in Christ], and join themselves to the Church.”

Not only so, but Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “Others have foreknowledge of things to come: they see visions, and utter prophetic expressions. Others still, heal the sick by laying their hands upon them, and they are made whole. Yea, moreover, as I have said, the dead even have been raised up, and remained among us for many years.”

Irenaeus then asks as he testifies, “And what shall I more say? It is not possible to name the number of the gifts which the Church, [scattered] throughout the whole world, has received from God, in the name of Jesus Christ, who was crucified under Pontius Pilate, and which she exerts day by day for the benefit of the Gentiles, neither practising deception upon any, nor taking any reward from them [on account of such miraculous interpositions].”

Irenaeus then testifies speaking of the Church worldwide, “For as she has received freely from God, freely also does she minister [to others],” referring to Matthew 10 (KJV):8 Heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils: freely ye have received, freely give.

Irenaeus is testifying to the current operation by the Church worldwide of the gifts of the Holy Spirit of God.

Irenaeus here points to the number of times and ways the gifts of the Holy Spirit have been exercised throughout the world by believers. We must agree with Irenaeus for Jesus Himself said that this would happen in John 14 (KJV):12 Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto my Father.

Since a gift of the Spirit is something we could not do without His enablement, we note that there are nine such spiritual gifts mentioned in 1 Corinthians 12 (KJV):1 Now concerning spiritual gifts, brethren, I would not have you ignorant. 2 Ye know that ye were Gentiles, carried away unto these dumb idols, even as ye were led. 3 Wherefore I give you to understand, that no man speaking by the Spirit of God calleth Jesus accursed: and that no man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost. 4 Now there are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit. 5 And there are differences of administrations, but the same Lord. 6 And there are diversities of operations, but it is the same God which worketh all in all. 7 But the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal. 8 For to one is given by the Spirit the word of wisdom; to another the word of knowledge by the same Spirit; 9 To another faith by the same Spirit; to another the gifts of healing by the same Spirit; 10 To another the working of miracles; to another prophecy; to another discerning of spirits; to another divers kinds of tongues; to another the interpretation of tongues: 11 But all these worketh that one and the selfsame Spirit, dividing to every man severally as he will.

In verse 7 above, it is called a “manifestation of the Spirit.” That is, the Spirit is present during the operation of the gift, and though He is unseen, the evidence of His presence is revealed by the working of the gift He gives the one exercising it.

Irenaeus notes that “some do certainly and truly drive out devils,” which is a gift of the Spirit, that is, the working of miracles. “Others have foreknowledge of things to come,” which is a gift of the Spirit, the word of wisdom since it relates to the future. Others “see visions,” which would also be a gift of the Spirit. This would also be one of the revelation gifts, either the word of wisdom or the word of knowledge. An example of the word of knowledge is seen in Acts 9 (KJV):10 And there was a certain disciple at Damascus, named Ananias; and to him said the Lord in a vision, Ananias. And he said, Behold, I am here, Lord. 11 And the Lord said unto him, Arise, and go into the street which is called Straight, and enquire in the house of Judas for one called Saul, of Tarsus: for, behold, he prayeth, 12 And hath seen in a vision a man named Ananias coming in, and putting his hand on him, that he might receive his sight.

When the Lord revealed where Paul was staying, this was a word of knowledge. That is, it is a fact revealed by God that Ananias could not have known without the Spirit of God revealing it to him.

As we continue to read in Acts, we see the results of Ananias’ obedience of faith in Acts 9 (KJV):13 Then Ananias answered, Lord, I have heard by many of this man, how much evil he hath done to thy saints at Jerusalem: 14 And here he hath authority from the chief priests to bind all that call on thy name. 15 But the Lord said unto him, Go thy way: for he is a chosen vessel unto me, to bear my name before the Gentiles, and kings, and the children of Israel: 16 For I will shew him how great things he must suffer for my name's sake. 17 And Ananias went his way, and entered into the house; and putting his hands on him said, Brother Saul, the Lord, even Jesus, that appeared unto thee in the way as thou camest, hath sent me, that thou mightest receive thy sight, and be filled with the Holy Ghost. 18 And immediately there fell from his eyes as it had been scales: and he received sight forthwith, and arose, and was baptized. 19 And when he had received meat, he was strengthened. Then was Saul certain days with the disciples which were at Damascus. 20 And straightway he preached Christ in the synagogues, that he is the Son of God.

Irenaeus continues as he testifies that others “utter prophetic expressions,” which is also a gift of the Spirit, that is, prophecy. Vine’s says that the word “prophecy” “signifies the speaking forth of the mind and counsel of God (pro, forth, phemi, to speak).” Expository Dictionary of New Testament Words, W.E. Vine, Vol. III, page 221.

That is, we could say that to prophesy means to “speak for another,” and in this case, to speak for God, or to be God’s mouthpiece. This gift is not so much for the instruction of believers, but for edification, exhortation, and comfort as Paul instructs in 1 Corinthians 14 (KJV):3 But he that prophesieth speaketh unto men to edification, and exhortation, and comfort.

Irenaeus continues as he further testifies that “Others still, heal the sick by laying their hands upon them, and they are made whole,” which is a gift of the Spirit, that is, the gifts of healing. And Irenaeus further testifies, “Yea, moreover, as I have said, the dead even have been raised up, and remained among us for many years,” which is also a gift of the Spirit, the working of miracles.

These are manifestations of the Spirit, and not in any way human abilities. A human ability is something that we can do apart from anyone else, like sweeping the floor, doing the dishes, driving a car. Though these may be acts of serving, we don’t need the Holy Spirit’s help to do these things. Spiritual gifts are abilities of the Spirit that we could not do on our own without His help. As an example of this we could look at the gift of prophecy. The Old Testament prophets spoke as they were moved by the Holy Spirit as we read in 2 Peter 1 (KJV):20 Knowing this first, that no prophecy of the scripture is of any private interpretation. 21 For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man: but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost.

Holy men of God spoke as they were moved or prompted by the Holy Spirit. Then in the New Testament the same principle applies. However, the apostles in the early church were eyewitnesses and therefore had the prophetic word more sure as we read in 2 Peter 1 (KJV):16 For we have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eyewitnesses of his majesty. 17 For he received from God the Father honour and glory, when there came such a voice to him from the excellent glory, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. 18 And this voice which came from heaven we heard, when we were with him in the holy mount. 19 We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day star arise in your hearts:

The apostles were the authors of the New Testament because of this very fact. We who come after the apostolic period do not prophesy with the same authority of Scripture. However there is still a place for the gift of prophecy in the sense of edification, admonition or exhortation, and consolation or comfort as Paul teaches in 1 Corinthians 14 (KJV):1 Follow after charity, and desire spiritual gifts, but rather that ye may prophesy. 2 For he that speaketh in an unknown tongue speaketh not unto men, but unto God: for no man understandeth him; howbeit in the spirit he speaketh mysteries. 3 But he that prophesieth speaketh unto men to edification, and exhortation, and comfort. 4 He that speaketh in an unknown tongue edifieth himself; but he that prophesieth edifieth the church. 5 I would that ye all spake with tongues but rather that ye prophesied: for greater is he that prophesieth than he that speaketh with tongues, except he interpret, that the church may receive edifying.

The church needs edifying and building up today, just as much as it ever did. And all ministry in the Church should be done by the Holy Spirit. Though preaching is not mentioned as a spiritual gift, it should be done by the Holy Spirit as we read in 1 Peter 1 (KJV):10 Of which salvation the prophets have enquired and searched diligently, who prophesied of the grace that should come unto you: 11 Searching what, or what manner of time the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify, when it testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow. 12 Unto whom it was revealed, that not unto themselves, but unto us they did minister the things, which are now reported unto you by them that have preached the gospel unto you with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven; which things the angels desire to look into.

It is the Spirit of Christ speaking through us that wins souls. This is all new to us when we are just saved. At first we have an awareness of another world that we never really knew existed before. Our vision now extends vertically and not just horizontally as it was when we were unsaved. But when we have faith in Jesus Christ and are born of the Spirit, we are actually made alive in our spirit and we begin to be aware of the presence of God in our lives. As we read or hear teaching from the word of God, our faith grows. As we apply the word of God to our lives and begin to live by its principles, the awareness of God's presence in our lives and in others grows. At the same time, we are conscious that there is evil in the world, and the presence of evil will cause something to stir in our spirit as well. Gradually, we learn that we do not have to fear this awareness. As we realize that Satan is just a dog on a leash, and that God loves us and is for us and has given us authority in Jesus' name, we become more and more confident in Him, and we become willing and ready to be used by God in this area. We are told to pray for each other that we may be healed as we read in James 5 (KJV):13 Is any among you afflicted? let him pray. Is any merry? let him sing psalms. 14 Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord: 15 And the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up; and if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him. 16 Confess your faults one to another, and pray one for another, that ye may be healed. The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much. 17 Elias was a man subject to like passions as we are, and he prayed earnestly that it might not rain: and it rained not on the earth by the space of three years and six months. 18 And he prayed again, and the heaven gave rain, and the earth brought forth her fruit.

Indeed, a distinguishing mark of Israel was that there were no feeble and sick among them as long as they walked with God as we read in Exodus 15 (KJV):26 And said, If thou wilt diligently hearken to the voice of the LORD thy God, and wilt do that which is right in his sight, and wilt give ear to his commandments, and keep all his statutes, I will put none of these diseases upon thee, which I have brought upon the Egyptians: for I am the LORD that healeth thee.

The presence of the Holy Spirit in their midst healed them as we read in Deuteronomy 7 (KJV):11 Thou shalt therefore keep the commandments, and the statutes, and the judgments, which I command thee this day, to do them. 12 Wherefore it shall come to pass, if ye hearken to these judgments, and keep, and do them, that the LORD thy God shall keep unto thee the covenant and the mercy which he swore unto thy fathers: 13 And he will love thee, and bless thee, and multiply thee: he will also bless the fruit of thy womb, and the fruit of thy land, thy corn, and thy wine, and thine oil, the increase of thy kine, and the flocks of thy sheep, in the land which he sware unto thy fathers to give thee. 14 Thou shalt be blessed above all people: there shall not be male or female barren among you, or among your cattle. 15 And the LORD will take away from thee all sickness, and will put none of the evil diseases of Egypt, which thou knowest, upon thee; but will lay them upon all them that hate thee.

The Holy Spirit is the same today as He was yesterday as in Hebrews 13 (KJV):8 Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and to day, and for ever.

He still heals and empowers Christians, just as he did in Irenaeus' day.

It is worth noting here that the early Church was taught not to take rewards for the good works they did as in Acts 8 (KJV):18 And when Simon saw that through laying on of the apostles' hands the Holy Ghost was given, he offered them money, 19 Saying, Give me also this power, that on whomsoever I lay hands, he may receive the Holy Ghost. 20 But Peter said unto him, Thy money perish with thee, because thou hast thought that the gift of God may be purchased with money. 21 Thou hast neither part nor lot in this matter: for thy heart is not right in the sight of God. 22 Repent therefore of this thy wickedness, and pray God, if perhaps the thought of thine heart may be forgiven thee. 23 For I perceive that thou art in the gall of bitterness, and in the bond of iniquity. 24 Then answered Simon, and said, Pray ye to the LORD for me, that none of these things which ye have spoken come upon me.

Irenaeus also is referring to Jesus' words in Matthew 10 (KJV):8 Heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils: freely ye have received, freely give.

Book 3: Chapter XI.—Proofs in continuation, extracted from St. John's Gospel. The Gospels are four in number, neither more nor less. Mystic reasons for this.

...

9. These things being so, all who destroy the form of the Gospel are vain, unlearned, and also audacious; those, [I mean,] who represent the aspects of the Gospel as being either more in number than as aforesaid, or, on the other hand, fewer. The former class [do so], that they may seem to have discovered more than is of the truth; the latter, that they may set the dispensations of God aside. For Marcion, rejecting the entire Gospel, yea rather, cutting himself off from the Gospel, boasts that he has part in the [blessings of] the Gospel. 3461 The old Latin reads, "partem gloriatur se habere Evangelii." Massuet changed partem into pariter, thinking that partem gave a sense inconsistent with the Marcionite curtailment of St. Luke. Harvey, however, observes: "But the Gospel, here means the blessings of the Gospel, in which Marcion certainly claimed a share." Others, again (the Montanists), that they may set at nought the gift of the Spirit, which in the latter times has been, by the good pleasure of the Father, poured out upon the human race, do not admit that aspect [of the evangelical dispensation] presented by John's Gospel, in which the Lord promised that He would send the Paraclete; 3462 John xiv. 16, etc. but set aside at once both the Gospel and the prophetic Spirit. Wretched men indeed! who wish to be pseudo-prophets, forsooth, but who set aside the gift of prophecy from the Church; acting like those (the Encratitæ) 3463 Slighting, as did some later heretics, the Pauline Epistles. who, on account of such as come in hypocrisy, hold themselves aloof from the communion of the brethren. We must conclude, moreover, that these men (the Montanists) can not admit the Apostle Paul either. For, in his Epistle to the Corinthians, 3464 1 Cor. xi. 4, 5. he speaks expressly of prophetic gifts, and recognises men and women prophesying in the Church. Sinning, therefore, in all these particulars, against the Spirit of God, 3465 Matt. xii. 31. they fall into the irremissible sin. But those who are from Valentinus, being, on the other hand, altogether reckless, while they put forth their own compositions, boast that they possess more Gospels than there really are. Indeed, they have arrived at such a pitch of audacity, as to entitle their comparatively recent writing "the Gospel of Truth," though it agrees in nothing with the Gospels of the Apostles, so that they have really no Gospel which is not full of blasphemy. For if what they have published is the Gospel of truth, and yet is totally unlike those which have been handed down to us from the apostles, any who please may learn, as is shown from the Scriptures themselves, that that which has been handed down from the apostles can no longer be reckoned the Gospel of truth. But that these Gospels alone are true and reliable, and admit neither an increase nor diminution of the aforesaid number, I have proved by so many and such [arguments]. For, since God made all things in due proportion and adaptation, it was fit also that the outward aspect of the Gospel should be well arranged and harmonized. The opinion of those men, therefore, who handed the Gospel down to us, having been investigated, from their very fountainheads, let us proceed also to the remaining apostles, and inquire into their doctrine with regard to God; then, in due course we shall listen to the very words of the Lord.

Summary: In paragraph nine, Irenaeus affirms, “These things being so, all who destroy the form of the Gospel are vain, unlearned, and also audacious; those, [I mean,] who represent the aspects of the Gospel as being either more in number than as aforesaid, or, on the other hand, fewer.” Irenaeus then explains, “The former class [do so], that they may seem to have discovered more than is of the truth; the latter, that they may set the dispensations of God aside.” Irenaeus then gives an example as he testifies, “For Marcion, rejecting the entire Gospel, yea rather, cutting himself off from the Gospel, boasts that he has part in the [blessings of] the Gospel.” Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “Others, again (the Montanists), that they may set at nought the gift of the Spirit, which in the latter times has been, by the good pleasure of the Father, poured out upon the human race, do not admit that aspect [of the evangelical dispensation] presented by John’s Gospel, in which the Lord promised that He would send the Paraclete,” John 14:16,26, 15:26,27, 16:7,13, “but set aside at once both the Gospel and the prophetic Spirit.” Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “Wretched men indeed! who wish to be pseudo-prophets, forsooth, but who set aside the gift of prophecy from the Church; acting like those (the Encratitæ) who, on account of such as come in hypocrisy, hold themselves aloof from the communion of the brethren.” Irenaeus continues as he warns, “We must conclude, moreover, that these men (the Montanists) can not admit the Apostle Paul either. For, in his Epistle to the Corinthians, he speaks expressly of prophetic gifts, and recognises men and women prophesying in the Church,” referring to 1 Corinthians 11:4,5. Irenaeus then judges, “Sinning, therefore, in all these particulars, against the Spirit of God, they fall into the irremissible sin,” referring to Matthew 12:31. Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “But those who are from Valentinus, being, on the other hand, altogether reckless, while they put forth their own compositions, boast that they possess more Gospels than there really are.” Irenaeus then continues as he testifies, “Indeed, they have arrived at such a pitch of audacity, as to entitle their comparatively recent writing “the Gospel of Truth,” though it agrees in nothing with the Gospels of the Apostles, so that they have really no Gospel which is not full of blasphemy. For if what they have published is the Gospel of truth, and yet is totally unlike those which have been handed down to us from the apostles, any who please may learn, as is shown from the Scriptures themselves, that that which has been handed down from the apostles can no longer be reckoned the Gospel of truth.” Irenaeus then affirms, “But that these Gospels alone are true and reliable, and admit neither an increase nor diminution of the aforesaid number, I have proved by so many and such [arguments]. For, since God made all things in due proportion and adaptation, it was fit also that the outward aspect of the Gospel should be well arranged and harmonized. The opinion of those men, therefore, who handed the Gospel down to us, having been investigated, from their very fountainheads, let us proceed also to the remaining apostles, and inquire into their doctrine with regard to God; then, in due course we shall listen to the very words of the Lord.”

Commentary: Irenaeus is here defending the four gospels, as they have been handed down by the apostles, against those who would mutilate them or add to their number. He rejects specifically Marcion, whom he believes has himself rejected the entire Gospel message. By this he means that Marcion so corrupted the Gospel by his writings that he in effect rejected it. Irenaeus records that the Montanists say that there are no gifts of the Spirit. Irenaeus is adamant that the Spirit has been “poured out upon the human race” as was promised by Jesus in John’s Gospel as in John 14 (KJV):16 And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever; 17 Even the Spirit of truth; whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him: but ye know him; for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you.

And in John 15 (KJV):26 But when the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he shall testify of me: 27 And ye also shall bear witness, because ye have been with me from the beginning.

And in John 16 (KJV):7 Nevertheless I tell you the truth; It is expedient for you that I go away: for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart, I will send him unto you.

And in John 16 (KJV):13 Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth: for he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak: and he will shew you things to come.

Irenaeus testifies that the Montanists do not admit the prophetic Spirit, and therefore do not admit the Apostle Paul who spoke of both men and women prophesying in the Church as we read in 1 Corinthians 11 (KJV):1 Be ye followers of me, even as I also am of Christ. 2 Now I praise you, brethren, that ye remember me in all things, and keep the ordinances, as I delivered them to you. 3 But I would have you know, that the head of every man is Christ; and the head of the woman is the man; and the head of Christ is God. 4 Every man praying or prophesying, having his head covered, dishonoureth his head. 5 But every woman that prayeth or prophesieth with her head uncovered dishonoureth her head: for that is even all one as if she were shaven. 6 For if the woman be not covered, let her also be shorn: but if it be a shame for a woman to be shorn or shaven, let her be covered. 7 For a man indeed ought not to cover his head, forasmuch as he is the image and glory of God: but the woman is the glory of the man.

Irenaeus refers specifically to the gifts of the Spirit mentioned in 1 Corinthians 12:1-11, which I have quoted in the previous section. Irenaeus says that those who deny the Holy Spirit fall into the irremissible sin as in Matthew 12 (KJV):30 He that is not with me is against me; and he that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad. 31 Wherefore I say unto you, All manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men: but the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost shall not be forgiven unto men. 32 And whosoever speaketh a word against the Son of man, it shall be forgiven him: but whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world, neither in the world to come.

Irenaeus testifies that these new gospels of Valentinus and Marcion do not agree even in part with the true gospels. They are therefore false gospels as in Galatians 1 (KJV):8 But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed. 9 As we said before, so say I now again, if any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed.

There are many today who do not admit the gifts of the Spirit, or the prophetic Spirit, though they do allow for the fruit of the Spirit, that is, love, joy, peace, and so forth. We must have grace for each other. We must follow the Lord's command by Paul not to judge our brother as in Romans 14 (KJV):1 Him that is weak in the faith receive ye, but not to doubtful disputations.

And in Romans 14 (KJV):10 But why dost thou judge thy brother? or why dost thou set at nought thy brother? for we shall all stand before the judgment seat of Christ. 11 For it is written, As I live, saith the Lord, every knee shall bow to me, and every tongue shall confess to God. 12 So then every one of us shall give account of himself to God.

And in Romans 14 (KJV):13 Let us not therefore judge one another any more: but judge this rather, that no man put a stumblingblock or an occasion to fall in his brother's way.

And in Romans 14 (KJV):22 Hast thou faith? have it to thyself before God. Happy is he that condemneth not himself in that thing which he alloweth. 23 And he that doubteth is damned if he eat, because he eateth not of faith: for whatsoever is not of faith is sin.

I myself am convinced that the Holy Spirit still manifests His presence in the Church today in miracles and diverse gifts of the Spirit. But I also believe that exercising the gifts without the fruit of the Spirit is not the most excellent way. We must exercise the gifts with love, and with the fruit of the Spirit, or we are nothing as in 1 Corinthians 13 (KJV):1 Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not charity, I am become as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal. 2 And though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge; and though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains, and have not charity, I am nothing. 3 And though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burned, and have not charity, it profiteth me nothing.

Book 5: Chapter VI.—God will bestow salvation upon the whole nature of man, consisting of body and soul in close union, since the Word took it upon Him, and adorned with the gifts of the Holy Spirit, of whom our bodies are, and are termed, the temples.

1. Now God shall be glorified in His handiwork, fitting it so as to be conformable to, and modelled after, His own Son. For by the hands of the Father, that is, by the Son and the Holy Spirit, man, and not [merely] a part of man, was made in the likeness of God. Now the soul and the spirit are certainly a part of the man, but certainly not the man; for the perfect man consists in the commingling and the union of the soul receiving the spirit of the Father, and the admixture of that fleshly nature which was moulded after the image of God. For this reason does the apostle declare, “We speak wisdom among them that are perfect,” 4476 1 Cor. ii. 6 terming those persons “perfect” who have received the Spirit of God, and who through the Spirit of God do speak in all languages, as he used Himself also to speak. In like manner we do also hear 4477 The old Latin has “audivimus,” have heard. many brethren in the Church, who possess prophetic gifts, and who through the Spirit speak all kinds of languages, and bring to light for the general benefit the hidden things of men, and declare the mysteries of God, whom also the apostle terms “spiritual,” they being spiritual because they partake of the Spirit, and not because their flesh has been stripped off and taken away, and because they have become purely spiritual. For if any one take away the substance of flesh, that is, of the handiwork [of God], and understand that which is purely spiritual, such then would not be a spiritual man but would be the spirit of a man, or the Spirit of God. But when the spirit here blended with the soul is united to [God’s] handiwork, the man is rendered spiritual and perfect because of the outpouring of the Spirit, and this is he who was made in the image and likeness of God. But if the Spirit be wanting to the soul, he who is such is indeed of an animal nature, and being left carnal, shall be an imperfect being, possessing indeed the image [of God] in his formation (in plasmate), but not receiving the similitude through the Spirit; and thus is this being imperfect. Thus also, if any one take away the image and set aside the handiwork, he cannot then understand this as being a man, but as either some part of a man, as I have already said, or as something else than a man. For that flesh which has been molded is not a perfect man in itself, but the body of a man, and part of a man. Neither is the soul itself, considered apart by itself, the man; but it is the soul of a man, and part of a man. Neither is the spirit a man, for it is called the spirit, and not a man; but the commingling and union of all these constitutes the perfect man. And for this cause does the apostle, explaining himself, make it clear that the saved man is a complete man as well as a spiritual man; saying thus in the first Epistle to the Thessalonians, “Now the God of peace sanctify you perfect (perfectos); and may your spirit, and soul, and body be preserved whole without complaint to the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ.” 4478 1 Thess. v. 23. [I have before referred the student to the “Biblical Psychology” of Prof. Delitzsch (translation), T. & T. Clark, Edinburgh, 1868. Now what was his object in praying that these three—that is, soul, body, and spirit—might be preserved to the coming of the Lord, unless he was aware of the [future] reintegration and union of the three, and [that they should be heirs of] one and the same salvation? For this cause also he declares that those are “the perfect” who present unto the Lord the three [component parts] without offence. Those, then, are the perfect who have had the Spirit of God remaining in them, and have preserved their souls and bodies blameless, holding fast the faith of God, that is, that faith which is [directed] towards God, and maintaining righteous dealings with respect to their neighbours.

2. Whence also he says, that this handiwork is “the temple of God,” thus declaring: “Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you? If any man, therefore, will defile the temple of God, him will God destroy: for the temple of God is holy, which [temple] ye are.” Here he manifestly declares the body to be the temple in which the Spirit dwells. As also the Lord speaks in reference to Himself, “Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up. He spake this, however,” it is said, “of the temple of His body.” And not only does he (the apostle) acknowledge our bodies to be a temple, but even the temple of Christ, saying thus to the Corinthians, “Know ye not that your bodies are members of Christ? Shall I then take the members of Christ, and make them the members of an harlot?” He speaks these things, not in reference to some other spiritual man; for a being of such a nature could have nothing to do with an harlot: but he declares “our body,” that is, the flesh which continues in sanctity and purity, to be “the members of Christ;” but that when it becomes one with an harlot, it becomes the members of an harlot. And for this reason he said, “If any man defile the temple of God, him will God destroy.” How then is it not the utmost blasphemy to allege, that the temple of God, in which the Spirit of the Father dwells, and the members of Christ, do not partake of salvation, but are reduced to perdition? Also, that our bodies are raised not from their own substance, but by the power of God, he says to the Corinthians, “Now the body is not for fornication, but for the Lord, and the Lord for the body. But God hath both raised up the Lord, and shall raise us up by His own power.”

Summary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus affirms, “Now God shall be glorified in His handiwork, fitting it so as to be conformable to, and modelled after, His own Son.” Irenaeus then explains, “For by the hands of the Father, that is, by the Son and the Holy Spirit, man, and not [merely] a part of man, was made in the likeness of God. Now the soul and the spirit are certainly a part of the man, but certainly not the man; for the perfect man consists in the commingling and the union of the soul receiving the spirit of the Father, and the admixture of that fleshly nature which was moulded after the image of God.” Irenaeus then affirms, “For this reason does the apostle declare, “We speak wisdom among them that are perfect,” referring to 1 Corinthians 2:6, “terming those persons “perfect” who have received the Spirit of God, and who through the Spirit of God do speak in all languages, as he used Himself also to speak,” referring to 1 Corinthians 14:18. Irenaeus then testifies, “In like manner we do also hear many brethren in the Church, who possess prophetic gifts, and who through the Spirit speak all kinds of languages, and bring to light for the general benefit the hidden things of men, and declare the mysteries of God, whom also the apostle terms “spiritual,” they being spiritual because they partake of the Spirit, and not because their flesh has been stripped off and taken away, and because they have become purely spiritual.” Irenaeus then argues, “For if any one take away the substance of flesh, that is, of the handiwork [of God], and understand that which is purely spiritual, such then would not be a spiritual man but would be the spirit of a man, or the Spirit of God. But when the spirit here blended with the soul is united to [God’s] handiwork, the man is rendered spiritual and perfect because of the outpouring of the Spirit, and this is he who was made in the image and likeness of God.” Irenaeus continues as he explains, “But if the Spirit be wanting to the soul, he who is such is indeed of an animal nature, and being left carnal, shall be an imperfect being, possessing indeed the image [of God] in his formation (in plasmate), but not receiving the similitude through the Spirit; and thus is this being imperfect. Neither is the spirit a man, for it is called the spirit, and not a man; but the commingling and union of all these constitutes the perfect man.” Irenaeus then testifies, “And for this cause does the apostle, explaining himself, make it clear that the saved man is a complete man as well as a spiritual man; saying thus in the first Epistle to the Thessalonians, “Now the God of peace sanctify you perfect (perfectos); and may your spirit, and soul, and body be preserved whole without complaint to the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ,” referring to 1 Thessalonians 5:23. And Irenaeus concludes as he again explains, “Now what was his object in praying that these three—that is, soul, body, and spirit—might be preserved to the coming of the Lord, unless he was aware of the [future] reintegration and union of the three, and [that they should be heirs of] one and the same salvation? Those, then, are the perfect who have had the Spirit of God remaining in them, and have preserved their souls and bodies blameless, holding fast the faith of God, that is, that faith which is [directed] towards God, and maintaining righteous dealings with respect to their neighbours.”

In paragraph two, Irenaeus testifies, “Whence also he says, that this handiwork is “the temple of God,” thus declaring: “Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you? If any man, therefore, will defile the temple of God, him will God destroy: for the temple of God is holy, which [temple] ye are,” referring to 1 Corinthians 3:16-17. Irenaeus then affirms, “Here he manifestly declares the body to be the temple in which the Spirit dwells. As also the Lord speaks in reference to Himself, “Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up. He spake this, however,” it is said, “of the temple of His body,” referring to John 2:19-21. Irenaeus continues as he then testifies, “And not only does he (the apostle) acknowledge our bodies to be a temple, but even the temple of Christ, saying thus to the Corinthians, “Know ye not that your bodies are members of Christ? Shall I then take the members of Christ, and make them the members of an harlot?” He is referring to 1 Corinthians 6:15. Irenaeus then explains his thinking as he says, “He speaks these things, not in reference to some other spiritual man; for a being of such a nature could have nothing to do with an harlot: but he declares “our body,” that is, the flesh which continues in sanctity and purity, to be “the members of Christ;” but that when it becomes one with an harlot, it becomes the members of an harlot.” Irenaeus then again testifies, “And for this reason he said, “If any man defile the temple of God, him will God destroy,” 1 Corinthians 3:17. Irenaeus then affirms, “How then is it not the utmost blasphemy to allege, that the temple of God, in which the Spirit of the Father dwells, and the members of Christ, do not partake of salvation, but are reduced to perdition?” Irenaeus concludes as he testifies, “Also, that our bodies are raised not from their own substance, but by the power of God, he says to the Corinthians, “Now the body is not for fornication, but for the Lord, and the Lord for the body. But God hath both raised up the Lord, and shall raise us up by His own power,” 1 Corinthians 6:13-14.

Commentary: Irenaeus first affirms in paragraph one, “Now God shall be glorified in His handiwork, fitting it so as to be conformable to, and modelled after, His own Son.” This statement reminds us of Romans 8 (KJV):29 For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the firstborn among many brethren. 30 Moreover whom he did predestinate, them he also called: and whom he called, them he also justified: and whom he justified, them he also glorified.

Irenaeus then affirms, “For by the hands of the Father, that is, by the Son and the Holy Spirit, man, and not [merely] a part of man, was made in the likeness of God.” This reminds us of Genesis 1 (KJV):26 And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness: and let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth. 27 So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them.

Man is said to have been formed by God of dust as in Genesis 2 (KJV):7 And the LORD God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul.

And in the Septuagint we read as in Genesis 2 (Septuagint):7 And God formed the man of dust of the earth, and breathed upon his face the breath of life, and the man became a living soul.

And woman was formed from man by the Lord as we read in Genesis 2 (NASB):22 The LORD God fashioned into a woman the rib which He had taken from the man, and brought her to the man.

And He made them male and female in the likeness of God as we read in Genesis 5 (KJV):1 This is the book of the generations of Adam. In the day that God created man, in the likeness of God made he him; 2 Male and female created he them; and blessed them, and called their name Adam, in the day when they were created.

Irenaeus then affirms, “Now the soul and the spirit are certainly a part of the man, but certainly not the man; for the perfect man consists in the commingling and the union of the soul receiving the spirit of the Father, and the admixture of that fleshly nature which was moulded after the image of God.” Irenaeus is defending the Church against the Gnostics who did not believe that the body, the flesh, would be resurrected. Irenaeus is trying to explain why and how the flesh will be saved.

Irenaeus then affirms, “For this reason does the apostle declare, “We speak wisdom among them that are perfect,” referring to 1 Corinthians 2 (NASB):6 Yet we do speak wisdom among those who are mature; a wisdom, however, not of this age nor of the rulers of this age, who are passing away;

Note that the word “mature”, or the word “perfect” as used by Irenaeus, is the Greek word τέλειος (pronounced teleios) from τέλος (pronounced telos) which “signifies having reached its end (telos), finished, complete, perfect. It is used (I) of persons (a) primarily of physical development, then, with ethical import, fully grown, mature.” Expository Dictionary of New Testament Words, W.E. Vine, Vol. III, page 173-4.

To understand what this word “teleios” means, we read where the word is used again in 1 Corinthians 14 (NASB):20 Brethren, do not be children in your thinking; yet in evil be infants, but in your thinking be mature.

The word “mature” in this verse is again τέλειος (pronounce teleios), and means mature, in contrast to being an infant in your thinking. The ones to whom Paul was addressing as “perfect” in 1 Corinthians 2:6 were the mature believers, those who were no longer children tossed to and fro by every wind of doctrine. They had grown to the place where they were strong in the Lord and in His word.

Irenaeus then explains what he means, that is, his interpretation, as he says, “terming those persons “perfect” who have received the Spirit of God, and who through the Spirit of God do speak in all languages, as he used Himself also to speak,” referring to 1 Corinthians 14 (NASB):18 I thank God, I speak in tongues more than you all;

Irenaeus then testifies, “In like manner we do also hear many brethren in the Church, who possess prophetic gifts, and who through the Spirit speak all kinds of languages, and bring to light for the general benefit the hidden things of men, and declare the mysteries of God, whom also the apostle terms “spiritual,” they being spiritual because they partake of the Spirit, and not because their flesh has been stripped off and taken away, and because they have become purely spiritual.”

Irenaeus testifies to the presence of the Spirit of God in the brethren in the Church in his time, as well as to the manifestations of the Spirit through the brethren. He states the simple truth that we can still be spiritual in our flesh. This flies in the face of the Gnostic belief that the flesh is evil. Now I know of no record that states that Irenaeus himself spoke in tongues. However apparently there were some in his day that were as he reports here.

Irenaeus then argues, “For if any one take away the substance of flesh, that is, of the handiwork [of God], and understand that which is purely spiritual, such then would not be a spiritual man but would be the spirit of a man, or the Spirit of God.” That is, God made us to have body, soul, and spirit. Irenaeus continues as he says, “But when the spirit here blended with the soul is united to [God’s] handiwork, the man is rendered spiritual and perfect because of the outpouring of the Spirit, and this is he who was made in the image and likeness of God.” That is, Irenaeus is saying that it is the Spirit of God that makes man spiritual.

Irenaeus continues as he says, “But if the Spirit be wanting to the soul, he who is such is indeed of an animal nature, and being left carnal, shall be an imperfect being, possessing indeed the image [of God] in his formation (in plasmate), but not receiving the similitude through the Spirit; and thus is this being imperfect.”

It is true that without the Spirit of God, man is imperfect and is still in his sinful state, and is left carnal. This is what Paul was saying in Romans 8 (KJV):5 For they that are after the flesh do mind the things of the flesh; but they that are after the Spirit the things of the Spirit. 6 For to be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace. 7 Because the carnal mind is enmity against God: for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be. 8 So then they that are in the flesh cannot please God. 9 But ye are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you. Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his.

Now Irenaeus continues as he explains, “Thus also, if any one take away the image and set aside the handiwork, he cannot then understand this as being a man, but as either some part of a man, as I have already said, or as something else than a man.” The flesh is important, Irenaeus says, because it tells us what a man is. We would not know a man except we saw him in the flesh. Irenaeus then points out, “For that flesh which has been molded is not a perfect man in itself, but the body of a man, and part of a man. Neither is the soul itself, considered apart by itself, the man; but it is the soul of a man, and part of a man. Neither is the spirit a man, for it is called the spirit, and not a man; but the commingling and union of all these constitutes the perfect man.”

Irenaeus then testifies referring to the apostle Paul, “And for this cause does the apostle, explaining himself, make it clear that the saved man is a complete man as well as a spiritual man; saying thus in the first Epistle to the Thessalonians, “Now the God of peace sanctify you perfect (perfectos); and may your spirit, and soul, and body be preserved whole without complaint to the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ,” referring to 1 Thessalonians 5 (KJV):23 And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly; and I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ.

The word “wholly” in this verse is the Greek word ὁλοτελής (pronounced holotelēs). This word comes from two Greek words, ὅλος (pronounced holos) meaning all or wholly, and τέλος (pronounced telos) meaning end. It is literally “whole-complete,” or “through and through;” It is “the Apostle’s desire is that the sanctification of the believer may extend to every part of his being.” This word “draws attention to the person as a whole,” and “to the several parts which constitute him.” Expository Dictionary of New Testament Words, W.E. Vine, Vol. IV, page 213-214. This word is the word Irenaeus translates as “perfect (perfectos)” above.

The word “whole” is also in this verse. It is the Greek word ὁλόκληρος (pronounced holoklēros), and this word means “complete, sound in every part” (holos, “whole,” kleros, “a lot,” i.e., with all that has fallen by lot). Expository Dictionary of New Testament Words, W.E. Vine, Vol. II, page 36.

Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “Now what was his object in praying that these three—that is, soul, body, and spirit—might be preserved to the coming of the Lord, unless he was aware of the [future] reintegration and union of the three, and [that they should be heirs of] one and the same salvation?” Irenaeus thus points out that all three parts of man, body, soul, and spirit, will be united in salvation. This is in direct opposition to the Gnostic teaching that the body will not be saved.

Now Irenaeus continues as he asserts, “For this cause also he declares that those are “the perfect” who present unto the Lord the three [component parts] without offence.” However, this is not quite what the Scripture is saying, but in fact is a misinterpretation. The Scripture is a prayer of the apostle that God would entirely sanctify the Thessalonians, and that their spirit and soul and body would be preserved complete, that is, together as a lot with all its component parts, without blame at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. The Scripture is not saying that the ones who present body, soul, and spirit to the Lord without offence are “the perfect”. In his zeal to defend the faith against the Gnostic belief that the body is not saved, Irenaeus places a condition on our salvation that is not there. The Scripture does not say, “if you keep your spirit, soul, and body perfect and without offence you will be saved,” but rather is the prayer of Paul that God would do the work of sanctification in the Thessalonians and preserve their spirit, soul, and body whole and blameless at the coming of the Lord Jesus. This is a prayer that God most certainly would answer.

And Peter explains that we who have faith are kept by the power of God through faith as we read in 1 Peter 1 (KJV):3 Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, 4 To an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you, 5 Who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation ready to be revealed in the last time.

Yet Irenaeus continues as he asserts, “Those, then, are the perfect who have had the Spirit of God remaining in them, and have preserved their souls and bodies blameless, holding fast the faith of God, that is, that faith which is [directed] towards God, and maintaining righteous dealings with respect to their neighbours.”

Irenaeus here turns it around and says that the perfect are those who keep the Holy Spirit in themselves by not falling into sin. He is saying that in this way they “have preserved their souls and bodies blameless.” But the Scripture in 1 Thessalonians 5:23 is a prayer that God would preserve them, and not that they would preserve themselves.

Irenaeus believed that after we had believed in the Lord Jesus, and received the Spirit of God, that we could lose the Spirit if we did not walk “in communion of the Spirit”, that is, if we walked in the flesh. We have already touched on this in Chapter 7: Inheriting the Kingdom of Heaven when we looked at paragraphs 3 and 4 in Book 5: Chapter IX of Irenaeus’ writing. Irenaeus says in paragraph three, “As therefore he says, when we were destitute of the celestial Spirit, we walked in former times in the oldness of the flesh, not obeying God; so now let us, receiving the Spirit, walk in newness of life, obeying God. Inasmuch, therefore, as without the Spirit of God we cannot be saved, the apostle exhorts us through faith and chaste conversation to preserve the Spirit of God, lest, having become non-participators of the Divine Spirit, we lose the kingdom of heaven; and he exclaims, that flesh in itself, and blood, cannot possess the kingdom of God.” And again in paragraph four, Irenaeus writes, “In order that we may not lose life by losing that Spirit which possesses us, the apostle, exhorting us to the communion of the Spirit, has said, according to reason, in those words already quoted, “That flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God.” Just as if he were to say, “Do not err; for unless the Word of God dwell with, and the Spirit of the Father be in you, and if ye shall live frivolously and carelessly as if ye were this only, viz., mere flesh and blood, ye cannot inherit the kingdom of God.”

When we accept Christ and are born again, we have the Spirit of God as the life of our spirit, since we are born of the Spirit. And this life which we possess is eternal life being a life given us by the Spirit of God. This is why John says that he that has the Son has eternal life as we read in 1 John 5 (KJV):11 And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. 12 He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life. 13 These things have I written unto you that believe on the name of the Son of God; that ye may know that ye have eternal life, and that ye may believe on the name of the Son of God.

We don't lose the Holy Spirit if we sin. That would mean that we would have to be born again all over again. God had a plan. Jesus tells us that we do not have to be born all over again when we sin once we have had a bath. Once we have had a bath by believing in Him, we just have to wash our feet as we read in John 13 (KJV):10 Jesus saith to him, He that is washed needeth not save to wash his feet, but is clean every whit: and ye are clean, but not all.

In paragraph two, Irenaeus testifies, "Whence also he says, that this handiwork is "the temple of God," thus declaring: "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you? If any man, therefore, will defile the temple of God, him will God destroy: for the temple of God is holy, which [temple] ye are," referring to 1 Corinthians 3 (KJV):16 Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you? 17 If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy; for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are.

Irenaeus then affirms, "Here he manifestly declares the body to be the temple in which the Spirit dwells. As also the Lord speaks in reference to Himself, "Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up. He spake this, however," it is said, "of the temple of His body," referring to John 2 (KJV):19 Jesus answered and said unto them, Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up. 20 Then said the Jews, Forty and six years was this temple in building, and wilt thou rear it up in three days? 21 But he spake of the temple of his body. 22 When therefore he was risen from the dead, his disciples remembered that he had said this unto them; and they believed the scripture, and the word which Jesus had said.

Irenaeus is saying that the "body is the temple in which the Spirit dwells." This is in direct opposition to the Gnostic teaching that the body is evil. And Irenaeus is also saying that the Lord also referred to His body as a temple.

Not only so, but Irenaeus continues as he then testifies, "And not only does he (the apostle) acknowledge our bodies to be a temple, but even the temple of Christ, saying thus to the Corinthians, "Know ye not that your bodies are members of Christ? Shall I then take the members of Christ, and make them the members of an harlot?" He is referring to 1 Corinthians 6 (KJV):15 Know ye not that your bodies are the members of Christ? shall I then take the members of Christ, and make them the members of an harlot? God forbid.

Irenaeus then explains his thinking as he says, "He speaks these things, not in reference to some other spiritual man; for a being of such a nature could have nothing to do with an harlot: but he declares "our body," that is, the flesh which continues in sanctity and purity, to be "the members of Christ," but that when it becomes one with an harlot, it becomes the members of an harlot." Irenaeus then again testifies, "And for this reason he said, "If any man defile the temple of God, him will God destroy," referring again in context to 1 Corinthians 3 (KJV):16 Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you? 17 If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy; for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are.

Irenaeus here again leaves the door open for the believer to lose the Spirit of God by not continuing "in sanctity and purity," or by becoming "one with an harlot." However, the thought here in chapter 3 of 1 Corinthians is of rewards as Paul explains in the previous verses in 1 Corinthians 3 (KJV):12 Now if any man build upon this foundation gold, silver, precious stones, wood, hay, stubble; 13 Every man's work shall be made manifest: for the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire; and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is. 14 If any man's work abide which he hath built thereupon, he shall receive a reward. 15 If any man's work shall be burned, he shall suffer loss: but he himself shall be saved; yet so as by fire.

The Scripture is saying that the one has faith in Jesus Christ, yet produces only wood, hay, or straw will suffer loss in this life, yet he himself will be saved, yet so as through fire. There is no thought of preserving our salvation here. The Scripture is speaking of future rewards for the obedience of faith in this life.

Irenaeus then affirms, “How then is it not the utmost blasphemy to allege, that the temple of God, in which the Spirit of the Father dwells, and the members of Christ, do not partake of salvation, but are reduced to perdition?” Irenaeus here adamantly opposes the teaching of the Gnostics, calling it the “utmost blasphemy.”

Irenaeus concludes as he testifies, “Also, that our bodies are raised not from their own substance, but by the power of God, he says to the Corinthians, “Now the body is not for fornication, but for the Lord, and the Lord for the body. But God hath both raised up the Lord, and shall raise us up by His own power,” referring in context to 1 Corinthians 6 (KJV):13 Meats for the belly, and the belly for meats: but God shall destroy both it and them. Now the body is not for fornication, but for the Lord; and the Lord for the body. 14 And God hath both raised up the Lord, and will also raise up us by his own power.

His point against the Gnostics is well taken. However, he again makes our salvation conditional when he interprets Paul to say that the “flesh which continues in sanctity and purity, to be “the members of Christ,”” referring to 1 Corinthians 6:15 above. Irenaeus leaves us without a way if we commit the sin of fornication, that is, if we become one with a harlot.

Irenaeus does not understand how the Christian is to deal with sin once he is saved by faith in Jesus Christ. If we commit harlotry, to be sure, we dishonor our Head, who is Christ. And we can expect to be disciplined by a good Father. But the God who forgave us our sins when we believed in Jesus Christ also continues to forgive us and to cleanse us of all unrighteousness. If anyone sins, we have an Advocate with the Father as we read in 1 John 2 (KJV):1 My little children, these things write I unto you, that ye sin not. And if any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous: 2 And he is the propitiation for our sins: and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world.

He is the only sacrifice for sin. We have only to confess it to regain His fellowship. It does not mean that we are not members of Christ any more. We are sinning sons, not sinning sinners. Nevertheless, Irenaeus admirably defends the faith against the Gnostic error that asserts that the body will not be saved.

Irenaeus also here testifies to the ongoing practice of spiritual gifts in the Church in his day. Though he does not mention any gifting of his own, he strongly attests to the validity of their practice in the Church of his day.

Book 5: Chapter VIII.—The gifts of the Holy Spirit which we receive prepare us for incorruption, render us spiritual, and separate us from carnal men. These two classes are signified by the clean and unclean animals in the legal dispensation.

1. But we do now receive a certain portion of His Spirit, tending towards perfection, and preparing us for incorruption, being little by little accustomed to receive and bear God; which also the apostle terms “an earnest,” that is, a part of the honour which has been promised us by God, where he says in the Epistle to the Ephesians, “In which ye also, having heard the word of truth, the Gospel of your salvation, believing in which we have been sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise, which is the earnest of our inheritance.” 4495 Eph. i. 13, etc. This earnest, therefore, thus dwelling in us, renders us spiritual even now, and the mortal is swallowed up by immortality. 4496 2 Cor. v. 4. “For ye,” he declares, “are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you.”

4497 Rom. viii. 9 This, however does not take place by a casting away of the flesh, but by the impartation of the Spirit. For those to whom he was writing were not without flesh, but they were those who had received the Spirit of God, “by which we cry, Abba, Father.” 4498 Rom. viii. 15. If therefore, at the present time, having the earnest, we do cry, “Abba, Father,” what shall it be when, on rising again, we behold Him face to face; when all the members shall burst out into a continuous hymn of triumph, glorifying Him who raised them from the dead, and gave the gift of eternal life? For if the earnest, gathering man into itself, does even now cause him to cry, “Abba, Father,” what shall the complete grace of the Spirit effect, which shall be given to men by God? It will render us like unto Him, and accomplish the will 4499 This is adopting Harvey’s emendation of “voluntatem” for “voluntate.” of the Father; for it shall make man after the image and likeness of God.

2. Those persons, then, who possess the earnest of the Spirit, and who are not enslaved by the lusts of the flesh, but are subject to the Spirit, and who in all things walk according to the light of reason, does the apostle properly term “spiritual,” because the Spirit of God dwells in them. Now, spiritual men shall not be incorporeal spirits; but our substance, that is, the union of flesh and spirit, receiving the Spirit of God, makes up the spiritual man. But those who do indeed reject the Spirit’s counsel, and are the slaves of fleshly lusts, and lead lives contrary to reason, and who, without restraint, plunge headlong into their own desires, having no longing after the Divine Spirit, do live after the manner of swine and of dogs; these men, [I say], does the apostle very properly term “carnal,” because they have no thought of anything else except carnal things.

Summary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus testifies, “But we do now receive a certain portion of His Spirit, tending towards perfection, and preparing us for incorruption, being little by little accustomed to receive and bear God; which also the apostle terms “an earnest,” that is, a part of the honour which has been promised us by God, where he says in the Epistle to the Ephesians, “In which ye also, having heard the word of truth, the Gospel of your salvation, believing in which we have been sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise, which is the earnest of our inheritance,” referring to Ephesians 1:13. Irenaeus continues as he then testifies, “This earnest, therefore, thus dwelling in us, renders us spiritual even now, and the mortal is swallowed up by immortality,” referring in part to 2 Corinthians 5:4. And he adds, “For ye,” he declares, “are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you,” referring to Romans 8:9. Irenaeus then affirms, “This, however does not take place by a casting away of the flesh, but by the impartation of the Spirit. For those to whom he was writing were not without flesh, but they were those who had received the Spirit of God, “by which we cry, Abba, Father,” referring to Romans 8:15. Irenaeus then argues cogently, “If therefore, at the present time, having the earnest, we do cry, “Abba, Father,” what shall it be when, on rising again, we behold Him face to face; when all the members shall burst out into a continuous hymn of triumph, glorifying Him who raised them from the dead, and gave the gift of eternal life? For if the earnest, gathering man into itself, does even now cause him to cry, “Abba, Father,” what shall the complete grace of the Spirit effect, which shall be given to men by God? It will render us like unto Him, and accomplish the will of the Father; for it shall make man after the image and likeness of God.”

In paragraph two, Irenaeus affirms, “Those persons, then, who possess the earnest of the Spirit, and who are not enslaved by the lusts of the flesh, but are subject to the Spirit, and who in all things walk according to the light of reason, does the apostle properly term “spiritual,” because the Spirit of God dwells in them.” Irenaeus then explains, “Now, spiritual men shall not be incorporeal spirits; but our substance, that is, the union of flesh and spirit, receiving the Spirit of God, makes up the spiritual man.” And Irenaeus concludes, “But those who do indeed reject the Spirit’s counsel, and are the slaves of fleshly lusts, and lead lives contrary to reason, and who, without restraint, plunge headlong into their own desires, having no longing after the Divine Spirit, do live after the manner of swine and of dogs; these men, [I say], does the apostle very properly term “carnal,” because they have no thought of anything else except carnal things.”

Commentary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus testifies, “But we do now receive a certain portion of His Spirit, tending towards perfection, and preparing us for incorruption, being little by little accustomed to receive and bear God; which also the apostle terms “an earnest,” that is, a part of the honour which has been promised us by God, where he says in the Epistle to the Ephesians, “In which ye also, having heard the word of truth, the Gospel of your salvation, believing in which we have been sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise, which is the earnest of our inheritance,” referring to Ephesians 1 (KJV):13 In whom ye also trusted, after that ye heard the word of truth, the gospel of your salvation: in whom also after that ye believed, ye were sealed with that holy Spirit of promise, 14 Which is the earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession, unto the praise of his glory.

Irenaeus’ confession is that when we believe, we are sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise. The word “earnest” in the Greek is ἀρραβών (pronounced arrabōn). Vine’s says that this word means “originally, earnest money deposited by the purchaser and forfeited if the purchase was not completed”, and “In general usage it came to denote a pledge or earnest of any sort.” Expository Dictionary of New Testament Words, W.E. Vine, Vol. II, page 11.

In the context of what Paul wrote in Ephesians, we see that the Holy Spirit is given as a pledge of our inheritance. Our spirit, being born of God, is redeemed the moment we believe the gospel message. When we are born again of the Spirit, we receive a new nature, being born of God, as we read in John 1 (NASB):12 But as many as received Him, to them He gave the right to become children of God, even to those who believe in His name, 13 who were born, not of blood nor of the will of the flesh nor of the will of man, but of God.

Just as a son cannot be the son of another earthly father once he is born, so we cannot change our Heavenly Father to another father once we are born of God. And though Irenaeus does not quote the rest of Ephesians 1:14, it is helpful to read the verses in order to place this verse in its proper context. The words translated in the NASB in verse 14 above, “with a view to the redemption of God's own possession, to the praise of His glory,” are as follows in the Greek, as stated in The Interlinear Greek-English New Testament, page 760:

εις ἀπολύτρωσιν τῆς περιποιήσεως εἰς ἔπαινον τῆς δόξης αὐτοῦ.
till [the] redemption of the possession to (the) praise of the glory of Him.

We know that when we are saved, we become God’s possession having been bought with a price as Paul reveals in 1 Corinthians 6 (KJV):19 What? know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own? 20 For ye are bought with a price: therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's.

In other words, when we have faith in Christ as our Lord and Savior, we become God’s possession. The purchase has been completed. We are then sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise who is given to us as an earnest or a pledge until our redemption is complete. Our spirit has been redeemed, and our souls, that is, our mind, will, emotions, and conscience are being progressively sanctified. But our redemption will be complete when our bodies are actually changed to be like His glorious body. Then we will be like Him. This will happen at the resurrection. And this earnest or pledge is given by God Himself. Since we are now God’s property, there is no power in heaven or hell that can keep us from Him. We are His possession. There is no going back. And this is to the praise of His glory.

This sealing of the Spirit then is really a pledge that God will complete His promise of redemption for us, that is, that He will redeem our bodies. But now we are said to groan within ourselves, waiting for this event as Paul reveals in Romans 8 (KJV):23 And not only they, but ourselves also, which have the firstfruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body.

Irenaeus continues as he then testifies, “This earnest, therefore, thus dwelling in us, renders us spiritual even now, and the mortal is swallowed up by immortality,” referring in part to 2 Corinthians 5 (KJV):4 For we that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened: not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life.

Irenaeus then adds, “For ye,” he declares, “are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you,” referring in context to Romans 8 (KJV):9 But ye are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you. Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his.

Yes, Irenaeus is correct. We are now in the Spirit because of the Spirit’s indwelling in us as believers. Those who have not believed are still “in the flesh.” But Paul really uses the term “spiritual” to apply to those who have learned to discipline their flesh. When we first come to Christ, there may be much in our souls that is not pleasing to God. Old ways of thinking may need to change. Feelings from the past, such as old hatreds or hurts, may need to be processed and resolved. This takes time to process. We must be taught in the Scriptures the Biblical truths about salvation so that we will know how to possess our vessel in sanctification and honor as Paul encourages in 1 Thessalonians 4 (KJV):1 Furthermore then we beseech you, brethren, and exhort you by the Lord Jesus, that as ye have received of us how ye ought to walk and to please God, so ye would abound more and more. 2 For ye know what commandments we gave you by the Lord Jesus. 3 For this is the will of God, even your sanctification, that ye should abstain from fornication: 4 That every one of you should know how to possess his vessel in sanctification and honour; 5 Not in the lust of concupiscence, even as the Gentiles which know not God: 6 That no man go beyond and defraud his brother in any matter: because that the Lord is the avenger of all such, as we also have forewarned you and testified. 7 For God hath not called us unto uncleanness, but unto holiness. 8 He therefore that despiseth, despiseth not man, but God, who hath also given unto us his holy Spirit.

Paul wrote this to brethren, that is, to believers. In order for us to know how to possess our own vessel in sanctification and honor, we must be taught in the word of God. God knows that we are not perfect yet. This is why it is His will that we be sanctified. As we walk in the light of His word, we are cleansed as the apostle John says in 1 John 1 (NASB):6 If we say that we have fellowship with Him and yet walk in the darkness, we lie and do not practice the truth; 7 but if we walk in the Light as He Himself is in the Light, we have fellowship with one another, and the blood of Jesus His Son cleanses us from all sin.

Believers who have not learned to discipline their flesh are what Paul in 1 Corinthians 3:1-3 terms “fleshly” or “carnal”, that is, “babes in Christ”. The Spirit dwelling in us now means simply that we are “in the Spirit.” We become spiritual as we walk in the light and discipline our flesh.

Irenaeus then continues, as he affirms, “This, however does not take place by a casting away of the flesh, but by the impartation of the Spirit. For those to whom he was writing were not without flesh, but they were those who had received the Spirit of God, “by which we cry, Abba, Father,” referring in context to Romans 8 (KJV):15 For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the Spirit of adoption, hereby we cry, Abba, Father. 16 The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God: 17 And if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together.

Irenaeus has effectively defended the faith here against the Gnostic belief that the body will not be saved. Irenaeus has shown how the body will be saved for the one who believes in Jesus Christ, receiving His Spirit.

Irenaeus then argues cogently, “If therefore, at the present time, having the earnest, we do cry, “Abba, Father,” what shall it be when, on rising again, we behold Him face to face; when all the members shall burst out into a continuous hymn of triumph, glorifying Him who raised them from the dead, and gave the gift of eternal life? For if the earnest, gathering man into itself, does even now cause him to cry, “Abba, Father,” what shall the complete grace of the Spirit effect, which shall be given to men by God? It will render us like unto Him, and accomplish the will of the Father; for it shall make man after the image and likeness of God.”

Yes, when we see Him we will be like Him as John the apostle wrote in 1 John 3 (NASB):2 Beloved, now we are children of God, and it has not appeared as yet what we will be. We know that when He appears, we will be like Him, because we will see Him just as He is.

And when we finally behold Him face to face, we can only imagine what “the complete grace of the Spirit” will effect. At that time we will be rendered completely like Him, after His image and likeness. This was God’s plan all along as we read in Romans 8 (KJV):29 For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the firstborn among many brethren. 30 Moreover whom he did predestinate, them he also called: and whom he called, them he also justified: and whom he justified, them he also glorified.

Now, in regard to his first statement in paragraph one, that we are “being little by little accustomed to receive and bear God,” this is true in one sense for our sanctification is a progressive work of the Spirit as we read in Romans 12 (KJV):1 I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service. 2 And be not conformed to this world: but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect, will of God.

As we present our bodies a living and holy sacrifice, acceptable to God, which is our spiritual service of worship, we are transformed by the renewing of our mind. The knowledge of God, as revealed by the Spirit in the word of God, renews our minds, and we are transformed or changed to be more like our Lord and Savior. We are not to go on being conformed to this world, but we are to be transformed. This is a progressive work of sanctification in the lives of believers as Paul reveals in 2 Corinthians 3 (KJV):18 But we all, with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord.

Though we have the Spirit when we accept Christ, the Spirit does not take over our lives and force us to live holy lives. We must continue as we began, that is, by faith as we read in Colossians 2 (KJV):6 As ye have therefore received Christ Jesus the Lord, so walk ye in him: 7 Rooted and built up in him, and stablished in the faith, as ye have been taught, abounding therein with thanksgiving.

We received Him by faith, and we continue by faith to walk in Him. As we grow in grace and knowledge, we become more like Him, being changed from glory to glory. This was Peter's encouragement in 2 Peter 3 (KJV):18 But grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. To him be glory both now and for ever. Amen.

Now, again in regard to Irenaeus' first statement in paragraph one, that we are "being little by little accustomed to receive and bear God," Paul, speaking of the new birth, says that God has shown in our hearts as in 2 Corinthians 4 (KJV):6 For God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ. 7 But we have this treasure in earthen vessels, that the excellency of the power may be of God, and not of us.

The treasure that we hold inside of us is Jesus Christ as we read in 2 Corinthians 13 (KJV):5 Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith; prove your own selves. Know ye not your own selves, how that Jesus Christ is in you, except ye be reprobates?

When we accept Christ, and are born again of the Spirit, Christ is said to be in us because of the new nature that is born in our spirits. In a very real way we are new creations in Christ. We bear His nature in us as His children born of His Spirit, and we also have His Spirit indwelling us. Though we are not perfect yet, God is at work in us as Paul says in Philippians 2 (KJV):13 For it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure.

Christ is not partly in us, or gradually more and more in us, but He is wholly in us. When we receive Him, we get all of Him.

Now in paragraph two, Irenaeus defines the spiritual and carnal person:

- Irenaeus defines the spiritual as he affirms, "Those persons, then, who possess the earnest of the Spirit, and who are not enslaved by the lusts of the flesh, but are subject to the Spirit, and who in all things walk according to the light of reason, does the apostle properly term "spiritual," because the Spirit of God dwells in them." Irenaeus then adds, "Now, spiritual men shall not be incorporeal spirits; but our substance, that is, the union of flesh and spirit, receiving the Spirit of God, makes up the spiritual man."
- Irenaeus defines the carnal ones as he concludes, "But those who do indeed reject the Spirit's counsel, and are the slaves of fleshly lusts, and lead lives contrary to reason, and who, without restraint, plunge headlong into their own desires, having no longing after the Divine Spirit, do live after the manner of swine and of dogs; these men, [I say], does the apostle very properly term "carnal," because they have no thought of anything else except carnal things."

In addition, we know that Irenaeus also says in Book 5: Chapter IX, paragraph 2, "On the other hand, as many as fear God and trust in His Son's advent, and who through faith do establish the Spirit of God in their hearts,—such men as these shall be properly called both "pure," and "spiritual," and "those living to God," because they possess the Spirit of the Father, who purifies man, and raises him up to the life of God."

Irenaeus seems to have thought that the mere presence of the Spirit of God in the believer's life makes him or her spiritual. Paul says in Romans 8:9 that if we have not the Spirit of God we are none of His. But in 1 Corinthians 3:1, Paul talks about being spiritual, that is, to be controlled by the Spirit of God.

The apostle Paul gives us clues as to what he means when he speaks of those who are spiritual versus those who are fleshly or carnal as we read in 1 Corinthians 3 (KJV):1 And I, brethren, could not speak unto you as unto spiritual, but as unto carnal, even as unto babes in Christ. 2 I have fed you with milk, and not with meat: for hitherto ye were not able to bear it, neither yet now are ye able. 3 For ye are yet carnal: for whereas there is among you envying, and strife, and divisions, are ye not carnal, and walk as men? 4 For while one saith, I am of Paul; and another, I am of Apollos; are ye not carnal?

Paul describes three classes of people in these verses. First there are the spiritual ones. These are those to whom Paul would give solid food. Second are the ones of flesh, who are as infants in Christ, and to whom the apostle would give milk. Third are those who are mere men. The verse actually reads in the Greek as follows, again as stated in The Interlinear Greek-English New Testament, page 662:

Καὶ ἐγώ, ἀδελφοί, οὐκ ἠδυνήθην λαλῆσαι ὑμῖν ὡς πνευματικοῖς ἀλλ' ὡς
 And I, brothers not am able to speak to you as to those who are spiritual but as σαρκινοῖς, ὡς νηπίοις ἐν Χριστῷ to those who are fleshly as to infants in Christ

So the translation of verse one reads, “And I, brothers, am not able to speak to you as to those who are spiritual, but as to those who are fleshly, as to infants in Christ.” Paul did not say that the Corinthians did not belong to Christ, but that they were yet as infants in Christ.

From what Paul says here, jealousy and strife among the brethren in Christ would not be attributes of one whom he would call spiritual. The Corinthians, Paul says, were not able to receive solid food because they only had the spiritual maturity of infants. This he could tell by their fleshly behavior. Here is how verse three actually reads in the Greek, also as stated in The Interlinear Greek-English New Testament, page 662:

ἔτι γὰρ σαρκικοί ἐστε. ὅπου γὰρ ἐν ὑμῖν ζῆλος καὶ ἔρις, οὐχὶ σαρκικοί still for fleshly you are whereas for among you envying and strife not fleshly ἐστε καὶ κατὰ ἄνθρωπον περιπατεῖτε.
 are you and according to a man you walk

So the translation of verse three reads, “For you are still fleshly, for whereas among you (are) envying and strife, are you not fleshly, and you walk according to (the limitations of one who is just) a man (that is, who does not have the Spirit of God).”

Paul is not talking about who has the Spirit of God and who does not, but about how those who had the Spirit of God were walking. The Corinthians were walking as if they did not have the Spirit of God, whom they most certainly did have as Paul reveals in 1 Corinthians 6 (KJV):19 What? know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own? 20 For ye are bought with a price: therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's.

Now the Scriptures also describe the one who needs milk and not solid food in Hebrews 5 (KJV):11 Of whom we have many things to say, and hard to be uttered, seeing ye are dull of hearing. 12 For when for the time ye ought to be teachers, ye have need that one teach you again which be the first principles of the oracles of God; and are become such as have need of milk, and not of strong meat. 13 For every one that useth milk is unskilful in the word of righteousness: for he is a babe. 14 But strong meat belongeth to them that are of full age, even those who by reason of use have their senses exercised to discern both good and evil.

The Corinthians were much like these Hebrews. They had become dull of hearing, and they needed someone to again give them milk and not solid food. The one who is spiritual partakes of this solid food because they have their senses trained to discern both good and evil. It is not because the Corinthians had not been taught in the word of God, or that they did not have the Spirit of God living in them, that they were still fleshly. It is because they were not walking in the light of what they had heard after they were saved so that they might grow up as spiritual men and women. The Corinthians were “as infants in Christ,” that is, as those who had just been saved. As we walk in the light of what we hear of the word of God, we must put off our old behavior and put on the new in order that we may become spiritual and be cleansed of our fleshly behavior. If we do not walk in the light of what we hear of the word of God, we eventually become deluded as James tells us in James 1 (KJV):22 But be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves.

Now Paul also says that he does speak wisdom among those who are mature as he says in 1 Corinthians 2 (KJV):6 Howbeit we speak wisdom among them that are perfect: yet not the wisdom of this world, nor of the princes of this world, that come to nought: 7 But we speak the wisdom of God in a mystery, even the hidden wisdom, which God ordained before the world unto our glory:

Paul also says that God's wisdom is revealed to us by the Spirit of God in 1 Corinthians 2 (KJV):12 Now we have received, not the spirit of the world, but the spirit which is of God; that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God. 13 Which things also we speak, not in the words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the Holy Ghost teacheth; comparing spiritual things with spiritual.

Again, Paul reveals that the Corinthians had received the Spirit which is of God. If we walk in the flesh, that is, in our old behavior, we will not be able to receive this wisdom as Paul says in 1 Corinthians 2 (KJV):14 But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned. 15 But he that is spiritual judgeth all things, yet he himself is judged of no man. 16 For who hath known the mind of the Lord, that he may instruct him? but we have the mind of Christ.

The Corinthians were acting as mere men, and were not listening to the Spirit of God indwelling them. That is, they were not yielding or giving the Spirit of God His proper place in their lives. This explains why Paul could not give the Corinthians solid food since their behavior made it impossible for them to hear the Spirit. Much like a newborn baby would choke on anything but milk, so the Corinthians were not able to receive the solid food in the word of God.

Although the apostle Paul describes the Corinthians as still carnal, he does not mean that they are not saved. Irenaeus is a little too harsh when he describes the Corinthians, or any who are like the Corinthians, as "those who do indeed reject the Spirit's counsel, and are the slaves of fleshly lusts, and lead lives contrary to reason, and who, without restraint, plunge headlong into their own desires, having no longing after the Divine Spirit," and who "do live after the manner of swine and of dogs;" To say that the Corinthians lived this way is not reflected in the epistles of Paul to the Corinthians. Irenaeus then also says that "these men, [I say], does the apostle very properly term "carnal," because they have no thought of anything else except carnal things," referring to Paul's words to the Corinthians in chapter three that they were carnal. Paul himself does not describe the Corinthians as Irenaeus does. The Corinthians had not rejected the Spirit's counsel for Paul praises them as we read in 1 Corinthians 1 (KJV):4 I thank my God always on your behalf, for the grace of God which is given you by Jesus Christ; 5 That in every thing ye are enriched by him, in all utterance, and in all knowledge; 6 Even as the testimony of Christ was confirmed in you: 7 So that ye come behind in no gift; waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ: 8 Who shall also confirm you unto the end, that ye may be blameless in the day of our Lord Jesus Christ. 9 God is faithful, by whom ye were called unto the fellowship of his Son Jesus Christ our Lord.

The Corinthians were not lacking any gift Paul says in verse seven above. The word gift in the Greek is χαρισματι (pronounced charismati), speaking of spiritual gifts. Paul is saying that they exercised all of the gifts of the Spirit, but that they were doing so in a fleshly or carnal way. Later on in this epistle Paul teaches them about the proper use of the gifts of the Spirit, and that there must be the fruit of the Spirit in their lives for the gifts to profit the one using them as we read in 1 Corinthians 13 (NASB):1 If I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, but do not have love, I have become a noisy gong or a clanging cymbal. 2 If I have the gift of prophecy, and know all mysteries and all knowledge; and if I have all faith, so as to remove mountains, but do not have love, I am nothing. 3 And if I give all my possessions to feed the poor, and if I surrender my body to be burned, but do not have love, it profits me nothing.

Paul was not saying that the Corinthians did not have the Spirit of God, for they were exercising all of the gifts of the Spirit. Paul was saying that walking in the flesh does not produce growth. It is love that edifies as Paul reveals in 1 Corinthians 8 (KJV):1 Now as touching things offered unto idols, we know that we all have knowledge. Knowledge puffeth up, but charity edifieth.

The Corinthians were not to stop using the gifts of the Spirit, but they were to exercise them in love in order to edify the church as in 1 Corinthians 14 (KJV):1 Follow after charity, and desire spiritual gifts, but rather that ye may prophesy. 2 For he that speaketh in an unknown tongue speaketh not unto men, but unto God: for no man understandeth him; howbeit in the spirit he speaketh mysteries. 3 But he that prophesieth speaketh unto men to edification, and exhortation, and comfort. 4 He that speaketh in an unknown tongue edifieth himself; but he that prophesieth edifieth the church. 5 I would that ye all spake with tongues but rather that ye prophesied: for greater is he that prophesieth than he that speaketh with tongues, except he interpret, that the church may receive edifying.

Paul was teaching the Corinthians these truths so that they would grow up to be spiritual men and women of God. There were some who were walking as if they were only carnal, and needed to discipline their flesh. This did not mean that the Spirit of God had left the Corinthians, or that He did not dwell in them as Irenaeus intimates. Our God is a consuming fire. We must discipline ourselves or He will discipline us. Yet once we believe from our hearts that God raised Jesus Christ from the dead, and confess with our mouth that He is Lord, we are saved as Paul reveals in Romans 10 (KJV): 8 But what saith it? The word is nigh thee, even in thy mouth, and in thy heart: that is, the word of faith, which we preach; 9 That if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved. 10 For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness; and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation. 11 For the scripture saith, Whosoever believeth on him shall not be ashamed. 12 For there is no difference between the Jew and the Greek: for the same Lord over all is rich unto all that call upon him. 13 For whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved.

Chapter 20: The Theory of Apostolic Succession

Book 3: Chapter I.—The apostles did not commence to preach the Gospel, or to place anything on record until they were endowed with the gifts and power of the Holy Spirit. They preached one God alone, Maker of heaven and earth.

1. We have learned from none others the plan of our salvation, than from those through whom the Gospel has come down to us, which they did at one time proclaim in public, and, at a later period, by the will of God, handed down to us in the Scriptures, to be the ground and pillar of our faith.

3309 See 1 Tim. iii. 15, where these terms are used in reference to the Church. For it is unlawful to assert that they preached before they possessed “perfect knowledge,” as some do even venture to say, boasting themselves as improvers of the apostles. For, after our Lord rose from the dead, [the apostles] were invested with power from on high when the Holy Spirit came down [upon them], were filled from all [His gifts], and had perfect knowledge: they departed to the ends of the earth, preaching the glad tidings of the good things [sent] from God to us, and proclaiming the peace of heaven to men, who indeed do all equally and individually possess the Gospel of God. Matthew also issued a written Gospel among the Hebrews 3310 On this and similar statements in the Fathers, the reader may consult Dr. Roberts’s Discussions on the Gospels, in which they are fully criticised, and the Greek original of St. Matthew’s Gospel maintained. in their own dialect, while Peter and Paul were preaching at Rome, and laying the foundations of the Church. After their departure, Mark, the disciple and interpreter of Peter, did also hand down to us in writing what had been preached by Peter. Luke also, the companion of Paul, recorded in a book the Gospel preached by him. Afterwards, John, the disciple of the Lord, who also had leaned upon His breast, did himself publish a Gospel during his residence at Ephesus in Asia.

2. These have all declared to us that there is one God, Creator of heaven and earth, announced by the law and the prophets; and one Christ the Son of God. If any one do not agree to these truths, he despises the companions of the Lord; nay more, he despises Christ Himself the Lord; yea, he despises the Father also, and stands self-condemned, resisting and opposing his own salvation, as is the case with all heretics.

Summary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus affirms that, “We have learned from none others the plan of our salvation, than from those through whom the Gospel has come down to us, which they did at one time proclaim in public, and, at a later period, by the will of God, handed down to us in the Scriptures, to be the ground and pillar of our faith.” Irenaeus continues as he affirms, “For it is unlawful to assert that they preached before they possessed “perfect knowledge,” as some do even venture to say, boasting themselves as improvers of the apostles.” Irenaeus then testifies “For after our Lord rose from the dead, [the apostles] were invested with power from on high when the Holy Spirit came down [upon them], were filled from all [His gifts], and had perfect knowledge.” Irenaeus then testifies, “they departed to the ends of the earth, preaching the glad tidings of the good things [sent] from God to us, and proclaiming the peace of heaven to men, who indeed do all equally and individually possess the Gospel of God.” Irenaeus continues as he then testifies, “Matthew also issued a written Gospel among the Hebrews in their own dialect, while Peter and Paul were preaching at Rome, and laying the foundations of the Church.” Irenaeus further testifies that, “After their departure, Mark, the disciple and interpreter of Peter, did also hand down to us in writing what had been preached by Peter.” Irenaeus continues as he testifies that “Luke also, the companion of Paul, recorded in a book the Gospel preached by him. Afterwards, John, the disciple of the Lord, who also had leaned upon His breast, did himself publish a Gospel during his residence at Ephesus in Asia.”

In paragraph two, Irenaeus affirms, “These have all declared to us that there is one God, Creator of heaven and earth, announced by the law and the prophets; and one Christ the Son of God.” Irenaeus further affirms that, “If any one do not agree to these truths, he despises the companions of the Lord; nay more, he despises Christ Himself the Lord; yea, he despises the Father also, and stands self-condemned, resisting and opposing his own salvation, as is the case with all heretics.”

Commentary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus affirms that, “We have learned from none others the plan of our salvation, than from those through whom the Gospel has come down to us, which they did at one time proclaim in public, and, at a later period, by the will of God, handed down to us in the Scriptures, to be the ground and pillar of our faith.”

Irenaeus strongly testifies to the apostolic witness here. The apostles’ message was proclaimed “in public,” and “at a later period, by the will of God, handed down to us in the Scriptures, to be the ground and pillar of our faith.” Irenaeus uses strong words when he continues and affirms, “For it is unlawful to assert that they preached before they possessed “perfect knowledge,” as some do even venture to say, boasting themselves as improvers of the apostles.”

Irenaeus wants to distance himself and the Church from any other Gospel, as it were, than the Gospel that was preached in public by the apostles, and also handed down to us in the Scriptures by the apostles, who were companions of Jesus Christ and eyewitnesses of His person.

Irenaeus continues as he testifies that “For, after our Lord rose from the dead, [the apostles] were invested with power from on high when the Holy Spirit came down [upon them], were filled from all [His gifts], and had perfect knowledge,” referring to their baptism with the Holy Spirit at Pentecost in Acts, chapter 2. Irenaeus then testifies, “they departed to the ends of the earth, preaching the glad tidings of the good things [sent] from God to us, and proclaiming the peace of heaven to men, who indeed do all equally and individually possess the Gospel of God.”

Irenaeus here emphasizes that the Gospel is to be possessed “equally and individually.” What good news Irenaeus proclaims!

Irenaeus continues as he then testifies, “Matthew also issued a written Gospel among the Hebrews in their own dialect,” although the original was probably written in Greek by Matthew. It is however not improbable that it was later translated into Hebrew by Matthew, and was the first of many Bible translations into a common language.

Irenaeus then continues, “while Peter and Paul were preaching at Rome, and laying the foundations of the Church.”

Scholars have written whole books to try to answer the question whether Peter was ever in Rome. The direct evidence of the Scriptures states that Paul and Peter agreed that Peter would take the Gospel to the circumcised and Paul would go to the uncircumcised as we read in Galatians 2 (KJV):6 But of these who seemed to be somewhat, (whatsoever they were, it maketh no matter to me: God accepteth no man's person:) for they who seemed to be somewhat in conference added nothing to me: 7 But contrariwise, when they saw that the gospel of the uncircumcision was committed unto me, as the gospel of the circumcision was unto Peter; 8 (For he that wrought effectually in Peter to the apostleship of the circumcision, the same was mighty in me toward the Gentiles:) 9 And when James, Cephas, and John, who seemed to be pillars, perceived the grace that was given unto me, they gave to me and Barnabas the right hands of fellowship; that we should go unto the heathen, and they unto the circumcision. 10 Only they would that we should remember the poor; the same which I also was forward to do.

Cephas is another name of for Peter. And Peter is later seen to be writing from the church he planted in Babylon as we read in 1 Peter 5 (KJV):13 The church that is at Babylon, elected together with you, saluteth you; and so doth Marcus my son.

There is no reason to think that the Babylon Peter mentions here is symbolic of Rome, since Babylon is where the Jews were finally exiled to in 586 B.C., and it is likely that many were still there. Yet it is still possible and highly likely that he arrived in Rome at some time in his life, and that he was martyred there. However, the circumstances of his martyrdom, and whether he was crucified upside down as traditions says, are more unlikely.

Irenaeus then testifies that, “After their departure, Mark, the disciple and interpreter of Peter, did also hand down to us in writing what had been preached by Peter,” referring to the Gospel of Mark. The words, “After their departure,” are speaking of the deaths of Peter and Paul.

Irenaeus then testifies as well that, “Luke also, the companion of Paul, recorded in a book the Gospel preached by him,” referring to the Gospel of Luke. Lastly, Irenaeus tells us where John wrote his gospel as he testifies, “Afterwards, John, the disciple of the Lord, who also had leaned upon His breast, did himself publish a Gospel during his residence at Ephesus in Asia.”

In paragraph two, Irenaeus affirms, “These have all declared to us that there is one God, Creator of heaven and earth, announced by the law and the prophets; and one Christ the Son of God.”

Irenaeus testifies to the veracity of the four New Testament Gospels and to the witness of the apostles to the one God, creator of heaven and earth, the same who was “announced by the law and the prophets,” and to “one Christ, the Son of God.” Irenaeus says that these are truths taught by the companions of the Lord, who we note were eye-witnesses. Irenaeus here also issues the anathema on those who disagree with the truth of the Gospels, as he further affirms, “If any one do not agree to these truths, he despises the companions of the Lord; nay more, he despises Christ Himself the Lord; yea, he despises the Father also, and stands self-condemned, resisting and opposing his own salvation, as is the case with all heretics.”

For this testimony I say, “Bravo Irenaeus, defender of the faith.”

Now, of note here in this chapter of Irenaeus’ writing is his use of the term “perfect knowledge”. Irenaeus seems to use this term in contradistinction to the Gnostic teaching that hidden knowledge, or Gnosis as they called it, was imparted to “the perfect” apart “and privily from the rest,” as we will see in Book 3: Chapter III, shortly. It is this term, “perfect knowledge,” that I believe, was a key to the development of the theory of Apostolic Succession. We will use the following from Wikipedia, the free online encyclopedia, as a good working definition of the theory of Apostolic Succession. In doing so, I am not saying that Irenaeus taught this doctrine. I am saying that his teaching was pivotal in the development of this doctrine. Also, I do not believe that Irenaeus came up with this line of reasoning on his own. It seems to me that this kind of thinking was going on very early in the Church up to and including the time of his writing, and was already in the making when Irenaeus was born in about 120 A.D. Why else would the churches have maintained a list of presbyters and of the apostle that ordained them? By the time Irenaeus is writing, he lists twelve bishops of Rome which we will see shortly listed in Book 3, Chapter III, paragraph 3. Incidentally, this would place Irenaeus’ writing of Book 3 during the office of the episcopate of Eleutherius between 175 and 189 A.D.

Apostolic succession (Greek: Αποστολική διαδοχή) is a doctrine, held by some Christian denominations, which asserts that the chosen successors (properly ordained bishops) of the Twelve Apostles, from the first century to the present day, have inherited the spiritual, ecclesiastical and sacramental authority, power, and responsibility that were conferred upon them by the Apostles, who in turn received their spiritual authority from Jesus Christ.

The Catholic Church, the Eastern Orthodox churches, Oriental Orthodox churches, the Anglican Communion and some Lutheran churches are the predominant proponents of this doctrine. To them, present-day bishops, as the successors of previous bishops, going back to the early days of Christianity, have spiritual and ecclesiastical power by this unbroken chain of ordinations stemming from the Apostles. This link with the Apostles guarantees for them their authority in matters of faith, morals and the valid administration of sacraments. This is reaffirmed every Sunday in the reciting of the Nicene Creed by priests and congregants, with the words, "We believe in one holy and catholic and apostolic Church..." All adherents view proper consecration of bishops as essential to maintaining apostolic succession.

The Catholic Church additionally believes that a bishop's authority on matters of faith and morals is infallible when what he teaches is universally taught by all the college of bishops in communion with the Bishop of Rome (the Pope), who in turn is seen as the successor of Saint Peter the Apostle and the Vicar of Christ on Earth. Nevertheless, Apostolic succession is to be distinguished from the Petrine supremacy (see Papacy and Coptic Pope).

Most Protestants consider the authority given to the apostles as unique, proper to them alone. They reject any doctrine of a succession of their power. The Protestant view of ecclesiastical authority differs accordingly.

Now in this section, we have just an inkling of what came to be the teaching of Apostolic succession. First of all, Irenaeus asserts that “the plan of our salvation” comes down to us through the apostles, first through their preaching, but then “at a later period, by the will of God, handed down to us in the Scriptures, to be the ground and pillar of our faith.” Irenaeus is here contending for the faith. He is asserting that the Gospel message is pure, and that it is the same message preached at first by the apostles, and now handed down to those in Irenaeus’ time. This is commendable and right. But his next statement that “it is unlawful to assert that they preached before they possessed “perfect knowledge,” as some do even venture to say, boasting themselves as improvers of the apostles” is striking and worthy of discussion. It is not striking because of those who boast “themselves as improvers of the apostles,” for these are the heretics. It is striking because Irenaeus uses the word “unlawful.” This word speaks of government. The bishops in Irenaeus’ time felt that they had been handed the government of the Church from the apostles as we shall see. Irenaeus also uses the words “perfect knowledge.” This speaks of authority, as does the word “unlawful.”

Now the primary meaning of Irenaeus’ use of the word “unlawful” must be that it is not in accordance with what the governing body of the Church teaches, and is therefore not authorized. Irenaeus is preparing us for what he will say in Book 3: Chapter III, in which he will place the primary authority of Church government in the hands of the bishop of Rome. Irenaeus is contending that it is against reason to believe or teach that the apostles did not get the salvation message right when they first preached it, and that they somehow were missing something that needed to be added later or corrected later, and this of course by the “improvers of the Apostles.”

So Irenaeus is contending that the apostles received “perfect knowledge” in contradistinction to the so called “perfect knowledge” of the Gnostic teachers. Irenaeus contends that the message preached and written by the apostles was inspired by the Holy Spirit who had just been poured out “from on high” on the disciples at Pentecost, and that what the apostles spoke and wrote was the truth. Now we understand that Irenaeus is fighting heresy here, and defending the Church against those who would be “improvers of the apostles.” And, it is true that what the apostles proclaimed as the Gospel and what they wrote in the four Gospels, Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John, which Irenaeus lists and upholds, was the truth, and that by the Holy Spirit. However, it would be an exaggeration to say that the apostles had all knowledge, or even complete knowledge, for it is evident that they walked by faith, and were examples to us to do the same. That the apostles did not have complete knowledge when they began to preach is proven by Scripture in the book of Acts, chapter 10, where Peter is seen to be unaware that the Gospel was to be preached to the Gentiles as well as the Jews.

Now as we read in Acts, Chapter 10, a Roman Centurion, Cornelius, who feared God with all his household and supported the Jewish people with alms and who prayed to God continually, receives a vision of an angel who told him that his prayers have been heard, and that he is to send men to Joppa, and ask for Peter who is staying at the house of Simon the tanner. At the same time, God gave Peter a vision which said in essence to no longer call unclean what God has cleansed in Acts 10:9-17. When the men that Cornelius had sent arrived at Simon’s house, and asked for Peter, the Holy Spirit told Peter to go with them even though he knew they were Gentiles as we read in Acts 10:18-24. To go anywhere with Gentiles would have been a step of faith on Peter’s part since he was a Jew, but Peter took that step of faith. When he arrived at Cornelius’s house, the first words out of his mouth were that it was unlawful for him to associate with Gentiles as we read in Acts 10 (KJV):25 And as Peter was coming in, Cornelius met him, and fell down at his feet, and worshipped him. 26 But Peter took him up, saying, Stand up; I myself also am a man. 27 And as he talked with him, he went in, and found many that were come together. 28 And he said unto them, Ye know how that it is an unlawful thing for a man that is a Jew to keep company, or come unto one of another nation; but God hath shewed me that I should not call any man common or unclean. 29 Therefore came I unto you without gainsaying, as soon as I was sent for: I ask therefore for what intent ye have sent for me?

Cornelius then tells Peter of his vision in Acts 10 (KJV):30 And Cornelius said, Four days ago I was fasting until this hour; and at the ninth hour I prayed in my house, and, behold, a man stood before me in bright clothing, 31 And said, Cornelius, thy prayer is heard, and thine alms are had in remembrance in the sight of God. 32 Send therefore to Joppa, and call hither Simon, whose surname is Peter; he is lodged in the house of one Simon a tanner by the sea side: who, when he cometh, shall speak unto thee. 33 Immediately therefore I sent to thee; and thou hast well done that thou art come. Now therefore are we all here present before God, to hear all things that are commanded thee of God.

After Cornelius told Peter about the vision he received, Peter then understood what God was doing, and he then preaches the Gospel to them as we read in Acts 10 (KJV):34 Then Peter opened his mouth, and said, Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons: 35 But in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him. 36 The word which God sent unto the children of Israel, preaching peace by Jesus Christ: (he is Lord of all:) 37 That word, I say, ye know, which was published throughout all Judaea, and began from Galilee, after the baptism which John preached; 38 How God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost and with power: who went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed of the devil; for God was with him. 39 And we are witnesses of all things which he did both in the land of the Jews, and in Jerusalem; whom they slew and hanged on a tree: 40 Him God raised up the third day, and shewed him openly; 41 Not to all the people, but unto witnesses chosen before God, even to us, who did eat and drink with him after he rose from the dead. 42 And he commanded us to preach unto the people, and to testify that it is he which was ordained of God to be the Judge of quick and dead. 43 To him give all the prophets witness, that through his name whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins.

When Peter heard them speaking in tongues and praising God, he knew for certain that the Gentiles also were to be included in the Gospel as we read in Acts 10 (KJV):44 While Peter yet spake these words, the Holy Ghost fell on all them which heard the word. 45 And they of the circumcision which believed were astonished, as many as came with Peter, because that on the Gentiles also was poured out the gift of the Holy Ghost. 46 For they heard them speak with tongues, and magnify God. Then answered Peter, 47 Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized, which have received the Holy Ghost as well as we? 48 And he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord. Then prayed they him to tarry certain days.

The apostles had to walk by faith in order for the Holy Spirit to guide them into all truth, as Jesus promised them He would do in John 16 (KJV):12 I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now. 13 Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth: for he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak: and he will shew you things to come. 14 He shall glorify me: for he shall receive of mine, and shall shew it unto you. 15 All things that the Father hath are mine: therefore said I, that he shall take of mine, and shall shew it unto you.

Did they have “perfect knowledge”? Not in the sense that they were super men. Paul chides the Corinthians about the current appellation of the twelve apostles as being something a little more than human. He defends his apostleship as we read in 2 Corinthians 11 (ESV):5 Indeed, I consider that I am not in the least inferior to these super-apostles.

The word for “super” in Greek is ὑπερλίαν (pronounced huperlian). Vine’s says that this word comes from two words huper, meaning over, and lian meaning exceedingly, preeminently, very much. Expository Dictionary of New Testament Words, W.E. Vine, Vol. I, page 187. The apostles were not exceedingly apostolic. They had the Holy Spirit, but still had to walk by faith. And the Holy Spirit they had is the same Holy Spirit we have today, who have believed and received Jesus Christ as Lord and Savior as Peter promises in Acts 2 (ESV):38 And Peter said to them, “Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the forgiveness of your sins, and you will receive the gift of the Holy Spirit. 39 For the promise is for you and for your children and for all who are far off, everyone whom the Lord our God calls to himself.”

Peter’s promise to them was as good then as it is today. The Holy Spirit is the same yesterday, today, and forever. But the whole issue of apostolic succession is in vision here. Paul was saying that his message of the Gospel was in no way inferior to the other apostles who had actually rubbed shoulders with Jesus Christ. These “super” apostles had the same Gospel that Paul was preaching. And so the Corinthians did not have to say, as some of them were saying, that they were of Paul, or Apollos, or Peter (Cephas), or Christ as we read in 1 Corinthians 1 (KJV):12 Now this I say, that every one of you saith, I am of Paul; and I of Apollos; and I of Cephas; and I of Christ.

The issue was division in the Church as Paul continues in 1 Corinthians 1 (KJV):13 Is Christ divided? was Paul crucified for you? or were ye baptized in the name of Paul? 14 I thank God that I baptized none of you, but Crispus and Gaius; 15 Lest any should say that I had baptized in mine own name. 16 And I baptized also the household of Stephanas: besides, I know not whether I baptized any other. 17 For Christ sent me not to baptize, but to preach the gospel: not with wisdom of words, lest the cross of Christ should be made of none effect.

The issue was not whether you believed in Paul, or Peter, or Apollos, but whether you believed in Jesus Christ, and receive Him through the Gospel. And the Gospel that was preached was not made a little better or a lot better or more authorized or less authorized if it was preached by an apostle, or one designated by an apostle, or by just an ordinary believer. It is the message of the Gospel preached in the power of the Holy Spirit that saves people, and not the messenger. And so we see the beginning of an error that began with very good intentions. Irenaeus was trying to defend the Gospel, and he was pulling out all the stops. It is true that much of the world of his time was illiterate, and relied heavily on those who were. And even if they were literate, there were few copies of all of the writings of the apostles going around. They first had to be gathered. In the plan and purpose of God, we see God's wisdom in building His Church. He did not tell the apostles that they were writing the New Testament, and that it would be complete when the apostle John dies, and then at that time an angelic proclamation would go forth stating that the New Testament had been completed. The apostles walked by faith one step at a time, and were only human. God wants us to walk by faith also, for without faith it is impossible to please Him as we read in Hebrews 11 (KJV):6 But without faith it is impossible to please him: for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him.

Book 3: Chapter II.—The heretics follow neither Scripture nor tradition.

1. When, however, they are confuted from the Scriptures, they turn round and accuse these same Scriptures, as if they were not correct, nor of authority, and [assert] that they are ambiguous, and that the truth cannot be extracted from them by those who are ignorant of tradition. For [they allege] that the truth was not delivered by means of written documents, but vivâ voce: wherefore also Paul declared, "But we speak wisdom among those that are perfect, but not the wisdom of this world." 3311 1 Cor. ii. 6. And this wisdom each one of them alleges to be the fiction of his own inventing, forsooth; so that, according to their idea, the truth properly resides at one time in Valentinus, at another in Marcion, at another in Cerinthus, then afterwards in Basilides, or has even been indifferently in any other opponent, 3312 This is Harvey's rendering of the old Latin, *in illo qui contra disputat. who could speak nothing pertaining to salvation. For every one of these men, being altogether of a perverse disposition, depraving the system of truth, is not ashamed to preach himself.

2. But, again, when we refer them to that tradition which originates from the apostles, [and] which is preserved by means of the succession of presbyters in the Churches, they object to tradition, saying that they themselves are wiser not merely than the presbyters, but even than the apostles, because they have discovered the unadulterated truth. For [they maintain] that the apostles intermingled the things of the law with the words of the Saviour; and that not the apostles alone, but even the Lord Himself, spoke as at one time from the Demiurge, at another from the intermediate place, and yet again from the Pleroma, but that they themselves, indubitably, unsulliedly, and purely, have knowledge of the hidden mystery: this is, indeed, to blaspheme their Creator after a most impudent manner! It comes to this, therefore, that these men do now consent neither to Scripture nor to tradition.

3. Such are the adversaries with whom we have to deal, my very dear friend, endeavouring like slippery serpents to escape at all points. Wherefore they must be opposed at all points, if perchance, by cutting off their retreat, we may succeed in turning them back to the truth. For, though it is not an easy thing for a soul under the influence of error to repent, yet, on the other hand, it is not altogether impossible to escape from error when the truth is brought alongside it.

Summary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus records, “When, however, they are confuted from the Scriptures, they turn round and accuse these same Scriptures, as if they were not correct, nor of authority, and [assert] that they are ambiguous, and that the truth cannot be extracted from them by those who are ignorant of tradition. For [they allege] that the truth was not delivered by means of written documents, but vivâ voce: wherefore also Paul declared, “But we speak wisdom among those that are perfect, but not the wisdom of this world,” referring to 1 Corinthians 2:6. Irenaeus further testifies, “And this wisdom each one of them alleges to be the fiction of his own inventing, forsooth; so that, according to their idea, the truth properly resides at one time in Valentinus, at another in Marcion, at another in Cerinthus, then afterwards in Basilides, or has even been indifferently in any other opponent, who could speak nothing pertaining to salvation. For every one of these men, being altogether of a perverse disposition, depraving the system of truth, is not ashamed to preach himself.”

In paragraph two, Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “But, again, when we refer them to that tradition which originates from the apostles, [and] which is preserved by means of the succession of presbyters in the Churches, they object to tradition, saying that they themselves are wiser not merely than the presbyters, but even than the apostles, because they have discovered the unadulterated truth.” And Irenaeus records, “For [they maintain] that the apostles intermingled the things of the law with the words of the Saviour; and that not the apostles alone, but even the Lord Himself, spoke as at one time from the Demiurge, at another from the intermediate place, and yet again from the Pleroma, but that they themselves, indubitably, unsulliedly, and purely, have knowledge of the hidden mystery: this is, indeed, to blaspheme their Creator after a most impudent manner! It comes to this, therefore, that these men do now consent neither to Scripture nor to tradition.”

In paragraph three, Irenaeus testifies, “Such are the adversaries with whom we have to deal, my very dear friend, endeavouring like slippery serpents to escape at all points. Where-fore they must be opposed at all points, if per-chance, by cutting off their retreat, we may succeed in turning them back to the truth. For, though it is not an easy thing for a soul under the influence of error to repent, yet, on the other hand, it is not altogether impossible to escape from error when the truth is brought alongside it.”

Commentary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus boldly defends the faith as he records, “When, however, they are confuted from the Scriptures, they turn round and accuse these same Scriptures, as if they were not correct, nor of authority, and [assert] that they are ambiguous, and that the truth cannot be extracted from them by those who are ignorant of tradition. For [they allege] that the truth was not delivered by means of written documents, but vivâ voce: wherefore also Paul declared, “But we speak wisdom among those that are perfect, but not the wisdom of this world,” referring to 1 Corinthians 2 (KJV):6 Howbeit we speak wisdom among them that are perfect: yet not the wisdom of this world, nor of the princes of this world, that come to nought:

Irenaeus further testifies against the Gnostics as he records, “And this wisdom each one of them alleges to be the fiction of his own inventing, forsooth; so that, according to their idea, the truth properly resides at one time in Valentinus, at another in Marcion, at another in Cerinthus, then afterwards in Basilides, or has even been indifferently in any other opponent, who could speak nothing pertaining to salvation. For every one of these men, being altogether of a perverse disposition, depraving the system of truth, is not ashamed to preach himself.”

In paragraph two, Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “But, again, when we refer them to that tradition which originates from the apostles, [and] which is preserved by means of the succession of presbyters in the Churches, they object to tradition, saying that they themselves are wiser not merely than the presbyters, but even than the apostles, because they have discovered the unadulterated truth.”

In writing this, Irenaeus has set forth the basic premise of the theory of apostolic succession. That is, according to this theory, there is truth that was handed down from the apostles, and that is not recorded in their writings, and that is preserved in that succession of bishops who can trace their succession back to a foundational apostle.

Irenaeus then testifies against the Gnostics as he records, “For [they maintain] that the apostles intermingled the things of the law with the words of the Saviour; and that not the apostles alone, but even the Lord Himself, spoke as at one time from the Demiurge, at another from the intermediate place, and yet again from the Pleroma, but that they themselves, indubitably, unsulliedly, and purely, have knowledge of the hidden mystery: this is, indeed, to blaspheme their Creator after a most impudent manner!”

Irenaeus then concludes, “It comes to this, therefore, that these men do now consent neither to Scripture nor to tradition.” And here Irenaeus makes the tradition that is handed down by the means of apostolic succession equal with the Scripture.

In paragraph three, Irenaeus testifies, “Such are the adversaries with whom we have to deal, my very dear friend, endeavouring like slippery serpents to escape at all points. Wherefore they must be opposed at all points, if per-chance, by cutting off their retreat, we may succeed in turning them back to the truth. For, though it is not an easy thing for a soul under the influence of error to repent, yet, on the other hand, it is not altogether impossible to escape from error when the truth is brought alongside it.”

Irenaeus’ concern for turning the heretics back to the truth is a worthy one. And Irenaeus is to be commended for his stand against the Gnostic heresy.

Irenaeus begins his argument in this chapter by repudiating the Gnostic opposition to the Scriptures and the tradition “which originates from the apostles, [and] which is preserved by means of the succession of presbyters in the Churches.” The Gnostics opposed both the Scriptures and this supposed apostolic tradition. However in their opposition, they themselves were using the slippery slope of their own tradition to bolster their claim to authenticity.

Irenaeus is very strict in his own reliance upon the Scriptures, establishing almost every assertive statement which he makes with a reference to Scripture. But there are times when we have no other explanation for his statements than that he is appealing to the tradition upheld by the Church of his day. The question really is why Irenaeus felt the need to rely on tradition when he had the entire Scriptures apparently at his fingertips, since he quotes from almost every book in the Old and New Testament.

As we study the book of Acts, and the writings of the apostles, we notice that God reveals truth to humble hearts. As we saw in the previous chapter, in Peter’s experience at the house of Cornelius, the apostles did not know at first that the gospel was for the Gentiles as well as for the Jews. Even after it was revealed to Peter, the reticence of the Church to receive this truth is clearly seen in Acts 11 (KJV):1 And the apostles and brethren that were in Judaea heard that the Gentiles had also received the word of God. 2 And when Peter was come up to Jerusalem, they that were of the circumcision contended with him, 3 Saying, Thou wentest in to men uncircumcised, and didst eat with them.

Peter then defends his preaching to the Gentiles as he recounts the vision that the Lord gave him as we read in Acts 11 (KJV):4 But Peter rehearsed the matter from the beginning, and expounded it by order unto them, saying, 5 I was in the city of Joppa praying: and in a trance I saw a vision, A certain vessel descend, as it had been a great sheet, let down from heaven by four corners; and it came even to me: 6 Upon the which when I had fastened mine eyes, I considered, and saw fourfooted beasts of the earth, and wild beasts, and creeping things, and fowls of the air. 7 And I heard a voice saying unto me, Arise, Peter; slay and eat. 8 But I said, Not so, Lord: for nothing common or unclean hath at any time entered into my mouth. 9 But the voice answered me again from heaven, What God hath cleansed, that call not thou common. 10 And this was done three times: and all were drawn up again into heaven. 11 And, behold, immediately there were three men already come unto the house where I was, sent from Caesarea unto me. 12 And the Spirit bade me go with them, nothing doubting. Moreover these six brethren accompanied me, and we entered into the man's house:

It is evident that when the Spirit of God said, “What God has cleansed, no longer consider unholy,” He was referring to the Gentiles, for as Peter continues, he relates what Cornelius told him as we read in Acts 11 (KJV):13 And he shewed us how he had seen an angel in his house, which stood and said unto him, Send men to Joppa, and call for Simon, whose surname is Peter; 14 Who shall tell thee words, whereby thou and all thy house shall be saved.

Peter then testifies as in Acts 11 (KJV):15 And as I began to speak, the Holy Ghost fell on them, as on us at the beginning. 16 Then remembered I the word of the Lord, how that he said, John indeed baptized with water; but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost. 17 Forasmuch then as God gave them the like gift as he did unto us, who believed on the Lord Jesus Christ; what was I, that I could withstand God? 18 When they heard these things, they held their peace, and glorified God, saying, Then hath God also to the Gentiles granted repentance unto life.

This council at Jerusalem came to the conclusion that “God has granted to the Gentiles also the repentance that leads to life.” That is, they realized that the Gospel was for the Gentiles as well as for the Jews.

Now, the understanding of the entire Church before that time, which was under the direction of the apostles, was that the gospel was for the Jews only as we read in Acts 11 (KJV):19 Now they which were scattered abroad upon the persecution that arose about Stephen travelled as far as Phenice, and Cyprus, and Antioch, preaching the word to none but unto the Jews only.

However, this all changed with Peter's vision and the preaching of the Gospel at the house of Cornelius. God revealed this revelation to Peter who then repeated it by word of mouth to the apostles and elders in Jerusalem. This is how the Lord led the early Church. Because of this, there began to be a great reliance on the apostle's teaching by word of mouth, that is, orally. We see this also in the writings of Paul, first in 1 Corinthians 11 (KJV):2 Now I praise you, brethren, that ye remember me in all things, and keep the ordinances, as I delivered them to you.

Then in 2 Thessalonians 2 (KJV):15 Therefore, brethren, stand fast, and hold the traditions which ye have been taught, whether by word, or our epistle.

And again in 2 Thessalonians 3 (KJV):6 Now we command you, brethren, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly, and not after the tradition which he received of us.

These Scriptures give some justification for Irenaeus' statements regarding the tradition handed down by the apostles. And Irenaeus appears to reflect the thinking in the Church of his day. The Church was relying on a crutch given them by the apostles until the complete revelation of the New Testament was given. This appears to have been God's plan.

We must also remember that Paul did not have the New Testament available to give to new believers as we have today. And he could not expect them to remember everything he had taught them in the short time he was with them. Many of Paul's epistles to the churches he planted are corrective, proving the fact that even the traditions of the churches planted by the apostles could not be relied upon once the apostle was no longer around to correct them.

And Paul and the other apostles could not have known all that God was doing through them. The apostles did know that they were writing the New Testament when they wrote their epistles or Gospels. There was no proclamation by angel or otherwise that another apostolic writing was to be added to the New Testament. By a little here and a little there, the New Testament began to be formed. The entire revelation of the New Testament was not given at the outpouring of Pentecost. Until Paul and the other apostles wrote the Gospels and their epistles, there was no New Testament. But God gradually gave the Church the revelation contained in the apostles' writings, which we now call the New Testament. And gradually the Lord gave the Church illumination as to which writings were to be included in the New Testament canon. There is now no more need for the crutch of tradition.

Paul also seemed to separate his ancestral traditions before he was saved, from the truth of the word of God in the Old Testament as we see in Galatians 1 (KJV):14 And profited in the Jews' religion above many my equals in mine own nation, being more exceedingly zealous of the traditions of my fathers.

And he warns against the tradition of men as we read in Colossians 2 (KJV):8 Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ.

Jesus also warned against the tradition of men as we read in Mark 7 (KJV):8 For laying aside the commandment of God, ye hold the tradition of men, as the washing of pots and cups: and many other such like things ye do. 9 And he said unto them, Full well ye reject the commandment of God, that ye may keep your own tradition. 10 For Moses said, Honour thy father and thy mother; and, Whoso curseth father or mother, let him die the death: 11 But ye say, If a man shall say to his father or mother, It is Corban, that is to say, a gift, by whatsoever thou mightest be profited by me; he shall be free. 12 And ye suffer him no more to do ought for his father or his mother; 13 Making the word of God of none effect through your tradition, which ye have delivered: and many such like things do ye.

By commanding the disciples to hold to the tradition which they received from himself and the other apostles, Paul was not commanding them in any way to invalidate the word of God by their tradition. All tradition must be examined to see whether it invalidates the word of God or not. If any tradition is not supported by the word of God, it should be discarded. Especially is this true today.

The point is that we cannot invalidate the word of God by our tradition, whatever it may be. Therefore, all tradition must be judged by the word of God, and not the other way around. And tradition is not equal to the word of God, whether it be handed down by a church with a bishop in apostolic succession, or, as the Jews believed in Jesus' time, the tradition of the elders.

Also, we must remember that in the apostolic period, that is, the time of the apostles, the canon was not closed officially. There was no angelic proclamation or revelation that, at John's death, the canon would be closed. It took time for the apostolic writings to be gathered. Who knew if they had them all? Therefore, the churches waited on God to show them what to do. Each church held tenaciously to the truth it had received, either from the pen of an apostle, or by word of mouth from an apostle. After all, the gospel is preached by word of mouth, and even today men and women are saved by this same word preached in the power of the same Holy Spirit that filled and empowered the apostles. But the Church has since recognized that the canon was closed with the death of John. All tradition must agree with the word of God or be released and discarded. Only then will the whole Church come into "the unity of the faith" Paul spoke of in Ephesians 4 (KJV):15 But speaking the truth in love, may grow up into him in all things, which is the head, even Christ.

Now it is God's will that we be sanctified as we read in 1 Thessalonians 4 (KJV):2 For ye know what commandments we gave you by the Lord Jesus. 3 For this is the will of God, even your sanctification, that ye should abstain from fornication:

This sanctification comes about by the word God as Jesus Himself said in John 17 (KJV):17 Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth.

In paragraph three, Irenaeus still holds out the possibility that these heretics could repent. It is not "impossible to escape from error when the truth is brought alongside it," just as Irenaeus says. This reminds me of Paul's encouragement to Timothy as we read in 2 Timothy 2 (KJV):24 And the servant of the Lord must not strive; but be gentle unto all men, apt to teach, patient, 25 In meekness instructing those that oppose themselves; if God peradventure will give them repentance to the acknowledging of the truth; 26 And that they may recover themselves out of the snare of the devil, who are taken captive by him at his will.

Now in the early church mind, someone or something had to take the place of the apostles to arbitrate disputes. When Jerusalem fell in 70 A.D. there was no more going up to Jerusalem to consult with the apostles and elders. Only gradually did the Church realize that the word of God was their sole source of truth, and that they had to close the canon. The Church finally realized that the apostles had a more sure word of prophecy, to which they would do well to pay attention to as Peter tells us in 2 Peter 1 (KJV):16 For we have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eyewitnesses of his majesty. 17 For he received from God the Father honour and glory, when there came such a voice to him from the excellent glory, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. 18 And this voice which came from heaven we heard, when we were with him in the holy mount. 19 We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day star arise in your hearts: 20 Knowing this first, that no prophecy of the scripture is of any private interpretation. 21 For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man: but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost.

The winds of doctrine, especially Gnostic doctrine, were blowing through the Church from all directions during the time of the early Church. This made it necessary to set a standard by which all Church teaching could be authenticated. This is illustrated very graphically in the Easter letter of Athanasius of A.D. 367. I have included it here in its entirety because of its huge statement. You may also check this out at the following web address:

Now, here is the letter...

From Letter XXXIX.—(For 367.) Of the particular books and their number, which are accepted by the Church. From the thirty-ninth Letter of Holy Athanasius, Bishop of Alexandria, on the Paschal festival; wherein he defines canonically what are the divine books which are accepted by the Church.

...1. They have 4539 This section is preserved in the Coptic (Memphitic) Life of S. Theodore (Amélineau Ann. du Musée Guimet. xvii. p. 239). Its contents and the context in which it is quoted appear decisive for its identification as part of Letter 39. But the Letter from which the fragment comes is stated in the context to have been received by Theodore in the spring previous to his death. If Theodore died in 364, as seems probable on other grounds (see p. 569, note 3), the speech from which our fragment comes must have been written for him by his biographer. This is not unlikely, nor does it throw any suspicion on the genuineness of the fragment itself. fabricated books which they call books of tables 4540 Copt. ἀπογραμμάτων: astrological charts or tables appear to be meant. , in which they shew stars, to which they give the names of Saints. And therein of a truth they have inflicted on themselves a double reproach: those who have written such books, because they have perfected themselves in a lying and contemptible science; and as to the ignorant and simple, they have led them astray by evil thoughts concerning the right faith established in all truth and upright in the presence of God.

...2. But 4541 The remainder of the thirty-ninth Letter has long been before the world, having been preserved, with the heading of the Letter, in the original Greek, by Theodorus Balsamon. It may be found in the first volume of the Benedictine edition of the works of S. Athan. tom. i. p. 767. ed. 1777. [Migne, ubi supra]. A Syriac translation of it was discovered by Cureton in an anonymous Commentary on the Scriptures in the collection of the British Museum (Cod. 12, 168). This translation commences only at the quotation from S. Luke. The Syriac is apparently the work of a different translator. since we have made mention of heretics as dead, but of ourselves as possessing the Divine Scriptures for salvation; and since I fear lest, as Paul wrote to the Corinthians 4542 2 Cor. xi. 3. , some few of the simple should be beguiled from their simplicity and purity, by the subtilty of certain men, and should henceforth read other books—those called apocryphal—led astray by the similarity of their names with the true books; I beseech you to bear patiently, if I also write, by way of remembrance, of matters with which you are acquainted, influenced by the need and advantage of the Church.

3. In proceeding to make mention of these things, I shall adopt, to commend my undertaking, the pattern of Luke the Evangelist, saying on my own account: 'Forasmuch as some have taken in hand 4543 Luke i. 1. ,' to reduce into order for themselves the books termed apocryphal, and to mix them up with the divinely inspired Scripture, concerning which we have been fully persuaded, as they who from the beginning were eyewitnesses and ministers of the Word, delivered to the fathers; it seemed good to me also, having been urged thereto by true brethren, and having learned from the beginning, to set before you the books included in the Canon, and handed down, and accredited as Divine; to the end that any one who has fallen into error may condemn those who have led him astray; and that he who has continued steadfast in purity may again rejoice, having these things brought to his remembrance.

4. There are, then, of the Old Testament, twenty-two books in number; for, as I have heard, it is handed down that this is the number of the letters among the Hebrews; their respective order and names being as follows. The first is Genesis, then Exodus, next Leviticus, after that Numbers, and then Deuteronomy. Following these there is Joshua, the son of Nun, then Judges, then Ruth. And again, after these four books of Kings, the first and second being reckoned as one book, and so likewise the third and fourth as one book. And again, the first and second of the Chronicles are reckoned as one book. Again Ezra, the first and second 4544 i.e. Ezra and Nehemiah. are similarly one book. After these there is the book of Psalms, then the Proverbs, next Ecclesiastes, and the Song of Songs. Job follows, then the Prophets, the twelve being reckoned as one book. Then

Isaiah, one book, then Jeremiah with Baruch, Lamentations, and 4545 i.e. Baruch vi.—The Syriac has the conjunction, which is rejected by the Benedictine editors, the epistle, one book; afterwards, Ezekiel and Daniel, each one book. Thus far constitutes the Old Testament.

5. Again it is not tedious to speak of the [books] of the New Testament. These are, the four Gospels, according to Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John. Afterwards, the Acts of the Apostles and Epistles (called Catholic), seven, viz. of James, one; of Peter, two; of John, three; after these, one of Jude. In addition, there are fourteen Epistles of Paul, written in this order. The first, to the Romans; then two to the Corinthians; after these, to the Galatians; next, to the Ephesians; then to the Philippians; then to the Colossians; after these, two to the Thessalonians, and that to the Hebrews; and again, two to Timothy; one to Titus; and lastly, that to Philemon. And besides, the Revelation of John.

6. These are fountains of salvation, that they who thirst may be satisfied with the living words they contain. In these alone is proclaimed the doctrine of godliness. Let no man add to these, neither let him take ought from these. For concerning these the Lord put to shame the Sadducees, and said, 'Ye do err, not knowing the Scriptures.' And He reproved the Jews, saying, 'Search the Scriptures, for these are they that testify of Me 4546 Matt. xxii. 29; John v. 39.'

7. But for greater exactness I add this also, writing of necessity; that there are other books besides these not indeed included in the Canon, but appointed by the Fathers to be read by those who newly join us, and who wish for instruction in the word of godliness. The Wisdom of Solomon, and the Wisdom of Sirach, and Esther, and Judith, and Tobit, and that which is called the Teaching of the Apostles, and the Shepherd. But the former, my brethren, are included in the Canon, the latter being [merely] read; nor is there in any place a mention of apocryphal writings. But they are an invention of heretics, who write them when they choose, bestowing upon them their approbation, and assigning to them a date, that so, using them as ancient writings, they may find occasion to lead astray the simple.

And so in A.D. 367, Athanasius in his Easter letter, enumerated the 49 books of the Old Testament and the 27 books of the New Testament which together form our Bible. And the Church today recognizes this as the final closure date of the canon of Scripture.

Book 3: Chapter III.—A refutation of the heretics, from the fact that, in the various Churches, a perpetual succession of bishops was kept up.

1. It is within the power of all, therefore, in every Church, who may wish to see the truth, to contemplate clearly the tradition of the apostles manifested throughout the whole world; and we are in a position to reckon up those who were by the apostles instituted bishops in the Churches, and [to demonstrate] the succession of these men to our own times; those who neither taught nor knew of anything like what these [heretics] rave about. For if the apostles had known hidden mysteries, which they were in the habit of imparting to "the perfect" apart and privily from the rest, they would have delivered them especially to those to whom they were also committing the Churches themselves. For they were desirous that these men should be very perfect and blameless in all things, whom also they were leaving behind as their successors, delivering up their own place of government to these men; which men, if they discharged their functions honestly, would be a great boon [to the Church], but if they should fall away, the direst calamity.

2. Since, however, it would be very tedious, in such a volume as this, to reckon up the successions of all the Churches, we do put to confusion all those who, in whatever manner, whether by an evil self-pleasing, by vainglory, or by blindness and perverse opinion, assemble in unauthorized meetings; [we do this, I say,] by indicating that tradition derived from the apostles, of the very great, the very ancient, and universally known Church founded and organized at Rome by the two most glorious apostles, Peter and Paul; as also [by pointing out] the faith preached to men, which comes down to our time by means of the successions of the bishops. For it is a matter of necessity that every Church should agree with this Church, on account of its preeminent authority, 3313 The Latin text of this difficult but important clause is, “Ad hanc enim ecclesiam propter potiorem principalitatem necesse est omnem convenire ecclesiam.” Both the text and meaning have here given rise to much discussion. It is impossible to say with certainty of what words in the Greek original “potiorem principalitatem” may be the translation. We are far from sure that the rendering given above is correct, but we have been unable to think of anything better. [A most extraordinary confession. It would be hard to find a worse; but take the following from a candid Roman Catholic, which is better and more literal: “For to this Church, on account of more potent principality, it is necessary that every Church (that is, those who are on every side faithful) resort; in which Church ever, by those who are on every side, has been preserved that tradition which is from the apostles.” (Berington and Kirk, vol. i. p. 252.) Here it is obvious that the faith was kept at Rome, by those who resort there from all quarters. She was a mirror of the Catholic World, owing here orthodoxy to them; not the Sun, dispensing her own light to others, but the glass bringing their rays into a focus. See note at end of book iii.] A discussion of the subject may be seen in chap. xii. of Dr. Wordsworth’s St. Hippolytus and the Church of Rome. that is, the faithful everywhere, inasmuch as the apostolical tradition has been preserved continuously by those [faithful men] who exist everywhere.

3. The blessed apostles, then, having founded and built up the Church, committed into the hands of Linus the office of the episcopate. Of this Linus, Paul makes mention in the Epistles to Timothy. To him succeeded Anacletus; and after him, in the third place from the apostles, Clement was allotted the bishopric. This man, as he had seen the blessed apostles, and had been conversant with them, might be said to have the preaching of the apostles still echoing [in his ears], and their traditions before his eyes. Nor was he alone [in this], for there were many still remaining who had received instructions from the apostles. In the time of this Clement, no small dissension having occurred among the brethren at Corinth, the Church in Rome despatched a most powerful letter to the Corinthians, exhorting them to peace, renewing their faith, and declaring the tradition which it had lately received from the apostles, proclaiming the one God, omnipotent, the Maker of heaven and earth, the Creator of man, who brought on the deluge, and called Abraham, who led the people from the land of Egypt, spake with Moses, set forth the law, sent the prophets, and who has prepared fire for the devil and his angels. From this document, whosoever chooses to do so, may learn that He, the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, was preached by the Churches, and may also understand the apostolical tradition of the Church, since this Epistle is of older date than these men who are now propagating falsehood, and who conjure into existence another god beyond the Creator and the Maker of all existing things. To this Clement there succeeded Evaristus. Alexander followed Evaristus; then, sixth from the apostles, Sixtus was appointed; after him, Telesphorus, who was gloriously martyred; then Hyginus; after him, Pius; then after him, Anicetus. Soter having succeeded Anicetus, Eleutherius does now, in the twelfth place from the apostles, hold the inheritance of the episcopate. In this order, and by this succession, the ecclesiastical tradition from the apostles, and the preaching of the truth, have come down to us. And this is most abundant proof that there is one and the same vivifying faith, which has been preserved in the Church from the apostles until now, and handed down in truth.

4. But Polycarp also was not only instructed by apostles, and conversed with many who had seen Christ, but was also, by apostles in Asia, appointed bishop of the Church in Smyrna, whom I also saw in my early youth, for he tarried [on earth] a very long time, and, when a very old man, gloriously and most nobly suffering martyrdom, 3314 Polycarp suffered about the year 167, in the reign of Marcus Aurelius. His great age of eighty-six years implies that he was contemporary with St. John for nearly twenty years. departed this life, having always taught the things which he had learned from the apostles, and which the Church has handed down, and which alone are true. To these things all the Asiatic Churches testify, as do also those men who have succeeded Polycarp down to the present time,—a man who was of much greater weight, and a more stedfast witness of truth, than Valentinus, and Marcion, and the rest of the heretics. He it was who, coming to Rome in the time of Anicetus caused many to turn away from the aforesaid heretics to the Church of God, proclaiming that he had received this one and sole truth from the apostles,—that, namely, which is handed down by the Church. 3315 So the Greek. The Latin reads: “which he also handed down to the Church.” There are also those who heard from him that John, the disciple of the Lord, going to bathe at Ephesus, and perceiving Cerinthus within, rushed out of the bath-house without bathing, exclaiming, “Let us fly, lest even the bath-house fall down, because Cerinthus, the enemy of the truth, is within.” And Polycarp himself replied to Marcion, who met him on one occasion, and said, “Dost thou know me?” “I do know thee, the first-born of Satan.” Such was the horror which the apostles and their disciples had against holding even verbal communication with any corrupters of the truth; as Paul also says, “A man that is an heretic, after the first and second admonition, reject; knowing that he that is such is subverted, and sinneth, being condemned of himself.” 3316 Tit. iii. 10. There is also a very powerful 3317 ἰκανωτάτη. Harvey translates this all-sufficient, and thus paraphrases: But his Epistle is all-sufficient, to teach those that are desirous to learn. Epistle of Polycarp written to the Philippians, from which those who choose to do so, and are anxious about their salvation, can learn the character of his faith, and the preaching of the truth. Then, again, the Church in Ephesus, founded by Paul, and having John remaining among them permanently until the times of Trajan, is a true witness of the tradition of the apostles.

Summary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus testifies that, “It is within the power of all, therefore, in every Church, who may wish to see the truth, to contemplate clearly the tradition of the apostles manifested throughout the whole world.” Irenaeus then records, “and we are in a position to reckon up those who were by the apostles instituted bishops in the Churches, and [to demonstrate] the succession of these men to our own times; those who neither taught nor knew of anything like what these [heretics] rave about.” Again Irenaeus testifies, “For if the apostles had known hidden mysteries, which they were in the habit of imparting to “the perfect” apart and privily from the rest, they would have delivered them especially to those to whom they were also committing the Churches themselves.” Irenaeus then concludes, “For they were desirous that these men should be very perfect and blameless in all things, whom also they were leaving behind as their successors, delivering up their own place of government to these men; which men, if they discharged their functions honestly, would be a great boon [to the Church], but if they should fall away, the direst calamity.”

In paragraph two, Irenaeus reasons, “Since, however, it would be very tedious, in such a volume as this, to reckon up the successions of all the Churches, we do put to confusion all those who, in whatever manner, whether by an evil self-pleasing, by vainglory, or by blindness and perverse opinion, assemble in unauthorized meetings; [we do this, I say,] by indicating that tradition derived from the apostles, of the very great, the very ancient, and universally known Church founded and organized at Rome by the two most glorious apostles, Peter and Paul; as also [by pointing out] the faith preached to men, which comes down to our time by means of the successions of the bishops.” Irenaeus then concludes, “For it is a matter of necessity that every Church should agree with this Church, on account of its preeminent authority, that is, the faithful everywhere, inasmuch as the apostolical tradition has been preserved continuously by those [faithful men] who exist everywhere.”

In paragraph three, Irenaeus records that, “The blessed apostles, then, having founded and built up the Church, committed into the hands of Linus the office of the episcopate. To him succeeded Anacletus; and after him, in the third place from the apostles, Clement was allotted the bishopric.” It is Irenaeus’ testimony that, “This man, as he had seen the blessed apostles, and had been conversant with them, might be said to have the preaching of the apostles still echoing [in his ears], and their traditions before his eyes. Nor was he alone [in this], for there were many still remaining who had received instructions from the apostles.” Irenaeus then records that, “In the time of this Clement, no small dissension having occurred among the brethren at Corinth, the Church in Rome despatched a most powerful letter to the Corinthians, exhorting them to peace, renewing their faith, and declaring the tradition which it had lately received from the apostles, proclaiming the one God, omnipotent, the Maker of heaven and earth, the Creator of man, who brought on the deluge, and called Abraham, who led the people from the land of Egypt, spake with Moses, set forth the law, sent the prophets, and who has prepared fire for the devil and his angels. From this document, whosoever chooses to do so, may learn that He, the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, was preached by the Churches, and may also understand the apostolical tradition of the Church, since this Epistle is of older date than these men who are now propagating falsehood, and who conjure into existence another god beyond the Creator and the Maker of all existing things.” Irenaeus then continues, “To this Clement there succeeded Evaristus. Alexander followed Evaristus; then, sixth from the apostles, Sixtus was appointed; after him, Telesphorus, who was gloriously martyred; then Hyginus; after him, Pius; then after him, Anicetus. Soter having succeeded Anicetus, Eleutherius does now, in the twelfth place from the apostles, hold the inheritance of the episcopate.” Irenaeus then records, “In this order, and by this succession, the ecclesiastical tradition from the apostles, and the preaching of the truth, have come down to us.” Irenaeus then asserts, “And this is most abundant proof that there is one and the same vivifying faith, which has been preserved in the Church from the apostles until now, and handed down in truth.”

In paragraph four, Irenaeus testifies, “But Polycarp also was not only instructed by apostles, and conversed with many who had seen Christ, but was also, by apostles in Asia, appointed bishop of the Church in Smyrna, whom I also saw in my early youth, for he tarried [on earth] a very long time, and, when a very old man, gloriously and most nobly suffering martyrdom, departed this life, having always taught the things which he had learned from the apostles, and which the Church has handed down, and which alone are true.” Irenaeus also records that, “To these things all the Asiatic Churches testify, as do also those men who have succeeded Polycarp down to the present time,—a man who was of much greater weight, and a more steadfast witness of truth, than Valentinus, and Marcion, and the rest of the heretics.” Irenaeus also testifies, referring to Polycarp, “He it was who, coming to Rome in the time of Anicetus caused many to turn away from the aforesaid heretics to the Church of God, proclaiming that he had received this one and sole truth from the apostles,—that, namely, which is handed down by the Church.” Irenaeus then records, “There are also those who heard from him that John, the disciple of the Lord, going to bathe at Ephesus, and perceiving Cerinthus within, rushed out of the bath-house without bathing, exclaiming, “Let us fly, lest even the bath-house fall down, because Cerinthus, the enemy of the truth, is within,” and that “Polycarp himself replied to Marcion, who met him on one occasion, and said, “Dost thou know me?” “I do know thee, the first-born of Satan,” indicating “the horror which the apostles and their disciples had against holding even verbal communication with any corrupters of the truth.” Irenaeus testifies that “Paul also says, “A man that is an heretic, after the first and second admonition, reject; knowing that he that is such is subverted, and sinneth, being condemned of himself,” referring to Titus 3:10-11. Irenaeus continues by testifying that, “There is also a very powerful Epistle of Polycarp written to the Philippians, from which those who choose to do so, and are anxious about their salvation, can learn the character of his faith, and the preaching of the truth.” Irenaeus concludes by testifying, “Then, again, the Church in Ephesus, founded by Paul, and having John remaining among them permanently until the times of Trajan, is a true witness of the tradition of the apostles.”

Commentary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus testifies that, “It is within the power of all, therefore, in every Church, who may wish to see the truth, to contemplate clearly the tradition of the apostles manifested throughout the whole world.” Irenaeus then records, “and we are in a position to reckon up those who were by the apostles instituted bishops in the Churches, and [to demonstrate] the succession of these men to our own times;” Irenaeus then testifies that those in this succession of bishops were “those who neither taught nor knew of anything like what these [heretics] rave about.” Irenaeus is here again stating the basic theory of apostolic succession.

Again Irenaeus testifies, “For if the apostles had known hidden mysteries, which they were in the habit of imparting to “the perfect” apart and privily from the rest, they would have delivered them especially to those to whom they were also committing the Churches themselves.”

The “perfect” were the Gnostics who believed that they had been given special knowledge. Paul called this false knowledge in 1 Timothy 6 (KJV):20 O Timothy, keep that which is committed to thy trust, avoiding profane and vain babblings, and oppositions of science falsely so called: 21 Which some professing have erred concerning the faith. Grace be with thee. Amen.

The word “science” in Greek is the word γνῶσις (pronounced gnosis) and “the word simply means “knowledge””. Expository Dictionary of New Testament Words, W.E. Vine, Vol. III, page 326.

Irenaeus then concludes, “For they were desirous that these men should be very perfect and blameless in all things, whom also they were leaving behind as their successors, delivering up their own place of government to these men; which men, if they discharged their functions honestly, would be a great boon [to the Church], but if they should fall away, the direst calamity.”

It was Irenaeus’ belief, and the Church in his day, that the apostles had committed the Churches which they had planted to the bishops, and had given them a complete understanding of all the will of God which they possessed, and also had delivered up their own place of government to these bishops as well. This understanding of the will of God, which was given to the first bishop by the founding apostle, was handed down by the bishop to his successor. And each bishop in turn would hand down this understanding. This understanding would include all of the oral teaching the apostle gave the bishop as well as the written word so that the traditions of the church were considered equal in authority with the written word of the apostle. Thus we have the theory of apostolic succession.

However this belief of the early Church may be, we must understand that to assert that the apostles left the bishops to whom they had committed the Churches behind as their successors, and delivered up their own place of government to these bishops, makes it possible to also assert that these bishops have as much authority as the apostles had. This is not supported by the Scriptures as we shall see.

In paragraph two, Irenaeus reasons, “Since, however, it would be very tedious, in such a volume as this, to reckon up the successions of all the Churches, we do put to confusion all those who, in whatever manner, whether by an evil self-pleasing, by vainglory, or by blindness and perverse opinion, assemble in unauthorized meetings;” Irenaeus did not allow meetings that were not under the authority of one of the churches with an established apostolic succession.

He then asserts, “[we do this, I say,] by indicating that tradition derived from the apostles, of the very great, the very ancient, and universally known Church founded and organized at Rome by the two most glorious apostles, Peter and Paul; as also [by pointing out] the faith preached to men, which comes down to our time by means of the successions of the bishops.” Irenaeus then concludes, “For it is a matter of necessity that every Church should agree with this Church, on account of its preeminent authority, that is, the faithful everywhere, inasmuch as the apostolical tradition has been preserved continuously by those [faithful men] who exist everywhere.” Irenaeus has just laid the groundwork for the belief in a head bishop of the whole Church to be in Rome.

In paragraph three, Irenaeus records that, “The blessed apostles, then, having founded and built up the Church, committed into the hands of Linus the office of the episcopate.” Paul does indeed mention a Linus in 2 Timothy 4 (KJV):21 Do thy diligence to come before winter. Eubulus greeteth thee, and Pudens, and Linus, and Claudia, and all the brethren.

Irenaeus then continues, “To him succeeded Anacletus; and after him, in the third place from the apostles, Clement was allotted the bishopric.” It is Irenaeus’ testimony that, “This man, as he had seen the blessed apostles, and had been conversant with them, might be said to have the preaching of the apostles still echoing [in his ears], and their traditions before his eyes. Nor was he alone [in this], for there were many still remaining who had received instructions from the apostles.” However, merely to have heard an apostle did not guarantee that the apostle’s teaching was being understood and followed. This is evident from the correction that Paul gave the Corinthians in his two epistles to them.

Irenaeus then records that, “In the time of this Clement, no small dissension having occurred among the brethren at Corinth, the Church in Rome despatched a most powerful letter to the Corinthians, exhorting them to peace, renewing their faith, and declaring the tradition which it had lately received from the apostles, proclaiming the one God, omnipotent, the Maker of heaven and earth, the Creator of man, who brought on the deluge, and called Abraham, who led the people from the land of Egypt, spake with Moses, set forth the law, sent the prophets, and who has prepared fire for the devil and his angels. From this document, whosoever chooses to do so, may learn that He, the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, was preached by the Churches, and may also understand the apostolical tradition of the Church, since this Epistle is of older date than these men who are now propagating falsehood, and who conjure into existence another god beyond the Creator and the Maker of all existing things.” Irenaeus is clearly speaking against the Gnostics, and trying to defend the Church against their heresy.

Irenaeus then continues, “To this Clement there succeeded Evaristus. Alexander followed Evaristus; then, sixth from the apostles, Sixtus was appointed; after him, Telesphorus, who was gloriously martyred; then Hyginus; after him, Pius; then after him, Anicetus. Soter having succeeded Anicetus, Eleutherius does now, in the twelfth place from the apostles, hold the inheritance of the episcopate.” Irenaeus places the writing of his third book during the episcopate of Eleutherius who was bishop between 174 to 189 A.D. And although Irenaeus does not mention it by verse, he does say that Clement was “conversant” with the apostles, and Paul does name a Clement as his fellow worker in Philippians 4 (KJV):3 And I intreat thee also, true yokefellow, help those women which laboured with me in the gospel, with Clement also, and with other my fellowlabourers, whose names are in the book of life.

Whether this is the same Clement who was bishop of Rome is not known for certain.

In paragraph four, Irenaeus testifies, “But Polycarp also was not only instructed by apostles, and conversed with many who had seen Christ, but was also, by apostles in Asia, appointed bishop of the Church in Smyrna, whom I also saw in my early youth, for he tarried [on earth] a very long time, and, when a very old man, gloriously and most nobly suffering martyrdom, departed this life, having always taught the things which he had learned from the apostles, and which the Church has handed down, and which alone are true.” Irenaeus also records that, “To these things all the Asiatic Churches testify, as do also those men who have succeeded Polycarp down to the present time,—a man who was of much greater weight, and a more stedfast witness of truth, than Valentinus, and Marcion, and the rest of the heretics.”

Now Note 3314 in paragraph four says that Polycarp died at age 86 in the year 167 A.D. This would make his birth to have occurred in the year 81 A.D. The note then states this would make him a contemporary of the apostle John for nearly twenty years. This assumes John lived until 101 A.D. of course. And of course, it also means that Polycarp was born in 81 A.D. Therefore, he would just have grown to adulthood when the apostle John was promoted to glory. So just how close he was to the apostle John is uncertain in my mind. His writings do not have any great depth to them, though they do show a deep love for the Lord Jesus Christ. Polycarp does not touch on much of the teaching in the New Testament, unlike Irenaeus who hits on almost every major doctrine. Both men’s writings are good and valuable.

Irenaeus then also testifies, referring to Polycarp, “He it was who, coming to Rome in the time of Anicetus caused many to turn away from the aforesaid heretics to the Church of God, proclaiming that he had received this one and sole truth from the apostles,—that, namely, which is handed down by the Church.” Irenaeus then records, “There are also those who heard from him that John, the disciple of the Lord, going to bathe at Ephesus, and perceiving Cerinthus within, rushed out of the bath-house without bathing, exclaiming, “Let us fly, lest even the bath-house fall down, because Cerinthus, the enemy of the truth, is within.” It is hard to believe that the apostle John, who was witness to Jesus’ miracles, and to the vision on the mountain, and to the resurrection, and who wrote the Gospel of John, and the three epistles that bear his name, would have fled from the presence of such a heretic as Cerinthus. John most certainly would have commanded the devil to flee.

Irenaeus continues, “And Polycarp himself replied to Marcion, who met him on one occasion, and said, “Dost thou know me?” “I do know thee, the first-born of Satan,” indicating “the horror which the apostles and their disciples had against holding even verbal communication with any corrupters of the truth.” But the Lord’s brother, the apostle James, wrote in James 4 (KJV):7 Submit yourselves therefore to God. Resist the devil, and he will flee from you.

And the apostle Peter wrote in 1 Peter 5 (KJV):8 Be sober, be vigilant; because your adversary the devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about, seeking whom he may devour: 9 Whom resist stedfast in the faith, knowing that the same afflictions are accomplished in your brethren that are in the world.

Irenaeus then testifies that “Paul also says, “A man that is an heretic, after the first and second admonition, reject; knowing that he that is such is subverted, and sinneth, being condemned of himself,” referring to Titus 3 (KJV):10 A man that is an heretick after the first and second admonition reject;

Irenaeus continues by testifying that, “There is also a very powerful Epistle of Polycarp written to the Philippians, from which those who choose to do so, and are anxious about their salvation, can learn the character of his faith, and the preaching of the truth.” Irenaeus concludes by testifying, “Then, again, the Church in Ephesus, founded by Paul, and having John remaining among them permanently until the times of Trajan, is a true witness of the tradition of the apostles.” This is a rather interesting statement by Irenaeus. We will discuss this in a moment.

Commentary Summary Book 3: Chapter III

So to summarize his argument in this chapter, Irenaeus believed that, since this apostolical tradition is common to all the churches, Rome may be taken as representative of them all. And, since Rome is central to the empire and a “potent principality,” making communication more feasible, and since the church was founded by “the two most glorious apostles, Peter and Paul,” and since the church in Rome has maintained a verifiable list of its succession of bishops, Rome should have the preeminence of authority and all the churches should agree with Rome. And, since Rome’s episcopal succession is firmly established and known, why try to maintain another list of episcopal succession of all the churches, since Rome’s succession list is in itself the “most abundant proof that there is one and the same vivifying faith, which has been preserved in the Church from the apostles until now, and handed down in truth.”

Now Irenaeus shows us his concern here that not only should the truth of the Scriptures be acknowledged, but that the Scriptures should be interpreted correctly, and not misinterpreted as the Gnostics were doing. However, Irenaeus does not encourage the churches or believers to listen to the Holy Spirit for guidance into all truth. Instead, he resorts to the tradition of the church in Rome as a guarantee, a “most abundant proof” he says, that “there is one and the same vivifying faith, which has been preserved in the Church from the apostles until now, and handed down in truth.”

At this point, we might ask ourselves why Irenaeus would not resort to the Scriptures exclusively instead of relying on the slippery slope of tradition. We will never know everything Irenaeus was thinking and feeling. However, Irenaeus may have taken the following into account:

- The winds of heresy were blowing vehemently within the churches themselves as Gnostic believers were reportedly among the very brethren in the churches themselves.
- The church had gone through persecutions under Nero and Trajan before Irenaeus was born. Irenaeus knew himself what persecution was like for he was appointed bishop of Lyons after the former bishop was martyred, and he lived under the reign of Marcus Aurelius (161-180), the Roman emperor under whom the martyrdom of Polycarp is recorded. Irenaeus himself may have known persecution again under the Roman emperor, Septimus Severus (202-210), and it is possible he was himself martyred during that persecution.
- It is very probable that the illiteracy rate was very high in the early church. Paul himself did not ask everyone in every church to read his letters themselves, but that they should be read to the churches by the overseers, the bishops.

Looking back we might also note that it is evident that doctrinal knowledge of the word of God did not go much beyond the creedal statements of the time. It is also evident that leaven was creeping into the churches in the forms of legalism and sacerdotalism. This was of course all based on “apostolical tradition” that “has been preserved continuously by those [faithful men] who exist everywhere.”

All of this may have played a part in what Irenaeus was feeling and thinking, and could be reasons for his relying on the “apostolical tradition” in addition to the Scriptures as sources of truth. Irenaeus definitely saw that the threat of Gnosticism was real. He himself in his mind is contending for the faith once delivered to the saints, as he perceived it, against the Gnostics who “are now propagating falsehood, and who conjure into existence another god beyond the Creator and the Maker of all existing things.” Irenaeus points out in paragraph two that the “apostolical tradition” of the Church is much older than the Gnostic heresies. He is trying to show that the consistent teaching of the Church, that is, the “apostolical tradition,” was being followed and adhered to from the beginning by all the churches which were planted by apostles. That is, he is trying to show that the faith of these churches planted by apostles is the same, and that it has nothing to do with these new doctrines of heresy that are being propagated by the Gnostics. And this “apostolical tradition” could be clearly seen, Irenaeus thought, by examining that tradition which the Church in Rome “had lately received from the apostles, proclaiming the one God, omnipotent, the Maker of heaven and earth, the Creator of man, who brought on the deluge, and called Abraham, who led the people from the land of Egypt, spake with Moses, set forth the law, sent the prophets, and who has prepared fire for the devil and his angels.” He also adds here that “the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, was preached by the Churches.” Irenaeus seems to emphasize that Rome is an example of “the faithful everywhere, inasmuch as the apostolical tradition has been preserved continuously by those [faithful men] who exist everywhere.” For the rest of what this apostolical tradition might include, see the sections under Chapter 4: Irenaeus’ Statement of Faith.

Irenaeus is to be applauded for overturning this idea of hidden knowledge, or gnosis, which the Gnostics claimed the Apostles imparted to the “perfect,” but which was actually a perversion of the Gospel. However, he is following the tradition of his time which dictated that a list of bishops appointed by apostles be kept by all the churches which were planted by apostles. He seems to feel that this was some sort of guarantee that the church was preaching and teaching the truth.

Irenaeus also speaks of “the inheritance of the episcopate” by which I believe he means “the ecclesiastical tradition from the apostles, and the preaching of the truth.” In other words, the apostles handed down how to do church, that is the “tradition from the apostles,” and the truth of the Gospel message in their writings to the bishops they appointed. Irenaeus felt that this succession of bishops was the “most abundant proof that there is one and the same vivifying faith, which has been preserved in the Church from the apostles until now, and handed down in truth.” We will talk more about what Irenaeus means by “the inheritance of the episcopate” in the next section.

Irenaeus admits that “it would be very tedious, in such a volume as this, to reckon up the successions of all the Churches.” And so he concludes that the Church in Rome should be the Church to look to as the representative and central authority of all the Churches. And so, any Church that meets together but does not agree with Rome is not authorized and is unlawful, “for it is a matter of necessity that every Church should agree with this Church, on account of its preeminent authority” or “more potent principality,” whichever you prefer. Irenaeus’ argument runs this way.

1. The “tradition derived from the apostles, of the very great, the very ancient, and universally known Church founded and organized at Rome by the two most glorious apostles, Peter and Paul” has been preserved by the succession of their bishops, and their list of successive bishops is known and continuous to the time of Irenaeus writing.
2. The apostles, Peter and Paul, appointed Linus to be their successor at Rome.
3. Rome’s succession list, which he names here, “is most abundant proof that there is one and the same vivifying faith, which has been preserved in the Church from the apostles until now, and handed down in truth.”
4. Clement was bishop of Rome from 88 A.D. to 97 A.D. and he “might be said to have the preaching of the apostles still echoing [in his ears], and their traditions before his eyes.”
5. The office of bishop holds the inheritance of the episcopate as Irenaeus clearly says in paragraph three when he states, “Eleutherius does now, in the twelfth place from the apostles, hold the inheritance of the episcopate.”
6. Irenaeus states “In this order, and by this succession, the ecclesiastical tradition from the apostles, and the preaching of the truth, have come down to us.”

Irenaeus is right to defend the Church, but in his zeal to defend the church against the false doctrine of the Gnostics, he is validating a form of Church government that is not found in the Scriptures. He has in essence recommended a new head in Rome, when Jesus Christ is the sole head of the Church, and is its central authority, as Paul states in Ephesians 5 (KJV):23 For the husband is the head of the wife, even as Christ is the head of the church: and he is the saviour of the body.

And in Colossians 1 (KJV):18 And he is the head of the body, the church: who is the beginning, the firstborn from the dead; that in all things he might have the preeminence.

And the most abundant proof of a vivifying faith present in the Church is the presence of the Holy Spirit in our midst, including the manifestations of the Spirit and the fruit of the Spirit. As for the teaching of the Apostles, it has been preserved for us in their writings which are a more sure word of prophecy than any traditions of any sort. It is the Holy Spirit that guides believers into all truth, and He does this by illuminating the word of God as it has been received in the 27 books of the New Testament, and the 49 books of the Old Testament. Jesus spoke of this guidance by the Holy Spirit in John 16 (KJV):13 Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth: for he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak: and he will shew you things to come.

The Holy Spirit revealed this truth through the apostles, and illuminates this truth to us. This is what Paul is saying in 1 Corinthians 2 (KJV):14 But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned.

God revealed His truth to the apostles through their writings in the New Testament, just as he did the Old Testament books through the prophets. We then are guided into all truth by the same Holy Spirit as we read and study their writings. How could we read or study tradition? It would only be studying hearsay. It has been true in every age that we must be born again, and have the Holy Spirit's help to understand the "things of the Spirit of God." And this is true for every believer, and not just the bishop, or the overseer. This is how we abide in Him as John reveals in 1 John 2 (KJV):27 But the anointing which ye have received of him abideth in you, and ye need not that any man teach you: but as the same anointing teacheth you of all things, and is truth, and is no lie, and even as it hath taught you, ye shall abide in him.

So we can see clearly here how far the theory of apostolic succession had gone in its development in the early Church. It had not yet received recognition as a doctrine yet. But it is clearly seen as having been in development in the time of Irenaeus and was supported by his writings. The point in my mind is that no matter how much the presbyters appointed by the apostles understood of the apostle's teaching, all of their traditions, writings, and practices should agree with the written word of God that is inspired by God as in 2 Timothy 3 (KJV):16 All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: 17 That the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works.

Tradition is never said to be inspired. The word of God as revealed in the 49 books of the Old Testament and the 27 books of the New Testament is all we need with the Holy Spirit's help to discern all the truth that the Lord would have us to know.

Now suppose we imagine ourselves present in the time of Irenaeus. Considering the fact that all of the apostle's writings were not gathered yet into the New Testament, it is reasonable to believe that each church had only as much truth as the apostle who founded it. Therefore, there would be no bishop that had all the knowledge, or "perfect knowledge," of the apostles in the apostle's life time. Even Peter admitted there were some things hard to understand in Paul's writings as we read in 2 Peter 3 (KJV):14 Wherefore, beloved, seeing that ye look for such things, be diligent that ye may be found of him in peace, without spot, and blameless. 15 And account that the longsuffering of our Lord is salvation; even as our beloved brother Paul also according to the wisdom given unto him hath written unto you; 16 As also in all his epistles, speaking in them of these things; in which are some things hard to be understood, which they that are unlearned and unstable wrest, as they do also the other scriptures, unto their own destruction. 17 Ye therefore, beloved, seeing ye know these things before, beware lest ye also, being led away with the error of the wicked, fall from your own steadfastness. 18 But grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. To him be glory both now and for ever. Amen.

Peter did not know everything that Paul knew, and Paul did not know everything that Peter knew. Paul had wisdom given to him that was different than Peter's wisdom. And likewise Peter had wisdom that only he could have, being an eyewitness of the Lord Jesus' life and death and resurrection. Paul appreciated Peter and gave him the right hand of fellowship as did Peter to Paul as we see in Galatians 2 (KJV):6 But of these who seemed to be somewhat, (whatsoever they were, it maketh no matter to me: God accepteth no man's person:) for they who seemed to be somewhat in conference added nothing to me: 7 But contrariwise, when they saw that the gospel of the uncircumcision was committed unto me, as the gospel of the circumcision was unto Peter; 8 (For he that wrought effectually in Peter to the apostleship of the circumcision, the same was mighty in me toward the Gentiles:;) 9 And when James, Cephas, and John, who seemed to be pillars, perceived the grace that was given unto me, they gave to me and Barnabas the right hands of fellowship; that we should go unto the heathen, and they unto the circumcision. 10 Only they would that we should remember the poor; the same which I also was forward to do.

And Paul in the very next verses rebuked Peter because he stood condemned as we read in Galatians 2 (KJV):11 But when Peter was come to Antioch, I withstood him to the face, because he was to be blamed. 12 For before that certain came from James, he did eat with the Gentiles: but when they were come, he withdrew and separated himself, fearing them which were of the circumcision. 13 And the other Jews dissembled likewise with him; insomuch that Barnabas also was carried away with their dissimulation. 14 But when I saw that they walked not uprightly according to the truth of the gospel, I said unto Peter before them all, If thou, being a Jew, livest after the manner of Gentiles, and not as do the Jews, why compellest thou the Gentiles to live as do the Jews?

Even the apostles were not above correction as we see here. Peter now knew that the Gentiles were included in God's plan of salvation. Yet he still maintained some Jewish legalism, and was not fully entering into the freedom of the Gospel.

The word of God is true solely because it is the word of God. It is not more true because it is attested to by the succession of the bishops of Rome who have preached "the apostolical tradition" continuously and have been faithfully preserving it continuously. And the Church, inasmuch as it has been obedient to the word of God, is a pillar and support of the truth. But the word of God is still the word of God, regardless of man's obedience. Not so tradition since for tradition to be anything handed down, it is dependent on the faithfulness of the bishop. Being thus dependent on tradition, we then make ourselves dependent on man by which we bring a curse on ourselves as we read in Jeremiah 17 (NASB):5 Thus says the LORD, "Cursed is the man who trusts in mankind And makes flesh his strength, And whose heart turns away from the LORD.

Also, Irenaeus argues that the Church at Ephesus "is a true witness of the tradition of the apostles" simply because it was founded by Paul, and because the apostle John remained with them until the time of Trajan who reigned as Roman Emperor from 98 A.D. to 117 A.D. Irenaeus here is vouching for the faithfulness of the Church at Ephesus because Paul founded it, and the apostle John was there! Did Irenaeus never read this very apostle's book called Revelation in which he writes as in Revelation 2 (KJV):1 Unto the angel of the church of Ephesus write; These things saith he that holdeth the seven stars in his right hand, who walketh in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks; 2 I know thy works, and thy labour, and thy patience, and how thou canst not bear them which are evil: and thou hast tried them which say they are apostles, and are not, and hast found them liars: 3 And hast borne, and hast patience, and for my name's sake hast laboured, and hast not fainted. 4 Nevertheless I have somewhat against thee, because thou hast left thy first love. 5 Remember therefore from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do the first works; or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will remove thy candlestick out of his place, except thou repent. 6 But this thou hast, that thou hatest the deeds of the Nicolaitanes, which I also hate. 7 He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches; To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God.

Does God really need anything from man to back up His act? This very church at Ephesus was in danger of having their lampstand removed out of its place because they had left their first love, and were in need of repentance. Our faith does not rest on the testimony of man, or the preservation of any church's tradition. Our faith rests on Jesus Christ. To Him be the glory forever.

We might ask ourselves, is our faith in the Church, or in the Lord? Let us, as the Psalmist, put our trust in the Lord as in Psalms 118 (KJV):8 It is better to trust in the LORD than to put confidence in man.

Irenaeus is begging the issue here. I realize he is trying to defend the faith. But the truth is in the Scriptures. Whether or not the churches or individuals were walking in the truth, and a witness to the one apostolic faith, is a matter of the history of each individual church. It was not something Irenaeus could verify in his time and, only in as much as he knew it to be the case, could he say it was so. All of Irenaeus' thinking here is very logical and easy to follow. And his zeal to defend the Church is commendable. Yet, his logical process goes beyond the Scriptures which do not say that the apostles were leaving the bishops "behind as their successors, delivering up their own place of government to these men" when they departed this life. Neither by extension do the Scriptures point to Rome as a central authority of tradition or episcopal government. The bishops were to be overseers of local churches and nothing more according to the Scriptures. The Scriptures say that when Paul was in Miletus, he sent for the elders of the Church at Ephesus in Acts, chapter 20. When they arrived, he told them that they knew how he taught them publicly and from house to house and kept back nothing that was profitable to them as we read in Acts 20 (KJV):17 And from Miletus he sent to Ephesus, and called the elders of the church. 18 And when they were come to him, he said unto them, Ye know, from the first day that I came into Asia, after what manner I have been with you at all seasons, 19 Serving the LORD with all humility of mind, and with many tears, and temptations, which befell me by the lying in wait of the Jews: 20 And how I kept back nothing that was profitable unto you, but have shewed you, and have taught you publicly, and from house to house, 21 Testifying both to the Jews, and also to the Greeks, repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ.

His advice to the elders, whom he also calls overseers which is the same word translated bishops, is stated in Acts 20 (KJV):28 Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and to all the flock, over the which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers, to feed the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood. 29 For I know this, that after my departing shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock. 30 Also of your own selves shall men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw away disciples after them. 31 Therefore watch, and remember, that by the space of three years I ceased not to warn every one night and day with tears.

Paul knew that savage wolves would come in not sparing the flock, and even from among themselves men would arise “speaking perverse” things and drawing disciples after them. He could have said, “But you have no need to worry because I have appointed a blameless man as bishop, and all you have to do is keep a record of any successive bishops and you’ll be okay! The truth is preserved by the office of the episcopate, and not in the man himself.” But he didn’t. Rather, when he left them and knew that he would not see them again, he commended them to God, and to the word of His grace as we read in Acts 20 (KJV):32 And now, brethren, I commend you to God, and to the word of his grace, which is able to build you up, and to give you an inheritance among all them which are sanctified.

When Paul left the Church at Ephesus, He commended them to God and to the word of His grace, that is, to the word that was inspired by God. He did not leave them dependent on man, but on God. And it is the word of God that is able to give us the inheritance among all those who are sanctified, and not a list of bishops who may or may not have followed the Lord, be they appointed in an apostolic succession or not.

Again, in regards to Irenaeus’ statements in paragraph four, it is highly unlikely that John felt any fear of Cerinthus or a bath house falling down on him. John is the one who wrote as in 1 John 5 (KJV):4 For whatsoever is born of God overcometh the world: and this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith. 5 Who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God?

John also wrote as in 1 John 4 (KJV):1 Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God: because many false prophets are gone out into the world. 2 Hereby know ye the Spirit of God: Every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God: 3 And every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is not of God: and this is that spirit of antichrist, whereof ye have heard that it should come; and even now already is it in the world. 4 Ye are of God, little children, and have overcome them: because greater is he that is in you, than he that is in the world.

And John also wrote as in 1 John 4 (KJV):18 There is no fear in love; but perfect love casteth out fear: because fear hath torment. He that feareth is not made perfect in love.

These statements don’t make John sound like someone who would be afraid of a heretic. When Paul encountered someone who resisted the Gospel, he did not “fly” as it were. Instead, Paul rebuked evil spirits as he did in Acts 13 (KJV):8 But Elymas the sorcerer (for so is his name by interpretation) withstood them, seeking to turn away the deputy from the faith. 9 Then Saul, (who also is called Paul,) filled with the Holy Ghost, set his eyes on him. 10 And said, O full of all subtilty and all mischief, thou child of the devil, thou enemy of all righteousness, wilt thou not cease to pervert the right ways of the Lord? 11 And now, behold, the hand of the Lord is upon thee, and thou shalt be blind, not seeing the sun for a season. And immediately there fell on him a mist and a darkness; and he went about seeking some to lead him by the hand. 12 Then the deputy, when he saw what was done, believed, being astonished at the doctrine of the Lord.

The result of the manifestations of the Spirit in the apostle's ministry was that people were converted to the faith and saved. Rather than horror, they simply brought discipline to bear as Irenaeus himself acknowledged when he referred to Titus 3 (KJV):10 A man that is an heretick after the first and second admonition reject; 11 Knowing that he that is such is subverted, and sinneth, being condemned of himself.

May our faith ever rest on the power of God as Paul spoke in 1 Corinthians 2 (KJV):1 And I, brethren, when I came to you, came not with excellency of speech or of wisdom, declaring unto you the testimony of God. 2 For I determined not to know any thing among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified. 3 And I was with you in weakness, and in fear, and in much trembling. 4 And my speech and my preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power: 5 That your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God.

Book 3: Chapter IV.—The truth is to be found nowhere else but in the Catholic Church, the sole depository of apostolical doctrine. Heresies are of recent formation, and cannot trace their origin up to the apostles.

1. Since therefore we have such proofs, it is not necessary to seek the truth among others which it is easy to obtain from the Church; since the apostles, like a rich man [depositing his money] in a bank, lodged in her hands most copiously all things pertaining to the truth: so that every man, whosoever will, can draw from her the water of life. 3318 Rev. xxii. 17. For she is the entrance to life; all others are thieves and robbers. On this account are we bound to avoid them, but to make choice of the thing pertaining to the Church with the utmost diligence, and to lay hold of the tradition of the truth. For how stands the case? Suppose there arise a dispute relative to some important question 3319 Latin, "modica quaestione." among us, should we not have recourse to the most ancient Churches with which the apostles held constant intercourse, and learn from them what is certain and clear in regard to the present question? For how should it be if the apostles themselves had not left us writings? Would it not be necessary, [in that case,] to follow the course of the tradition which they handed down to those to whom they did commit the Churches?

Summary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus testifies, "Since therefore we have such proofs, it is not necessary to seek the truth among others which it is easy to obtain from the Church; since the apostles, like a rich man [depositing his money] in a bank, lodged in her hands most copiously all things pertaining to the truth: so that every man, whosoever will, can draw from her the water of life," referring in part to Revelation 22:17. Irenaeus then asserts, "For she is the entrance to life; all others are thieves and robbers," referring in part to John 10:1. And Irenaeus then reasons, "On this account are we bound to avoid them, but to make choice of the thing pertaining to the Church with the utmost diligence, and to lay hold of the tradition of the truth. For how stands the case? Suppose there arise a dispute relative to some important question among us, should we not have recourse to the most ancient Churches with which the apostles held constant intercourse, and learn from them what is certain and clear in regard to the present question? For how should it be if the apostles themselves had not left us writings? Would it not be necessary, [in that case,] to follow the course of the tradition which they handed down to those to whom they did commit the Churches?"

Commentary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus testifies, "Since therefore we have such proofs, it is not necessary to seek the truth among others which it is easy to obtain from the Church;" By proofs here, Irenaeus is referring to the previous section in Book 3: Chapter III, paragraph 3, where he says, "In this order, and by this succession, the ecclesiastical tradition from the apostles, and the preaching of the truth, have come down to us. And this is most abundant proof that there is one and the same vivifying faith, which has been preserved in the Church from the apostles until now, and handed down in truth." And in the same Book 3: Chapter III, paragraph 4, he says, "There is also a very powerful Epistle of Polycarp written to the Philipppians, from which those who choose to do so, and are anxious about their salvation, can learn the character of his faith, and the preaching of the truth. Then, again, the Church in Ephesus, founded by Paul, and having John remaining among them permanently until the times of Trajan, is a true witness of the tradition of the apostles.”

Irenaeus continues as he asserts, “since the apostles, like a rich man [depositing his money] in a bank, lodged in her hands most copiously all things pertaining to the truth: so that every man, whosoever will, can draw from her the water of life.” The “water of life” is mentioned in Revelation 22 (KJV):17 And the Spirit and the bride say, Come. And let him that heareth say, Come. And let him that is athirst come. And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely.

It is also mentioned in Revelation 7 (KJV):16 They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more; neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat. 17 For the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters: and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes.

And it is also mentioned in Revelation 21 (KJV):6 And he said unto me, It is done. I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end. I will give unto him that is athirst of the fountain of the water of life freely.

And it is also mentioned in Revelation 22 (KJV):1 And he shewed me a pure river of water of life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb. 2 In the midst of the street of it, and on either side of the river, was there the tree of life, which bare twelve manner of fruits, and yielded her fruit every month: and the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations.

The water of life is never mentioned in the Scriptures as being in the hands of the Church. Irenaeus then places the entrance to life in the hands of the church, as he then asserts, “For she is the entrance to life; all others are thieves and robbers,” referring in part to John 10 (KJV):1 Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that entereth not by the door into the sheepfold, but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber.

And Irenaeus then reasons, “On this account are we bound to avoid them, but to make choice of the thing pertaining to the Church with the utmost diligence, and to lay hold of the tradition of the truth. For how stands the case? Suppose there arise a dispute relative to some important question among us, should we not have recourse to the most ancient Churches with which the apostles held constant intercourse, and learn from them what is certain and clear in regard to the present question? For how should it be if the apostles themselves had not left us writings? Would it not be necessary, [in that case,] to follow the course of the tradition which they handed down to those to whom they did commit the Churches?”

Irenaeus’ question regarding whether it would be necessary to rely on tradition which the apostles handed down if they had not left us writings is purely hypothetical. Yes, it would be necessary “to follow the course of tradition” which the apostles handed down to us if they “had not left us writings.” But the simple fact is that they have left us writings, and therefore the point is moot. From the simple fact that Irenaeus even asks such a question, we may infer that there was more ritual in the Church of his day than reality.

Commentary Summary Book 3: Chapter IV

Jesus tells us in the Gospel of John, chapter 10, that He is the door into the sheepfold. All who came before Him are thieves and robbers. For Irenaeus to apply this metaphor to the church is to obscure the original meaning of Jesus’ words. The Church didn’t die for the sheep, but Jesus did. The water of life Irenaeus mentions comes from Jesus, not the Church as we read in John 4 (KJV):7 There cometh a woman of Samaria to draw water: Jesus saith unto her, Give me to drink. 8 (For his disciples were gone away unto the city to buy meat.) 9 Then saith the woman of Samaria unto him, How is it that thou, being a Jew, askest drink of me, which am a woman of Samaria? for the Jews have no dealings with the Samaritans. 10 Jesus answered and said unto her, If thou knewest the gift of God, and who it is that saith to thee, Give me to drink; thou wouldest have asked of him, and he would have given thee living water. 11 The woman saith unto him, Sir, thou hast nothing to draw with, and the well is deep: from whence then hast thou that living water? 12 Art thou greater than our father Jacob, which gave us the well, and drank thereof himself, and his children, and his cattle? 13 Jesus answered and said unto her, Whosoever drinketh of this water shall thirst again: 14 But whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst; but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life.

Then again we read in John 7 (KJV):37 In the last day, that great day of the feast, Jesus stood and cried, saying, If any man thirst, let him come unto me, and drink. 38 He that believeth on me, as the scripture hath said, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water. 39 (But this spake he of the Spirit, which they that believe on him should receive: for the Holy Ghost was not yet given; because that Jesus was not yet glorified.)

The bishops of the church are merely under shepherds of the Good Shepherd, Jesus. Inasmuch as they follow Him, the sheep can follow them. But if they do not follow Jesus, the sheep are not under obligation to follow them. It is the shepherd who enters by the door that the sheep will follow as we see in John 10 (KJV):1 Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that entereth not by the door into the sheepfold, but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber. 2 But he that entereth in by the door is the shepherd of the sheep. 3 To him the porter openeth; and the sheep hear his voice: and he calleth his own sheep by name, and leadeth them out. 4 And when he putteth forth his own sheep, he goeth before them, and the sheep follow him: for they know his voice. 5 And a stranger will they not follow, but will flee from him: for they know not the voice of strangers.

Jesus explains what He means by the door in John 10 (KJV):6 This parable spake Jesus unto them: but they understood not what things they were which he spake unto them. 7 Then said Jesus unto them again, Verily, verily, I say unto you, I am the door of the sheep. 8 All that ever came before me are thieves and robbers: but the sheep did not hear them.

Irenaeus says, "For she," speaking of the Church, "is the entrance to life; all others are thieves and robbers." This is in direct opposition to what Jesus taught here in John 10:1-8. Irenaeus has introduced an entity, which he names the Church, to be another intermediary, an entrance, or a door as it were, to salvation. It is a door to the door, that is, Jesus, if you will.

Jesus continues as He says that the sheep must enter through Him in John 10 (KJV):9 I am the door: by me if any man enter in, he shall be saved, and shall go in and out, and find pasture. 10 The thief cometh not, but for to steal, and to kill, and to destroy: I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly. 11 I am the good shepherd: the good shepherd giveth his life for the sheep. 12 But he that is an hireling, and not the shepherd, whose own the sheep are not, seeth the wolf coming, and leaveth the sheep, and fleeth: and the wolf catcheth them, and scattereth the sheep. 13 The hireling fleeth, because he is an hireling, and careth not for the sheep. 14 I am the good shepherd, and know my sheep, and am known of mine. 15 As the Father knoweth me, even so know I the Father: and I lay down my life for the sheep. 16 And other sheep I have, which are not of this fold: them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice; and there shall be one fold, and one shepherd. 17 Therefore doth my Father love me, because I lay down my life, that I might take it again. 18 No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again. This commandment have I received of my Father.

Jesus says that He is the door and anyone who enters through Him will be saved and go in and out and find pasture. The pasture He is speaking of is the nourishment of His word, and fellowship with Him. Jesus is talking about relationship with Himself and with the Father. Jesus is the chief Shepherd. There is one flock and one shepherd who laid down His life for the sheep. Jesus says in verse 2 above that even the shepherds, that is, those who desire to be overseers of this one flock, must enter by the door. And all must know His voice in order to follow Him. Hearing and knowing His voice ourselves speaks of an intimate relationship with our Savior that all the sheep are to have, just the same as the shepherds, or overseers.

There is only one mediator between God and men, speaking of one door to relationship with the Father, as Paul reveals in 1 Timothy 2 (NASB):3 For this is good and acceptable in the sight of God our Saviour; 4 Who will have all men to be saved, and to come unto the knowledge of the truth. 5 For there is one God, and one mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus; 6 Who gave himself a ransom for all, to be testified in due time.

To place another door before this door is to make an artificial distance between my Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ. He is my Lord and my Savior because I believe in Him, and in His resurrection from the dead. I have entered by the door, and I am saved by Him alone, for no one else has given themselves as a ransom for me. No one else could.

Now, in 1 Timothy 3:15, Paul calls the church the household of God, the pillar and support of the truth as we read in 1 Timothy 3 (KJV):15 But if I tarry long, that thou mayest know how thou oughtest to behave thyself in the house of God, which is the church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth.

The church is not the truth itself, but the support of the truth. The church is the construct of God and, as such, it supports the truth. God is not dependent on the church, but the church is dependent on God. In other words, we are God's building or God's house, and not the other way around as we see in Hebrews 3 (KJV):1 Wherefore, holy brethren, partakers of the heavenly calling, consider the Apostle and High Priest of our profession, Christ Jesus; 2 Who was faithful to him that appointed him, as also Moses was faithful in all his house. 3 For this man was counted worthy of more glory than Moses, inasmuch as he who hath builded the house hath more honour than the house. 4 For every house is builded by some man; but he that built all things is God. 5 And Moses verily was faithful in all his house, as a servant, for a testimony of those things which were to be spoken after; 6 But Christ as a son over his own house; whose house are we, if we hold fast the confidence and the rejoicing of the hope firm unto the end.

Jesus said He is the way, the truth, and the life as we read in John 14 (KJV):6 Jesus saith unto him, I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me.

Jesus did not make room for any other intermediaries. He is not dependent on us. We are dependent on Him. And He wants relationship with us. He is also the chief cornerstone of the Church as Peter himself testifies in 1 Peter 2 (KJV):4 To whom coming, as unto a living stone, disallowed indeed of men, but chosen of God, and precious, 5 Ye also, as lively stones, are built up a spiritual house, an holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ. 6 Wherefore also it is contained in the scripture, Behold, I lay in Sion a chief corner stone, elect, precious: and he that believeth on him shall not be confounded. 7 Unto you therefore which believe he is precious: but unto them which be disobedient, the stone which the builders disallowed, the same is made the head of the corner, 8 And a stone of stumbling, and a rock of offence, even to them which stumble at the word, being disobedient: whereunto also they were appointed.

Jesus is the stone which the builders rejected, and not Peter, as Jesus Himself tells us in the parable of the landowner in Matthew 21 (KJV):33 Hear another parable: There was a certain householder, which planted a vineyard, and hedged it round about, and digged a winepress in it, and built a tower, and let it out to husbandmen, and went into a far country: 34 And when the time of the fruit drew near, he sent his servants to the husbandmen, that they might receive the fruits of it. 35 And the husbandmen took his servants, and beat one, and killed another, and stoned another. 36 Again, he sent other servants more than the first: and they did unto them likewise. 37 But last of all he sent unto them his son, saying, They will reverence my son. 38 But when the husbandmen saw the son, they said among themselves, This is the heir; come, let us kill him, and let us seize on his inheritance. 39 And they caught him, and cast him out of the vineyard, and slew him. 40 When the lord therefore of the vineyard cometh, what will he do unto those husbandmen? 41 They say unto him, He will miserably destroy those wicked men, and will let out his vineyard unto other husbandmen, which shall render him the fruits in their seasons. 42 Jesus saith unto them, Did ye never read in the scriptures, The stone which the builders rejected, the same is become the head of the corner: this is the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes? 43 Therefore say I unto you, The kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof. 44 And whosoever shall fall on this stone shall be broken: but on whomsoever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder. 45 And when the chief priests and Pharisees had heard his parables, they perceived that he spake of them. 46 But when they sought to lay hands on him, they feared the multitude, because they took him for a prophet.

And He is the foundation of the Church, and there is no other, upon which we all build as we read in 1 Corinthians 3 (KJV):9 For we are labourers together with God: ye are God's husbandry, ye are God's building. 10 According to the grace of God which is given unto me, as a wise masterbuilder, I have laid the foundation, and another buildeth thereon. But let every man take heed how he buildeth thereupon. 11 For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ.

And, Jesus said He would build His church on the statement of Peter that He was the Christ, the Son of the Living God as we read in Matthew 16 (KJV):13 When Jesus came into the coasts of Caesarea Philippi, he asked his disciples, saying, Whom do men say that I the Son of man am? 14 And they said, Some say that thou art John the Baptist: some, Elias; and others, Jeremias, or one of the prophets. 15 He saith unto them, But whom say ye that I am? 16 And Simon Peter answered and said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God. 17 And Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou, Simon Barjona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven. 18 And I say also unto thee, That thou art Peter, and upon this rock

I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. 19 And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven. 20 Then charged he his disciples that they should tell no man that he was Jesus the Christ.

There is a word play in Matthew 16:18 above in the Greek which the English translation does not bring out. Here is the verse in Greek.

ΚΑΤΑ ΜΑΤΘΑΙΟΝ 16:18 κἀγὼ δέ σοι λέγω ὅτι σὺ εἶ Πέτρος καὶ ἐπὶ ταύτῃ τῇ πέτρᾳ
According to Matthew 16:18 I also and to you say that you are Peter and on this bedrock

οἰκοδομήσω μου τὴν ἐκκλησίαν καὶ πύλαι ᾗδου οὐ κατισχύσουσιν αὐτῆς
I will build my church and the gates of Hades not shall prevail against it.

Literally, it says in verse 18, “And I also to you say that you are Peter (Πέτρος a stone) and upon this bedrock (πέτρα a bedrock) I will build my church and the gates of Hades shall not prevail against it.”

The word play here is with the name Peter, which is petros, and which means a stone, and with petra, which means bedrock, and which also is in a different declension than petros. This means that the two words are not in apposition, that is, they are not referring to each other syntactically. The word petra means a “mass of rock,” and is the same word translated “rock” in Matthew 7 (KJV):24 Therefore whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock: 25 And the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell not: for it was founded upon a rock.

When Jesus used a different word for rock, He pointed to Himself. Jesus was saying to the effect that, upon this rock of your testimony, Peter, that is, that I am the Son of God, I will build My Church. Now to say, as Vincent does in his Word Studies of the New Testament, Volume 1, page 91, that “the reference of petra to Christ is forced and unnatural,” is, I believe, to take Jesus’ words out of context with the rest of the New Testament, and indeed with the rest of Scripture. Vincent also says of this verse that “The obvious reference is to Peter.” I believe it is true that Peter could have thought that Jesus’ words had some reference to him at the time that Jesus spoke this to him. However, he seems to have corrected himself later on for he says, as quoted previously, that we “as living stones, are being built up as a spiritual house” in 1 Peter 2:5. Peter then points to Jesus as the chief cornerstone in 1 Peter 2:6-8. Jesus pointed this out as well in Matthew 21:42 as quoted above where Jesus calls Himself the chief cornerstone. And, the weight of the Old Testament Scriptures agree that the Lord is the preeminent rock. There is no other as we read in Deuteronomy 32 (KJV):3 Because I will publish the name of the LORD: ascribe ye greatness unto our God. 4 He is the Rock, his work is perfect: for all his ways are judgment: a God of truth and without iniquity, just and right is he.

As well we read in 1 Samuel 2 (KJV):2 There is none holy as the LORD: for there is none beside thee: neither is there any rock like our God.

And David says in 2 Samuel 22 (KJV):1 And David spake unto the LORD the words of this song in the day that the LORD had delivered him out of the hand of all his enemies, and out of the hand of Saul: 2 And he said, The LORD is my rock, and my fortress, and my deliverer; 3 The God of my rock; in him will I trust: he is my shield, and the horn of my salvation, my high tower, and my refuge, my saviour; thou savest me from violence. 4 I will call on the LORD, who is worthy to be praised: so shall I be saved from mine enemies.

And in 2 Samuel 22 (KJV):32 For who is God, save the LORD? and who is a rock, save our God?

He is the one we praise as in 2 Samuel 22 (KJV):47 The LORD liveth; and blessed be my rock; and exalted be the God of the rock of my salvation.

And in Psalms 18 (KJV):2 The LORD is my rock, and my fortress, and my deliverer; my God, my strength, in whom I will trust; my buckler, and the horn of my salvation, and my high tower.

And in Psalms 28 (NASB):1 A Psalm of David. To You, O LORD, I call; My rock, do not be deaf to me, For if You are silent to me, I will become like those who go down to the pit.

And in Psalm 62 (KJV):2 He only is my rock and my salvation; he is my defence; I shall not be greatly moved.

And that the rock was God in the Old Testament is attested to by Paul in 1 Corinthians 10 (NASB):1 Moreover, brethren, I would not that ye should be ignorant, how that all our fathers were under the cloud, and all passed through the sea; 2 And were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea; 3 And did all eat the same spiritual meat; 4 And did all drink the same spiritual drink: for they drank of that spiritual Rock that followed them: and that Rock was Christ. 5 But with many of them God was not well pleased: for they were overthrown in the wilderness.

The Expository Dictionary of New Testament Words, W.E. Vine, Vol. III, page 302, says that petra “denotes a mass of rock, as distinct from petros, a detached stone or boulder, or a stone that might be thrown or easily moved.”

It is this rock that we put our trust in as we read in Psalm 89 (KJV):26 He shall cry unto me, Thou art my father, my God, and the rock of my salvation.

And in Isaiah 26 (KJV):4 Trust ye in the LORD for ever: for in the LORD JEHOVAH is everlasting strength:

And in Psalm 28 (KJV):7 The LORD is my strength and my shield; my heart trusted in him, and I am helped: therefore my heart greatly rejoiceth; and with my song will I praise him.

We must preserve the context of the words of Scripture when we interpret Scripture. Our faith is not in tradition, but in the real person of Jesus Christ who is in heaven with the Father. We are blessed if we trust in Him as the Lord says in Jeremiah 17 (KJV):5 Thus saith the LORD; Cursed be the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm, and whose heart departeth from the LORD. 6 For he shall be like the heath in the desert, and shall not see when good cometh; but shall inhabit the parched places in the wilderness, in a salt land and not inhabited. 7 Blessed is the man that trusteth in the LORD, and whose hope the LORD is. 8 For he shall be as a tree planted by the waters, and that spreadeth out her roots by the river, and shall not see when heat cometh, but her leaf shall be green; and shall not be careful in the year of drought, neither shall cease from yielding fruit.

Book 4: Chapter XXVI.—The treasure hid in the Scriptures is Christ; the true exposition of the Scriptures is to be found in the Church alone.

2. Wherefore it is incumbent to obey the presbyters who are in the Church,—those who, as I have shown, possess the succession from the apostles; those who, together with the succession of the episcopate, have received the certain gift of truth, according to the good pleasure of the Father. But [it is also incumbent] to hold in suspicion others who depart from the primitive succession, and assemble themselves together in any place whatsoever, [looking upon them] either as heretics of perverse minds, or as schismatics puffed up and self-pleasing, or again as hypocrites, acting thus for the sake of lucre and vainglory. For all these have fallen from the truth. And the heretics, indeed, who bring strange fire to the altar of God—namely, strange doctrines—shall be burned up by the fire from heaven, as were Nadab and Abiud. 4159 Lev. x. 1, 2. But such as rise up in opposition to the truth, and exhort others against the Church of God, [shall] remain among those in hell (apud inferos), being swallowed up by an earthquake, even as those who were with Chore, Dathan, and Abiron.

4160 Num. xvi. 33. But those who cleave asunder, and separate the unity of the Church, [shall] receive from God the same punishment as Jeroboam did. 4161 1 Kings xiv. 10.

3. Those, however, who are believed to be presbyters by many, but serve their own lusts, and do not place the fear of God supreme in their hearts, but conduct themselves with contempt towards others, and are puffed up with the pride of holding the chief seat, and work evil deeds in secret, saying, “No man sees us,” shall be convicted by the Word, who does not judge after outward appearance (secundum gloriam), nor looks upon the countenance, but the heart; and they shall hear those words, to be found in Daniel the prophet: “O thou seed of Canaan, and not of Judah, beauty hath deceived thee, and lust perverted thy heart. 4162 Susanna 56. Thou that art waxen old in wicked days, now thy sins which thou hast committed aforetime are come to light; for thou hast pronounced false judgments, and hast been accustomed to condemn the innocent, and to let the guilty go free, albeit the Lord saith, The innocent and the righteous shalt thou not slay.” 4163 Ibid. ver. 52, etc.; Ex. xxiii. 7. Of whom also did the Lord say: “But if the evil servant shall say in his heart, My lord delayeth his coming, and shall begin to smite the man-servants and maidens, and to eat and drink and be drunken; the lord of that servant shall come in a day that he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not aware of, and shall cut him asunder, and appoint him his portion with the unbelievers.” 4164 Matt. xxiv. 48, etc.; Luke xii. 45.

4. From all such persons, therefore, it behooves us to keep aloof, but to adhere to those who, as I have already observed, do hold the doctrine of the apostles, and who, together with the order of priesthood (presbyterii ordine), display sound speech and blameless conduct for the confirmation and correction of others. 4165 [Contrast this spirit of a primitive Father, with the state of things which Wiclif rose up to purify, five hundred years ago.] In this way, Moses, to whom such a leadership was entrusted, relying on a good conscience, cleared himself before God, saying, “I have not in covetousness taken anything belonging to one of these men, nor have I done evil to one of them.” 4166 Num. xvi. 15. In this way, too, Samuel, who judged the people so many years, and bore rule over Israel without any pride, in the end cleared himself, saying, “I have walked before you from my childhood even unto this day: answer me in the sight of God, and before His anointed (Christi ejus); whose ox or whose ass of yours have I taken, or over whom have I tyrannized, or whom have I oppressed? or if I have received from the hand of any a bribe or [so much as] a shoe, speak out against me, and I will restore it to you.” 4167 1 Sam. xii. 3. And when the people had said to him, “Thou hast not tyrannized, neither hast thou oppressed us neither hast thou taken ought of any man’s hand,” he called the Lord to witness, saying, “The Lord is witness, and His Anointed is witness this day, that ye have not found ought in my hand. And they said to him, He is witness.” In this strain also the Apostle Paul, inasmuch as he had a good conscience, said to the Corinthians: “For we are not as many, who corrupt the Word of God: but as of sincerity, but as of God, in the sight of God speak we in Christ;” 4168 2 Cor. ii. 17. “We have injured no man, corrupted no man, circumvented no man.” 4169 2 Cor. vii. 2.

5. Such presbyters does the Church nourish, of whom also the prophet says: “I will give thy rulers in peace, and thy bishops in righteousness.” 4170 Isa. lx. 17. Of whom also did the Lord declare, “Who then shall be a faithful steward (actor), good and wise, whom the Lord sets over His household, to give them their meat in due season? Blessed is that servant whom his Lord, when He cometh, shall find so doing.” 4171 Matt. xxiv. 45, 46. Paul then, teaching us where one may find such, says, “God hath placed in the Church, first, apostles; secondly, prophets; thirdly, teachers.” 4172 1 Cor. xii. 28. Where, therefore, the gifts of the Lord have been placed, there it behooves us to learn the truth, [namely,] from those who possess that succession of the Church which is from the apostles, 4173 [Note the limitation; not the succession only, but with it (1) pure morality and holiness and (2) unadulterated testimony. No catholicity apart from these.] and among whom exists that which is sound and blameless in conduct, as well as that which is unadulterated and incorrupt in speech. For these also preserve this faith of ours in one God who created all things; and they increase that love [which we have] for the Son of God, who accomplished such marvellous dispensations for our sake: and they expound the Scriptures to us without danger, neither blaspheming God, nor dishonouring the patriarchs, nor despising the prophets.

Summary: Note that I have discussed Book 4: Chapter XXVI, paragraph 1, in Chapter 5: His Reliance on the Scriptures, in this volume. We start here then in paragraph two.

In paragraph two, Irenaeus exhorts, “Wherefore it is incumbent to obey the presbyters who are in the Church,—those who, as I have shown, possess the succession from the apostles; those who, together with the succession of the episcopate, have received the certain gift of truth, according to the good pleasure of the Father.” Continuing, Irenaeus then asserts, “But [it is also incumbent] to hold in suspicion others who depart from the primitive succession, and assemble themselves together in any place whatsoever, [looking upon them] either as heretics of perverse minds, or as schismatics puffed up and self-pleasing, or again as hypocrites, acting thus for the sake of lucre and vainglory. For all these have fallen from the truth. And the heretics, indeed, who bring strange fire to the altar of God— namely, strange doctrines—shall be burned up by the fire from heaven, as were Nadab and Abiud,” referring to Leviticus 10:1,2. Irenaeus then judges, “But such as rise up in opposition to the truth, and exhort others against the Church of God, [shall] remain among those in hell (apud inferos), being swallowed up by an earthquake, even as those who were with Chore, Dathan, and Abiron,” referring to Numbers 16:24,33. Irenaeus concludes, “But those who cleave asunder, and separate the unity of the Church, [shall] receive from God the same punishment as Jeroboam did,” referring to 1 Kings 14:7-14.

In paragraph three, Irenaeus warns, “Those, however, who are believed to be presbyters by many, but serve their own lusts, and, do not place the fear of God supreme in their hearts, but conduct themselves with contempt towards others, and are puffed up with the pride of holding the chief seat, and work evil deeds in secret, saying, “No man sees us,” shall be convicted by the Word, who does not judge after outward appearance (secundum gloriam), nor looks upon the countenance, but the heart,” referring to 1 Samuel 16:7. Irenaeus continues as he warns, “and they shall hear those words, to be found in Daniel the prophet: “O thou seed of Canaan, and not of Judah, beauty hath deceived thee, and lust perverted thy heart,” referring to the apocryphal book, Susanna 56. Irenaeus continues his warning as he says, “Thou that art waxen old in wicked days, now thy sins which thou hast committed aforetime are come to light; for thou hast pronounced false judgments, and hast been accustomed to condemn the innocent, and to let the guilty go free, albeit the Lord saith, The innocent and the righteous shalt thou not slay,” referring to the apocryphal book, Susanna 52, and Exodus 23:6-7. Irenaeus concludes his warning as he says, “Of whom also did the Lord say: “But if the evil servant shall say in his heart, My lord delayeth his coming, and shall begin to smite the man-servants and maidens, and to eat and drink and be drunken; the lord of that servant shall come in a day that he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not aware of, and shall cut him asunder, and appoint him his portion with the unbelievers,” referring to Matthew 24:48-51, and Luke 12:45-46.

In paragraph four, Irenaeus continues as he again warns, “From all such persons, therefore, it behooves us to keep aloof, but to adhere to those who, as I have already observed, do hold the doctrine of the apostles, and who, together with the order of priesthood (presbyterii ordine), display sound speech and blameless conduct for the confirmation and correction of others.” Irenaeus then affirms, “In this way, Moses, to whom such a leadership was entrusted, relying on a good conscience, cleared himself before God, saying, “I have not in covetousness taken anything belonging to one of these men, nor have I done evil to one of them,” referring to Numbers 16:15. Irenaeus adds as he again affirms, “In this way, too, Samuel, who judged the people so many years, and bore rule over Israel without any pride, in the end cleared himself, saying, “I have walked before you from my childhood even unto this day: answer me in the sight of God, and before His anointed (Christi ejus); whose ox or whose ass of yours have I taken, or over whom have I tyrannized, or whom have I oppressed? or if I have received from the hand of any a bribe or [so much as] a shoe, speak out against me, and I will restore it to you,” referring to 1 Samuel 12:3. Irenaeus then continues again to affirm, “And when the people had said to him, “Thou hast not tyrannized, neither hast thou oppressed us neither hast thou taken ought of any man’s hand,” he called the Lord to witness, saying, “The Lord is witness, and His Anointed is witness this day, that ye have not found ought in my hand. And they said to him, He is witness,” referring to 1 Samuel 12:4-5. Irenaeus then testifies, “In this strain also the Apostle Paul, inasmuch as he had a good conscience, said to the Corinthians: “For we are not as many, who corrupt the Word of God: but as of sincerity, but as of God, in the sight of God speak we in Christ,” referring to 2 Corinthians 2:17. And Irenaeus concludes as he testifies, “We have injured no man, corrupted no man, circumvented no man,” referring to 2 Corinthians 7:2.

In paragraph five, Irenaeus affirms, “Such presbyters does the Church nourish, of whom also the prophet says: “I will give thy rulers in peace, and thy bishops in righteousness,” referring to Isaiah 60:17. Irenaeus continues as he testifies, “Of whom also did the Lord declare, “Who then shall be a faithful steward (actor), good and wise, whom the Lord sets over His household, to give them their meat in due season? Blessed is that servant whom his Lord, when He cometh, shall find so doing,” referring to Matthew 24:45-46. Again Irenaeus testifies, “Paul then, teaching us where one may find such, says, “God hath placed in the Church, first, apostles; secondly, prophets; thirdly, teachers,” referring to 1 Corinthians 12:28. Irenaeus then adds, “Where, therefore, the gifts of the Lord have been placed, there it behooves us to learn the truth, [namely,] from those who possess that succession of the Church which is from the apostles, and among whom exists that which is sound and blameless in conduct, as well as that which is unadulterated and incorrupt in speech. For these also preserve this faith of ours in one God who created all things; and they increase that love [which we have] for the Son of God, who accomplished such marvellous dispensations for our sake: and they expound the Scriptures to us without danger, neither blaspheming God, nor dishonouring the patriarchs, nor despising the prophets.”

Commentary: In paragraph two, Irenaeus exhorts, “Wherefore it is incumbent to obey the presbyters who are in the Church,—those who, as I have shown, possess the succession from the apostles; those who, together with the succession of the episcopate, have received the certain gift of truth, according to the good pleasure of the Father. The “succession of the episcopate” refers to the succession of the bishops. It is the presbyters together with the bishops who “possess the succession from the apostles.” Irenaeus is saying that both have “together” received “the certain gift of truth.” This gift of truth was handed down to them because they “possess the succession from the apostles.”

To understand Irenaeus thinking in regards to the “gift of truth” which he believed the apostles have handed down through the succession of the episcopate, we note that in Book 3: Chapter V, paragraph one, he wrote, “The apostles, likewise, being disciples of the truth, are above all falsehood; for a lie has no fellowship with the truth, just as darkness has none with light, but the presence of the one shuts out that of the other.” So the mere presence of the truth in the apostles closed the door to falsehood according to Irenaeus. However, the Scriptures, and the apostles for that matter, do not teach that we are without sin in this life. The reason we die is because our bodies are mortal. The reason our bodies are mortal is because they have a sin nature which we inherited from Adam. The apostles had a sin nature, as did the presbyters whom they appointed. Our trust is in God who anointed the apostles, and gave us the Scriptures even through their imperfection. But this is why we cannot trust in tradition. The apostles still had a sin nature, and were not perfect. Our faith is in God, and in His word, given to us through imperfect vessels.

Continuing, Irenaeus asserts, “But [it is also incumbent] to hold in suspicion others who depart from the primitive succession, and assemble themselves together in any place whatsoever, [looking upon them] either as heretics of perverse minds, or as schismatics puffed up and self-pleasing, or again as hypocrites, acting thus for the sake of lucre and vainglory.” This suspicion that Irenaeus advocates, we note, is solely based on the fact that they had departed from the primitive succession, that is, from the “succession from the apostles,” and were apparently meeting therefore in an unauthorized assembly “in any place whatsoever.” However, even in the Old Testament, there was no prohibition on where you could meet to worship. After the temple was built, there was a prohibition on where you could offer sacrifice. And yet, Irenaeus continues as he says, “For all these have fallen from the truth. And the heretics, indeed, who bring strange fire to the altar of God— namely, strange doctrines—shall be burned up by the fire from heaven, as were Nadab and Abiud,” referring to Leviticus 10 (KJV):1 And Nadab and Abihu, the sons of Aaron, took either of them his censer, and put fire therein, and put incense thereon, and offered strange fire before the LORD, which he commanded them not. 2 And there went out fire from the LORD, and devoured them, and they died before the LORD.

But this judgment was under the law and the Old Covenant. Under the New Covenant, there is no authorized place of worship such as a temple or house of God. And yet, Irenaeus continues as he judges, “But such as rise up in opposition to the truth, and exhort others against the Church of God, [shall] remain among those in hell (apud inferos), being swallowed up by an earthquake, even as those who were with Chore, Dathan, and Abiron,” referring to Numbers 16 (KJV):24 Speak unto the congregation, saying, Get you up from about the tabernacle of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram.

And to Numbers 16 (KJV):33 They, and all that appertained to them, went down alive into the pit, and the earth closed upon them: and they perished from among the congregation.

And Irenaeus adds further that “those who cleave asunder, and separate the unity of the Church, [shall] receive from God the same punishment as Jeroboam did,” referring to 1 Kings 14 (KJV):10 Therefore, behold, I will bring evil upon the house of Jeroboam, and will cut off from Jeroboam him that pisseth against the wall, and him that is shut up and left in Israel, and will take away the remnant of the house of Jeroboam, as a man taketh away dung, till it be all gone.

Jeroboam was anointed to be king over the ten tribes when they split off from Judah and Benjamin in 930 B.C. after Solomon died. The Lord had told Ahijah the prophet to speak to Jeroboam as in we read in 1 Kings 14 (KJV):7 Go, tell Jeroboam, Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, Forasmuch as I exalted thee from among the people, and made thee prince over my people Israel, 8 And rent the kingdom away from the house of David, and gave it thee: and yet thou hast not been as my servant David, who kept my commandments, and who followed me with all his heart, to do that only which was right in mine eyes; 9 But hast done evil above all that were before thee: for thou hast gone and made thee other gods, and molten images, to provoke me to anger, and hast cast me behind thy back:

The judgments on Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, and Jeroboam were under the law and the Old Covenant. These were just judgments for God is just. However, for Irenaeus to mention these in support of his teaching of the succession of the episcopate is to invest the Church with an authority that goes beyond the Scriptures. There is such a thing as Church discipline. And God will punish evil doers. But we ourselves are not to rain down curses or judgment on those who do evil. Paul says as much in 1 Corinthians 4 (KJV):5 Therefore judge nothing before the time, until the Lord come, who both will bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and will make manifest the counsels of the hearts: and then shall every man have praise of God.

God did not send Jesus to judge the world but to save it as we read in John 3 (KJV):17 For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be saved.

In paragraph three, Irenaeus warns, “Those, however, who are believed to be presbyters by many, but serve their own lusts, and, do not place the fear of God supreme in their hearts, but conduct themselves with contempt towards others, and are puffed up with the pride of holding the chief seat, and work evil deeds in secret, saying, “No man sees us,” shall be convicted by the Word, who does not judge after outward appearance (secundum gloriam), nor looks upon the countenance, but the heart;” referring to 1 Samuel 16 (KJV):7 But the LORD said unto Samuel, Look not on his countenance, or on the height of his stature; because I have refused him: for the LORD seeth not as man seeth; for man looketh on the outward appearance, but the LORD looketh on the heart.

Irenaeus continues as he warns, “and they shall hear those words, to be found in Daniel the prophet: “O thou seed of Canaan, and not of Judah, beauty hath deceived thee, and lust perverted thy heart,” referring to the apocryphal book, Susanna 56. Irenaeus continues his warning as he says, “Thou that art waxen old in wicked days, now thy sins which thou hast committed aforetime are come to light; for thou hast pronounced false judgments, and hast been accustomed to condemn the innocent, and to let the guilty go free, albeit the Lord saith, The innocent and the righteous shalt thou not slay,” referring again to the apocryphal book, Susanna 52, and Exodus 23:6-7. Irenaeus here quotes from the Apocryphal book, Susannah, as if it were “words, to be found in Daniel the prophet.” So we should understand that Irenaeus is not giving the Apocryphal book, Susannah, approval as Scripture. Rather, he mistook the reference to be from Daniel the prophet.

Irenaeus also quotes here from Exodus when he says, “the Lord saith, The innocent and the righteous shalt thou not slay,” referring to Exodus 23 (KJV):6 Thou shalt not wrest the judgment of thy poor in his cause. 7 Keep thee far from a false matter; and the innocent and righteous slay thou not: for I will not justify the wicked.

Irenaeus concludes his warning as he says, “Of whom also did the Lord say: “But if the evil servant shall say in his heart, My lord delayeth his coming, and shall begin to smite the man-servants and maidens, and to eat and drink and be drunken; the lord of that servant shall come in a day that he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not aware of, and shall cut him asunder, and appoint him his portion with the unbelievers,” referring to Matthew 24 (KJV):48 But and if that evil servant shall say in his heart, My lord delayeth his coming; 49 And shall begin to smite his fellowservants, and to eat and drink with the drunken; 50 The lord of that servant shall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not aware of, 51 And shall cut him asunder, and appoint him his portion with the hypocrites: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.

Irenaeus is touching on Church discipline here. Israel was organized as a nation and received laws from the Lord for the punishment of evil doers. The Church is not organized as a nation, but is the body of Christ. Israel was given land, and had to fight to possess that land. The Church has not been given land, and is not to fight to possess any land. The Church is a spiritual body, and our inheritance is spiritual, not physical.

In paragraph four, Irenaeus continues as he again warns, “From all such persons, therefore, it behooves us to keep aloof, but to adhere to those who, as I have already observed, do hold the doctrine of the apostles, and who, together with the order of priesthood (presbyterii ordine), display sound speech and blameless conduct for the confirmation and correction of others.” We will deal with the “order of priesthood” in Chapter 23: The Priesthood. And certainly it is wise to keep aloof from those who teach false doctrine. If an elder teaches false doctrine, we are to hold him accountable as we read in 1 Timothy 5 (KJV):19 Against an elder receive not an accusation, but before two or three witnesses. 20 Them that sin rebuke before all, that others also may fear.

And Paul further advises us as in 1 Corinthians 5 (KJV):9 I wrote unto you in an epistle not to company with fornicators: 10 Yet not altogether with the fornicators of this world, or with the covetous, or extortioners, or with idolaters; for then must ye needs go out of the world. 11 But now I have written unto you not to keep company, if any man that is called a brother be a fornicator, or covetous, or an idolator, or a railer, or a drunkard, or an extortioner; with such an one no not to eat. 12 For what have I to do to judge them also that are without? do not ye judge them that are within? 13 But them that are without God judgeth. Therefore put away from among yourselves that wicked person.

Irenaeus then affirms, “In this way, Moses, to whom such a leadership was entrusted, relying on a good conscience, cleared himself before God, saying, “I have not in covetousness taken anything belonging to one of these men, nor have I done evil to one of them,” referring to Numbers 16 (KJV):15 And Moses was very wroth, and said unto the LORD, Respect not thou their offering: I have not taken one ass from them, neither have I hurt one of them.

Here Irenaeus points out that Moses is a good example to us of a good leader who did not fleece the flock as it were. Irenaeus then adds as he again affirms, “In this way, too, Samuel, who judged the people so many years, and bore rule over Israel without any pride, in the end cleared himself, saying, “I have walked before you from my childhood even unto this day: answer me in the sight of God, and before His anointed (Christi ejus); whose ox or whose ass of yours have I taken, or over whom have I tyrannized, or whom have I oppressed? or if I have received from the hand of any a bribe or [so much as] a shoe, speak out against me, and I will restore it to you,” referring to 1 Samuel 12 (KJV):3 Behold, here I am: witness against me before the LORD, and before his anointed: whose ox have I taken? or whose ass have I taken? or whom have I defrauded? whom have I oppressed? or of whose hand have I received any bribe to blind mine eyes therewith? and I will restore it you.

Irenaeus then continues again to affirm, “And when the people had said to him, “Thou hast not tyrannized, neither hast thou oppressed us neither hast thou taken ought of any man’s hand,” he called the Lord to witness, saying, “The Lord is witness, and His Anointed is witness this day, that ye have not found ought in my hand. And they said to him, He is witness,” referring to 1 Samuel 12 (KJV):4 And they said, Thou hast not defrauded us, nor oppressed us, neither hast thou taken ought of any man's hand. 5 And he said unto them, The LORD is witness against you, and his anointed is witness this day, that ye have not found ought in my hand. And they answered, He is witness.

Note how clearly and correctly Irenaeus quotes from the Old Testament. Irenaeus then testifies, “In this strain also the Apostle Paul, inasmuch as he had a good conscience, said to the Corinthians: “For we are not as many, who corrupt the Word of God: but as of sincerity, but as of God, in the sight of God speak we in Christ,” referring to 2 Corinthians 2 (KJV):17 For we are not as many, which corrupt the word of God: but as of sincerity, but as of God, in the sight of God speak we in Christ.

And Irenaeus concludes as he testifies, “We have injured no man, corrupted no man, circumvented no man,” referring to 2 Corinthians 7 (KJV):2 Receive us; we have wronged no man, we have corrupted no man, we have defrauded no man.

In paragraph five, Irenaeus affirms, “Such presbyters does the Church nourish, of whom also the prophet says: “I will give thy rulers in peace, and thy bishops in righteousness,” referring to Isaiah 60 (KJV):17 For brass I will bring gold, and for iron I will bring silver, and for wood brass, and for stones iron: I will also make thy officers peace, and thine exactors righteousness.

The Septuagint has a similar reading as we read in Esaias 60 (Septuagint):17 And for brass I will bring thee gold, and for iron I will bring thee silver, and instead of wood I will bring thee brass, and instead of stones, iron; and I will make thy princes peaceable, and thine overseers righteous.

The last part of verse 17 reads in the Greek Septuagint as follows:

καὶ δώσω τοὺς ἄρχοντας σου ἐν εἰρήνῃ καὶ τοὺς ἐπισκόπους σου ἐν δικαιοσύνῃ and I will give the rulers of you in peace and the overseers (bishops) of you in righteousness

This verse was prophesied by Isaiah in the context of Israel's future regathering and blessing as Isaiah states in Isaiah 60 (KJV):1 Arise, shine; for thy light is come, and the glory of the LORD is risen upon thee. 2 For, behold, the darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the people: but the LORD shall arise upon thee, and his glory shall be seen upon thee. 3 And the Gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising. 4 Lift up thine eyes round about, and see: all they gather themselves together, they come to thee: thy sons shall come from far, and thy daughters shall be nursed at thy side.

And in Isaiah 60 (KJV):10 And the sons of strangers shall build up thy walls, and their kings shall minister unto thee: for in my wrath I smote thee, but in my favour have I had mercy on thee. 11 Therefore thy gates shall be open continually; they shall not be shut day nor night; that men may bring unto thee the forces of the Gentiles, and that their kings may be brought. 12 For the nation and kingdom that will not serve thee shall perish; yea, those nations shall be utterly wasted.

This prophecy in Isaiah is relating to Israel, and not to the Church.

Irenaeus then continues as he testifies, "Of whom also did the Lord declare, "Who then shall be a faithful steward (actor), good and wise, whom the Lord sets over His household, to give them their meat in due season? Blessed is that servant whom his Lord, when He cometh, shall find so doing," referring to Matthew 24 (KJV):45 Who then is a faithful and wise servant, whom his lord hath made ruler over his household, to give them meat in due season?

It is helpful to look at the verse right before this one to put it in context as we read in Matthew 24 (KJV):44 Therefore be ye also ready: for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh.

Jesus is speaking of His return in the last days. In Mark, He says that this is not just for overseers but for all as we read in Mark 13 (KJV):33 Take ye heed, watch and pray: for ye know not when the time is. 34 For the Son of Man is as a man taking a far journey, who left his house, and gave authority to his servants, and to every man his work, and commanded the porter to watch. 35 Watch ye therefore: for ye know not when the master of the house cometh, at even, or at midnight, or at the cockcrowing, or in the morning: 36 Lest coming suddenly he find you sleeping. 37 And what I say unto you I say unto all, Watch.

Again Irenaeus testifies, "Paul then, teaching us where one may find such, says, "God hath placed in the Church, first, apostles; secondly, prophets; thirdly, teachers," referring in context to 1 Corinthians 12 (KJV):28 And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues.

Irenaeus is saying that we may find faithful, good, and wise stewards in the Church for that is where God has placed them. Irenaeus then adds, "Where, therefore, the gifts of the Lord have been placed, there it behooves us to learn the truth, [namely,] from those who possess that succession of the Church which is from the apostles, and among whom exists that which is sound and blameless in conduct, as well as that which is unadulterated and incorrupt in speech. For these also preserve this faith of ours in one God who created all things; and they increase that love [which we have] for the Son of God, who accomplished such marvellous dispensations for our sake: and they expound the Scriptures to us without danger, neither blaspheming God, nor dishonouring the patriarchs, nor despising the prophets."

It is interesting that Irenaeus should use the word "gifts" as he says, "Where, therefore, the gifts of the Lord have been placed." The gifts of the Spirit are spoken of in 1 Corinthians 12:1-11. These gifts are supernatural enablements of the Spirit of God given to the members as we read in 1 Corinthians 12 (KJV):11 But all these worketh that one and the selfsame Spirit, dividing to every man severally as he will.

The Holy Spirit distributes to each one individually just as He wills. The gifts that the Holy Spirit gives are at His discretion, and He gives to each one. That is, He gives to each member of the body of Christ a gift or gifts. These gifts of the Spirit are spiritual gifts that enable the believer to think and act supernaturally. But Irenaeus is using the word “gifts” in a different sense here. He is saying that the apostles, prophets, and teachers are the gifts that the Lord has placed in the Church. This type of gift relates not to a spiritual gift, but to a place in the body of Christ that has a specific function. In other words, some function as apostles, some as prophets, some as teachers, and so on.

To be an apostle, a prophet, a teacher, or pastor is a gift given by God. It is a gift that relates to a specific function in the body of Christ. All members of the body of Christ have such a gift, though all do not have the same gift as we read in 1 Corinthians 12 (KJV):29 Are all apostles? are all prophets? are all teachers? are all workers of miracles? 30 Have all the gifts of healing? do all speak with tongues? do all interpret? 31 But covet earnestly the best gifts: and yet shew I unto you a more excellent way.

This sense of the word, “gift”, is also mentioned in Ephesians 4 (KJV):7 But unto every one of us is given grace according to the measure of the gift of Christ. 8 Wherefore he saith, When he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men. 9 (Now that he ascended, what is it but that he also descended first into the lower parts of the earth? 10 He that descended is the same also that ascended up far above all heavens, that he might fill all things.) 11 And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; 12 For the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ: 13 Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ:

Notice in verse 7 that grace is given to each one according to the measure of Christ’s gift. Then in verse 8, He gave gifts to men. Then in verse 11, he says that He gave some as apostles, some as prophets, and some as evangelists, and some as pastors and teachers. This, he says in verse 12, was for the equipping of the saints for the work of service, or ministry, to the building up of the body of Christ. And these gifts are given until we all attain to the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, to a mature man, to the measure of the stature which belongs to the fullness of Christ, he says in verse 13. Because these are gifts from God, they are not transferrable.

As we continue reading in Ephesians, Paul says that, since God gives grace to each one, we must each do our part to build up each other in love in Ephesians 4 (KJV):14 That we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive; 15 But speaking the truth in love, may grow up into him in all things, which is the head, even Christ: 16 From whom the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love.

And as we read on in 1 Corinthians, we see that the body of Christ is not one member but many in 1 Corinthians 12 (KJV):12 For as the body is one, and hath many members, and all the members of that one body, being many, are one body: so also is Christ. 13 For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free; and have been all made to drink into one Spirit. 14 For the body is not one member, but many.

As we continue to read in 1 Corinthians, we see that not all the members have the same function in 1 Corinthians 12 (KJV):15 If the foot shall say, Because I am not the hand, I am not of the body; is it therefore not of the body? 16 And if the ear shall say, Because I am not the eye, I am not of the body; is it therefore not of the body? 17 If the whole body were an eye, where were the hearing? If the whole were hearing, where were the smelling? 18 But now hath God set the members every one of them in the body, as it hath pleased him.

So it is God who has set the members in the body as it pleased Him, and who also has given gifts relating to a specific function in the body of Christ. Some are hands, some feet, some eyes, some ears, but each part is valuable and necessary. Without it, where would the body be, as Paul says.

Again, we continue as we read that God has so composed the body that there should be no division in it, for there is no member in it that can say, I have no need of you, as we read in 1 Corinthians 12 (KJV):19 And if they were all one member, where were the body? 20 But now are they many members, yet but one body. 21 And the eye cannot say unto the hand, I have no need of thee: nor again the head to the feet, I have no need of you. 22 Nay, much more those members of the body, which seem to be more feeble, are necessary: 23 And those members of the body, which we think to be less honourable, upon these we bestow more abundant honour; and our uncomely parts have more abundant comeliness. 24 For our comely parts have no need: but God hath tempered the body together, having given more abundant honour to that part which lacked. 25 That there should be no schism in the body; but that the members should have the same care one for another. 26 And whether one member suffer, all the members suffer with it; or one member be honoured, all the members rejoice with it. 27 Now ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular.

Paul was teaching the Corinthians that it is not about who your bishop is, whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas. It is about who your Head is. If your Head is Christ, then you are a part of His body. You have a definite place in His body ordained by God. There is a definite order in His body as we continue to read in 1 Corinthians 12 (KJV): 28 And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues.

This verse reads in The Interlinear Greek-English New Testament by Reverend Dr. Alfred Marshall as follows:

καὶ οὓς μὲν ἔθετο ὁ θεὸς ἐν τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ πρῶτον ἀποστόλους δεύτερον προφήτας τρίτον διδασκάλους and some placed God in the church first apostles second prophets thirdly teachers ἔπειτα δυνάμεις ἔπειτα χαρίσματα ἰαμάτων ἀντιλήμψεις κυβερνήσεις γένη γλωσσῶν then powers then gifts of healing helps governings kinds of tongues

The word “placed” in the Greek is ἔθετο (pronounced etheto) which is the third person, singular, aorist 2, indicative, middle form of τίθημι (pronounced tithēmi). This word means to put or to place. It also means “to set, with design, in a certain arrangement or position,” according to The Analytical Greek Lexicon Revised 1978 Edition by Moulton, page 404. The gifts of apostle, prophet, evangelist, and pastor and teacher are not appointed by the Church, or attained by seminary degree, or any degree. As we look further in the Scriptures, we see that God has placed each member in the body of Christ as He wished as in 1 Corinthians 12 (NASB): 18 But now God has placed the members, each one of them, in the body, just as He desired.

The word “each” means that He has placed all the members in the body as it pleased Him. The word “placed” here is the same Greek word in the same form as the Greek word in verse 28 above. God is building His Church, and He places the members in the body of Christ as He chooses. And the Lord places us as members in the body of Christ the moment we believe in Jesus Christ and confess Him as Lord as we read in 1 Corinthians 12 (KJV): 13 For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free; and have been all made to drink into one Spirit.

This placement into the body of Christ is a sovereign act of God by the Holy Spirit for God is building His Church as Jesus said in Matthew 16 (KJV): 18 And I say also unto thee, That thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it.

Jesus said, “I will build my church.” We need to remember that it is His Church. He is the one building His Church. We need to take our direction from Him. Now because God has placed each one in the body as He desired, our position in Christ is not transferable. This means that the apostles could not transfer their authority as apostles to the bishops they appointed. The apostolic gift is given by God and is not transferable.

Commentary Summary Book 4: Chapter XXVI

Now again, Irenaeus says in paragraph five, “Where, therefore, the gifts of the Lord have been placed, there it behooves us to learn the truth, [namely,] from those who possess that succession of the Church which is from the apostles, and among whom exists that which is sound and blameless in conduct, as well as that which is unadulterated and incorrupt in speech.”

So far then, Irenaeus’ argument for the theory of apostolic succession in this chapter runs this way:

We should obey the good presbyters and the bishops who are in the Church because they have the following qualifications:

- “possess the succession from the apostles” - paragraph two
- “received the certain gift of truth” - paragraph two
- “hold the doctrine of the apostles” - paragraph four
- “display sound speech and blameless conduct for the confirmation and correction of others.” - paragraph four
- The Church nourishes good presbyters - paragraph five
- Paul taught us where to find such good presbyters, when he says, “God hath placed in the Church, first, apostles; secondly, prophets; thirdly, teachers.” - paragraph five
- Since “the gifts of the Lord have been placed” in the Church, “there it behooves us to learn the truth, [namely,] from those who possess that succession of the Church which is from the apostles, and among whom exists that which is sound and blameless in conduct, as well as that which is unadulterated and incorrupt in speech.” - paragraph five
- These then who “possess that succession of the Church which is from the apostles” do as follows:
 - “also preserve this faith of ours in one God who created all things;” - paragraph five
 - “and they increase that love [which we have] for the Son of God, who accomplished such marvellous dispensations for our sake” - paragraph five
 - “and they expound the Scriptures to us without danger, neither blaspheming God, nor dishonouring the patriarchs, nor despising the prophets.” paragraph five

Irenaeus wanted to protect the Church from the bad presbyters and bishops who do the following:

- “depart from the primitive succession” - paragraph two
- “assemble themselves together in any place whatsoever” - paragraph two
- Are either
 - “heretics of perverse minds,” - paragraph two
 - “schismatics puffed up and self-pleasing,” - paragraph two
 - “hypocrites, acting thus for the sake of lucre and vainglory” - paragraph two
- “have fallen from the truth” - paragraph two
- “bring strange fire to the altar of God— namely, strange doctrines” - paragraph two
- “shall be burned up by the fire from heaven, as were Nadab and Abiud” - paragraph two
- “rise up in opposition to the truth, and exhort others against the Church of God” - paragraph two
 - shall “remain among those in hell (apud inferos), being swallowed up by an earthquake, even as those who were with Chore, Dathan, and Abiron” - paragraph two
- “cleave asunder, and separate the unity of the Church” - paragraph two
 - “shall receive from God the same punishment as Jeroboam did” - paragraph two
- “are believed to be presbyters by many, but”
 - “serve their own lusts” - paragraph three
 - “do not place the fear of God supreme in their hearts” – paragraph three
 - “conduct themselves with contempt towards others” - paragraph three
 - “are puffed up with the pride of holding the chief seat” - paragraph three
 - “work evil deeds in secret, saying, “No man sees us,” - paragraph three
 - “shall be convicted by the Word, who does not judge after outward appearance (secundum gloriam), nor looks upon the countenance, but the heart” - paragraph three
 - “shall hear those words, to be found in Daniel the prophet: “O thou seed of Canaan, and not of Judah, beauty hath deceived thee, and lust perverted thy heart. Thou that art waxen old in wicked days, now thy sins which thou hast committed aforetime are come to light; for thou hast pronounced false judgments, and hast been accustomed to condemn the innocent, and to let the guilty go free, albeit the Lord saith, The innocent and the righteous shalt thou not slay.”” – paragraph three (note that the quote is not from Daniel but from Susanna)
 - “Of whom also did the Lord say: “But if the evil servant shall say in his heart, My lord delayeth his coming, and shall begin to smite the man-servants and maidens, and to eat and drink and be drunken; the lord of that servant shall come in a day that he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not aware of, and shall cut him asunder, and appoint him his portion with the unbelievers.””

Clearly Irenaeus was concerned about preserving the unity of the Church. He was concerned about preserving the truth as it had been taught by the apostles. He was concerned about protecting the Church from false doctrine. He wanted to preserve the faith in the one God who created all things. And he wanted the Church to increase in love for the Son of God. These are all noble goals.

Maintaining the list of successive bishops from the apostles was apparently being done in Irenaeus' day. He himself is able to list those of Rome. However, when he says that these successive bishops “received the certain gift of truth,” he exceeds what the Scriptures teach. This statement is unverifiable. No such statement is found in Scripture concerning this. And again, when he says that these bishops in the succession from an apostolic appointment “hold the doctrine of the apostles,” this is again unverifiable. Whether one holds the doctrine of the apostles depends on whether one has been taught this doctrine, and in addition, on whether one has been faithful to the Lord. It is not absorbed by the laying on of hands. Gifts of the Spirit were imparted in this way as we see in 1 Timothy 4 (KJV):14 Neglect not the gift that is in thee, which was given thee by prophecy, with the laying on of the hands of the presbytery.

And in 2 Timothy 1 (KJV):6 Wherefore I put thee in remembrance that thou stir up the gift of God, which is in thee by the putting on of my hands.

And in Romans 1 (KJV):11 For I long to see you, that I may impart unto you some spiritual gift, to the end ye may be established;

But doctrinal knowledge is not obtained by the laying on of hands. Paul encourages Timothy to give diligence to show Himself approved to God in 2 Timothy 2 (NASB):15 Be diligent to present yourself approved to God as a workman who does not need to be ashamed, accurately handling the word of truth.

Doctrinal knowledge comes as we are taught the word of God by faithful teachers, and as we walk in the light of God's word. And knowledge is something we grow in as Peter tells us in 2 Peter 3 (KJV):17 Ye therefore, beloved, seeing ye know these things before, beware lest ye also, being led away with the error of the wicked, fall from your own steadfastness. 18 But grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. To him be glory both now and for ever. Amen.

Spiritual growth comes only by speak the truth in love as we read in Ephesians 4 (KJV):14 That we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive; 15 But speaking the truth in love, may grow up into him in all things, which is the head, even Christ: 16 From whom the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love.

When we are born again, we are babes in Christ. As we are nourished on the milk of the word, we grow up spiritually. There is no way to instantaneously grow. Paul says as much in 1 Corinthians 3 (KJV):6 I have planted, Apollos watered; but God gave the increase. 7 So then neither is he that planteth any thing, neither he that watereth; but God that giveth the increase. 8 Now he that planteth and he that watereth are one: and every man shall receive his own reward according to his own labour. 9 For we are labourers together with God: ye are God's husbandry, ye are God's building.

Irenaeus leaves us with the impression that the bishops in apostolic succession have received the truth by their very appointment. They hold the doctrine of the apostles because of the very fact that they are bishops in apostolic succession. Paul's encouragement to Timothy was to set an example of those who believe as we read in 1 Timothy 4 (KJV):12 Let no man despise thy youth; but be thou an example of the believers, in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity.

Timothy was an apostle as we read in 1 Thessalonians 1 (KJV):1 Paul, and Silvanus, and Timotheus, unto the church of the Thessalonians which is in God the Father and in the Lord Jesus Christ: Grace be unto you, and peace, from God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ.

And in 1 Thessalonians 2 (KJV):5 For neither at any time used we flattering words, as ye know, nor a cloke of covetousness; God is witness: 6 Nor of men sought we glory, neither of you, nor yet of others, when we might have been burdensome, as the apostles of Christ.

Though Timothy was an apostle and not a bishop, Paul's encouragement to him is also good for bishops as we see in Peter's exhortation in 1 Peter 5 (KJV):1 The elders which are among you I exhort, who am also an elder, and a witness of the sufferings of Christ, and also a partaker of the glory that shall be revealed: 2 Feed the flock of God which is among you, taking the oversight thereof, not by constraint, but willingly; not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind; 3 Neither as being lords over God's heritage, but being examples to the flock. 4 And when the chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away. 5 Likewise, ye younger, submit yourselves unto the elder. Yea, all of you be subject one to another, and be clothed with humility: for God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble.

Again Paul encourages Timothy in 1 Timothy 4 (KJV):15 Meditate upon these things; give thyself wholly to them; that thy profiting may appear to all. 16 Take heed unto thyself, and unto the doctrine; continue in them: for in doing this thou shalt both save thyself, and them that hear thee.

Now Irenaeus wanted to protect the Church from the bad presbyters and bishops who "depart from the primitive succession" and "assemble themselves together in any place whatsoever." Irenaeus assumes that the apostolic ministry has passed away, and that the apostles left the bishops in charge of the Church, having delivered up "their own place of government to these men," as we saw in Book 3: Chapter III. However, the Scriptures do not teach that apostolic ministry has passed away. In fact, they teach the opposite as we read in Ephesians 4 (KJV):11 And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; 12 For the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ: 13 Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ:

The word "until" in verse 13 means that the apostles and prophets and evangelists and pastors and teachers will continue to be given by God as gifts to the Church until we all attain the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, to a mature man, to the measure of the stature which belongs to the fullness of Christ. One only has to look at the Church today with all its many denominations and doctrines to know that we are not there yet. The Church must recognize true apostolic ministry if it is to ever reach the unity and maturity that Paul is speaking of in Ephesians 4:13.

Irenaeus believed that the apostolic ministry had ceased when the last of the Biblical apostles died. These apostles were foundational apostles. They were eyewitnesses or those who knew eyewitnesses of the Lord Jesus. Their testimony will forever be a more sure word of prophecy. However, the planting of churches, and the laying of doctrinal foundations in these churches, is still a necessary ministry today. Though the church by in large does not recognize them today, they are still planting and laying foundations as the Church is growing to maturity. True apostles will not have a badge on their arm saying that they are apostles. You will know them by their fruits. Just as we know good bishops today, so we can know worthy men who have apostolic ministry by their fruit.

Now Irenaeus' goal to protect the Church in his day from bad presbyters and bishops is noble. But his method of trying to get everyone to line up in the Churches who could show apostolic succession was only successful in establishing a fleshly unity. His was a unity of outward form, which tended toward ritual. The "tradition of truth" varied from church to church, though they each may have been in apostolic succession. Irenaeus saw this and his solution was to have all the churches agree with the church in Rome whose apostolic succession Irenaeus himself lists in Book 3: Chapter III as we have already discussed. This solution may have seemed acceptable at the time, but it had disastrous results as the history of the Reformation records.

Not only so, but Irenaeus judges all who depart from this "primitive succession" as "heretics of perverse minds," "schismatics puffed up and self-pleasing," "hypocrites, acting thus for the sake of lucre and vainglory," and those who "have fallen from the truth," and who "bring strange fire to the altar of God— namely, strange doctrines." He even rains down a curse on them saying that they "shall be burned up by the fire from heaven, as were Nadab and Abiud." This is a blueprint for disaster. Is it any wonder that the Church eventually held an inquisition against heretics, even putting them to death by burning them at the stake. John Hus and William Tyndale are the most noteworthy and well known examples of this. This was murder under the auspices of doing God service as Jesus warned would happen in John 16 (KJV):1 These things have I spoken unto you, that ye should not be offended. 2 They shall put you out of the synagogues: yea, the time cometh, that whosoever killeth you will think that he doeth God service. 3 And these things will they do unto you, because they have not known the Father, nor me. 4 But these things have I told you, that when the time shall come, ye may remember that I told you of them. And these things I said not unto you at the beginning, because I was with you.

Irenaeus seems to be less harsh on the bad presbyters, than on those who depart from the primitive succession of the apostles. Although these bad presbyters do not depart from the “primitive succession, they “serve their own lusts, and, do not place the fear of God supreme in their hearts, but conduct themselves with contempt towards others, and are puffed up with the pride of holding the chief seat, and work evil deeds in secret, saying, “No man sees us.” These, he says, “shall be convicted by the Word, who does not judge after outward appearance (secundum gloriam), nor looks upon the countenance, but the heart; and they shall hear those words, to be found in Daniel the prophet: “O thou seed of Canaan, and not of Judah, beauty hath deceived thee, and lust perverted thy heart. Thou that art waxen old in wicked days, now thy sins which thou hast committed aforetime are come to light; for thou hast pronounced false judgments, and hast been accustomed to condemn the innocent, and to let the guilty go free, albeit the Lord saith, The innocent and the righteous shalt thou not slay.” Again, this is a reference to the apocryphal book, Susanna, and not to the prophet Daniel.

Irenaeus does not rain down a curse on these, but seems to leave their judgment to the Lord as he concludes, “Of whom also did the Lord say: “But if the evil servant shall say in his heart, My lord delayeth his coming, and shall begin to smite the man-servants and maidens, and to eat and drink and be drunken; the lord of that servant shall come in a day that he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not aware of, and shall cut him asunder, and appoint him his portion with the unbelievers.” It is almost as if he has a dual standard. Is this because he believes these presbyters “possess the succession from the apostles,” “received the certain gift of truth,” and “hold the doctrine of the apostles,” and thus should be treated differently? It is without doubt.

Irenaeus has put the bishops on a pedestal from which it would be very difficult to remove them. He does this so that the Church will be strong and not give way to the Gnostic heretics. However, in his zeal, he has exceeded what is written in the Scriptures. Paul warns against this in 1 Corinthians 4 (KJV):6 And these things, brethren, I have in a figure transferred to myself and to Apollos for your sakes; that ye might learn in us not to think of men above that which is written, that no one of you be puffed up for one against another.

Paul commands us to take care how we build on the foundation that he and the other apostles laid, which is Jesus Christ, as we read in 1 Corinthians 3 (KJV):10 According to the grace of God which is given unto me, as a wise masterbuilder, I have laid the foundation, and another buildeth thereon. But let every man take heed how he buildeth thereupon. 11 For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ.

God has not left the government of the Church up to man. The Holy Spirit is in charge here on earth in the Church. It is He who is directing all of the building as we see in Acts 13 (KJV):2 As they ministered to the Lord, and fasted, the Holy Ghost said, Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them.

Again we see in Paul’s ministry that the Holy Spirit is directing him in Acts 16 (KJV):6 Now when they had gone throughout Phrygia and the region of Galatia, and were forbidden of the Holy Ghost to preach the word in Asia, 7 After they were come to Mysia, they assayed to go into Bithynia: but the Spirit suffered them not. 8 And they passing by Mysia came down to Troas. 9 And a vision appeared to Paul in the night; There stood a man of Macedonia, and prayed him, saying, Come over into Macedonia, and help us. 10 And after he had seen the vision, immediately we endeavoured to go into Macedonia, assuredly gathering that the Lord had called us for to preach the gospel unto them.

The Holy Spirit is directing all of the building of the Church here on earth. And it is He who appoints the bishops, that is the overseers as we read in Acts 20 (KJV):28 Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and to all the flock, over the which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers, to feed the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood.

Now, we also read in Titus, chapter 1, that Paul commanded Titus to appoint elders in Titus 1 (KJV):5 For this cause left I thee in Crete, that thou shouldest set in order the things that are wanting, and ordain elders in every city, as I had appointed thee:

But this appointment was under the direction of the Holy Spirit. The word “appoint” in Greek is καταστήσης (pronounced katasteses), and is the second person singular aorist 1, subjunctive active of κατάστημα (pronounced katastema) which is a derivative of καθίστημι (pronounced kathistēmi) from κατά (pronounced kata) and ἵστημι (pronounced histemi), and meaning roughly “to cause to stand according to”. Vine’s says it usually means “to appoint a person to a position.” Expository Dictionary of New Testament Words, W.E. Vine, Vol. I, page 66.

According to Vine’s, the word “elder” in the Greek is πρεσβύτερος (pronounced presbyteros) and means “an old man” or “an elder.” Expository Dictionary of New Testament Words, W.E. Vine, Vol. II, page 20. This word “elder” in the context of the Church did not mean “an old man,” but it meant someone who was not a novice or a new convert as Paul instructs in 1 Timothy 3 (KJV):6 Not a novice, lest being lifted up with pride he fall into the condemnation of the devil.

In other words, the elder in the Church was someone who was mature spiritually. Notice that the position of elder is not mentioned as one of the gifts in 1 Corinthians 12:28 or Ephesians 4:11. A person who is gifted may be an elder however just as Peter, who was an apostle, reveals in 1 Peter 5 (KJV):1 The elders which are among you I exhort, who am also an elder, and a witness of the sufferings of Christ, and also a partaker of the glory that shall be revealed: 2 Feed the flock of God which is among you, taking the oversight thereof, not by constraint, but willingly; not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind; 3 Neither as being lords over God’s heritage, but being examples to the flock. 4 And when the chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away. 5 Likewise, ye younger, submit yourselves unto the elder. Yea, all of you be subject one to another, and be clothed with humility: for God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble.

Note the instructions that Peter gives his “fellow” elders. He tells them to shepherd the flock as examples, not lording it over those allotted to their charge, but exercising oversight willingly, and not under compulsion.

Now again, note that Barnabas and Paul appointed elders in every church as we read in Acts 14 (KJV):19 And there came thither certain Jews from Antioch and Iconium, who persuaded the people, and having stoned Paul, drew him out of the city, supposing he had been dead. 20 Howbeit, as the disciples stood round about him, he rose up, and came into the city: and the next day he departed with Barnabas to Derbe. 21 And when they had preached the gospel to that city, and had taught many, they returned again to Lystra, and to Iconium, and Antioch, 22 Confirming the souls of the disciples, and exhorting them to continue in the faith, and that we must through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God. 23 And when they had ordained them elders in every church, and had prayed with fasting, they commended them to the Lord, on whom they believed.

Now when Paul was at Miletus he called for the elders of the Church in Ephesus as in Acts 20 (KJV):17 And from Miletus he sent to Ephesus, and called the elders of the church.

Paul warns these same elders in Ephesus to be on guard for themselves as well as the flock as we read in Acts 20 (KJV):28 Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and to all the flock, over the which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers, to feed the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood.

Note that Paul did not call for the bishops at Ephesus but the elders. The reason is because the elders were the bishops. The word for overseers in this verse is ἐπίσκοπος (pronounced episkopos) which is where we get our English word bishop from. Vine’s says that the word literally means overseer coming from the Greek word epi, meaning over, and skopeo, to look or watch. Expository Dictionary of New Testament Words, W.E. Vine, Vol. I, page 128. In other words, an elder and an overseer, or a bishop, is the same office in the New Testament. Not so in Irenaeus’ understanding. Note also that it was the Holy Spirit that made them overseers, and not the Church. Neither were they elected by the congregation.

Notice that Irenaeus here makes a distinction between the presbyter succession and the succession of the episcopate, or the succession of the bishops, as he says, “Wherefore it is incumbent to obey the presbyters who are in the Church,—those who, as I have shown, possess the succession from the apostles; those who, together with the succession of the episcopate, have received the certain gift of truth, according to the good pleasure of the Father.”

That is, he makes a distinction between a presbyter and a bishop. And he says these all together “have received the certain gift of truth, according to the good pleasure of the Father.” By this I believe he is referring to the deposit of truth that he says the apostles placed in the hands of the Church. Irenaeus says in Book 3: Chapter IV that the apostles “like a rich man [depositing his money] in a bank, lodged in her hands most copiously all things pertaining to the truth.” We discussed this in the previous section.

This “deposit of truth” makes his teaching of apostolic succession more understandable. The Church is now in possession of a “deposit of truth” lodged in her hands, and given by the apostles. Following then the logic of Irenaeus, this “certain gift of truth” may be given by the Church’s authority to each presbyter and bishop since the “deposit of truth” is in the hands of the Church, and as long as men are appointed by the hands of the Church, the truth can then be given as a “certain gift” to its appointed ones, regardless of their faithfulness.

Again, following the logic of Irenaeus, he seems to be saying that, because the truth is in the Church’s hands and thereby in the presbyters’ hands, it is then “incumbent to obey the presbyters who are in the Church” since they are the Church’s leaders. Also, since this truth is in the hands of the Church which is represented by the bishops and presbyters, it may be found in no other place and in no other way. Therefore, it is incumbent “to hold in suspicion others who depart from the primitive succession, and assemble themselves together in any place whatsoever, [looking upon them] either as heretics of perverse minds, or as schismatics puffed up and self-pleasing, or again as hypocrites, acting thus for the sake of lucre and vainglory.” And Irenaeus believes “the fire from heaven” will burn up all “such as rise up in opposition to the truth.” And those who cause division in the Church will receive Jeroboam’s punishment as we discussed above relating to 1 Kings 14:7-14.

Now, Irenaeus continues in paragraph two saying that a presbyter must not serve his own lusts but “place the fear of God supreme in their hearts.” They must not “conduct themselves with contempt towards others,” or be “puffed up with pride of holding the chief seat,” and they must not “work evil deeds in secret,” Irenaeus says. And here again I must say, “Bravo, Irenaeus!” The Lord does not allow sin in leadership, no matter who it is or what office they hold. And in regard to the Church holding a deposit or gift of truth given to it by the apostles, I suppose you could say the Church is the custodian of the word of God, much like Israel was as we read in Romans 3 (KJV):1 What advantage then hath the Jew? or what profit is there of circumcision? 2 Much every way: chiefly, because that unto them were committed the oracles of God.

But the Scriptures nowhere speak of the Church as the recipient of a deposit of truth in the way that Irenaeus describes, as if the truth were resident in the offices of the Church, and the holder of the office automatically had all truth and all knowledge without instruction or study of the Scriptures. Jesus promised the disciples that they would be the recipients of the Spirit of truth as we read in John 14 (KJV):16 And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever; 17 Even the Spirit of truth; whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him: but ye know him; for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you.

And Jesus said that this same Spirit of truth would guide them into all truth in John 16 (KJV):12 I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now. 13 Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth: for he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak: and he will shew you things to come. 14 He shall glorify me: for he shall receive of mine, and shall shew it unto you. 15 All things that the Father hath are mine: therefore said I, that he shall take of mine, and shall shew it unto you.

Was it just to the apostles only that the Lord made this promise of the Spirit? The Scriptures state that this same Spirit of truth was promised as a gift to all believers in Acts 2 (KJV):38 Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. 39 For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the LORD our God shall call.

And this same Spirit of God dwells in the Church as a temple of God as we read in Ephesians 2 (JHV):19 Now therefore ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellowcitizens with the saints, and of the household of God; 20 And are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone; 21 In whom all the building fitly framed together groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord: 22 In whom ye also are builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit.

And every believer is a member of Christ’s body, and is spoken of as a temple of the Holy Spirit in 1 Corinthians 6 (KJV):15 Know ye not that your bodies are the members of Christ? shall I then take the members of Christ, and make them the members of an harlot? God forbid. 16 What? know ye not that he which is joined to an harlot is one body? for two, saith he, shall be one flesh. 17 But he that is joined unto the Lord is one spirit. 18 Flee fornication. Every sin that a man doeth is without the body; but he that committeth fornication sinneth against his own body. 19 What? know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own? 20 For ye are bought with a price: therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's.

I believe that the real “gift of truth” is the pure, unadulterated gospel which was first preached by the apostles who were filled with the Spirit. This “gift of truth” is received by all who receive the Spirit of truth today, and not just by a presbyter or bishop. And Jesus said He was the truth as we read in John 14 (KJV):5 Thomas saith unto him, Lord, we know not whither thou goest; and how can we know the way? 6 Jesus saith unto him, I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me.

All who receive Jesus receive the truth, that is, they receive all of Jesus. But knowledge of the truth is contingent on learning His word and abiding in it as Jesus said in John 8 (KJV):31 Then said Jesus to those Jews which believed on him, If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; 32 And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free.

There are no guarantees. We don't ever arrive. We must keep His word if we are to abide in Him. It is not enough to have an appointment by an apostle to point to as our certificate of authority. A Seminary degree does not guarantee a righteous life. We must obey His word if we are to shepherd others. It is true that His followers are given the mystery of the kingdom of God as we read in Mark 4 (KJV):10 And when he was alone, they that were about him with the twelve asked of him the parable. 11 And he said unto them, Unto you it is given to know the mystery of the kingdom of God: but unto them that are without, all these things are done in parables: 12 That seeing they may see, and not perceive; and hearing they may hear, and not understand; lest at any time they should be converted, and their sins should be forgiven them.

The mystery of the Kingdom of God is given to all who believe in Him. To say that the presbyters and bishops receive a “certain gift of truth” other than what all believers have received exceeds what is written in the Scripture, and gives them a place elevated somewhere above other believers. To give someone a “gift of truth” as Irenaeus describes implies that they are free from error. It is true that all Scripture is inspired by God as we read in 2 Timothy 3 (KJV):16 All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: 17 That the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works.

But this does not make the vessel through whom the Spirit of God speaks in possession of a “gift of truth”, and incapable of uttering error. That is merely tradition. Elders can still sin as we see in 1 Timothy 5 (KJV):19 Against an elder receive not an accusation, but before two or three witnesses. 20 Them that sin rebuke before all, that others also may fear.

Elders and bishops still have a sin nature just as other believers. We are all accountable to God. Elders, or bishops, or overseers must be an example of godly living to their flock, and not lords who are not accountable to others. We all must be subject to each other in the Lord. We all have a responsibility to speak the truth in love to each other. We must all put off the old man and put on the new man. No one is excluded from this be they apostle, prophet, bishop, elder, or one who merely shows mercy to another. All of us are accountable to God, and will be called to account by Him in the final judgment.

As Paul told the Corinthians, we all work together and we all stand by faith as we read in 2 Corinthians 1 (KJV):24 Not for that we have dominion over your faith, but are helpers of your joy: for by faith ye stand.

Saying that the bishops and elders have received a certain gift of truth creates an artificial distance between believers and the elders, who are overseers or bishops, when there is really no difference. We are all saved by grace through the blood of Jesus.

A division is being made here between the clergy, that is, the bishops and presbyters, and the rank and file believers, the laity. Irenaeus is giving us a telescopic view into the early the Church government that existed in his day, and which he did not initiate but which he was defending. We must keep in mind that the Church was over one hundred years old by the time Irenaeus was writing his book, Against Heresies. However, is this the Church government that God has ordained? We will talk more about Church government in Chapter: 21 The Church.

Also, notice in paragraph four the words “order of priesthood.” Irenaeus says in effect it behooves us “to adhere to those who, as I have already observed, do hold the doctrine of the apostles, and who, together with the order of priesthood (presbyterii ordine), display sound speech and blameless conduct for the confirmation and correction of others.” We will talk more about this order of priesthood in Chapter 23: The Priesthood.

Book 5: Chapter XX.—Those pastors are to be heard to whom the apostles committed the Churches, possessing one and the same doctrine of salvation; the heretics, on the other hand, are to be avoided. We must think soberly with regard to the mysteries of the faith.

1. Now all these [heretics] are of much later date than the bishops to whom the apostles committed the Churches; which fact I have in the third book taken all pains to demonstrate. It follows, then, as a matter of course, that these heretics aforementioned, since they are blind to the truth, and deviate from the [right] way, will walk in various roads; and therefore the footsteps of their doctrine are scattered here and there without agreement or connection. But the path of those belonging to the Church circumscribes the whole world, as possessing the sure tradition from the apostles, and gives unto us to see that the faith of all is one and the same, since all receive one and the same God the Father, and believe in the same dispensation regarding the incarnation of the Son of God, and are cognizant of the same gift of the Spirit, and are conversant with the same commandments, and preserve the same form of ecclesiastical constitution, 4619 “Et eandem figuram ejus quæ est erga ecclesiam ordinationis custodientibus.” Grabe supposes this refers to the ordained ministry of the Church, but Harvey thinks it refers more probably to its general constitution, and expect the same advent of the Lord, and await the same salvation of the complete man, that is, of the soul and body. And undoubtedly the preaching of the Church is true and steadfast, 4620 [He thus outlines the creed, and epitomizes “the faith once delivered to the saints,” as all that is requisite to salvation, in which one and the same way of salvation is shown throughout the whole world. For to her is entrusted the light of God; and therefore the “wisdom” of God, by means of which she saves all men, “is declared in [its] going forth; it uttereth [its voice] faithfully in the streets, is preached on the tops of the walls, and speaks continually in the gates of the city.” 4621 Prov. i. 20, 21. For the Church preaches the truth everywhere, and she is the seven-branched candlestick which bears the light of Christ.

2. Those, therefore, who desert the preaching of the Church, call in question the knowledge of the holy presbyters, not taking into consideration of how much greater consequence is a religious man, even in a private station, than a blasphemous and impudent sophist. 4622 That is, the private Christian as contrasted with the sophist of the schools. Now, such are all the heretics, and those who imagine that they have hit upon something more beyond the truth, so that by following those things already mentioned, proceeding on their way variously, inharmoniously, and foolishly, not keeping always to the same opinions with regard to the same things, as blind men are led by the blind, they shall deservedly fall into the ditch of ignorance lying in their path, ever seeking and never finding out the truth. 4623 2 Tim. iii. 7. It behooves us, therefore, to avoid their doctrines, and to take careful heed lest we suffer any injury from them; but to flee to the Church, and be brought up in her bosom, and be nourished with the Lord’s Scriptures. For the Church has been planted as a garden (paradisus) in this world; therefore says the Spirit of God, “Thou mayest freely eat from every tree of the garden,” 4624 Gen. ii. 16. that is, Eat ye from every Scripture of the Lord; but ye shall not eat with an uplifted mind, nor touch any heretical discord. For these men do profess that they have themselves the knowledge of good and evil; and they set their own impious minds above the God who made them. They therefore form opinions on what is beyond the limits of the understanding. For this cause also the apostle says, “Be not wise beyond what it is fitting to be wise, but be wise prudently,” 4625 Rom. xii. 3. that we be not cast forth by eating of the “knowledge” of these men (that knowledge which knows more than it should do) from the paradise of life. Into this paradise the Lord has introduced those who obey His call, “summing up in Himself all things which are in heaven, and which are on earth;” 4626 Eph. i. 10 but the things in heaven are spiritual, while those on earth constitute the dispensation in human nature (secundum hominem est dispositio). These things, therefore, He recapitulated in Himself: by uniting man to the Spirit, and causing the Spirit to dwell in man, He is Himself made the head of the Spirit, and gives the Spirit to be the head of man: for through Him (the Spirit) we see, and hear, and speak.

Summary: Here in paragraph one, Irenaeus testifies, “Now all these [heretics] are of much later date than the bishops to whom the apostles committed the Churches.” He continues as he reasons, “It follows, then, as a matter of course, that these heretics aforementioned, since they are blind to the truth, and deviate from the [right] way, will walk in various roads; and therefore the footsteps of their doctrine are scattered here and there without agreement or connection.” Irenaeus then affirms, “But the path of those belonging to the Church circumscribes the whole world, as possessing the sure tradition from the apostles, and gives unto us to see that the faith of all is one and the same, since”...

- “all receive one and the same God the Father,”
- “and believe in the same dispensation regarding the incarnation of the Son of God,”
- “and are cognizant of the same gift of the Spirit,”
- “and are conversant with the same commandments,”
- “and preserve the same form of ecclesiastical constitution”
- “and expect the same advent of the Lord,”
- “and await the same salvation of the complete man, that is, of the soul and body.”

Irenaeus continues as he affirms, “And undoubtedly the preaching of the Church is true and steadfast, in which one and the same way of salvation is shown throughout the whole world. For to her is entrusted the light of God; and therefore the “wisdom” of God, by means of which she saves all men, “is declared in [its] going forth; it uttereth [its voice] faithfully in the streets, is preached on the tops of the walls, and speaks continually in the gates of the city,” referring to Proverbs 1:20-21. Irenaeus then concludes, “For the Church preaches the truth everywhere, and she is the seven-branched candlestick which bears the light of Christ.”

In paragraph two, Irenaeus warns that, “Those, therefore, who desert the preaching of the Church, call in question the knowledge of the holy presbyters, not taking into consideration of how much greater consequence is a religious man, even in a private station, than a blasphemous and impudent sophist.” Irenaeus continues as he then affirms, “Now, such are all the heretics, and those who imagine that they have hit upon something more beyond the truth, so that by following those things already mentioned, proceeding on their way variously, inharmoniously, and foolishly, not keeping always to the same opinions with regard to the same things, as blind men are led by the blind, they shall deservedly fall into the ditch of ignorance lying in their path, ever seeking and never finding out the truth,” referring to 2 Timothy 3:7.

Irenaeus then warns, “It behooves us, therefore, to avoid their doctrines, and to take careful heed lest we suffer any injury from them; but to flee to the Church, and be brought up in her bosom, and be nourished with the Lord’s Scriptures.” Irenaeus then asserts, “For the Church has been planted as a garden (paradisus) in this world; therefore says the Spirit of God, “Thou mayest freely eat from every tree of the garden,” referring to Genesis 2:16, that is, “Eat ye from every Scripture of the Lord; but ye shall not eat with an uplifted mind, nor touch any heretical discord.” Irenaeus then again warns, “For these men do profess that they have themselves the knowledge of good and evil; and they set their own impious minds above the God who made them. They therefore form opinions on what is beyond the limits of the understanding.” Irenaeus then testifies, “For this cause also the apostle says, “Be not wise beyond what it is fitting to be wise, but be wise prudently,” referring to Romans 12:3, “that we be not cast forth by eating of the “knowledge” of these men (that knowledge which knows more than it should do) from the paradise of life.” Irenaeus then testifies, “Into this paradise the Lord has introduced those who obey His call, “summing up in Himself all things which are in heaven, and which are on earth,” referring to Ephesians 1:10, “but the things in heaven are spiritual, while those on earth constitute the dispensation in human nature (secundum hominem est dispositio).” Irenaeus then concludes as he says, “These things, therefore, He recapitulated in Himself: by uniting man to the Spirit, and causing the Spirit to dwell in man, He is Himself made the head of the Spirit, and gives the Spirit to be the head of man: for through Him (the Spirit) we see, and hear, and speak.”

Commentary: In paragraph one, Irenaeus testifies that the heretics came at a “much later date than the bishops to whom the apostles committed the Churches.” He continues as he reasons, “It follows, then, as a matter of course, that these heretics aforementioned, since they are blind to the truth, and deviate from the [right] way, will walk in various roads; and therefore the footsteps of their doctrine are scattered here and there without agreement or connection.” Irenaeus then affirms, “But the path of those belonging to the Church circumscribes the whole world, as possessing the sure tradition from the apostles, and gives unto us to see that the faith of all is one and the same since”...

- “all receive one and the same God the Father,”
- “and believe in the same dispensation regarding the incarnation of the Son of God,”
- “and are cognizant of the same gift of the Spirit,”
- “and are conversant with the same commandments,”
- “and preserve the same form of ecclesiastical constitution”
- “and expect the same advent of the Lord,”
- “and await the same salvation of the complete man, that is, of the soul and body.”

After this vision of the Church, Irenaeus then continues as he affirms, “And undoubtedly the preaching of the Church is true and steadfast, in which one and the same way of salvation is shown throughout the whole world. For to her is entrusted the light of God; and therefore the “wisdom” of God, by means of which she saves all men, “is declared in [its] going forth; it uttereth [its voice] faithfully in the streets, is preached on the tops of the walls, and speaks continually in the gates of the city,” referring in context to Proverbs 1 (Septuagint):20 Wisdom sings aloud in passages, and in the broad places speaks boldly. 21 And she makes proclamation on the top of the walls, and sits by the gates of princes; and at the gates of the city boldly says...

Another version reads as in Proverbs 1 (NASB):20 Wisdom shouts in the street, She lifts her voice in the square; 21 At the head of the noisy streets she cries out; At the entrance of the gates in the city she utters her sayings.

Irenaeus then concludes, “For the Church preaches the truth everywhere, and she is the seven-branched candlestick which bears the light of Christ.”

We read in the Old Testament that the candlestick in the tabernacle, which the Lord commanded Moses to make, had six branches plus a stem as in Exodus 25 (KJV):31 And thou shalt make a candlestick of pure gold: of beaten work shall the candlestick be made: his shaft, and his branches, his bowls, his knops, and his flowers, shall be of the same. 32 And six branches shall come out of the sides of it; three branches of the candlestick out of the one side, and three branches of the candlestick out of the other side:

And in Exodus 25 (KJV):37 And thou shalt make the seven lamps thereof: and they shall light the lamps thereof, that they may give light over against it.

We also find seven golden lampstands in the apostle John’s vision on the isle of Patmos as we read in Revelation 1 (KJV):9 I John, who also am your brother, and companion in tribulation, and in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ, was in the isle that is called Patmos, for the word of God, and for the testimony of Jesus Christ. 10 I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day, and heard behind me a great voice, as of a trumpet, 11 Saying, I am Alpha and Omega, the first and the last: and, What thou seest, write in a book, and send it unto the seven churches which are in Asia; unto Ephesus, and unto Smyrna, and unto Pergamos, and unto Thyatira, and unto Sardis, and unto Philadelphia, and unto Laodicea. 12 And I turned to see the voice that spake with me. And being turned, I saw seven golden candlesticks; 13 And in the midst of the seven candlesticks one like unto the Son of man, clothed with a garment down to the foot, and girt about the paps with a golden girdle.

Irenaeus believed that the Church was the new Israel. That is, he believed that the Church had replaced Israel, and all the Old Testament prophecies relating to Israel were now to be fulfilled in the Church. It is true that the natural branches of Israel have been cut off until the fullness of the Gentiles is come in. But after this, the Lord will again revisit Israel, and make them the head of the nations. We will discuss this in greater detail in the next chapter, Chapter 21: The Church.

Irenaeus then continues in paragraph two as he warns, “Those, therefore, who desert the preaching of the Church, call in question the knowledge of the holy presbyters, not taking into consideration of how much greater consequence is a religious man, even in a private station, than a blasphemous and impudent sophist.” Sophists were professional teachers in ancient Greece.

Irenaeus continues as he affirms, “Now, such are all the heretics, and those who imagine that they have hit upon something more beyond the truth, so that by following those things already mentioned, proceeding on their way variously, inharmoniously, and foolishly, not keeping always to the same opinions with regard to the same things, as blind men are led by the blind, they shall deservedly fall into the ditch of ignorance lying in their path, ever seeking and never finding out the truth,” referring to 2 Timothy 3 (KJV):7 Ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth.

Irenaeus then warns, “It behooves us, therefore, to avoid their doctrines, and to take careful heed lest we suffer any injury from them; but to flee to the Church, and be brought up in her bosom, and be nourished with the Lord’s Scriptures.” Irenaeus then asserts, “For the Church has been planted as a garden (paradisus) in this world; therefore says the Spirit of God, “Thou mayest freely eat from every tree of the garden,” referring to Genesis 2 (KJV):16 And the LORD God commanded the man, saying, Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat:

Irenaeus then continues as he warns, “that is, ”Eat ye from every Scripture of the Lord; but ye shall not eat with an uplifted mind, nor touch any heretical discord.”

Irenaeus then again warns, “For these men do profess that they have themselves the knowledge of good and evil; and they set their own impious minds above the God who made them. They therefore form opinions on what is beyond the limits of the understanding.” Irenaeus then testifies, “For this cause also the apostle says, “Be not wise beyond what it is fitting to be wise, but be wise prudently,” referring in context to Romans 12 (KJV):3 For I say, through the grace given unto me, to every man that is among you, not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think; but to think soberly, according as God hath dealt to every man the measure of faith.

This same warning is also found in Romans 12 (KJV):16 Be of the same mind one toward another. Mind not high things, but condescend to men of low estate. Be not wise in your own conceits.

And for that matter, it is also found in what Solomon admonished in Proverbs 3 (KJV):7 Be not wise in thine own eyes: fear the LORD, and depart from evil.

Irenaeus continues as he explains that the apostle, by Romans 12:3, was warning “that we be not cast forth by eating of the “knowledge” of these men (that knowledge which knows more than it should do) from the paradise of life.”

Irenaeus then testifies, “Into this paradise the Lord has introduced those who obey His call, “summing up in Himself all things which are in heaven, and which are on earth,” referring in context to Ephesians 1 (KJV):10 That in the dispensation of the fulness of times he might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth; even in him: 11 In whom also we have obtained an inheritance, being predestinated according to the purpose of him who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will: 12 That we should be to the praise of his glory, who first trusted in Christ.
